

346.4 Mx-North

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

111

THE
ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE LAW TIMES REPORTS

OF CASES DECIDED IN
THE HOUSE OF LORDS THE PRIVY COUNCIL
ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT AND COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1948

VOLUME 2

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, K.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, K.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN,

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by the Proprietors of
THE LAW JOURNAL, 11 & 12 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS.

CONSULTING EDITOR :

SIR ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.,

Recorder of Cambridge.

MANAGING EDITOR OF HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, HAILSHAM EDITION.

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR CHANCERY CASES :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, Esq., K.C.,

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

CONSULTING EDITOR FOR TAXATION CASES :

CYRIL KING, Esq., K.C.,

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

GENERAL EDITOR :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, Esq.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

REPORTERS :

House of Lords	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	C. ST. JOHN W. NICHOLSON, B.A. (OXON.)	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Chancery Division ..	{ R. D. H. OSBORNE H. McL. MORRISON }	Barristers-at-Law
King's Bench Division ..	{ F. A. AMIES, B.A. (LEEDS) M.D. CHORLTON, M.A. (OXON.) F. GUTTMAN GWYNEDD LEWIS H. McL. MORRISON G. M. SMAILES }	Barristers-at-Law
Revenue Cases	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Probate, Divorce and Admiralty	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. The Rt. Hon. Lord Jowitt

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY

The Rt. Hon Lord Thankerton (died June 13, 1948)	The Rt. Hon. Lord Normand
The Rt. Hon. Lord Porter	The Rt. Hon. Lord Oaksey
The Rt. Hon. Lord Simonds	The Rt. Hon. Lord Morton of Henryton
The Rt. Hon. Lord Uthwatt	The Rt. Hon. Lord MacDermott
The Rt. Hon. Lord du Pareq	The Rt. Hon. Lord Reid of Drem (appointed Sept. 16, 1948)

COURT OF APPEAL

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.	The Rt. Hon. Lord Greene
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Scott (retired Oct. 8, 1948)	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Wrottesley (retired Oct. 8, 1948)
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Tucker	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Evershed
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Bucknill	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Singleton (appointed Oct. 12, 1948)
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Somervell	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Denning (appointed Oct. 12, 1948)
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Cohen
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Asquith

CHANCERY DIVISION

The Hon. Mr. Justice Vaisey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Wynn-Parry
The Hon. Mr. Justice Romer	The Hon. Mr. Justice Jenkins
The Hon. Mr. Justice Roxburgh	The Hon. Mr. Justice Harman

KING'S BENCH DIVISION

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.	The Rt. Hon. Lord Goddard
The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Humphreys	The Hon. Mr. Justice Lynskey
The Hon. Mr. Justice Singleton (appointed L.J., Oct. 12, 1948)	The Hon. Mr. Justice Jones
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hilbery	The Hon. Mr. Justice Byrne
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lewis	The Hon. Mr. Justice Morris
The Hon. Mr. Justice Henn Collins (retired June 12, 1948)	The Hon. Mr. Justice Sellers
The Hon. Mr. Justice Oliver	The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore (transferred from P.D.A. Division, Oct. 12, 1948)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Croom-Johnson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pritchard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stable	The Hon. Mr. Justice Streatfeild
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels	The Hon. Mr. Justice Slade (appointed June 12, 1948)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hallett	The Hon. Mr. Justice Devlin (appointed Oct. 12, 1948)
The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Birkett
The Hon. Mr. Justice Denning (appointed L.J., Oct. 12, 1948)

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

PRESIDENT. The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hodson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore (transferred to K.B.D. Oct. 12, 1948)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pilcher	The Hon. Mr. Justice Ormerod
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wallington	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pearce (appointed Oct. 12, 1948)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Barnard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Willmer

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 2

	PAGE		PAGE
A.B. (AN INFANT), Re [Ch.D.]	727	BOARD OF CONTROL (SECRETARY), R. v. Ex parte	853
ABDUL KAYUM, Ex parte R. v. BOARD OF CONTROL		ABDUL KAYUM [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]
(SECRETARY) [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	853	BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), SMITH'S POTATO
AGOSTINO BERTANI, THE. THE BELLAMAN [ADM.]	679	ESTATES, LTD. v. [H.L.]	367
ALEXANDER MOUNTAIN & CO. v. RUMERE, LTD.		BOOL, SAYCELL v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	83
[K.B.D.]	144	BORTHWICK (deceased), Re . BORTHWICK v. BEAU-
—, [C.A.]	482	VAIS [Ch.D.]	179
ALEXANDER'S WILL TRUST, Re [Ch.D.]	111	—, [C.A.]	635
ALLEN v. ALLEN [C.A.]	413	BOSMAN v. HOOPER. Re HOOPER'S SETTLEMENT
ALLEN TRENAVY (BARNET), LTD., EAST BARNET		TRUSTS [Ch.D.]	261
U.D.C. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	583	BOSTEL BROTHERS, LTD. v. HURLOCK [C.A.]	312
ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER		BOWEN (deceased), Re [Ch.D.]	979
[K.B.D.]	224	BOWN v. BOWN AND WESTON [Div.]	778
AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD.		BOWNESS v. O'DWYER [C.A.]	181
v. WILDS. SAME v. JEREMIAH [H.L.]	252	BOYT v. BOYT [C.A.]	436
AMERICAN FLANGE AND MANUFACTURING CO., INC.		BRAMH v. HASLEWOOD. IN THE ESTATE OF HILL
v. VAN LEER [K.B.D.]	698	(deceased) [Prov.]	489
AMPHLETT v. DORRELL [C.A.]	674	BRIGGS (R.A.) (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), COM-
ANGELO, CURL v. [C.A.]	189	MERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1041
ANGLESEY ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, PARRY v.		BRISCOE v. BROUGHTON. COGLAN (deceased), Re
[K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	1060	[C.A.]	68
ANGLO-PRAQUE CREDIT BANK, FRANKMAN v.		BRISE, DENMAN v. [C.A.]	141
[C.A.]	1025	BRITISH CELANESE, LTD. v. MONCRIEFF [C.A.]	44
ANSELL v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	789	BRITISH FOLDING BED CO. Re. Ex parte TRUSTEE
ARTILLERY MANSIONS, LTD. v. MACARTNEY [C.A.]	875	v. N. A. WOODWISS & CO. [Ch.D.]	216
A.R.T.S., LTD., BEAMAN v. [K.B.D.]	89	BRITAN v. BRITAN. OLDS v. OLDS [C.A.]	61
ASKBY v. GOLDEN WINE CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	35	BROOKS AND GILBERT, GILBERT v. [C.A.]	64
ASSAM AGRICULTURAL INCOME TAX COMR.,		BROUGHTON, BRISCOE v. COGLAN (deceased), Re
ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH JOINT CO-OPERATIVE		[C.A.]	68
WHOLESALE SOCIETY, LTD. v. [P.C.]	395	BUCKLAND v. GUILDFORD GAS LIGHT AND COKE
ASSOCIATED BRITISH ENGINEERING, LTD., DUKE'S		CO. [K.B.D.]	1086
COURT ESTATES, LTD. v. [Ch.D.]	137	BUTTERWORTH, JACKSON STANSFIELD & SONS v.
ASTON & CO. LTD., RACKETT v. [C.A.]	19	[C.A.]	558
ATHANASSOGLU, LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD.		CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT
v. [C.A.]	722	TRUST, LTD. [K.B.D.]	1101
ATKINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. GOODLASS		CARLISH v. EAST HAM CORPN. [K.B.D.]	550
WALL & LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. [K.B.D.]	653	CARROLL v. ANDREW BARCLAY & SONS, LTD. [H.L.]	386
—, [C.A.]	1095	CARTER (K.), LTD. LEE v. [C.A.]	690
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, LAKEMAN v. Re DUFFY		CASTLE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re (Ch.D.)	927
(decd.) [C.A.]	756	CAVENDISH-BENTINCK v. CAVENDISH-BENTINCK
BAILEY, ROBINSON v. [C.A.]	791	[C.A.]	285
BAIN v. MOSS HUTCHISON LINE, LTD. [K.B.D.]	294	CHAMPANHAC & CO., LTD. v. WALLER & CO., LTD.
BAINBRIDGE (deceased), Re . DARELL v. BAINBRIDGE		[K.B.D.]	724
[Ch.D.]	657	CHAPLIN v. CHAPLIN [C.A.]	408
BALDWIN v. GURNSEY [C.A.]	105	CHAPMAN v. KIRKE [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	556
BALL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [K.B.D.]	917	CHATTERLEY-WHITEFIELD COLLIERIES, LTD., Re
BANKS v. COPE-BROWN [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	76	[C.A.]	593
BANNISTER v. BANNISTER [C.A.]	133	CHESTERFIELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, FIRST
BARBER v. BARBER [Div.]	856	NATIONAL HOUSING TRUST, LTD. v. [K.B.D.
BARBER v. ROWE [C.A.]	1050	DIVL. Ct.]	658
BARCLAY (ANDREW) & SONS, LTD., CARROLL v.		CITY OF LONDON CORP., LANGHAM v. [C.A.]	1018
[H.L.]	386	CLAYTON-WRIGHT, R. v. [C.C.A.]	763
BARKWAY v. SOUTH WALES TRANSPORT CO., LTD.		CLIFF v. CLIFF [C.A.]	760
[C.A.]	460	CLIFT v. TAYLOR [C.A.]	113
BARNATO (deceased), Re . JOEL v. SANGES [Ch.D.]	585	CLIFTON SECURITIES, LTD. v. HUNTLEY [K.B.D.]	283
BARNSELY POLICE AUTHORITY, GORDON v.		COATES, SHARP v. [C.A.]	871
[K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	79	COGLAN (deceased), Re . BRISCOE v. BROUGHTON
BARRINGTON, COLWILL v. Re KENDRICK'S AGREE-		[C.A.]	68
MENT [Ch.D.]	101	COLEMAN BROTHERS, PEARSON v. [C.A.]	274
BEAMAN v. A.R.T.S., LTD. [K.B.D.]	89	COLWILL v. BARRINGTON, Re KENDRICK'S AGREE-
BEAUVAIS, BORTHWICK v. BORTHWICK (deceased),		MENT [Ch.D.]	101
Re [Ch.D.]	179	COMMERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. R. A. BRIGGS
—, [C.A.]	635	(INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	1041
BECK v. BINKS [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	1058	COMPAGNIE FINANCIERE BELGE DES PETROLES
BEDFORD, R. v. [C.C.A.]	766	S.A., A/S TANKEEXPRESS v. [H.L.]	939
BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD., Re . R. v. PAD-		COPE-BROWN, BANKS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	76
DINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL		COX v. S. CUTLER & SONS, LTD. AND HAMPTON
[C.A.]	528	COURT GAS CO. [C.A.]	665
BELLAMAN, THE. THE AGOSTINO BERTANI [ADM.]	679	COXEN (deceased), Re MACCALLUM v. COXEN [Ch.D.]	492
BENNETT, ROPEL v. [C.A.]	627	CURL v. ANGELO [C.A.]	189
BENNETT (E. H.) AND PARTNERS v. MILLETT		CURTIS v. WILCOX [C.A.]	573
[K.B.D.]	929	CUTLER (S.) & SONS, LTD. AND HAMPTON COURT
BERNBAUM v. BERNBAUM [Div.]	1011	Gas Co., Cox v. [C.A.]	665
BETTELEY, ADDYMAN & JALLAND, LTD. v. SINGTON		DALY v. ELSTREE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [C.A.]	13
[K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	81	DALZIEL, PHILLIPS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	810
BIDIE (deceased), Re [C.A.]	995	DANCER v. DANCER [Div.]	731
BINKS, BECK v. [K.B.D. DIVL. Ct.]	1058	DARBY, HAMP v. [C.A.]	474

	PAGE
DARELL v. BAINBRIDGE. Re BAINBRIDGE (deceased) [Ch. D.]	657
DEAN, WRIGHT v. [Ch.D.]	415
DESTOR (No. 335 of 1947), Re A. Ex parte H.M. THE KING v. THE DEBTOR [C.A.]	533
DENMAN v. BRISE [C.A.]	141
DENNANT v. SKINNER [K.B.D.]	29
DENT (T. RODDAM) & SON, LTD., JERRED v. (GLEN LINE, LTD., THIRD PARTY) [LEEDS ASSIZES]	104
DIAMANTS, LTD., LAVENDER v. [K.B.D.]	249
DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, Re DIPLOCK v. WINTLE [C.A.]	318
DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, Re SIMPSON v. LILBURN [C.A.]	429
DOCKER, SELIGMAN v. [Ch.D.]	887
DONOVAN, LOUGHER v. [C.A.]	11
DORELL, AMPHLETT v. [C.A.]	674
DOROTHEA SLATE QUARRIES CO., LTD., ROBERTS v. [H.L.]	201
DUFFY (deceased), Re. LAKEMAN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL [C.A.]	756
DUKE'S COURT ESTATES, LTD. v. ASSOCIATED BRITISH ENGINEERING, LTD. [Ch.D.]	137
DUNN v. DUNN [C.A.]	822
DYDE v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD (STAFFORD COLLIERY UNIT) [C.A.]	172
EAST BARNET U.D.C. v. ALLEN TRENARBY (BARNET), LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	583
EAST HAM CORPN., CARLISH v. [K.B.D.]	550
ECKFORD, HALDANE v. [C.A.]	622
ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [K.B.D.]	514
ELSTREE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, DAILY v. [C.A.]	13
EYBREWERY CO., LTD. Ex parte R. v. PONTY-PRIDD LICENSING JUSTICES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	581
ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH JOINT CO-OPERATIVE WHOLESALE SOCIETY, LTD. v. ASSAM AGRICULTURAL INCOME TAX COMR. [P.C.]	395
EVERITT v. EVERITT [C.A.]	545
EVON v. NOBLE [K.B.D.]	987
FIRST NATIONAL HOUSING TRUST, LTD. v. CHESTERFIELD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIV. CT.]	658
FISH v. KAPUR [K.B.D.]	176
FLOOD v. FLOOD [Div.]	712
FORTRESS FABRICS (MANCHESTER), LTD., MEDITERRANEAN AND EASTERN EXPORT CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	186
FOX v. HUNTER-PATERSON [K.B.D.]	813
FRANKMAN v. ANGLO-PRAGUE CREDIT BANK [C.A.]	1025
FUGGLE (R.F.), LTD. v. GADSDEN [C.A.]	160
FYNN, WILSON v. [K.B.D.]	40
GADSDEN, FUGGLE (R.F.), LTD. v. [C.A.]	160
GAMMACK v. JACKSON WYNESS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1056
GARDNER v. JAMES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1069
GEORGE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.]	1004
GILBERT v. GILBERT AND BROOKS [C.A.]	64
GILLAN v. LANDLESS [C.A.]	721
GILLSON (deceased), Re [C.A.]	990
GLYN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [K.B.D.]	419
GOLD COAST SELECTION TRUST, LTD. v. HUMPHREY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [H.L.]	379
GOLDEN WINE CO., LTD., ASKLEY v. [K.B.D.]	35
GOLDRICH, LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	439
GOLDSON, LIGHTFOOT v. Re NORTON'S WILL TRUSTS [Ch.D.]	842
GONSHAW, LTD., CHARLES OXFORD, LTD. v. [C.A.]	229
GOODLASS WALL & LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. ATRINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [K.B.D.]	653
—, [C.A.]	1095
GORDON v. BARNESLEY POLICE AUTHORITY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	79
GRANT v. SUN SHIPPING CO., LTD. [H.L.]	238
GREAT ORME RAILWAY, LTD., LLANDUDNO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [Ch.D.]	782
GRIFFITHS-JONES, HART v. [BIRMINGHAM SUMMER ASSIZES]	729
GRIMES (OTHERWISE EDWARDS) v. GRIMES [Div.]	147
GUILDFOOT GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO., BUCKLAND v. [K.B.D.]	1086
GUNNER v. GUNNER AND STIRLING [Div.]	771
GURNSEY, BALDWIN v. [C.A.]	165
HADLUM v. HADLUM [C.A.]	412
HAIN SKEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD [K.B.D.]	523
HALDANE v. ECKFORD [C.A.]	622
HAMPS v. DARBY [C.A.]	474
HAMPTON COURT GAS CO. AND S. CUTLER & SONS, LTD., COX v. [C.A.]	665
HANSON, WELLSTED v. , Re WELLSTED'S WILL TRUSTS [Ch.D.]	209

	PAGE
HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. SHELLEY v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [H.L.]	898
HART v. GRIFFITHS-JONES [BIRMINGHAM SUMMER ASSIZES]	729
HARTHAN v. HARTHAN [C.A.]	639
HASLEWOOD, BRAHAM v. IN THE ESTATE OF HILL (deceased) [Prob.]	489
HASTINGS AND FOLKESTONE GLASSWORKS, LTD. v. KALSON [C.A.]	1013
HATCH (deceased), Re. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HATCH [Ch.D.]	288
HAYNES' WILL TRUSTS, Re. PITT v. HAYNES [Ch.D.]	423
HELMAN v. HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	588
HENLYS, LTD., WARREN v. [K.B.D.]	935
HEWORTH v. HEWORTH [Div.]	715
HEYWARD, SYAL v. [C.A.]	576
HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re. HICKMAN v. HICKMAN [Ch.D.]	303
HIDA v. NOLAN [C.A.]	849
HIEROWSKI, JOZWIAK v. [C.A.]	9
HIGGIN, WEBSTER v. [C.A.]	127
HILL (deceased), IN THE ESTATE OF. BRAHAM v. HASLEWOOD [Prob.]	489
HILL (WILLIAM) (PARK LANE), LTD. v. ROSE [C.A.]	1107
HINSON, LLEWELLYN v. [C.A.]	95
HOLLING v. YORKSHIRE TRACTION CO., LTD. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	662
HOLMAN AND KARA, KARA v. [C.A.]	16
HOOPER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re. BOSMAN v. HOOPER [Ch.D.]	261
HOPES v. HOPES [C.A.]	920
HORN v. MINISTER OF FOOD [K.B.D.]	1036
HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, HELMAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	588
HOWARD DE WALDEN (LORD) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	825
HUBBOK v. HUBBOK [C.A.]	412
HUMPHRY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), GOLD COAST SELECTION TRUST, LTD. v. [H.L.]	379
HUNT v. MORGAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1065
HUNTER-PATERSON, FOX v. [K.B.D.]	813
HUNTLEY, CLIFTON SECURITIES, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	283
HURLOCK, BOSTEL BROTHERS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	312
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. [K.B.D.]	514
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., GLYN v. [K.B.D.]	419
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., HOWARD DE WALDEN (LORD) v. [H.L.]	825
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., NEILD v. [C.A.]	1071
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., REED (ALBERT E.) & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	1079
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	378
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. [H.L.]	367
INSALL v. NOTTINGHAM CORPN. [C.A.]	232
IRELAND v. TAYLOR [C.A.]	450
ITTER (deceased), Re [Prob.]	1052
JACKSON STANFIELD & SONS v. BUTTERWORTH [C.A.]	558
JAMES, GARDNER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1069
JEEVES (deceased), Re [Ch.D.]	961
JEFFREY (deceased), Re WELCH v. JEFFREY [Ch.D.]	131
JEREMIAH, AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD., v. [H.L.]	252
JERRED v. DENT (T. RODDAM) & SON, LTD. (GLEN LINE, LTD., THIRD PARTY) [LEEDS ASSIZES]	104
JOBINS v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL [C.A.]	610
JOEL v. SANGES, Re BARNATO (deceased) [Ch.D.]	585
JONES, R. v. [C.C.A.]	964
JOZWIAK v. HIEROWSKI [C.A.]	9
KALSON, HASTINGS AND FOLKESTONE GLASSWORKS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1013
KAPUR, FISH v. [K.B.D.]	176
KARA v. KARA AND HOLMAN [C.A.]	16
KAVANAGH, MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. [Ch.D.]	448
KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	378
KENRICK'S AGREEMENT, Re. COLWILL v. BARRINGTON [Ch.D.]	101
KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN., WILSON v. [K.B.D.]	780
KIRKE, CHAPMAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	556
KRIS CRUISERS, LTD., Re [Ch.D.]	1105
LAKEMAN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. Re DUFFY (deceased) [C.A.]	756
LAMB (W.T.) & SONS v. RIDER [C.A.]	402
LANCASTER v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD [H.L.]	796
LANDLESS, GILLAN v. [C.A.]	721

	PAGE		PAGE
LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. ATHANASSOGLU [C.A.]	722	NORTON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . LIGHTFOOT v. GOLDSON [CH.D.]	842
LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH [K.B.D.]	429	NOTTINGHAM CORPN., INSALL v. [C.A.]	232
LANGHAM v. CITY OF LONDON CORPN. [C.A.]	1018	O'CONNOR'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. O'CONNOR [CH.D.]	270
LAVENDER v. DIAMINTS, LTD. [K.B.D.]	249	ODHAMS PRESS, LTD., LAWSON v. [C.A.]	717
LAWSON v. ODHAMS PRESS, LTD. [C.A.]	717	O'DWYER, BOWNESS v. [C.A.]	181
LEE v. CARTER (K.T.), LTD. [C.A.]	690	OLDS v. OLDS. BRITANN v. BRITANN [C.A.]	61
LEWIS v. SHEPPERDSON. Re SOUTH NEWINGTON (KINGSTON-UPON-HULL) MUNICIPAL ELECTION PETITION [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	503	O'NEILL, R. v. [C.C.A.]	761
LEWIS (E. H.) & SON, LTD. v. MORELLI [C.A.]	1021	OXFORD (CHARLES), LTD. v. GONSHAW, LTD. [C.A.]	229
LIGHTFOOT v. GOLDSON. Re NORTON'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	842	PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD. [C.A.]	528
LILBURN, SIMPSON v. Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE [C.A.]	429	PARRY v. ANGLESEY ASSESSMENT COM. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1060
LILLY'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . [CH.D.]	906	PASKINS' WILL TRUSTS, Re . PASKINS v. UNDERWOOD [CH.D.]	156
LLANDUDNO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GREAT ORME RAILWAY, LTD. [CH.D.]	732	PEARCE, SWINDON CORPN. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	119
LLWELLYN v. HINSON [C.A.]	95	PEARSON v. COLEMAN BROTHERS [C.A.]	274
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, BALL v. [K.B.D.]	917	PEEK v. PEEK [C.A.]	297
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, SHELLEY v. HAR- COURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [H.L.]	898	PHILLIPS v. DAZIEL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	810
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WAR DAMAGE COMRS. Re ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA [CH.D.]	444	PHILLIPS v. WELTON [C.A.]	845
LONDON COUNTY TERRITORIAL AND AUXILIARY FORCES ASSOCIATION v. NICHOLS [C.A.]	432	PIKE, WILSON v. [C.A.]	267
LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD, LAN- CASTER v. [H.L.]	796	PITT v. HAYNES. Re HAYNES' WILL TRUST [CH.D.]	423
LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE, SMITH v. [CH.D.]	306	PONTYPRIDD LICENSING JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte ELY BREWERY CO., LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	581
LONGHURST v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD [H.L.]	834	PRESS CAPS, LTD., Re [CH.D.]	638
LOUGHER v. DONOVAN [C.A.]	11	PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HATCH. Re HATCH (deceased) [CH.D.]	288
LOVETT, WRAGG v. [C.A.]	968	PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. WOHLGEMUTH. Re WOHLGE- MUTH'S WILL TRUSTS [CH.D.]	882
LOWE v. STONE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1076	PUGH, S. STONE & SONS (HOUNSLOW), LTD. v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	818
LUCAS (deceased), Re . SHEARD v. MELLOR [C.A.]	22	PWILLHELI JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte SOANE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	815
LYONS v. MAY [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1062	R. v. BEDFORD [C.C.A.]	766
MACARTNEY, ARTILLERY MANSIONS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	875	R. v. BOARD OF CONTROL (SECRETARY). Ex parte ABDUL KAYUM [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	853
MACCULLUM v. COXEN. Re COXEN (deceased) [CH.D.]	492	R. v. CLAYTON-WRIGHT [C.C.A.]	763
McGOWAN v. McGOWAN [Div.]	1032	R. v. JONES [C.C.A.]	964
MACKRELL v. MACKRELL [C.A.]	858	R. v. O'NEILL [C.C.A.]	761
McTAGGART v. McTAGGART [C.A.]	754	R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD. [C.A.]	528
MARTIN AND WILMOT (DAY INTERVENING), WILMOT v. [Div.]	123	R. v. PONTYPRIDD LICENSING JUSTICES. Ex parte ELY BREWERY CO., LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	581
MARTIN JOHNSON (S) & CO., LTD., MORGAN AND SON, LTD. v. [C.A.]	196	R. v. PWILLHELI JUSTICES. Ex parte SOANE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	815
MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. KAVANAGH [CH.D.]	448	R. v. WINCHESTER AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE. Ex parte WRIGHT [C.A.]	552
MATTHEWS, SHEARS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1064	RACKETT v. ASTON & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	19
MAY, LYONS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1062	READING v. REGEM [K.B.D.]	27
MAYO v. MAYO [Div.]	869	REED (ALBERT E.) & CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	1079
MEDITERRANEAN AND EASTERN EXPORT CO., LTD. v. FORTRESS FABRICS (MANCHESTER), LTD. [K.B.D.]	186	REED (DENNIS), LTD. v. NICHOLLS [K.B.D.]	914
MELLOR, SHEARD v. Re LUCAS (deceased) [C.A.]	22	REGEM, READING v. [K.B.D.]	27
METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD, LONGHURST v. [H.L.]	834	REGENT STREET, OXFORD, Re No. 12 [CH.D.]	568
MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL, JOBBINS v. [C.A.]	610	RIDER, LAMB (W.T.) & SONS v. [C.A.]	402
MILLET, E. H. BENNETT AND PARTNERS v. [K.B.D.]	929	RIORDAN v. MINCHIN [C.A.]	633
MINCHIN, RIORDAN v. [C.A.]	633	ROBERTS v. DOROTHEA SLATE QUARRIES CO. LTD. [H.L.]	201
MINISTER OF FOOD, HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	523	ROBERTSON v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.]	767
MINISTER OF FOOD, HORN v. [K.B.D.]	1036	ROBINSON v. BAILEY [C.A.]	791
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, ANSELL v. [K.B.D.]	789	ROOTES SECURITIES, LTD., SHAW v. [C.A.]	168
MINISTER OF PENSIONS, ROBERTSON v. [K.B.D.]	767	ROPPEL v. BENNETT [C.A.]	627
MOATE v. MOATE [CH.D.]	436	ROSE (deceased), Re [CH.D.]	971
MONCRIEF, BRITISH CELANESE, LTD., v. [C.A.]	44	ROSE, WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD. v. [C.A.]	1107
MORELLI, LEWIS (E. H.) & SON, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1021	ROWE, BARBER v. [C.A.]	1050
MORGAN, HUNT v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1065	RUMERE, LTD., ALEXANDER MOUNTAIN & CO. v. [K.B.D.]	144
MORGAN AND SON, LTD. v. MARTIN JOHNSON (S) & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	196	—, [C.A.]	482
MOSS HUTCHISON LINE, LTD., BAIN v. [K.B.D.]	294	RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	378
MOUNTAIN (ALEXANDER) & CO., v. RUMERE, LTD. [K.B.D.]	144	RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [H.L.]	378
—, [C.A.]	482	RUSSELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. SCOTT [H.L.]	1
MUNRO v. WILLMOTT [K.B.D.]	983	ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA, Re . LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WAR DAMAGE COMRS. [CH.D.]	444
NARIN, WALFORD v. [K.B.D.]	85	SANGES, JOEL v. Re BARNATO (deceased) [CH.D.]	585
NATIONAL COAL BOARD (STAFFORD COLLIERY UNIT), DYDE v. [C.A.]	172	SAYCELL v. BOOL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	83
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. STEELE. STEELE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	193	SCOTT, RUSSELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.]	1
NEILD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	1071	SEARLE (deceased), Re SEARLE v. SIEMS [CH.D.]	426
NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. (COULSON & CO., LTD., THIRD PARTY), VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	806	SELIGMAN v. DOCKER [CH.D.]	887
NICHOLLS, DENNIS REED, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	914	SHAFFER, ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	224
NICHOLS, LONDON COUNTY TERRITORIAL AND AUXILIARY FORCES ASSOC. v. [C.A.]	432	SHARP v. COATES [C.A.]	871
NOBLE, EVON v. [K.B.D.]	987	SHAW v. ROOTES SECURITIES, LTD. [C.A.]	168
NOLAN, HIDA v. [C.A.]	849	SHEARD v. MELLOR. Re LUCAS (deceased) [C.A.]	22
NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD., CAMINER v. [K.B.D.]	1101	SHEARS v. MATTHEWS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1064

	PAGE		PAGE
SHELLEY v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. HARCOURT		INDUSTRIES, LTD. [COULSON & Co., LTD.,
v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL [H.L.] ..	898	THIRD PARTY] [K.B.D.] ..	806
SHEPHERD, Re [Ch.D.] ..	932	WALFORD v. NARIN [K.B.D.] ..	85
SHEPPERDSON, LEWIS v. Re SOUTH NEWINGTON		WALLER & Co., LTD., CHAMPANHAC & Co., LTD. v.
(KINGSTON-UPON-HULL) MUNICIPAL ELECTION		[K.B.D.] ..	724
PETITION [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	503	WALTER'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [Ch.D.] ..	955
SHORT v. TREASURY COMRS. [H.L.] ..	509	WAR DAMAGE COMRS., LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL
SIEMS, SEARLE v. Re SEARLE (deceased) [Ch.D.] ..	426	v. Re ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL CHELSEA [Ch.D.] ..	444
SIMPSON v. LILBURN. Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE [C.A.]	429	WARREN v. HENLYS, LTD. [K.B.D.] ..	935
SINGTON, BETTLEY, ADDYMAN & JALLAND, LTD.		WEBB v. JACKSON WYNESS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL.
v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	81	CT.] ..	1054
SKINNER, DENNANT v. [K.B.D.] ..	29	WEBSTER v. HIGGIN [C.A.] ..	127
SMITH v. LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE [Ch.D.]	306	WELCH v. JEFFREY. Re JEFFREY (deceased) [Ch.D.]	131
SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND		WELLSTED'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . WELLSTED v.
REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.] ..	367	HANSON [Ch.D.] ..	209
SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND		WELTON, PHILLIPS v. [C.A.] ..	845
(INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [H.L.] ..	367	WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. O'CONNOR. Re
SOANE, Ex parte . R. v. PWWELHEI JUSTICES		O'CONNOR'S WILL TRUSTS [Ch.D.] ..	270
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	815	WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. THOMPSON. Re
SOUTH NEWINGTON (KINGSTON-UPON-HULL)		THOMPSON (deceased) [Ch.D.] ..	223
MUNICIPAL ELECTION PETITION, Re . LEWIS v.		WESTON AND BOWN, BOWN v. [Div.] ..	778
SHEPPERDSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	503	WHITE (OTHERWISE BERRY) v. WHITE [Div.] ..	151
SOUTH WALES TRANSPORT CO., LTD., BARKWAY v.		WILCOX, CURTIS v. [C.A.] ..	573
[C.A.] ..	460	WILDS, AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES,
SQUIRE v. SQUIRE [C.A.] ..	51	LTD. v. [H.L.] ..	252
STANSFIELD (JACKSON) & SONS v. BUTTERWORTH		WILLMOTT, MUNRO v. [K.B.D.] ..	983
[C.A.] ..	558	WILMOT v. WILMOT AND MARTIN (DAY INTER-
STEELE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re . NATIONAL PRO-		VENING) [Div.] ..	123
VINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. STEELE [Ch.D.] ..	193	WILSON v. FYNN [K.B.D.] ..	40
STIRLING AND GUNNER, GUNNER v. [Div.] ..	771	WILSON v. KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN.
STONE, LOWE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	1076	[K.B.D.] ..	730
STONE (S.) & SONS (HOUNSLOW), LTD. v. PUGH		WILSON v. PIKE [C.A.] ..	267
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	818	WINCHESTER AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, R. v.
SUN SHIPPING CO., LTD., GRANT v. [H.L.] ..	238	Ex parte WRIGHT [C.A.] ..	552
SWINDON CORPN. v. PEARCE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	119	WINGHAM (deceased), Re [C.A.] ..	908
SYAL v. HEYWARD [C.A.] ..	576	WINNAN v. WINNAN [C.A.] ..	862
TANKEXPRESS, A/S, v. COMPAGNIE FINANCIERE		WINTLE, DIPLOCK v. Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE [C.A.]	318
BELGE DES PETROLES S.A. [H.L.] ..	939	WOHLGEMUTH'S WILL TRUSTS, Re PUBLIC TRUSTEE
TAYLOR, CLIFT v. [C.A.] ..	113	v. WOHLGEMUTH [Ch.D.] ..	882
TAYLOR, IRELAND v. [C.A.] ..	450	WOODBURY v. WOODBURY [C.A.] ..	684
THOMAS v. THOMAS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	98	WOODIWISS (N.A.) & Co., TRUSTEE, v. Ex parte
THOMPSON (deceased), Re . WESTMINSTER BANK,		Re BRITISH FOLDING BED CO. [Ch.D.] ..	216
LTD. v. THOMPSON [Ch.D.] ..	223	WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK BOARD,
TILLEY v. TILLEY [C.A.] ..	1113	OWNERS OF THE S.S. TOWERFIELD, v. THE
TOWERFIELD, THE. OWNERS OF THE S.S. TOWER-		TOWERFIELD [C.A.] ..	736
FIELD v. WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK		WRAGG v. LOVETT [C.A.] ..	968
BOARD [C.A.] ..	736	WRIGHT v. DEAN [Ch.D.] ..	415
TREASURY COMRS., SHORT v. [H.L.] ..	509	WRIGHT, Ex parte . R. v. WINCHESTER AREA
TRUSTEE v. N. A. WOODIWISS & Co., Ex parte		ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE [C.A.] ..	552
Re BRITISH FOLDING BED CO. [Ch.D.] ..	216	WYNESS (JACKSON), LTD., GAMMACK v. [K.B.D.
UNDERWOOD, PASKINS v. PASKINS' WILL TRUSTS,		DIVL. CT.] ..	1056
Re . [Ch.D.] ..	156	WYNESS (JACKSON), LTD., WEBB v. [K.B.D.
VAN LEER, AMERICAN FLANGE AND MANUFAC-		DIVL. CT.] ..	1054
TURING CO., INC. v. [K.B.D.] ..	698	YORKSHIRE TRACTION CO., LTD., HOLLING v.
VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN		[LEEDS ASSIZES] ..	662

INDEX

	PAGE		PAGE
Accessory after the fact. See Criminal Law.		"All my bloodstock," bequest in will. Inclusion of half share in horse and interest as member of syndicate owning stallion	990
Accrue, "to the shares of the daughters of mine who shall at the time of the death of such daughter not have been married," implication of requirement of survival	955	Analyst's certificate. Under Food and Drugs Acts. See Food and Drugs.
ADEMPMENT
Portion—Double portions—Rebuttal of presumption—Difference in character of gifts—Liabilities undertaken by donee at time of gift inter vivos—Quid pro quo for liabilities—Donor compelled to make gift [Re GEORGE'S WILL TRUSTS]	1004	ANIMAL
Ademption. See also Will.		Liability of persons keeping dangerous animals—Lion—Injury to child—Invitee—Child visiting circus—Entering adjoining "zoo" by unauthorised way—Need to relieve herself—No lavatory provided—Child acting reasonably—Insufficient indication of prohibited area [PEARSON v. COLEMAN BROTHERS]	274
ADMINISTRATION		Pigeon—Homing pigeon—Spoiling crops—Right to kill—Property in pigeon [HAMPS v. DARBY]	474
Revocation of grant—Effect of laches [Re COGHAN (deceased), BRISCOE v. BROUGHTON]	68	APPEAL
Will—Capital or income—Compensation for damages to requisitioned property—Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (1) (b) (2), (3) [Re THOMPSON (deceased), WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. THOMPSON]	223	Court of Appeal—Fresh evidence—Evidence obtainable at time of trial—Application of Rent Acts not disputed at trial—Admission of evidence in Court of Appeal to prove rateable value—R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 4 [E. H. LEWIS & SON, LTD. v. MORELLI]	1021
ADOPTION		Appeal, to Court of Appeal. See Court of Appeal
Guardian ad litem—Person other than Official Solicitor—"Special reasons"—Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 8 (3)—Practice Direction (see ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1941, pp. 2619, 2620) [Re A.B. (an infant)]	727	—, costs. See Costs.
ADULTERY		—, to judge in chambers, order of registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17	1011
Admission—Failure by wife to state name of father when registering birth of child—Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (c. 88), ss. 1, 7 [MAYO v. MAYO]	869	Appointment, power of. See Power of Appointment.
Evidence—Cross-examination—"Have you ever committed adultery?"—General charge of adultery pleaded—Particulars of specific acts—Denial in evidence of specific acts—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 198 [BARBER v. BARBER]	856	ARBITRATION
Adultery, proof, period of gestation, 349 days	412	Award—Validity—Damages—Mercantile contract—Expert evidence—Duty to hear—Arbitrator with special knowledge of subject-matter [MEDITERRANEAN AND EASTERN EXPORT CO., LTD. v. FORTRESS FABRICS (MANCHESTER), LTD.]	186
—, revival, subsequent act disclosed in disreputable statement	123	"Article of vertu," sheriff's gold chain	492
Affidavit, cross-examination on, interlocutory proceedings	717	Assignment, of lease. See Lease.
AGENCY		AUCTION
Agency of necessity—Gratuitous bailee—Sale of bailed goods—Owner's instructions unobtainable [MUNRO v. WILLMOTT]	983	Passing of property—Unconditional sale—Representations made after fall of hammer—Subsequent undertaking that property should not pass until cheque honoured Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 58 (2) [DENNANT v. SKINNER]	29
Estate agent—Authority to sell at stated price—Authority to make particular contract [WRAGG v. LOVETT]	968	Awards. See Arbitration.
—, Commission—Contract to pay commission on introduction of a "purchaser able and willing to complete"—Able and willing purchaser found—Vendor's refusal to complete [E. H. BENNETT AND PARTNERS v. MILLETT]	929	BANKRUPTCY
—, Introduction of person "able" to purchase property—"Ability" to pay [DENNIS REED, LTD. v. NICHOLLS]	914	Commencement of bankruptcy—Petition adjourned—Application for liabilities adjustment order—Protection order made—Bankruptcy proceedings stayed—Adjustment order refused—Bankruptcy petition restored—Receiving order—Date of commencement of bankruptcy—Costs—Solicitors' profit costs and disbursements incurred by debtor before and after notice of act of bankruptcy—Whether allowable out of bankrupt's estate—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), ss. 30 (2), 37 (1) [Re BRITISH FOLDING BED CO. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. N. A. WOODIWISS & CO.]	216
Agricultural building, rating, shed used as garage, car used partly for farm and partly for private purposes	1060	Petition—Service—Service out of the jurisdiction—Foreigner—"Act of bankruptcy"—"Carrying on business"—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (c) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 335 of 1947)], Ex parte H.M. THE KING v. THE DEBTOR.]	533
AGRICULTURAL HOLDING		Banns. See Marriage.
Notice to quit—Consent of Minister—Consent during currency of notice—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 62 (4A) [Re KENDRICK'S AGREEMENT, COLWILL v. BARRINGTON]	101	BUILDING
Alimony, pendente lite, termination of lis by final decree, revival of lis by appeal, effect on order for alimony pendente lite, proper tribunal to extend order for alimony pendente lite	285	Control—Licence—Need to be in writing—Permitted cost of work exceeded—Oral permission covering excess—Retrospective effect of licence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended)), reg. 56A (2), (6) [JACKSON STANFIELD & SONS v. BUTTERWORTH] 558 —, Permitted cost of work exceeded—Defences open to alleged offender—Cost of supplying article—Inclusion in permitted cost—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S.R. & O., 1941, Nos. 1596 and 2011, 1945, No. 502), reg. 56A (2), (6), (8) [ROSTEL BROTHERS, LTD. v. HURLOCK] 312

Capita, per, division of fund, division "equally between daughters of S. de V. and to E.M.W." 961 Charge, company, registration, extension of time 1105

CHARITABLE BEQUEST

Gift "for benefit of church and parish"—Support of church school—Up-keep of graves and Bier house—No faculty for Bier house [Re NORTON'S WILL TRUSTS. LIGHTFOOT v. GOLDSON] 842

Gift to institution—Institution closed in lifetime of testatrix—Funds of charity applied cy pres—Whether gift to endowment or towards maintenance of particular premises [Re LUCAS (deceased), SHEARD v. MELLOR] 22

Charitable trust, uncertainty, gift of £100 a year to provide annual dinner for trustees of charity, gift of £1 1s. 0d. for each member of committee attending meeting 492

CHARITIES

Educational charity—Assurance to charity except from law of mortmain—Assurance or copy not sent to Minister of Education—Whether void after six months from taking effect—Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), s. 87 (1) (2) [Re No. 12, REGENT STREET, OXFORD] 568

CHARTERPARTY

Freight—Computation—Carriage of specified cargo—Option to charterer to ship other lawful merchandise—Freight to be paid at rate agreed for specified cargo—Vessel completely loaded partly with specified cargo and partly with optional cargo [HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD] 523

Hire—Default in payment—Method of payment agreed between parties—Extrinsic evidence to prove method [A/S TANK-EXPRESS v. COMPAGNIE FINANCIERE BELGE DES PETROLES S.A.] 939

CHILD

Custody—Declaration that divorced parent not fit to have custody—No jurisdiction to make in chambers—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 7 [CLIFF v. CLIFF] 760

—, Maintenance—Order made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5 (b)—Discharge of order—Order for custody under Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925 [FLOOD v. FLOOD] 712

Child, custody. See also Divorce.

—, injury by animal. See Animal.

—, injury to, high-voltage electric overhead wires, easily climbed tree immediately below wires, child electrocuted while climbing tree, liability of electricity undertakers 1086

"Children," illegitimate children, bequest to "children," inclusion of illegitimate children, effect of surrounding circumstances 882

COAL

Nationalisation of industry—Colliery company—Reduction of capital—Rights of shareholders under Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 25 (1) [Re CHATTERLEY-WHITEFIELD COLLIERIES, LTD.] 593

Codicil. See Will.
Coitus interruptus, nullity, cruelty 147, 151
Common employment. See Master and Servant.

COMPANY

Charge—Registration—Extension of time—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 101 [Re KRIS CRUISERS, LTD.] 1105

Director—Vacation of office—Conviction of "indictable offence"—Offence triable summarily or on indictment—Summary conviction—Unauthorised dealing in gold—Breach of Defence Regulations [HASTINGS AND FOLKESTONE GLASSWORKS, LTD. v. KALSON] 1013

Discovery—Scheme for transfer of shares—Acquisition of shares of dissentient shareholders—Application by shareholders to court—Discovery of documents relating to value of shares transferred—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 209 [Re PRESS CAPS, LTD.] 638

Company, compulsory acquisition. See Emergency Legislation (Control of undertaking).
—, estate duty, valuation of shares according to company's assets, liability of company, anticipated claim for income tax on current profits 756
Compensation, requisitioned property, leasehold property, administration, will, capital or income 223 Compulsory pilot. See Pilot.
Condemnation, prize. See Prize Law.

CONDONATION

Cruelty—Wife remaining in the home after filing of her petition [MACKRELL v. MACKRELL] 858

Evidence—Presumption against—Displacement by uncorroborated evidence of spouse [TILLEY v. TILLEY] 1113
Condonation, knowledge of respondent's adultery, particulars 412
—, See also Divorce.

CONFLICT OF LAWS

Contract—Legality—Customer's debentures deposited by foreign bank at London branch—Condition that deposits be governed by laws of place where kept—Czech laws forbidding re-delivery of debentures—Validity of demand in London [FRANKMAN v. ANGLO-PRAGUE CREDIT BANK] 1025
Connivance. See Divorce.
Conspiracy, damages, supply of contaminated goods to wholesaler, wholesaler fined for selling goods, repayment by wholesaler to retailers, recovery of damages from supplier by wholesaler 35
Constructive trust. See Trust.

CONTRACT

Breach—Default of sub-contractor—Liability of contractor—Contract by defendant to deliver plant to plaintiff—Contract between defendant and sub-contractor to dismantle plant—Delay in delivery to plaintiff through fault of sub-contractor [VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. (COULSON & CO., LTD., Third Party)] 806
Contract, legality, customer's debentures deposited by foreign bank at London branch, condition that deposits be governed by laws of place where kept, Czech law forbidding re-delivery of debentures, validity of demand in London 1025
Contributory negligence. See Negligence.
Control of undertaking. See Emergency Legislation.
Conversion, damages, gratuitous bailee, instructions of owner of goods unobtainable, sale without instructions, date at which damages assessable 983 —, limitation of action, postponement of limitation period, "action based on fraud," "right of action concealed by fraud," honest belief by bailor of goods that disposal was to interest of bailee 89
Co-operative society, income tax, profits of trade, loans to association by members, produce sold exclusively to members 395

	PAGE COSTS
Appeal to Court of Appeal—Costs of several parties with same interests and same arguments—Allowance of only one set of costs [Re GILLSON (deceased)]	990
Costs, bankruptcy, solicitors costs incurred by debtor before and after notice of act of bankruptcy, whether allowable in full or to be proved as debts	216 —, divorce. See Divorce.
COUNTY COURT
Payment into court—Tender—Plea filed after payment in—Applicability of County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 47, r. 8 (2) [HIDA v. NOLAN]	849
County court, appeal to Court of Appeal, power of Court of Appeal to hear fresh evidence	721
COURT OF APPEAL
Fresh evidence—Power to hear—County court appeal [GILLAN v. LANDLESS]	721
Vexatious and oppressive defence—Inherent jurisdiction to strike out [CHARLES OXFORD, LTD. v. GONSHAW, LTD.]	229
Court of Appeal, costs of appeal to. See Costs.
—, decree absolute, no opportunity to appeal against decree nisi, petition not served on appellant, no error of court of trial	545
—, divorce, appeal from Divisional Court, jurisdiction to entertain	297
—, power to grant alimony pendente lite	285
—, powers, matters of fact arising after order of county court	157
Covenant, in lease, breach. See Lease.
CRIMINAL LAW
Accessory after the fact—Direction to jury—Specification of acts alleged to have been done to assist the felon—Statement made to avoid arrest on other charge [R. v. JONES]	964
Appeal—Special treatment of appellant—Time counting as part of sentence—Application for leave to appeal—Refusal by judge in chambers—Appeal to full court—Dismissal of appeal—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 38 (2) [R. v. BEDFORD]	766
Indictment — Joinder of counts — Charges in respect of different transactions — Nexus of defrauding insurers present throughout—Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), sched. I, r. 3 [R. v. CLAYTON-WRIGHT]	763
Sentence—Borstal detention—Second sentence to Borstal detention while undergoing or liable to undergo another such sentence—Date of commencement not to be fixed [R. v. O'NEILL]	761
Crops, damage to, abnormal increase in number of pheasants owing to weather conditions, reservation by landlord of exclusive right of sporting and preserving game, liability of landlord	887
Crown, party, originating summons, future liability to estate duty	585 —, use of patent. See Patent.
Crown property, application of Rent Restrictions Acts, house owned by territorial association	432
Cruelty, coitus interruptus	151
—, condonation, wife remaining in house after filing of her petition	858
Custody, child. See Child; Infants and Children.
—, infant. See also Infants and Children.
CUSTOMS
Carrying uncustomed goods with intent to defraud—Possession away from port of entry—Evasion of purchase tax on imported goods and evasion of customs duty one offence—Customs consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 186—Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 11 (1) [BECK v. BINKS]	1058
DAMAGES
Measure of damages—Fatal accident—Loss of expectation of life—Depreciation in value of money—Funeral expenses—Enbalming of body—Erection of monument—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions)
Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (1), (2) (c) [HART v. GRIFFITHS-JONES]	729
Remoteness of damage—Loss of profit—No notice to defendant of special circumstances—Purchase of boiler for use in business—Need to extend business—Seller ignorant of need—Delay in delivery [VICTORIA LAUNDRY (WINDSOR), LTD. v. NEWMAN INDUSTRIES, LTD. (COULSON & Co., LTD., Third Party)]	806 Damages, conversion. See Conversion.
—, detainee. See Detinue.
Defence, striking out. See Practice.
—, vexatious and oppressive, inherent jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to strike out	229
DEMURRAGE
Computation—Lay days—Carriage of specified cargo—Option to charterer to ship other lawful merchandise—Vessel completely loaded partly with specified cargo and partly with optional cargo—Calculation of demurrage on cargo actually loaded and discharged [HAIN STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD]	523
DESERTION
Burden of proof—Rebuttal of charge by respondent—Matrimonial home—Right to decide where matrimonial home shall be [DUNN v. DUNN]	822
Maintenance—Provision of matrimonial home—Reasonable accommodation offered—Sharing of husband's parents' home — Wife securing flat elsewhere — Husband's refusal to occupy flat [MCGOWAN v. MCGOWAN]	1032
Parties living under same roof—Need to prove de facto separation—Parties sharing household [HOPES v. HOPES]	920
Res judicata—Order obtained by wife for wilful neglect to maintain—Allegation of desertion by husband — Subsequent petition for divorce by husband on ground of desertion based on same facts [WINNAN v. WINNAN]	862
DETINUE
Conversion — Damages — Gratuitous bailee—Instructions of owner of goods unobtainable—Sale without instructions—Date at which damage assessable—Expenditure by bailee on goods [MUNRO v. WILL-MOTT]	983
Director, of company. See Company.
DISCOVERY
Originating summons — Application under Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1933—R.S.C., Ord. 54r, rr. 1, 14 [Re BORTHWICK (deceased), BORTHWICK v. BEAUVAIS]	179
Discovery, company, scheme for transfer of shares, acquisition of shares of dissentient shareholders, application by shareholders to court, discovery of documents relating to value of shares transferred	638 —, family provision. See Family Provision.
Discretion, of court, in divorce cases, see Divorce.
Distress, unpaid rates, defence, allegation that assessment increased on defective proposal	583
Divisional court, divorce, appeal to Court of Appeal, competence	297
DIVORCE
Alimony pendente lite—Termination of his by final decree—Revival of his by appeal—Effect on order for alimony pendente lite—Proper tribunal to extend order for alimony pendente lite—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 27 (1), 190 (3) [CAVENDISH-BENTINCK v. CAVENDISH-BENTINCK]	285
Appeal—Court of Appeal—Appeal from Divisional Court—Jurisdiction to entertain—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 27 [PEEK v. PEEK]	297

—, Decree absolute—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal—No error of court of trial—No opportunity to appeal against decree nisi—Petition not served on appellant—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 31 (1) (e)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36 [EVERITT v. EVERITT] 545

Condonation—Husband and guilty wife living together in same house, but with no marital intercourse—Husband desirous of reconciliation, but wife's refusal—Parties continuing to live together as before—Revival of husband's condoned adultery by subsequent act of adultery disclosed in discretion statement—Discretion of court—Exercise in wife's favour [WILMOT v. WILMOT AND MARTIN (Day intervening)] 123

Connivance—Consideration of conduct as a whole—Corrupt intention—Letters written by distraught wife amounting to licence to continue adulterous association [WOODBURY v. WOODBURY] 684

Costs—Appeal—Wife's costs of husband's appeal—Discretion of court—Wife's allegation of husband's cruelty—Liability of co-respondent on issue of cruelty [KARA v. KARA AND HOLMAN] 16

—, Co-respondent—No appearance—Proof of signature on acknowledgment of service—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), r. 8 (2) [GILBERT v. GILBERT AND BROOKS] 64

—, Poor person—Discretion to order poor person to pay opponent's costs—Basis of payment—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 28 (1) [OLDS v. OLDS. BRITAN v. BRITAN] 61

Cruelty—Evidence—Order of court of summary jurisdiction on similar issue—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 6 (2) [KARA v. KARA AND HOLMAN] 16

—, Need of deliberation, malignity and intent—Conduct arising from illness [SQUIRE v. SQUIRE] 51

Custody—Custody pending suit—Preservation of status quo until trial [BOYT v. BOYT] 436

Evidence—Adultery—Period of gestation—Three hundred and forty-nine days [HADLUM v. HADLUM] 412

—, Privilege—Negotiations before probation officer—Admissibility of evidence of probation officer [McTAGGART v. McTAGGART] 754

—, Proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery—Plea of condonation by co-respondent—Respondent a compellable witness—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 198 [TILLEY v. TILLEY] 1113

Pleading—Answer—Particulars—Condonation—Knowledge—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 22 [HUBBOCK v. HUBBOCK] 412

Practice—Divisional Court—Interlocutory order—Order setting aside decree nisi and directing new trial—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 15—"Error of court at hearing"—Evidence withheld from court—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36 [PEEK v. PEEK] 297 —, Order of registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17—Appeal to judge in chambers—R.S.C. Ord. 54, r. 22A (1) (a), (2)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), rr. 59, 81, 82 [BERNBAUM v. BERNBAUM] 1011

Pregnancy at date of marriage by person other than petitioner—Petition filed more than a year after marriage—Concealment by wife—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (d), proviso (ii) [CHAPLIN v. CHAPLIN] 408

Divorce, variation of settlement. See Variation of Settlement.

Document, admissibility in evidence, proof of witness, deceased solicitor's clerk, probate action anticipated, partner of firm propounding will 489 —, proofs of witnesses 294

—, Evidence of contents, lost document. See Evidence (secondary evidence).

—, statement in, admissibility in evidence. See Evidence.

—, statement made by person, admissibility in evidence, transcript of evidence given in earlier action on same facts, but by different plaintiff 460

Double portions. See Portion.

Dustbin, provision, house subject to Rent Acts, dustbin originally provided by owner, no contractual obligation to provide, requirement by local authority that owner should provide new dustbin, successful appeal by owner to justices, transfer to tenant of "burden or liability" 658

Educational charity. See Charity.

ELECTION

Municipal election—Ballot papers—Validity—Papers insufficiently marked with official stamp—Initials written on paper—Mark near name of candidate—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 29, sched. II, pt. III, paras. 18, 34 (a), (c), (d) [Re SOUTH NEWINGTON (KINGSTON-UPON-HULL) MUNICIPAL ELECTION PETITION. LEWIS v. SHEPPERDSON] 503

Electricity, injury to child, high voltage overhead wires, easily climbed tree immediately below wires, child electrocuted while climbing tree, liability of electricity undertakers 1086

Embalming, inclusion in "funeral expenses" under Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, s. 1 (2) (c) 729

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

Control of undertaking—Compulsory acquisition of company—Transfer of shares to government nominees—Price to be paid for shares—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended)), reg. 78 (5) [SHORT v. TREASURY COMRS.] 509

Price control—Footwear—Price in excess of controlled price—Price marked on box containing footwear constituting offer for sale at that price—Goods and Services (Price Control) Act, 1941 (c. 31), s. 1, s. 20 (4) (a)—General Footwear (Maximum Prices and Charges) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 1413) (as amended), arts. 1, 5 [PHILLIPS v. DALZIEL] 810

Estate agent, authority to sell at stated price, authority to make particular contract 968

—, commission, contract to pay commission on introduction of a "purchaser able and willing to complete." "Able and willing" party found, vendor's refusal to complete 929

—, introduction of person "able" to purchase property, "ability" to pay 914

ESTATE DUTY

Company—Valuation of shares according to value of company's assets—Liability of company—Anticipated income tax claim on current profits—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), ss. 50 (1), 55 (2) [Re DUFFY (deceased). LAKEMAN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] 756

Legacy duty—"Further legacy... duty"—Settled legacy of £20,000—Duty payable on death of tenant for life—Payment out of capital of legacy or residue—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 49 [Re SHEPHERD] 932

Property "passing"—Change in beneficial interest or possession of property on death of person contingently entitled to distributions—Accumulations—Direction by testator to accumulate up to £8,000 and then invest in land—Land to be entailed on fixed date—Periodical distributions under Scottish law of entail—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 1 [HALDANE v. ECKFORD] 622

ESTOPPEL
Landlords' assumption of applicability of Rent Acts—Denial four years later [LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH] ..	439

EVIDENCE

Admissibility—Document "Information supplied" to person making statement—
—"Person interested"—Transcript of evidence given in earlier action brought on same facts, but by different plaintiff—Death of witness before trial in present proceedings—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (i) (b), (3), (4) [BARKWAY v. SOUTH WALES TRANSPORT CO., LTD.] ..	461
—"Statement in document"—
—"Person interested"—Domestic servant—In charge of employer's child—Injury to child—Action for negligence against person alleged to have caused injury—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (3) [EVON v. NOBLE] ..	987
—"Officers of ship"—Action for negligence against shipowners, "their servants or agents"—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (3) [BAIN v. MOSS HUTCHISON LINE, LTD.] ..	294
—"Proof of deceased solicitor's clerk"—Probate action anticipated—Partner of firm propounding will—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (3) [IN THE ESTATE OF HILL (deceased). BRAHAM v. HASLEWOOD] ..	489
Secondary evidence—Contents of document—Lost document—Note of memorandum of agreement—Lease—Admission of counterpart on proof of loss of lease—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 [BARBER v. ROWE] ..	1050
Evidence, divorce. See Divorce.
—, fresh. See Fresh Evidence.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX

Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of tax—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1) [RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	378
—"Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee"—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 32 (1)—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1) [SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	367
Exemption—Profession—Profits dependent on personal qualifications—Severance of trade from profession—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (3) [NEILD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	1071
"Income received from investment"—Fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public collected and distributed to members by company limited by guarantee Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1), (2) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. Re GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD.] ..	514
"Investments"—Temporary letting and requisition of business premises—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1) [ALBERT E. REED & CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	1079

EXECUTION

More than six years after judgment—Application for leave to issue—Previous application refused—New material—Explanation of delay—Validity of R.S.C., Ord. 42, r. 23 (a) [W. T. LAMB & SONS v. RIDER. SAME v. SAME] ..	402
Stay—Effect—Lease determined by notice to quit—Judgment for possession stayed pending appeal as to validity of notice—Subsequent valid notice while stay still in operation—Rights of landlord—[CLIFTON SECURITIES, LTD. v. HUNTLEY] ..	283

"Executive necessity," doctrine of ..	767
Expectation of life, loss, fatal accident, damages, depreciation in value of money 729
Extortionate rent. See Rent Restriction.

FACTORY

Fencing—Transmission machinery—Workman injured by flying part of broken machinery—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 13 (1), 14 (1) [CARROLL v. ANDREW BARCLAY & SONS, LTD.] ..	386
"Place" used for purpose other than processes carried on in factory—Gas Works—Reconstruction of gas holder on site separate from gas works—Site in exclusive possession of contractors—"Article"—Coal gas—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (1) (a) (c), (xiii), (6) [COX v. S. CUTLER & SONS, LTD. AND HAMPTON COURT GAS CO.] ..	665
Safe means of access—Window cleaner—Independent contractor—Invitee—Duty of occupier—Responsibility of independent contractor—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1) [LAVENDER v. DIAMINTS, LTD.] ..	249

FAMILY PROVISION

Discovery—Special circumstances—Net value of estate—Practice—R.S.C., Ord. 54F, r. 14 [Re BORTHWICK (deceased). BORTHWICK v. BEAUVAIS] ..	635
Discovery of documents—Practice—R.S.C., Ord. 54F, rr. 1, 14 [Re BORTHWICK (deceased), BORTHWICK v. BEAUVAIS] ..	179
Time for application—Lost will—Grant of letters of administration—Will found—Revocation of grant—Grant of probate—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), s. 2 (1) [Re BIDIE (deceased)] ..	995
Summons issued before representation taken out—Statement in will of reasons for dispositions—Admissibility of evidence as to reasons—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45), ss. 1 (7), 2 (1) [Re SEARLE (decd.). SEARLE v. SIEMS] ..	426
Fatal accident, damages, loss of expectation of life, depreciation in value of money, funeral expenses, embalming of body, erection of monument ..	729
Fencing, dangerous machinery. See Factory.
Fishery board, justice member of board instituting proceedings, qualification to hear case, no part taken in proceedings of board ..	815

FOOD AND DRUGS

Analyst's certificate—Analysis of sample—Form of certificate—Need of standard for comparison—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 81 (1) [GAMMACK v. JACKSON WYNESS, LTD.] ..	1056
Food not of nature, substance or quality demanded—Standard of quality—No standard prescribed by law—Standard to be fixed in accordance with evidence—Vinegar—Deficiency in acetic acid content—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 3 (1) [WEBB v. JACKSON WYNESS, LTD.] ..	1054
Samples—Samples taken after delivery at purchaser's premises—Name and address of consignor not appearing on container—Right of consignor to have part of sample submitted to him—Evidence of public analyst—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), ss. 70 (1), (2), 81 (1) [S. STONE & SONS (HOUNSLOW), LTD. v. PUGH] ..	818

FOREIGN JUDGMENT

Registration in High Court—Setting aside registration—Judgment obtained by fraud on foreign court—Facts relied on known to defendants at time of proceedings in foreign court—Order for trial of issue of fraud—Condition that defendants should bring money into court—Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (c. 13), s. 4 (1) (a) (iv)—R.S.C., Ord. 41B, r. 3 [SYAL v. HEYWARD] ..	576
Forfeiture, lease. See Lease.
Forfeiture clause, will, gift to son of share in residuary estate subject to forfeiture on alienation ..	423

FRAUD

- Conspiracy—Damages—Supply of contaminated goods to wholesaler—Wholesaler fined for selling goods—Repayment by wholesaler to retailers—Recovery of damages from supplier by wholesaler* [ASKEY v. GOLDEN WINE CO., LTD.] . . . 35
- Freight. See Charterparty.
- Fresh evidence, power of Court of Appeal to hear, county court appeal . . . 721
- Frustration, lease, impossibility of performance . . . 141
- Funeral expenses, fatal accident, embalming of body, erection of monument . . . 729
- "Further legacy duty," settled legacy of £20,000, duty payable on death of tenant for life, payment out of capital of legacy or residue . . . 932

GAME

- Reservation by landlord of exclusive right of sporting and preserving game—Abnormal increase in number of pheasants owing to weather conditions—Damage to tenant's crops—Liability of landlord* [SELIGMAN v. DOCKER] . . . 887

GAMING

- Debt—Promise to pay by instalments—Consideration—Promise by bookmaker not to report to Tattersalls* [WILLIAM HILL (PARK LANE), LTD. v. ROSE] . . . 1107
- Gas works, factory, "place" used for purpose other than processes carried on in factory, reconstruction of gas holder on site separate from gas works, site in exclusive possession of contractors . . . 665
- General legacy. See Legacy.
- Gift, charitable. See Charitable bequest.
- Goods, inspection of. See Practice.
- Goodwill, compensation. See Landlord and Tenant.
- Government department, admission of claim by one department, binding on another department . . . 767
- Guardian ad litem. See Adoption.

HACKNEY CARRIAGE

- Taxicab—Metropolitan police district—"Plying for hire"—Obligation to accept fare while travelling along street—London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (c. 33), ss. 7, 17 (2)* [HUNT v. MORGAN] . . . 1065

HARBOUR

- Pilot—Compulsory pilot—Negligence Contributory negligence—Ship running aground—Negligence of harbour board—How far negligence of pilot a defence to harbour board—Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 74—Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15* [THE TOWERFIELD OWNERS OF THE SS. TOWERFIELD v. WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK BOARD] 736
- Heirloom, application of rule in Shelley's Case 193

HIGHWAY

- Negligence of driver causing hurt to a person—Injury to cyclist by driver opening door of a stationary motor lorry—Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 78* [SHEARS v. MATTHEWS] . . . 1064
- Non-repair—Liability of local authority—Non-feasance—Road temporarily repaired by highway authority—Subsequently becoming out of repair* [WILSON v. KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES CORPN.] . . . 780
- Highway, negligence, omnibus accident. See Negligence.
- , nuisance, coke ovens, smoke and steam escaping across highway . . . 662
- , —, waterworks, leakage in water pipe, paving stones on footpath affected, water undertakers not aware of danger, liability . . . 834

HIRE PURCHASE

- Collateral agreement—Abrogation—Parol warranty during negotiations of "roadworthiness" of motor car—Subsequent formal document excluding warranties* [WEBSTER v. HIGGIN] . . . 127
- House, requisition. See Requisition.

HOUSING

- Accommodation of working classes—Recovery of possession—Right of local authority—Exclusion of Rent Restrictions Acts—Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 83 (1), 156 (1) (a)* [SHELLEY v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. HARCOURT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] . . . 898
- Registration of living accommodation—Exclusion of Rent Restrictions Acts—Householder not in physical occupation of premises at date of registration—Relative dates of letting and registration—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927) (as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452, and S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1622), reg. 68CB (1), (6)* [BALDWIN v. GURNSEY] . . . 165
- Working classes—"Insanitary" house—"Fit for human habitation"—General standard in district—Hot water system out of order—Other facilities for heating water—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 9 (1), 188 (4)* [DALY v. ELSTREE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL] . . . 13

HUSBAND AND WIFE

- Custody—Maintenance—Summonses by wife under both Summary Jurisdiction and Guardianship of Infants Acts—Proper course for justices to follow* [HEWORTH v. HEWORTH] . . . 715
- Legal proceedings—Protection of separate property—Tort by husband before marriage—"Thing in action"—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), ss. 12, 24* [CURTIS v. WILCOX] . . . 573
- Maintenance—Cessation of order—Resumption of cohabitation—Order obtained while wife living apart from husband—Wife's return to husband's house to live in separate rooms as tenant—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 2 (2)* [THOMAS v. THOMAS] . . . 98
- , Separation order—Arrears—Recovery—Claim by widow to recover against estate of husband—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), ss. 5 (c), 9 [Re BIDIE (deceased)] . . . 995
- Proceedings by wife—Injunction—Matrimonial home belonging to wife—Right to exclude husband* [BOYT v. BOYT] 436
- Summary proceedings as to property—Presumption of advancement—Purchase by intended husband in name of intended wife—Subsequent marriage* [MOATE v. MOATE] . . . 486
- Husband and wife, marriage. See Marriage.
- "Income received from investments," fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public, excess profits tax . . . 514

INCOME TAX

- Additional assessments—"If the surveyor discovers . . . that a person chargeable . . . has been undercharged"—"Discoverers"—Mistake in general law—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 125 (1)* [COMMERCIAL STRUCTURES, LTD. v. R. A. BRIGGS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] . . . 1041
- Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of excess profits tax—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)* [RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] . . . 378
- , —, Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a) [SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] . . . 367
- Income from foreign possessions—New source in year of assessment—Shares in foreign company—Acquired prior to 1942-43—Income first received in 1942-43—Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 30, proviso (ii)*

	PAGE
[ATKINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. GOODGLASS WALK AND LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD.]	653, 1095
Profits of trade—Co-operative society—loans to society by members—Produce sold exclusively to members—Assam Agricultural Income Tax Act (No. IX of 1939), s. 3 [ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH JOINT CO-OPERATIVE WHOLESALE SOCIETY, LTD. v. ASSAM AGRICULTURAL INCOME TAX COMR.]	395
Profits or gains—Shares received as consideration for transfer of property—Company dealing in gold mining concessions—Transfer of concessions to associate company for fully paid-up shares—Shares not disposable during year of transaction—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 4, D, case 1 [GOLD COAST SELECTION TRUST, LTD. v. HUMPHREY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SAME v. SAME]	379
Property in lands—Annual value—Sand pit—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. A, No. III, r. 3 [RUSSELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. SCOTT]	1
Settlement—Interest of settlor in settled property—Income deemed to be income of settlor—Appointment of trusts by settlor and son jointly—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (3), (4) [GLYN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.]	419
Indictment. See Criminal Law.
INFANTS AND CHILDREN
Custody or upbringing—Welfare—Paramount consideration—Moral and physical welfare—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 41), s. 1 [ALLEN v. ALLEN] ..	413
Injunction, husband and wife, proceedings by wife, matrimonial home belonging to wife, right to exclude husband	436
Inspection of goods. See Practice.
Insurance, motor vehicle, under Road Traffic Acts. See Road Traffic.
Insurance policy, post-nuptial as settlement	771
Interim development. See Town and Country Planning.
Interlocutory order, Divisional Court of Divorce Division, order settling aside decree nisi and directing new trial	297
INTERROGATORY
Libel—Newspaper—Defence of fair comment—Interrogatory to writer of article as to identity of informant—Writer paid servant of newspaper [LAWSON v. ODHAMS PRESS, LTD.]	717
INTOXICATING LIQUOR
Justices' consent to structural alterations—Destruction of identity of premises—Relevant consideration—Change from hotel to public house—Licensing (Consolidation), Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 71 [R. v. PONTY-PRIDD LICENSING JUSTICES. Ex parte ELY BREWERY CO., LTD.]	581
Invention, of servant, servant trustee for master, obligation (after termination of employment) to procure patent protection for master in other countries	44
—, See also Patent.
"Investments," exception in bequest in will, inclusion of policy moneys	906
—, excess profits tax, temporary letting and requisition of business premises	1079
Inventor, negligence of, shipowner, duty to stevedores, beam left insecure by shipowners, failure to examine beam by stevedores or their employers	104
Judge in chambers, appeal to, from order of Divorce Registrar under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17	1011
Judgment, foreign. See Foreign judgment.
JUSTICES
Fishery board—Chairman of justices member of fishery board instituting proceedings—Qualification to hear case—No part taken in proceedings of board—Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (c. 16), s. 8 (1), s. 76 [R. v. PWLLHELI JUSTICES. Ex parte SOANE]	815

Knowledge, allegation in pleadings, particulars	412
LAND CHARGES
Registration—Estate contract—Yearly tenancy under written agreement—Undertaking to grant 10 years' lease—Landlord himself holding under yearly tenancy at time of agreement—Fee simple later vested in landlord—Validity of undertaking against purchaser of land—Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), ss. 10 (1), Class C (iv), 13 (2) [SHARP v. COATES]	871
Land, sale. See Sale of Land.
Landlord, negligence, gratuitous installation of domestic boiler, boiler in dangerous condition, tenant's daughter injured by explosion, liability of landlord	917
LANDLORD AND TENANT
Goodwill—Compensation—Claim for new lease—Reasonableness—Premises required by landlord for occupation by his firm—Absence of adherent goodwill—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), 5 (1), (3) (b) (i), (iv) [CLIFT v. TAYLOR] ..	113
—, Letting of premises at higher rent—Compensation—New lease—Premises used for purposes prohibited by head lease—Premises "required" for occupation by landlord—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), 5 (1), (2) and (3) (b) (i) [IRELAND v. TAYLOR]	450
Landlord's title questioned by tenant—Estoppel [E. H. LEWIS & SON, LTD. v. MORELL]	1021
Notice to quit—Tenancy at will [FOX v. HUNTER-PATERSON]	813
Landlord and tenant, possession, limitation of action, warrant obtained 14 years before claim for order to extend time for execution ..	11
LEASE
Assignment—Withholding of consent—Reasonableness—Prevention of creation of statutory tenancy [LEE v. K. CARTER, LTD.] ..	690
Forfeiture—Breach of covenant—Premises not to be sub-let without landlord's previous consent—Consent not to be unreasonably withheld—Reasonableness—Landlord to have time for consideration—Lessees not to permit premises "to be used otherwise than as offices for the purpose of their business"—Sub-lessee's business different from that of lessees [WILSON v. FYNNE]	40
—, Breach of covenant alleged—Omis of proof [DUKE'S COURT ESTATES, LTD. v. ASSOCIATED BRITISH ENGINEERING, LTD.] ..	137
Impossibility of performance—Frustration [DENMAN v. BRISE]	141
New lease—Claim by tenant—Notice of willingness to grant—Notice served only by superior landlord more than two months after tenant's claim—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), proviso (b), 5 (1), 8 (1) [RACKETT v. ASHTON & CO., LTD.] ..	19
Option to purchase reversion—Option not registered as land charge—Sale of reversion—Rejection by purchaser of purported exercise of option—Liability of lessor—Measure of damages [WRIGHT v. DEAN]	415
Lease, new lease. See also Landlord and Tenant.
Legacy, general or specific, "to my son 10,000 preference shares" in private company, testator holding only 9,000 shares, no words indicating testator's ownership of shares bequeathed, legacy not included in pecuniary legacies to be satisfied out of residue	270
—, See also Will.
Legacy duty, settled legacy of £20,000, duty payable on death of tenant for life, payment out of capital of legacy or residue	932
Libel, interrogatory. See Interrogatory.
Licence, building. See Building (control).
—, motor vehicle. See Motor Vehicle.
Licensing law. See Intoxicating Liquor.
LIMITATION OF ACTION
Landlord and tenant—Possession—Warrant obtained 14 years before claim for order to extend time for execution—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 2 (4)—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (4) [LOUGHER v. DONOVAN] 11

Postponement of limitation period—Conversion—Action based on fraud—"Right of action concealed by fraud"—Bailment of goods—Owner abroad during war—Instructions unobtainable—Storage charges accumulating—Goods given away as worthless—Action brought more than 6 years after date of conversion—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), ss. 3, 26 (a), (b) [BEAMAN v. A.R.T.S., LTD.] 89

Recovery of sums paid under invalid residuary bequest—Action by next of kin—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 20 [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK v. WINTLE (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS)] 318

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Superannuation—Amount of allowance—Area public assistance office acting also as interim superintendent registrar of births and deaths—Inclusion of fees as registrar in calculation of average remuneration—Calculation to be based on gross fees—Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), ss. 8 (5) (c), 40 (1), (3) [JOBBINS v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL] 610

London, taxicab, "plying for hire," obligation to accept fare while travelling along street 1065

Machinery, dangerous fencing. See Factory.

Maintenance, child. See Child.

—, See also Desertion; Husband and Wife.

MARRIAGE

Banns—Due publication—Absence of fraud—True name of intended spouse—Name acquired by repute—Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), ss. 7, 22 [DANCER v. DANCER] 731

MASTER AND SERVANT

Common employment—Linesman and trolley bus driver [LANCASTER v. LONDON PASSENGER TRANSPORT BOARD] ..

Invention—Invention of servant—Agreement for inventions made during employment to become exclusive property of master—Servant trustee for master—Obligation of servant, after termination of employment, to procure patent protection for master in other countries—Effect of agreement terminating service agreement [BRITISH CELANESE, LTD. v. MONCRIEFF] 44

Liability of master to third persons for acts of servant—Acts within scope of authority and course of employment—Threat by garage customer to report employee—Assault on customer by employee [WARREN v. HENLYS, LTD.] 935

Profits obtained by servant dishonestly by virtue of employment—Recovery by master—Soldier—Bribes by civilian—Recovery by Crown [READING v. REGEM] .. 27

Matrimonial home, right to decide where home shall be .. 822

Maximum price. See Price Control.

Measure of damages. See Damages.

Memorandum, of contract. See Sale of Goods.

MENTAL DEFICIENCY

Person detained by order of a court—Order for transfer to institution for defectives—Date of expiration of order—Power of Board of Control to make a general order for extension—Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (c. 28), s. 11 [R. v. BOARD OF CONTROL (SECRETARY). Ex parte ABDUL KAYUM] 853

MISTAKE

Mistake of law—Money paid under mistake—Recovery—Money had and received—Personal claim in equity—Construction of will—Residue of testator's estate paid to charitable institutions by executors—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under intestacy to recover from institutions sums paid [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK v. WINTLE (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS)] .. 318

MONEY

How far money can be followed—Money paid to charitable institutions by executors under a mistake as to the construction of a will—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under an intestacy to trace [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK v. WINTLE AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS] .. 318

Money paid by charity into its "general fund" [Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, SIMPSON v. LILBURN] 429

Money had and received, money paid under mistake, recovery, personal claim in equity, residuary estate wrongly paid to charitable institutions, right of those entitled under intestacy to recover from sums paid .. 318

Monument, erection, inclusion in "funeral expenses" under Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, s. 1 (2) (c) .. 729

MORTGAGE

Possession by mortgagee—Originating summons—Parties—Trustee in Bankruptcy R.S.C., Ord. 55, rr. 5A, 5B [MARTINS BANK, LTD. v. KAVANAGH] .. 448

MOTOR VEHICLE

"Driving"—Steering lorry down incline without engine running—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 7 (4) [SAYCELL v. BOOL] 83

Licence—Rate of duty—Altered condition of vehicle—Removable boards fitted to sides of lorry—Whether "loose equipment"—Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 14 (1), (2)—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 26 [LOWE v. STONE] .. 1076

Municipal election. See Election.

Name, marriage, banns, true name of intended spouse, name acquired by repute .. 731

Nationalisation, coal industry. See Coal.

Necessity, agency of. See Agency.

NEGLIGENCE

Child—High-voltage electric overhead wires—Easily climbed tree immediately below wires—Child electrocuted while climbing tree—Liability of electricity undertakers [BUCKLAND v. GUILDFORD GAS, LIGHT AND COKE CO.] .. 1086

Duty to invitees—Duty of shipowners to stevedores—Beam left insecure by shipowners—Effect of failure to examine beam by stevedores or their employers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 60—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), Duties, para (d); reg. 42 [JERRED v. T. RODDAM DENT & SON, LTD. (GLEN LINE, LTD. Third Party)] 104

Highway—Leakage in water-pipe—Paving-stones on footpath affected—Water undertakers not aware of danger—Liability [LONGHURST v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD] 834

Landlord—Gratuitous installation of domestic boiler—Boiler in dangerous condition—Tenant's daughter injured by explosion—Liability of landlord [BALL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 917

Nuisance—Tree—Elm tree adjoining road—Fall on passing car—Fall due to disease and want of topping—Liability of occupier of land [CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.] 1101

Presumption of negligence—Highway—Skid—Omnibus mounting pavement and falling down embankment—Accident due to tyre-burst—Impact fracture of tyre—No evidence when or how caused—Reasonable system of tyre maintenance by defendants [BARKWAY v. SOUTH WALES TRANSPORT CO., LTD.] .. 460

Res ipsa loquitur—Dentist—Extraction of tooth—Fracture of jaw [FISH v. KAPUR] 176

Stevedore—Injured by falling into uncovered hatch—Hatch covers and electric lights removed by ship repairers—Breach of statutory regulations by shipowner and repairers—Contributory negligence—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No.

279), regs. 12 (c), 37, 45 [GRANT v. SUN SHIPPING CO., LTD.]	238
Negligence, pilot, compulsory pilot, ship running aground in harbour, how far pilot's negligence a defence to harbour board	736
New lease, claim by tenant. See Lease.
—, claim for. See Landlord and Tenant.
Newspaper, libel, interrogatory, defence of fair comment, interrogatory to writer of article as to identity of informant, writer paid servant of newspaper	717
Non-feasance, non-repair of highway, liability of local authority	780
Note, of contract. See Sale of Goods.
Notice to quit. See Landlord and Tenant.

NUISANCE

Premises adjoining highway—Coke ovens—Smoke and steam escaping across highway [HOLLING v. YORKSHIRE TRACTION CO., LTD.]	662
Waterworks — Statutory powers — Damage occasioned without negligence—Liability [LONGHURST v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD]	834
Nuisance, tree, elm tree adjoining road, fall on passing car, fall due to disease and want of lopping, liability of occupier of land	1101

NULLITY

Cruelty—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage — Coitus interruptus — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) WHITE (otherwise BERRY) v. WHITE	151
Impotence — Petition by impotent spouse—Competency—Need of repudiation of marriage by potent spouse [HARTMAN v. HARTMAN]	639
Wilful refusal to consummate marriage — Coitus interruptus — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a) [GRIMES (otherwise EDWARDS) v. GRIMES]	147
Official Solicitor, adoption of child, guardian ad litem	727
Omnibus, accident on highway. See Negligence.
Omnibus service, powers of Transport Executive, power to provide service where London Passenger Transport Board not so empowered	306
Onus of proof, forfeiture of lease	137
Option to purchase reversion, option not registered as land charge, sale of reversion, rejection by purchaser of purported exercise of option, liability of lessor, measure of damages	415
Originating summons, mortgage, possession by mortgagee, parties, trustee in bankruptcy	448
Particulars. See Practice.
Parties, substitution of plaintiff, claim of executrix to be substituted as plaintiff, writ issued in trading name of deceased person, deceased trading as firm but without partners	144
—, See also Practice.
Party, Crown, originating summons, future liability to estate duty	585

PATENT

Use by Crown—Patent for whole article, not for component part—Application to unpatented article of Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c. 29), s. 29 (1) (1A) (as amended to 1948) and Defence (Patents, Trade Marks, etc.) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1780), reg. (3) (5) [AMERICAN FLANGE AND MANUFACTURING CO., INC. v. VAN LEEB]	698
Payment into court, county court. See County Court.

PENSION

Aggravation of pre-war disability—Power of tribunal finding aggravation to determine duration thereof [ANSELL v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	780
Attributability—Injury suffered in December, 1939—Claim admitted by War Office—Minister of Pensions not consulted—Assurance given by War Office binding on Minister of Pensions [ROBERTSON v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS]	767
Pension, police. See Police.

PERPETUITIES

Settlement—Limitation to a class—Introduction of new members into original class of takers—Gift to children who should attain 25—Proviso that, if any son should die under the age of 25 leaving any children who should attain 21, such children should take the share to which the parent would have been entitled, had he attained 25 [Re HOOPER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. BOSMAN v. HOOPER]	261
"Person interested," document rendered inadmissible in evidence. See Evidence.
Photography, infra-red, use to reveal words in codicil obscured by paper pasted over them	1052
Pigeon, homing pigeon, spoiling crops, right to kill, property in pigeon	474
Pilot, compulsory pilot, negligence, ship running aground in harbour, how far pilot's negligence a defence to harbour board	736
Pleading, divorce. See Divorce.
"Plying for hire," taxicab, metropolitan police district, obligation to accept fare while travelling along street	1065

POLICE

Pension—Widow's special pension—"Non-accidental injury"—"Special risks"—Heart disease aggravated by duty —Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), ss. 3 (b), 33 (3) [GORDON v. BARNSLEY POLICE AUTHORITY]	79
Policy, insurance. See Insurance Policy.
Poor person, costs, order to pay opponent's costs	61
Portion, double portions, rebuttal of presumption, difference in character of gifts, liabilities undertaken by donee at time of gift inter vivos , quid pro quo for liabilities, donor compelled to make gift	1004
Possession. See Landlord and Tenant.
Power of appointment, power to tenant for life to appoint to issue, exercise during life of tenant for life, "as well the capital as the income... with such future or other trusts... and such provisions for their respective advancement... at the discretion of my trustees" as the tenant for life should appoint	657

PRACTICE

Inspection of goods—Non-compliance with order—Striking out defence—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21 [CHARLES OXFORD, LTD. v. GONSHAW, LTD.]	229
Interlocutory proceedings—Cross-examination on affidavit [LAWSON v. ODHAMS PRESS, LTD.]	717
Originating summons—Joinder of Crown as party—Future liability to estate duty—Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (c. 44), ss. 13, 23 (2) (b)—R.S.C. Ord., 1A, r. 1, Ord. 54A, r. 1A, Ord. 55, r. 3, Ord. 55, r. 5 [Re BARNATA (deceased). JOEL v. SANGES]	585
Particulars—Defence—Forfeiture of lease—Onus on plaintiff to prove case—Defendant's denial involving double negative [DUKE'S COURT ESTATES, LTD. v. ASSOCIATED BRITISH ENGINEERING, LTD.]	137
Parties—Mistake—Substitution of plaintiff—Action begun in name of firm—Sole proprietor of firm dead—Substitution of proprietor's executrix as plaintiff—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2 [ALEXANDER MOUNTAIN & CO. v. RUMERE, LTD.]	482
—, Substitution of plaintiff—Claim of executrix to be substituted as plaintiff—Writ issued in trading name of deceased person—Deceased trading as a firm, but without partners—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2 [ALEXANDER MOUNTAIN & CO. v. RUMERE, LTD.]	144
Summary judgment—Leave to defend—Set-off and counterclaim—Equitable set-off—R.S.C., Ord. 14 [MORGAN AND SON, LTD. v. S. MARTIN JOHNSON & CO., LTD.]	196
Practice, divorce. See Divorce.
—, mortgage, possession by mortgagee, originating summons, parties, trustee in bankruptcy	448
Pregnancy, at date of marriage, by person other than petitioner, petition filed more

PRICE CONTROL

Exceeding maximum price—Penalty—
Minimum penalty—Offender, to derive “no benefit from the offence”—Deduction of tax paid on excessive profit—Defence
(General) Regulations, 1939 S.R. & O.,
1939, No. 927, reg. 55AB (4) (a) [BETTE-
LEY, ADDYMAN & JALLAND, LTD. v.
SINGTON] 81
Price control. See also Emergency Legislation.

PRIZE LAW

Condemnation—Claims arising out of “purported exercise of belligerent rights” barred by peace treaty—Ships aground in port—Capture of port—Ships formally boarded and certificate of prize signed four years after armistice, but before signing of peace treaty—Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 16 [THE BELLAMAN. THE AGOSTINO BETTANI] 679

PUBLIC HEALTH

Dustbin—Provision—Owner of building required by local authority to provide—House subject to Rent Restrictions Acts—Dustbin originally provided by owner—No contractual obligation to provide—Owner's appeal to justices allowed—Transfer of “burden or liability” from landlord to tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage
Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 2
(3)—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 75
(1) [FIRST NATIONAL HOUSING TRUST,
LTD. v. CHESTERFIELD RURAL DISTRICT
COUNCIL] 658
Purchase price, article bequeathed charged with, motor car ordered before testator's death, but not paid for 492
Purchase tax, evasion, imported goods, evasion of tax and evasion of customs duty one offence 1058

RATES AND RATING

Agricultural building—Shed used as garage—Car used partly for farm and partly for private purposes—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 2 (2)
—Agricultural Rates Act, 1929 (c. 26),
s. 1 (1) [PARRY v. ANGLESEY ASSESSMENT
COMMITTEE] 1060

Assessment—Building occupied in part—Occupation by lodger or tenant—
Owner occupying rest of house—Presumption that other occupant a lodger—Right to assess part separately—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 23 (1) [HELMAN
v. HORSHAM AND WORTHING ASSESSMENT
COMMITTEE] 588

Recovery of rate—Distress—Application for issue of warrant—Defence—Allegation that assessment increased on defective proposal [EAST BARNET U.D.C. v. ALLEN
TRENARRY (BARNET), LTD.] 583

Valuation list—Amendment—
Proposal—Specification of grounds for proposed amendment—Rating and Valuation
Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 37 (2) (b) [R. v. WIN-CHESTER AREA ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE.
Ex parte WRIGHT] 552

Remoteness of damage. See Damages.

RENT CONTROL

Furnished house—Reduction of rent—
Reduction below amount of standard rent—
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946
(c. 34), s. 7 [R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST.
MARYLBONE RENT TRIBUNAL Ex parte
BEDROCK INVESTMENTS, LTD.] 528

RENT RESTRICTION

Costs—Action in High Court—Claim arising out of Acts raised in defence—
Increase of rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 17 (2) [LEE
v. K. CARTER, LTD.] 690

Crown Property—House owned by territorial association—Application of Acts —Territorial Army Regulations, 1936

“Dwelling-house”—Two separated flats let together—Date for considering rateable value—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32),
s. 16—Rent and Mortgage Interest
Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71) s. 7 [LANGFORD
PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. GOLDRICH] 439

Extortionate rent—Rent including right to use kitchen, bathroom and garden in common with other tenant—Application of Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage
Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s.
10 (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage
Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71)
s. 3 (1), sched. I) [BANKS v. COPE-BROWN] 76

Furnished letting—Amount of rent attributable to use of furniture—Percentage of contractual rent—Value of furniture to tenant—Need to quantify value to tenant —Recovery of excessive rent—Excess paid in period ending before tenant's application for repayment—Increase of Rent and
Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920
(c. 17), s. 9 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c.
71), sched. I); s. 12 (2), proviso (i)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32) s. 10 (1) [ROPPEL v. BENNETT] 627

—, Furnished letting—Recovery of excess rent—Applicant no longer tenant at time of application—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920
(c. 17), s. 9 (1) (as amended by Rent and
Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939
(c. 71), sched. I) [RIORDAN v. MINCHIN] 633 —, Rent of furniture substantial portion of whole—Date when comparison to be made—Increase of Rent and Mortgage

Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s.
12 (2) (i) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage
Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32),
s. 10 (1)) [JOZWIAK v. HIEROWSKI] 9

—, Rent reduced by rent tribunal—Increase of Rent and Mortgage
Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17),
s. 12 (2) (i) (as amended by the Rent and
Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923
(c. 32), s. 10 (1)—Rent and Mortgage
Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71),
s. 3 (2) (b) [BOWNESS v. O'DWYER] 181

Possession—House destroyed by enemy action—Contractual tenancy not determined —House rebuilt—Tenant refused possession by landlord—Notice to tenant to quit—Claim by tenant for possession [DENMAN
v. BRISSE] 141

—, Lease of flat with “attendance”
—Separate charge stipulated for attendance —Whether charge for attendance “substantial part of whole rent”—“Value to the tenant”—“Tenant”—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions)
Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2)—Rent and
Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923
(c. 32), s. 10 (1) [ARTILLERY MANSIONS,
LTD. v. MACARTNEY] 875

—, Notice of increase of rent in 1920
—Death of tenant in 1922—Widow statutory tenant—Whether statutory tenancy passed to daughters on death of widow—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions)
Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g)—Rent
Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923 (c. 13), s. 1 (1) [PHILLIPS v. WELTON] 845

—, Personal occupation—Tenant living elsewhere and passing two nights a week in premises [LANGFORD PROPERTY
CO., LTD. v. ATHANASSOGLU] 722

Recovery of possession—Dwelling-house required as residence for “person engaged in whole-time employment” of landlord—Employee under contract but unable to commence work owing to illness —Termination of contract shortly after order of county court—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act,
1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (g) [R. F.
FUGGLE, LTD. v. GADSDEN] 160

- "Separate dwelling"—Exclusive letting of room with user, in common with other tenants, of other rooms, including kitchen—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16 (1) [LEWELLYN v. HINSON] 95*
- , Rooms let for extra bedroom accommodation for adjoining hotel—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2) [CURL v. ANGELO] 189*
- Standard rent—Apportionment—Application by tenant of whole property—Property, as a whole, outside Rent Restrictions Acts—Property comprising principal dwelling-house and a lodge—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (3) [AMPHLETT v. DORRELL] 674*
- , "Rent"—Lease of flat—Agreement in contemporaneous document to pay annual sums for decorative alterations and cost of management—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. I [ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER] 224*
- , Uncontrolled dwelling-house let at uneconomic rent—Subsequent letting, when controlled, at increased rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I) [INSALL v. NOTTINGHAM CORPN.] 232*
- Rent restriction, exclusion of Acts, registration of living accommodation, householder not in physical occupation of premises at date of registration, relative dates of letting and registration 165*
- , transfer to tenant of "burden or liability," provision of dustbin, dustbin originally provided by owner, no contractual obligation to provide, requirement by local authority that owner should provide new dustbin, successful appeal by owner to justices 658*
- REQUISITION
- House—Delegation of powers—Sufficiency of letter from Minister—Requisition of part of premises—Need for part to be specified in delegation—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended), reg. 51 (1), (5)—Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 7 ([CARLISH v. EAST HAM CORPN.] 550*
- Requisition, compensation, leasehold property, will, administration, capital or income 223*
- "Residence," gift in will of house, gift over on beneficiary ceasing to reside 492*
- Reversion, option to purchase, option not registered as land charge, sale of reversion, rejection by purchaser of purported exercise of option, liability of lessor, measure of damages 415*
- RIGHT OF WAY
- Excessive user—Grant of right of way to part of residential estate—User for business purposes [ROBINSON v. BAILEY] 791*
- ROAD TRAFFIC
- Insurance against third party risks—Permitting vehicle to be used on road without policy of insurance being in force—Owner's policy covering only owner and persons in his employ—Lorry driven back to owner's premises by garage proprietor—Garage proprietor not in owner's employ—Garage proprietor not insured—Disqualification—"Special reasons"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) (2) [LYONS v. MAY 1062*
- , Use of motor vehicle not covered by insurance policy—Dismissal of charge under Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (c. 17), s. 1 (1)—"Special reasons"—Good character—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) (2) [GARDNER v. JAMES] . . 1069*
- Royalty, patent. See Patent.*
- SALE OF GOODS
- Breach of warranty—Sale by sample—"With all faults and imperfections"—Goods not up to sample—liability of vendor [CHAMPANHAC & CO., LTD. v. WALLER & CO., LTD.] 724*
- Implied warranty of fitness—Variation of implied rights—Avoidance of agreement "Perishing" of goods before risk passes to buyer—Sale of potatoes to Minister of Food—Buyer's duty to give delivery instructions—Risk of deterioration with buyer—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), ss. 7, 14 (2), 20 [HORN v. MINISTER OF FOOD] 1036*
- Note or memorandum in writing—Signature of auctioneer's employee on behalf of purchaser—Whether sufficient to bind purchaser in action by auctioneer—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1) [WILSON v. PIKE] 267*
- , Sufficiency—Omission of vendor's name—Deficiency supplied by purchaser's admission—Omission of term as to delivery—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1) [WALFORD v. NARIN] 85*
- Sale of land, constructive trust, oral undertaking by purchaser to permit vendor to occupy cottage rent free 133*
- Samples, under Food and Drugs Act, see Food and Drugs.*
- Secondary evidence. See Evidence.*
- "Securities for money," exception in bequest in will, inclusion of policy moneys 906*
- Servant, liability of master for acts of, acts within scope of authority and course of employment, threat by garage customer to report employee, assault on customer by employee 935*
- Settlement, income tax, interest of settlor in settled property, income deemed to be income of settlor, appointment of trusts by settlor and son jointly 419*
- Shares, compulsory acquisition of, see Emergency Legislation (control of undertaking).*
- Silicosis, not "injury by accident" within Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 1 (1) 201*
- Soldier, bribes by civilian, recovery by Crown 27*
- Soldier's will. See Will.*
- Standard legacy. See Legacy.*
- Standard rent. See Rent Restriction.*
- STATE CARRIAGE
- Electric tramway car—"Injuring property of owner"—Negligence not amounting to "wanton and furious driving"—State Carriages Act, 1832 (c. 120), s. 48 [CHAPMAN v. KIRKE] 556*
- Statement in document, admissibility in evidence. See Evidence.*
- STATUTES
- Construction—Right conferred by main enacting sections of Act—Effect of provision in interpretation section [JOBBINS v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL] 610*
- Stay of execution. See Execution.*
- Stirpes, per, division of fund, division "equally between daughters of S. de V. and to E.M.W." 961*
- STREET TRAFFIC
- Omibus service—Powers of Transport Executive—Service started by Executive in competition with private transport operator—Power of Executive to provide service where London Passenger Transport Board not so empowered—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 72 (1)—Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), ss. 2 (1), 3 (1), 65 (1) [SMITH v. LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE] 306*
- Sub-contractor, liability of contractor for default of 806*
- Superannuation, local government officer. See Local Government (superannuation).*
- SUR-TAX
- "Income arising under a settlement"—Undistributed income of foreign company—Apportionment and sub-apportionment—Taxpayer controlling chain of foreign companies—Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 41 (4) (a) (ii)—*

	PAGE
Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 13 (3) [LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] ..	825
Taxicab. See Hackney Carriage.
Tenancy at will, notice to quit	813
Tender, county court, payment into court, plea filed after payment-in, applicability of County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 47, r. 8 (2)	849
Territorial association, house owned by, application of Rent Restriction Acts	432

TITHE

Extinguishment—Detriment to officer—Compensation—“Substantial detriment to livelihood”—Enquiry into total income of office holder—City of London (Tithes) Act, 1947 (c. xxxi), s. 16 (1) [LANGHAM v. CITY OF LONDON CORP.]	1018
---	------

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

Interim development—Enforcement of interim development control—Proposed prohibition of use of land—Appeal by occupier—Powers of court of summary jurisdiction—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 5 (2), sched. I, para. 3 [SWINDON CORPN. v. PEARCE]	119
--	-----

TRAMWAY

Purchase by local authority—Purchase price—“Total capital of company actually invested in undertaking at time of purchase”—Sale by purchasers from original company—Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), s. 44—Great Orme Tramways Act, 1898 (c. xxviii), s. 57 (1) [LLANDUDNO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GREAT ORME RAILWAY, LTD.]	782
Tramwaycar, stage carriage	556
Transport Executive, power to provide service where London Transport Board not so empowered	306
Tree, elm tree adjoining road, fall on passing car, fall due to disease and want of lopping, liability of occupier of land	1101

TRUST

Constructive trust—Sale of cottage—Oral undertaking by purchaser to permit vendor to occupy cottage rent free [BANNISTER v. BANNISTER]	133
---	-----

TRUSTEE

Trustee for sale—Sale of realty—Power to re-invest in realty—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 28 (1) [Re WELLSTEAD'S WILL TRUSTS, WELLSTEAD v. HANSON]	209
Undertaking, control. See Emergency Legislation.

VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT

Insurance policy—Sum payable on death of husband—Policy expressed to be effected under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, for benefit of wife absolutely—Payment of periodical premiums—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 11—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192 [GUNNER v. GUNNER AND STIRLING]	771
—, —, —, Wife specified as beneficiary—Wife's rights dependent on her surviving husband—Policy obtained on payment of single premium—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192 [BOWN v. BOWN AND WESTON]	778
Vesting, early, presumption	303
Vexatious and oppressive, defence, inherent jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to strike out	229
Vinegar, non-brewed, standard of quality, percentage of acetic acid content	1054
War, use of patented article during. See Patent.

WAR DAMAGE

Temporary works payment—“Works reasonably executed for temporarily meeting the circumstances created by the damage”—Provision of alternative accommodation away from site of damage—Permanent
--	--

structures—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) [Re ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, CHELSEA LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WAR DAMAGE COMRS.]	444
Warranty, breach, sale of goods. See Sale of Goods.

WATERWORKS

Statutory duty—Damage due to defective water-pipe—Duty to reinstate and repair road confined to portion taken up—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), s. 32 [LONGHURST v. METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD]	834
Widow, police officer's widow, pension. See Police.

WILL

Accruer—Accruer “to the shares of the daughters of mine who shall at the time of the death of such daughter not have been married”—Implication of requirement of survival [Re WALTER'S WILL TRUSTS]	955
Ademption—Gift of shares—Option to purchase granted by testator after date of will—Exercise of option after testator's death—Gift inter vivos—Gift of shares in private company if such shares not transferred to legatee “previously to my death”—Transfer executed by testator during his lifetime—Refusal of directors to register transfer until after testator's death [Re ROSE (deceased)]	971
“All my bloodstock”—Inclusion of half share in horse and interest as member of syndicate owning stallion [Re GILLSON (deceased)]	990
Alteration—Evidence of original contents—Dependent relative revocation—Infra-red photography to reveal words hidden by slips of paper—Words “apparent” before the alteration—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26) s. 21 [Re ITTER (deceased.)]	1052
Construction—Absolute gift cut down by engrafted trusts—Defeasance clause—“Any event whereby any [person] entitled to any life interest would if such life interest belonged to him absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof”—Beneficiary in German occupied territory against his will—Whether an “enemy”—Operation of defeasance clause—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 2 (1) (b) [Re HATCH (deceased). PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HATCH]	288
—, “Articles of vertu”—Gold chain presented on election as sheriff [Re COXEN (deceased). MACCULLUM v. COXEN]	492
—, Bequest to “children”—Inclusion of illegitimate children—Effect of surrounding circumstances [Re WOHLGEMUTH'S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. WOHLGEMUTH]	882
—, Charitable trust—Uncertainty—Gift of £100 per annum to provide annual dinner for Court of Aldermen acting as trustees—Gift of £1 1s. 0d. for each member of committee of management for attendance at meeting [Re COXEN (deceased), MACCULLUM v. COXEN]	492
—, Division per capita or per stirpes—Gift of residue “to my brothers A and B also C and D—equally”—C and D children of a deceased brother of testatrix [Re JEFFREY (deceased), WELCH v. JEFFREY]	131
—, Gift of dwelling-house—Uncertainty—Condition subsequent—“If in the opinion of my trustees she shall have ceased permanently to reside therein”—Residence” [Re COXEN (deceased). MACCULLUM v. COXEN]	492
—, Gift of house on trust for sister for life—Gift over to testator's housekeeper “provided she is living with my sister at the time of my sister's death”—Housekeeper living in the same house, but entirely apart from sister, at time of sister's death [Re PASKINS' WILL TRUSTS, PASKINS v. UNDERWOOD]	156
—, Heir-loom—Rule in Shelley's case—“To be held by him and by his eldest son on his decease and to descend to the eldest son of such eldest son and so on to the eldest son of his descendants and I request

	PAGE
my son to do all in his power by his will or otherwise to give effect to this my wish"—[Re STEELE'S WILL TRUSTS, NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. STEELE]	193
—, Latent ambiguity—One article available to answer two bequests—Article divisible—Moiety to each beneficiary [Re ALEXANDER'S WILL TRUST]	111
—, "Motor cars which shall be ordered for any dwelling-house"—Motor car ordered, but not delivered or paid for—Whether charged with payment of purchase price—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 35 [Re COXEN (deceased). MACCULLUM v. COXEN]	492
—, Power to tenant for life to appoint to issue—Exercise during life of tenant for life—"As well the capital as the income... with such future or other trusts... and such provisions for their respective advancement... at the discretion of... my trustees" as the tenant for life should appoint [Re BAINBRIDGE (deceased) DARELL v. BAINBRIDGE]	657
—, Presumption of early vesting—Gift of necklace "to the wife of my grandson," A.E.H., subject to prior life interest of M.W.H.—Gift over "in the event of my grandson not marrying"—Grandson unmarried at date of will and at death of testatrix—Subsequently married twice—First marriage dissolved—Second marriage during lifetime of M.W.H.—Gift to first person answering description of being wife of grandson [Re HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS. HICKMAN v. HICKMAN]	303
—, Division of fund—Per stirpes or per capita—Division "equally between daughters of S. de V. and to E.M.W." [Re JEEVES (deceased)]	961
—, Forfeiture clause—Gift to son of share in residuary estate subject to forfeiture on alienation—Provision in son's marriage settlement for transfer to settlement trustees of part of son's share in testator's residue after payment thereof to him [Re HAYNES' WILL TRUSTS, PITT v. HAYNES]	423
—, Gift over after prior limitation—Particular condition not satisfied—Ultimate gift over on death of prior donee during lifetime of testator's mother—Death of prior donee after death of testator's mother but during lifetime of testator [Re BOWEN (deceased)]	979
—, "Investments"—"Securities for money"—Proceeds of life assurance policies [Re LILLY'S WILL TRUSTS]	906
—, Legacy—General or specific—Shares in private companies—Number of shares bequeathed amounting to exact number held by testator—No words indicating testator's ownership of shares bequeathed [Re ROSE (deceased)]	971
—, "To my son 10,000 preference shares" in private company—Testator holding only 9,000 shares—No words indicating testator's ownership of shares bequeathed—Legacy not included in pecuniary legacies to be satisfied out of residue [Re O'CONNOR'S WILL

	PAGE
TRUSTS. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. O'CONNOR]	270
—, Soldier's will—Actual military service—Airman training in Canada for operational duties—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11—Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (c. 58), s. 5 (2) [Re WINGHAM (deceased)]	908
—, "Surviving" two events—Satisfaction of requirements by persons living at date of second event only [Re CASTLE'S WILL TRUSTS]	927
Will, administration. See Administration.
Window cleaner, independent contractor, factory, safe means of access to work, duty of occupier, responsibility of cleaner	249
Working class house, recovery of possession by local authority, exclusion of Rent Restrictions Acts	898
Working classes, houses, "fit for human occupation," hot water system out of order	13
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION
—, Award—Appeal—"Decision" on question of law—Finding of arbitrator—forming the basis of an award—Workman's notional pre-accident average weekly earnings—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), sched. I, para. 4 [DYDE v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD (STAFFORD COLLIERY UNIT)]	172
—, Compensation—Calculation of weekly payments—Change in rates of remuneration—Alteration in working hours—Same wage paid for 44 hour week as previously paid for 47 hour week, with same rates of overtime as before—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1) [SHAW v. ROOTES SECURITIES, LTD.]	168
—, "Miner paid a rate per shift—Normal working week reduced from 6 shifts, paid at rate of 25s. per shift, to 5 consecutive shifts, paid at rate of 25s. per shift, with a bonus of 25s. if full qualifying 5 shifts worked—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1) [DYDE v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD (STAFFORD COLLIERY UNIT)]	172
—, Industrial disease—"Notional accident"—Total incapacity—Further "notional accident" during incapacity caused by first "accident"—Nystagmus followed by pneumoconiosis or silicosis—Partial capacity recovered—Right to compensation in respect of second "notional accident"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 9 (3) (i), 43 (1) (c), (d)—Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931 (S.R. & O., 1931, No. 342), para. 9 (2) (a)—Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 885), para. 9 (3) [AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD. v. WILDS. SAME v. SAME. SAME v. JEREMIAH]	252
—, Injury by accident—Silicosis—Slate worker—Injury to lungs by inhalation of dust—Continuous process extending over a period of time—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1) [ROBERTS v. DOROTHEA SLATE QUARRIES CO., LTD.]	201

CASES REFERRED TO

	PAGE
A. v. A. (sued as B.) (1887), 19 L.R. Ir. 403; 27 Digest 266, s.	640, 649, 651
Abouloff v. Oppenheimer , (1882), 10 Q.B.D. 295; 52 L.J.Q.B. 1; subsequent proceedings , (1883), 52 L.J.Q.B. 309; 11 Digest 457, 1132	577, 579, 580
Absalom v. Talbot , [1944] 1 All E.R. 642; [1944] A.C. 204; 113 L.J.Ch. 369; 171 L.T. 53; 26 Tax Cas. 166, 183; Digest Supp.	380, 384
Adam W. Spies, The , (1901), 70 L.J.P. 25; 41 Digest 683, 5124	737, 741
Adams v. Naylor , [1944] 2 All E.R. 21; [1944] K.B. 750; 113 L.J.K.B. 499; 171 L.T. 105; on appeal , [1946] 2 All E.R. 241; [1946] A.C. 543; 115 L.J.K.B. 356; 175 L.T. 97; 2nd Digest Supp.	1087, 1093
Adams & Kensington Vestry, Re , (1834), 27 Ch.D. 394; 54 L.J.Ch. 87; 51 L.T. 382; 32 W.R. 883, C.A.; 43 Digest 581, 296	193, 195
Addie (K.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck , [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; Digest Supp.	274, 279, 282, 1087 1092, 1093
Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland and Orkney and Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. , [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; sub nom. , Boy Andrew (Owners) v. St. Rognvald (Owners) , [1948] A.C. 140; [1948] L.J.R. 768	239, 245
Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute , [1922] A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417	662, 664
Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton , (1886), L.R. 2 Exch. 56; 4 H. & C. 656; 36 L.J.Ex. 33; 43 Digest 796, 2336	197, 199
Alberg v. Chandler , (1948), 64 T.L.R. 394	1108, 1112
Alcock, Re , [1945] 1 All E.R. 613; [1945] Ch. 264; 114 L.J.Ch. 161; 173 L.T. 4; 2nd Digest Supp.	961, 963
Algar v. Middlesex County Council , [1945] 2 All E.R. 243; 173 L.T. 143; 109 J.P. 213; 2nd Digest Supp.	611, 612, 613, 616
Allan v. Liverpool, Inman & Kirkdale , (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 180; 43 L.J.M.C. 69; 30 L.T. 93; 38 J.P. 261; 38 Digest 446, 155	589, 590
Allchurch v. Hendon Union Assessment Committee , [1891] 2 Q.B. 436; 61 L.J.M.C. 27; 65 L.T. 450; 56 J.P. 117; 38 Digest 453, 200	589, 592
Allen v. Farquharson Bros. & Co. , (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 59; Digest Supp.	368, 372, 375
Anderson (In the Estate of) , [1943] 2 All E.R. 609; [1944] P. 1; 113 L.J.P. 25; 169 L.T. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.	908, 909, 914
Anderton & Halstead, Ltd. v. Birrell , [1932] 1 K.B. 271; 101 L.J.K.B. 219; 146 L.T. 139; 16 Tax Cas. 200; Digest Supp.	1042, 1044, 1045, 1048
Angel v. Angel , [1946] 2 All E.R. 635; 176 L.T. 90; 111 J.P. 14; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 923, 925
Anichab, The , [1919] P. 329; 89 L.J.P. 47; 122 L.T. 249; 3 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 611	680, 683
Anon. , (1683), 1 Vern. 162; 23 E.R. 388; 23 Digest 432, 5031	319, 329
Anon. , (1718), 1 P. Wms. 495; 24 E.R. 487; 23 Digest 430, 5010	319, 329, 333, 334
Astle v. Astle , [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.	52, 53, 54
Atkins v. Atkins , [1942] 2 All E.R. 637; 2nd Digest Supp.	52
Atkinson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co. , [1926] 1 K.B. 313; 95 L.J.K.B. 266; 134 L.T. 217; 90 J.P. 17; Digest Supp.	387, 390
Atlantic, The, The Baltyk , (1946), 62 T.L.R. 461; 2nd Digest Supp.	294, 296
A.-G. v. Goddard , (1929), 98 L.J.K.B. 743; Digest Supp.	27, 28
A.-G. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. , [1935] A.C. 382; 104 L.J.K.B. 523; 152 L.T. 577, H.L.; Digest Supp.	289, 291
A.-G. v. Milne , [1914] A.C. 765; 88 L.J.K.B. 1083; 111 L.T. 343; 21 Digest 46, 296	622, 623, 626
B. v. M. (falsely called B.), (1942) Q.W.N. 5; 2nd Digest Supp.	640, 651
B. (otherwise C.) v. B. , (1942), Q.W.N. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.	640, 651
B—n v. B—n , (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 248; 23 L.T.O.S. 99; sub nom. , B—n v. M—e (falsely calling herself B—n), 2 Rob. Eccl. 580; 27 Digest 265, 2329	640, 648
Bacon v. Wills (A. W.) & Sons, Ltd. , [1933] 2 K.B. 493; 102 L.J.K.B. 611; 149 L.T. 385; 26 B.W.C.C. 374; Digest Supp.	253, 257, 258, 260, 261
Bain v. Moss Hutchison Line, Ltd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 294	987, 988
Banbury Pease Case , (1811), 1 Sim. & St. 153; 3 Digest 358, 2	412
Bank of Australasia v. Nias , (1851) 16 Q.B. 717; 20 L.J.Q.B. 284; 16 L.T.O.S. 483; 11 Digest 445, 1042	577, 579
Banks v. Jarvis , [1903] 1 K.B. 549; 72 L.J.K.B. 267; 88 L.T. 20; 40 Digest 420, 416	197, 198
Banque Belge Pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck , [1921] 1 K.B. 321; 90 L.J.K.B. 322; 35 Digest 168, 9	320, 346, 359
Barkaway v. South Wales Transport Co., Ltd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 460	987, 989
Barnes v. Irwell Valley Water Board , [1938] 2 All E.R. 650; [1939] 1 K.B. 21; 107 L.J.K.B. 629; 159 L.T. 125; 102 J.P. 373; Digest Supp.	1087, 1093
Barnett, Re, Waring v. Painter Stainer's Co. , (1908), 24 T.L.R. 738; 8 Digest 263, 256	493, 499
Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid , (1858), 3 Macq. 266; 31 L.T.O.S. 255; 22 J.P. 560; 34 Digest 126, 971	797, 801
Bates v. Donaldson , [1896] 2 Q.B. 241; 65 L.J.Q.B. 578; 74 L.T. 751; 60 J.P. 596; 31 Digest 383, 5284	691, 694, 696
Bathori, The , [1934] A.C. 91; 103 L.J.P. 25; 150 L.T. 221; Digest Supp.	680, 681
Baxter v. Baxter , [1947] 2 All E.R. 886; [1948] A.C. 274; [1948] L.J.R. 479	147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155
Bayley v. Cook , (1905), 92 L.T. 170; 69 J.P. 139; 25 Digest 77, 67	1056, 1057
Bayley v. Manchester, Sheffield & Lincolnshire Ry. Co. , (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 148; 42 L.J.C.P. 78; 28 L.T. 366; 8 Digest 113, 765	936, 938
Beard v. Beard , [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	1114, 1125
Beasley v. Darcy , (1800), 2 Sch. & Lef. 403 n; 31 Digest 482, 6308 vii	197, 200
Beaumont v. Jeffery , (1925) Ch. 1; 93 L.J.Ch. 532; 132 L.T. 246; Digest Supp.	89, 93
Bebington's Tenancy, Re, Bebington v. Wildman , [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 90 L.J.Ch. 269; 124 L.T. 661; 65 Sol. Jo. 343; 31 Digest 451, 5979	101, 103
Beechgrove S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Akt. Fjord of Kristiania , [1916] 1 A.C. 364; 85 L.J.P.C. 1; 113 L.T. 1124; 41 Digest 908, 8011	737, 741, 742
Bell v. Balls , [1897] 1 Ch. 663; 66 L.J.Ch. 397; 76 L.T. 254; 3 Digest 7, 43	267, 268
Benham v. Gambling , [1941] A.C. 157; [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; 110 L.J.K.B. 49; 164 L.T. 290; 2nd Digest Supp.	729, 730
Benninga (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijsttra , [1945] 2 All E.R. 433; [1946] K.B. 58; 115 L.J.K.B. 28; 173 L.T. 293; 2nd Digest Supp.	160, 161, 162, 164

		PAGE
Benton v. Campbell, Parker & Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 410; 94 L.J.K.B. 881; 134 L.T. 60; 89 J.P. 187; Digest Supp.		267, 269
Beresford v. Royal Insurance Co., Ltd., [1938] 2 All E.R. 602; [1938] A.C. 586; 107 L.J.K.B. 464; 158 L.T. 459; Digest Supp.		36, 38
Betts v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver and Carter Paterson & Co., Ltd., [1932] 2 K.B. 595; 101 L.J.K.B. 588; 147 L.T. 336; 96 J.P. 327; Digest Supp.		89, 93
Birkbeck v. Paget, (1862), 31 Beav. 403; 25 Digest 359, 96		888, 890
Birch v. Birch, [1902] P. 130; 71 L.J.P. 58; 86 L.T. 364; 23 Digest 244, 2993		577, 579
Bird v. Boulter, (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 443; 1 Nev. & M. 313; 110 E.R. 522; 1 Digest 277, 93		267, 269
Birkett, Re, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 576; 47 L.J.Ch. 846; 39 L.T. 418; 43 J.P. 111; 8 Digest 300, 776		493, 498
Birmingham Case, Woodward v. Sarsons, (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 733; 44 L.J.C.P. 293; 32 L.T. 867; 39 J.P. 776; 20 Digest 111, 892		503, 505
Blackpool Corp. v. Locker, [1948] 1 All E.R. 85; [1948] K.B. 349	558, 563, 564
Blake, Re, Re Minahan's Petition of Right, [1932] 1 Ch. 54; 100 L.J.Ch. 251; 145 L.T. 42; Digest Supp.	318, 320, 336, 337, 341, 342, 344, 359	888, 892
Bland v. Yates, (1914), 58 Sol. Jo. 612; 36 Digest 174, 199		772, 777
Blood v. Blood, [1902] P. 78; C.A., [1902] P. 190; 71 L.J.P. 97; 86 L.T. 641; 27 Digest 521, 5630
Blunt v. Park Lane Hotel, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 187; [1942] 2 K.B. 253; 111 L.J.K.B. 706; 167 L.T. 359; 2nd Digest Supp.		1114, 1122
Blyth v. Lord Advocate, [1944] 2 All E.R. 375; [1945] A.C. 32; 118 L.J.P.C. 78; 171 L.T. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.		909, 914
Bob Guinness, Ltd. v. Salomonsen, [1948] 2 K.B. 42		767, 770
Booth, Re, Booth v. Booth, [1926] P. 118; 95 L.J.P. 64; 135 L.T. 229; 39 Digest 334, 208	908, 911, 913
Booth v. Turle, (1873), L.R. 16 Eq. 182; 37 J.P. 710; 43 Digest 556, 75		133, 136
Borthwick, Re, Borthwick v. Beauvais, [1948] 2 All E.R. 635		638
Bostel Brothers, Ltd. v. Hurlock, [1948] 2 All E.R. 312		558, 566
Bosworthick v. Bosworthick, [1927] P. 64; 95 L.J.P. 171; 136 L.T. 211; Digest Supp.	771, 772, 774, 775, 777
Bottomley v. Bannister, [1932] 1 K.B. 458; 101 L.J.K.B. 46; 146 L.T. 68; Digest Supp.		917, 919
Boulton's Case, (1597), 5 Co. Rep. 104 b; 2 Digest 215, 107		888, 891, 892
Bournemouth-Swanage Motor Road & Ferry Co. v. Harvey & Sons, (1928), 98 L.J.Ch. 118; 42 Digest 743, 1674		1018, 1020
Bowles v. Jackson, (1854), 1 Eccl. & Ad. 294; 39 Digest 334, 201		908, 909, 914
Bowness v. O'Dwyer, [1948] 2 All E.R. 181		628
Boy Andrew, The v. St. Rognvald, [1948] A.C. 140; sub nom., Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland and Orkney and Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; [1948] L.J.K. 768		737, 740
Boyd v. Bischoffsheim, (1895) 1 Ch. 1; 64 L.J.Ch. 149; 71 L.T. 531; Digest Practice, 763, 3293		546, 548
Boyer's Settled Estates, Re, [1916] 2 Ch. 404; 85 L.J.Ch. 787; 115 L.T. 473; 40 Digest 731, 2619		133, 136
Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council, [1903] 1 K.B. 547; 72 L.J.K.B. 271; 67 J.P. 397; 30 Digest 135, 137		297, 299
Bradley v. Baylis, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 195; Colt. 188; 51 L.J.Q.B. 183; 46 L.T. 253; 45 J.P. 847; 20 Digest 21, 723		589, 590
Bradshaw v. McMullan, [1920] 2 I.R. 412, 490; 54 I.L.T. 109; 21 Digest 142, n		439, 443
Brady v. Warren, [1900] 2 I.R. 632; 2 Digest 206, c		888, 892
Brewer's Settlement, Re, Morton v. Blackmore, [1896] 2 Ch. 503; 65 L.J.Ch. 821; 75 L.T. 177; 5 Digest 656, 5855		423, 425
Bridewell Hospital (Governors) v. Fawcner & Rogers, (1892), 8 T.L.R. 637; 31 Digest 382, 5274		691, 694
Brightman & Co. v. Tate, [1919] 1 K.B. 463; 88 L.J.K.B. 921; 120 L.T. 512; 12 Digest 271, 2217	312, 313, 314
Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey, [1905] A.C. 230; 74 L.J.K.B. 474; 92 L.T. 578; 7 W.C.C. 1; affg., S.C., sub nom., Higgins v. Campbell & Harrison, Ltd., Turvey v. Brintons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K.B. 328; 34 Digest 464, 3799	202, 204, 205, 206, 207
British & American Trustee Corporation v. Couper, [1894] A.C. 399; 63 L.J.Ch. 425; 70 L.T. 882; 9 Digest 49, 840		594, 604
British Insulated & Helsby Cables v. Atherton, [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 28 Digest 52, 264		368, 372
British Sugar Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Harris, [1938] 1 All E.R. 149; [1938] 2 K.B. 220; 107 L.J.K.B. 472; 159 L.T. 365; 21 Tax Cas. 528; Digest Supp.	1042, 1046, 1048, 1049
Brown v. Brown, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1616; [1937] P. 7; 105 L.J.P. 103; 155 L.T. 418; Digest Supp.		772, 777
Brown v. Cotterill, (1934), 51 T.L.R. 21; Digest Supp.		1087, 1093
Brown v. Harrison, (1947), 177 L.T. 281; 2nd Digest Supp.		1102, 1104
Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 111 J.P. 179; 2nd Digest Supp.	52, 61, 921, 926
Buck v. Howarth, [1947] 1 All E.R. 342; 176 L.T. 320		133, 135
Buckner v. Ashby & Horner, Ltd., [1941] 1 K.B. 321, 337; 110 L.J.K.B. 460; 105 J.P. 220; 85 Sol. Jo. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.		105
Bull Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne, [1899] A.C. 351; 68 L.J.P.C. 49; 80 L.T. 430; 32 Digest 524, 1798		89, 93, 94
Bullock v. Borrett, [1939] 1 All E.R. 505; Digest Supp.		461, 462, 473, 474
Burrell & Kinnaird v. A.G., [1936] 3 All E.R. 758; [1937] A.C. 286; 106 L.J.K.B. 134; 156 L.T. 36; Digest Supp.	622, 623, 626
Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvaige, (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 1340; 126 L.T. 49; 14 B.W.C.C. 158; affg., S.C., sub nom., Selvaige v. Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd., [1921] 1 K.B. 355; 34 Digest 272, 2309	202, 205, 208
Burrows v. March Gas Co., (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 67; 39 L.J.Ex. 33; 22 L.T. 24; affd., [1872], L.R. 7 Exch. 96; 36 Digest 25, 124		239, 245
Butlins, Ltd. v. Fytche, [1948] 1 All E.R. 737	114, 118, 451, 457
C. (otherwise H.) v. C., [1921] P. 399; 90 L.J.P. 345; 125 L.T. 768; 27 Digest 268, 2362		640, 644
Californian Copper Syndicate, Ltd. v. Harris (Surveyor of Taxes), (1905), 5 Tax Cas. 159; 28 Digest 23 b		380, 383
Cammell v. Sewell, (1860), 5 H. & N. 728; 29 L.J.Ex. 350; 2 L.T. 799; 11 Digest 463, 1192		577, 580
Campbell v. Campbell, Lewis & Keith, [1939] 4 All E.R. 529; [1940] P. 90; 109 L.J.P. 37; 162 L.T. 152; 2nd Digest Supp.		1113, 1122

	PAGE
Canadian Eagle Oil Co., Ltd. v. R., [1945] 2 All E.R. 499; [1946] A.C. 119; 114 L.J.K.B. 451; 173 L.T. 234; 2nd Digest Supp.	419, 422
Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1921] 1 K.B. 64; 90 L.J.K.B. 113; affd. , [1921] 2 K.B. 403; 90 L.J.K.B. 461; 125 L.T. 108; 12 Tax Cas. 358; Digest Supp.	419, 421
Cardiff Workmen's Cottage Co., Ltd., Re , [1906] 2 Ch. 627; 75 L.J.Ch. 769; 95 L.T. 669; 10 Digest 791, 4967	1105, 1106
Carill v. Carbollic Smoke Ball Co., [1893] 1 Q.B. 256; 62 L.J.Q.B. 257; 67 L.T. 837; 57 J.P. 325; 12 Digest 55, 310	737, 748
Carne's Settled Estates, Re , [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 68 L.J.Ch. 120; sub nom. , Re St. Donats Settled Estates, 79 L.T. 542; 40 Digest 735, 2647	133, 136
Carr v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 2 All E.R. 163; 171 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.	1072, 1074
Carr v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 307; 44 L.J.C.P. 109; 31 L.T. 785; 39 J.P. 279; 21 Digest 288, 1020	432, 435
Carrington, Re , Ralphs v. Swithenbank , [1932] 1 Ch. 1; 100 L.J.Ch. 299; 145 L.T. 234; Digest Supp.	971, 972, 977
Carruthers v. Sidebotham, (1815), 4 M. & S. 77; 29 Digest 242, 1955	737, 743
Castle v. St. Augustine's Links, Ltd., (1922), 38 T.L.R. 615; 36 Digest 186, 300	662
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 103 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.	239, 246
Cavendish v. Cavendish, [1926] P. 10; 27 Digest 425, 4313	1113, 1115, 1122
Cawdor (Lord) v. Lewis, (1835), 1 Y. & C. Ex. 427; 4 L.J.Ex.Eq. 59; 1 Digest 456, 1442	197, 200
Celia S.S. v. S.S. Voltorno, [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 90 L.J.P. 335; 126 L.T. 1; 17 Digest 159, 602	89, 93
Central London Property Trust, Ltd. v. High Trees Houses, Ltd., [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.	767, 770
Chalmers v. Chalmers, (1892), 68 L.T. 28; 27 Digest 520, 5622	771, 772, 775, 777
Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, (1675), 1 Cas. in Ch. 256; Freem. Ch. 141; 22 E.R. 788; 25 Digest 161, 103	319, 328
Chamberlain v. Farr, [1942] 2 All E.R. 567; 112 L.J.K.B. 206; 2nd Digest Supp.	232, 234, 235, 236, 237
Chant v. Read, [1939] 2 All E.R. 286; [1939] 2 K.B. 346; 108 L.J.K.B. 547; 160 L.T. 462; Digest Supp.	574
Chapman v. Brown, (1801), 6 Ves. 404; 8 Digest 299, 763	493, 498
Chapman v. Winson, (1904), 91 L.T. 17; 1 Digest 514, 1776	914, 916
Charles (L.H.) & Co., Ltd., Re , [1935] W.N. 15; Digest Supp.	1105, 1106
Charlesworth, Re , Robinson v. Cleveland (Archdeacon), (1910), 101 L.T. 908; 8 Digest 254, 160	493, 499
Charrington & Co., Ltd. v. Simpson, [1935] A.C. 325; 104 L.J.K.B. 226; 152 L.T. 469; Digest Supp.	114, 115
Chattock v. Muller, (1878), 8 Ch. Div. 177; 42 Digest 459, 286	133, 136
Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson, [1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; 2nd Digest Supp.	319, 320, 323, 324
Chiphchase v. Chiphchase, [1939] 3 All E.R. 895; [1939] P. 391; 103 L.J.P. 154; Digest Supp.	731, 733, 734
Chiphchase v. Chiphchase, [1941] 2 All E.R. 560; [1942] P. 37; 110 L.J.P. 65; 165 L.T. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.	731, 734
Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 103; 2nd Digest Supp.	684, 685, 687, 689, 1113, 1117, 1123
Churchward v. Churchward, [1910] P. 195; 79 L.J.P. 59; 102 L.T. 862; 27 Digest 520, 5619	772, 777
Clark v. Adie, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 315; 46 L.J.Ch. 585; 36 L.T. 923; 36 Digest 628, 973	699, 700, 710
Clark v. Downes, Clark v. Mawby , (1931), 145 L.T. 20; Digest Supp.	432, 433
Clark, Re , Ex p. Pope & Owles , [1914] 3 K.B. 1095; 84 L.J.K.B. 89; 112 L.T. 873; 4 Digest 33, 271	534, 537
Clavering v. Ellison, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282, H.L.; affd. , (1857), 8 De G.M. & G. 662, L.J.J.; affd. , (1856), 3 Drew. 451; 44 Digest 440, 2667	289, 297
Clay, Re , Clay v. Booth , Re a Deed of Indemnity, [1919] 1 Ch. 66; 88 L.J.Ch. 40; 119 L.T. 754; 30 Digest 144, 201	585, 588
Clay v. Oxford, (1866), L.R. 2 Exch. 54; 4 H. & C. 690; 36 L.J.Ex. 15; 15 L.T. 286; Digest, Practice, 267, 49	144, 146, 483, 484
Clayton v. Le Roy, [1911] 2 K.B. 1031; 81 L.J.K.B. 49; 105 L.T. 430; 75 J.P. 521; 43 Digest 493, 314	89, 92
Clayton v. Ramsden, [1943] 1 All E.R. 16; [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 86 Sol. Jo. 384, H.L.; 2nd Digest Supp.	289, 291
Cliff v. Taylor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 113	450, 451, 453, 454, 457
Coaks v. Boswell, (1886), 11 App. Cas. 232; 55 L.J.Ch. 761; 55 L.T. 32; revg. , S.C., sub nom. , Boswell v. Coaks , (1884), 27 Ch.D. 424; subsequent proceedings , sub nom. , Boswell v. Coaks (No. 2), (1894), 86 L.T. 365; 35 Digest 20, 115	577, 579
Coitaint v. Myham & Son, [1918] 2 K.B. 220; 82 L.J.K.B. 551; 108 L.T. 556; 77 J.P. 217; 11 L.G.R. 760; 17 Digest 97, 123	36, 39
Colborn v. Patmore, (1834), 4 Tyr. 677; 1 Cr. M. & R. 73; 3 L.J.Ex. 317; 149 E.R. 99; 42 Digest 980, 111	35, 36, 38
Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., (1933), 26 B.W.C.C. 560; Digest Supp.	253, 257, 258, 261
Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 114 L.J.K.B. 481; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.	77, 78, 95, 96, 97
Compania Mexicana de Petroleo El Aguila v. Essex Transport and Trading Co., Ltd., (1929), 141 L.T. 106; Digest Supp.	104, 109
Cooke v. Vogeler (Charles A.) Co., [1901] A.C. 102; 70 L.J.K.B. 181; 84 L.T. 10; 4 Digest 25, 199	534, 539, 540, 541, 542, 544, 545
Cornish Mutual Assurance Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1926] A.C. 281; 95 L.J.K.B. 446; 134 L.T. 545; 12 Tax Cas. 842	396, 400
Cossentine, Re , Philp v. Wesleyan Methodist Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Assocn. Trustees , [1933] Ch. 119; 102 L.J.Ch. 78; 148 L.T. 261; Digest Supp.	961, 963
Cotterill v. Penn, [1936] 1 K.B. 53; 105 L.J.K.B. 1; 153 L.T. 377; 99 J.P. 276; Digest Supp.	474, 476
Cousins v. Sun Life Assurance Society, [1933] Ch. 126; 102 L.J.Ch. 114; 148 L.T. 101; Digest Supp.	771, 772, 774, 775
Crage v. Fry, (1903), 67 J.P. 240; 1 L.G.R. 253; 17 Digest 113, 235	36, 39
Craig v. Kanssen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 103; [1943] K.B. 256; 112 L.J.K.B. 228; 168 L.T. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.	546, 547, 549
Crawford v. Spooner, (1846), 6 Moo. P.C.C. 1; 4 Moo. Ind. App. 179; 42 Digest 677, 885	826, 830
Cresswell v. Sirl, [1947] 2 All E.R. 730; [1948] K.B. 241; [1948] L.J.R. 654	474, 475, 479, 480, 481, 482

- Crispin, Re, Ex p. Crispin, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 374; 42 L.J. Bey. 65; 28 L.T. 483; 37 J.P. 391; 4 Digest 25, 196 534, 538, 540, 542, 544
- Croydon Corp'n. v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 239; [1947] K.B. 386; [1947] L.J.R. 484 659, 660, 661
- Cunliffe v. Banks, [1945] 1 All E.R. 459; 2nd Digest Supp. 1102, 1104
- Cuno v. Cuno, (1873), L.R. 2 Sc. & Div. 300; sub nom., Mansfield (falsely called Cuno) v. Cuno, 42 L.J.P. & M. 65; 29 L.T. 316; 27 Digest 350, 3338 640, 652
- Curtis v. Curtis, (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 192; 27 L.J.P. & M. 73; 31 L.T.O.S. 272; affd., (1859), 4 Sw. & Tr. 234; 27 Digest 450, 4650 52, 60
- D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 279; 27 Digest 267, 2350 147, 149, 150, 151, 154
- Dagnall, Re, Ex p. Soan & Morley, [1896] 2 Q.B. 407; 65 L.J.Q.B. 666; 75 L.T. 142; 4 Digest 32, 267 534, 537
- Dale, Re, Mayer v. Wood, [1931] 1 Ch. 357; 100 L.J.Ch. 237; 145 L.T. 632; Digest Supp. 131, 132
- Dalziel, Re, Midland Bank Executor & Trustee Co., Ltd. v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, [1943] 2 All E.R. 656; [1943] Ch. 277; 112 L.J.Ch. 353; 169 L.T. 168; 2nd Digest Supp. 493, 498, 842, 844
- Daniel, Re, Jones v. Michael, [1945] 2 All E.R. 101; 173 L.T. 315; 2nd Digest Supp. 961, 963
- Darling v. Burton, 1928 S.C. (J.) 11; Digest Supp. 1077, 1078
- Darnborough v. Darnborough and Smith, (1926), 96 L.J.P. 24; 136 L.T. 384; Digest Supp. 16, 18
- David v. Frowd, (1833), 1 My. & K. 200; 2 L.J.Ch. 68; 24 Digest 793, 8240 318, 319, 328, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 337, 341, 342, 343
- Davies, Re, Davies v. Davies, (1888), 38 Ch.D. 210; 57 L.J.Ch. 759; 58 L.T. 312; 24 Digest 769, 7993 585, 588
- Davies v. Davies, (1882), 47 L.T. 40; 44 Digest 1159, 10037 979, 981
- Davies (otherwise Mason) v. Davies, [1935] P. 58; 104 L.J.P. 9; 152 L.T. 264; Digest Supp. 640, 650, 651
- Davies v. Nicolson, (1858), 2 De G. & J. 693; 27 L.J.Ch. 719; 31 L.T.O.S. 374; 23 Digest 432, 5038 319, 331
- Davies v. Warwick, [1943] 1 All E.R. 309; [1943] K.B. 329; 112 L.J.K.B. 245; 169 L.T. 130; 2nd Digest Supp. 232, 234, 236, 237
- Davis v. Foots, [1939] 4 All E.R. 4; [1940] 1 K.B. 116; 109 L.J.K.B. 385; 2nd Digest Supp. 917, 918, 919
- De Reneville v. De Reneville, [1948] 1 All E.R. 56; [1948] P. 100 640, 652
- Debtors (No. 836 of 1935), Re, [1936] Ch. 622; 105 L.J.Ch. 265; sub nom., Re Debtors (No. 836 of 1935), Petitioning Creditor v. Debtors, [1936] 1 All E.R. 875; 154 L.T. 592; Digest Supp. 534, 539, 540, 541, 544, 545,
- Dennis's Settlement Trusts, Re, Dennis v. Dennis, [1942] 1 All E.R. 520; [1942] Ch. 283; 111 L.J.Ch. 166; 166 L.T. 243; 2nd Digest Supp. 423, 425
- Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co., [1919] L.L.R. 658 737, 745
- Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's Case, (1816), 1 Mer. 529, 572; 12 Digest 483, 3961 319, 320, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 429, 430, 431
- Dewell (Duell) v. Sanders, (1618), Cro. Jac. 490; 2 Roll Rep. 3; 2 Digest 216, 118 474, 475, 476, 477
- Diggin v. Forestal Land, Timber and Railways Co., [1931] A.C. 380; 100 L.J.K.B. 145; 144 L.T. 514; 15 Tax Cas. 630; Digest Supp. 653, 654, 1096, 1097
- Diver v. Diver (unreported) 920, 923, 925
- Dixon v. London Small Arms Co., (1876), 1 App. Cas. 632; 46 L.J.Q.B. 617; 35 L.T. 559; 36 Digest 690, 1670 700, 707
- Doe d. Bridger v. Whitehead, (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 571; 3 Nev. & P.K.B. 557; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 521; 7 L.J.Q.B. 250; 2 Jur. 493; 112 E.R. 955; 31 Digest 364, 5096 138, 139
- Doe d. Price v. Price, (1832), 9 Bing. 356; 2 Moo. & S. 464; 31 Digest 43, 1389 813, 815
- Dollman v. Hillman, Ltd., [1941] 1 All E.R. 355; 2nd Digest Supp. 662, 664, 835, 839
- Dorin v. Dorin, (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 568; 45 L.J.Ch. 652; 33 L.T. 281; 39 J.P. 790; 44 Digest 809, 6616 882, 885
- Dormer v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation, [1940] 2 All E.R. 521; [1940] 2 K.B. 204; 109 L.J.K.B. 708; 163 L.T. 266; 104 J.P. 316; 84 Sol. Jo. 500; C.A., Digest Supp. 119, 122
- Dormer (otherwise Ward) v. Ward, [1901] P. 20; 69 L.J.P. 144; 83 L.T. 556; revers., [1900] P. 130; 27 Digest 521, 5629 772, 774, 775, 776
- Doudie v. Kinnell, Cannell & Coking Coal Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 6; [1947] A.C. 377; [1947] L.J.R. 395; 176 L.T. 125 253, 254
- Drummond v. Parish, (1843), 3 Curt. 522; 2 Notes of Cases, 318; 1 L.T.O.S. 207; 39 Digest 333, 195 908, 911, 913
- Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government, [1923] 1 Ch. 385; 92 L.J.Ch. 273; 129 L.T. 290; on appeal, sub nom., Kelantan Government v. Duff Development Co., [1923] A.C. 395; 21 Digest 618, 2059 940, 947
- Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. Moseley (David) & Sons, Ltd., [1904] 1 Ch. 612; 73 L.J.Ch. 417; 91 L.T. 40; 36 Digest 746, 2335 699, 700, 710
- Dunn v. Dunn, [1948] 2 All E.R. 822 1033, 1034
- Durant v. Durant, (1825), 1 Hag. Ecc. 733; 162 E.R. 734; previous proceedings, (1824), 2 Add. 267; 2 Digest 337, 3171 1114, 1123, 1125
- Dyer v. Munday, [1895] 1 Q.B. 742; 64 L.J.Q.B. 448; 72 L.T. 448; 59 J.P. 276; 34 Digest 130, 996 936, 938
- Dyson v. A.-G., [1911] 1 K.B. 410; 81 L.J.K.B. 217; 105 L.T. 753; 11 Digest 524, 292 585, 587
- Eads v. Williams, (1854), 4 De G.M. & G. 674; 3 Eq. Rep. 244; 24 L.J.Ch. 531; 24 L.T.O.S. 162; 2 Digest 442, 920 186, 188
- Earnshaw v. Earnshaw, [1896] P. 160; 65 L.J.P. 89; 74 L.T. 560; 60 J.P. 377; 27 Digest 557, 6124 16, 18
- Eccles v. Cross & Milltham, 1938 S.C. 697; Digest Supp. 239, 245
- Ecclesiastical Comrs. for England v. North Eastern Ry. Co., (1877), 4 Ch.D. 845; 47 L.J.Ch. 20; 36 L.T. 174; 32 Digest 524, 1801 90, 94
- Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Surveyor of Taxes, (1889), 17 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 154; sub nom., Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Kinmont, 2 Tax Cas. 516; 28 Digest 8, r 1, 4, 7
- Edmonds v. Eastwood, (1858), 2 H. & N. 811; 27 L.J.Ex. 209; 22 J.P. 275; sub nom., Edmunds v. Eastwood, 30 L.T.O.S. 304; 28 Digest 9, 42 1, 5, 6, 8
- Edmonds v. Edmonds, [1947] P. 67; [1947] L.J.R. 936; 176 L.T. 545 461, 462
- Edward and Mary, The, (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 305; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 312; 37 Digest 674, 1395 680, 682
- Edwards v. Edwards, [1948] 1 All E.R. 157; [1948] L.J.R. 670 52, 53
- Edwards v. Mallan, [1908] 1 K.B. 1002; 77 L.J.K.B. 608; 98 L.T. 824; 13 Digest 484, 341 176, 178
- Egypt, H.M. Procurator in, Deutsches Kohlen Depot Gesellschaft, [1919] A.C. 291; 88 L.J.P.C. 37; 120 L.T. 102; 3 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 264; 37 Digest 590, 273 680, 683
- Electric & Musical Industries, Ltd. v. Lissen, Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 221; 56 R.P.C. 23; Digest Supp. 700, 709

	PAGE
Elliott v. Joicey , [1935] A.C. 209; 104 L.J.Ch. 111; sub nom. Re Joicey , Joicey v. Elliott , 152 L.T. 398; Digest Supp.	928
Ellis and Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman , [1948] 1 All E.R. 44	141, 143
Elwes v. Elwes , (1794), 1 Hag. Con. 269; 161 E.R. 549; 27 Digest 296, 2726	1114, 1123
Emanuel v. Emanuel , [1945] 2 All E.R. 494; [1946] P. 115; 114 L.J.P. 60; 173 L.T. 118; 2nd Digest Supp.	822, 823, 1114, 1123
Emery (John) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Comrs. , [1937] A.C. 91; 156 L.T. 87; 20 Tax Cas. 213; 156 L.T. 87; Digest Supp.	380, 384
English and Scottish Joint Co-operative Wholesale Society v. Madras Income Tax Comr. , (1929), 3 I.T.C. 385	396, 398, 401
Engvall v. Ideal Flats, Ltd. , [1945] 1 All E.R. 230; [1945] K.B. 205; 114 L.J.K.B. 249; 172 L.T. 134; 2nd Digest Supp.	876, 879 880
Eurymedon, The , [1938] P. 41; 107 L.J.P. 81; 158 L.T. 445; sub nom. , Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon , [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; Digest Supp.	662, 737, 740
Evans v. Evans , (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 35; 27 Digest 281, 2522	52, 57, 59
Evans v. Evans , [1947] 2 All E.R. 656; [1948] 1 K.B. 175; [1948] L.J.R. 276; 112 J.P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.	98, 99, 100, 920, 925, 926
Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. , (No. 2) [1940] 2 All E.R. 201; [1940] 1 K.B. 702; 109 L.J.K.B. 493; 164 L.T. 17; 33 B.W.C.C. 122; 2nd Digest Supp.	253, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261
Eve, Re, Edwards v. Burns , [1909] 1 Ch. 796; 78 L.J.Ch. 388; 100 L.T. 874; 44 Digest 812, 6646	882, 885, 886, 887
Excelsior Wire Rope Co., Ltd., v. Callan , [1930] A.C. 404; 99 L.J.K.B. 380; 142 L.T. 531; 94 J.P. 174; Digest Supp.	1087, 1093
F. v. F. , 1945 S.C. 202; Digest Supp.	639, 640, 650, 652
Faraker, Re, Faraker v. Durell , [1912] 2 Ch. 488; 81 L.J.Ch. 635; 107 L.T. 36; 56 Sol. Jo. 688; 8 Digest 311, 921	23, 25, 26
Farbrother v. Simmonds , (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 333; 106 E.R. 1213; 1 Digest 277, 95	267, 268, 269
Farey v. Welch , [1929] 1 K.B. 388; 98 L.J.K.B. 318; 140 L.T. 560; 93 J.P. 70; Digest Supp.	474, 476
Farley v. Westminster Bank, Ltd. Re Ashton's Estate, Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Farley , [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; [1939] A.C. 430; 108 L.J.Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; Digest Supp.	842, 844
Farrer v. Nelson , (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 258; 54 L.J.Q.B. 335; 52 L.T. 766; 49 J.P. 725; 25 Digest 359, 98	887, 888, 890, 892, 893
Fearn v. Fearn , [1948] 1 All E.R. 459; [1948] P. 241; [1948] L.J.R. 1043	123, 125, 858, 861
Fenton v. Thorley & Co., Ltd. , [1903] A.C. 443; 72 L.J.K.B. 787; 89 L.T. 314; 5 W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 266, 2264	202, 204
Fenwick v. Clarke , (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 240; 31 L.J.Ch. 728; 6 L.T. 593; 23 Digest 329, 3957	319, 332, 334
Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young , [1940] 2 All E.R. 85; [1940] A.C. 479; 109 L.J.P.C. 49; 102 L.T. 344; sub nom. , Young v. Fife Coal Co. , 33 B.W.C.C. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.	202, 207, 208
Fillingham v. Bromley , (1823), Turn. & R. 530; 44 Digest 442, 2675	493, 500
Finney v. Finney , (1868), L.R. 1 P. & D. 483; 37 L.J.P. & M. 43; 18 L.T. 489; 27 Digest 324, 3030	862, 863, 866, 868
Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald , (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 694; 38 L.J.P. & M. 14; 19 L.T. 575; subsequent proceedings , (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 136; 27 Digest 307, 2845	920, 924
Fitzgerald v. Leonard , (1893), 32 L.E.R. 675; 17 Digest 107, n	36, 39
Folkes v. King , [1923] 1 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 125; 128 L.T. 405; 67 Sol. Jo. 227; 28 Com. Cas. 110; 86 J.P. Jo. 552; Digest Supp.	30, 33
Foster Wheeler, Ltd. v. Green & Son, Ltd. , [1946] 1 All E.R. 63; [1946] Ch. 101; 115 L.J.Ch. 43; 174 L.T. 118; 63 R.P.C. 10; 2nd Digest Supp.	700, 706
Fox's Estate, Re, Dawes v. Druiitt, Phoenix Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Fox , [1937] 4 All E.R. 664; Digest Supp.	979, 980, 982
Fraenkel v. Whitty , [1947] 2 All E.R. 646; [1948] 1 Ch. 55; [1948] L.J.R. 322	423, 424, 425
Frampton v. Frampton and Bushell , [1941] 1 All E.R. 305; [1941] P. 24; 110 L.J.P. 20; 165 L.T. 48; 2nd Digest Supp.	869, 870, 871
France v. Gaudet , (1871), L.R. 6 Q.B. 199; 40 L.J.Q.B. 121; 17 Digest 78, 6	89, 93
Friend v. Wallman , [1946] 2 All E.R. 237; [1946] K.B. 493; 175 L.T. 147; 2nd Digest Supp.	294, 295
Fritz v. Hobson , (1880), 14 Ch.D. 542; 49 L.J.Ch. 321; 42 L.T. 225; 36 Digest 162, 48	662
Fry, Re, Chase National Executors & Trustee Corp'n. v. Fry , [1946] 2 All E.R. 106; [1946] Ch. 312; 115 L.J.Ch. 225; 175 L.T. 392; 2nd Digest Supp.	972, 978
Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd.; Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd. [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77; Digest Supp.	1, 6
G. v. G. , [1912] P. 173; 81 L.J.P. 90; 106 L.T. 647; 27 Digest 266, 2345	640, 650, 652
G. v. G. (falsely called K.) , (1908), 25 T.L.R. 328; 27 Digest 268, 2360	640, 649, 650, 652
G. v. M. , (1885), 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L.T. 398; 27 Digest 351, 3339	639, 642, 650
Gage, Re, Crozier v. Gutheridge , [1934] Ch. 536; 103 L.J.Ch. 241; 151 L.T. 240; Digest Supp.	972, 974
Gaskill v. Gaskill , [1921] P. 425; 90 L.J.P. 339; 126 L.T. 115; 27 Digest 298, 2753	412
Gateshead Assessment Committee v. Redhenth Colliery, Ltd. , [1925] A.C. 309; 94 L.J.K.B. 253; 132 L.T. 583; 89 J.P. 53; 38 Digest 604, 1309	552, 554
Gattward v. Knee , [1902] F. 99; 71 L.J.P. 34; sub nom. In the Goods of Knee, Gattward v. Knee , 86 L.T. 119; 39 Digest 334, 197	908, 911, 912
Gavin v. City of London Police Authority , [1944] 1 All E.R. 378; [1944] K.B. 358; 113 L.J.K.B. 305; 170 L.T. 336; 108 J.P. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.	79, 80
Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Proprietors , (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430; 38 Digest 25, 137	834, 835, 839
Gee v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. , (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 161; 42 L.J.Q.B. 105; 28 L.T. 282; 8 Digest 78, 533	239, 247
Gibbs & Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd.'s Lease, Re, Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd. v. Gibbs , [1925] Ch. 575; 94 L.J.Ch. 312; 133 L.T. 322; C.A.; affg. , [1925] Ch. 198; 31 Digest 383, 5286	691, 693, 695, 696
Gibson (In the Goods of) , [1941] 2 All E.R. 91; [1941] P. 118, n; 110 L.J.P. 73, n; 2nd Digest Supp.	903, 909, 912, 914
Giddys v. Horsfall , [1947] 1 All E.R. 460; 2nd Digest Supp.	929, 931
Giles, Re, Real & Personal Advance Co. v. Michell , (1890), 43 Ch.D. 391, 398; 59 L.J.Ch. 226; 62 L.T. 375; Digest, Practice, 731, 3153	546, 548
Giles v. Walker , (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 656; 59 L.J.Q.B. 416; 62 L.T. 933; 54 J.P. 599; 2 Digest 117, 979	887, 888, 891, 896
Gillespie v. Alexander , (1827), 3 Russ. 130; 23 Digest 432, 5035	319, 325, 330, 332, 334

	PAGE
Gillott's Settlement, Re , Chattock v. Reid , [1934] Ch. 97; 102 L.J.Ch. 332; 149 L.T. 419; Digest Supp.	423, 424
Gittins v. Steele, (1818), 1 Swan. 199; 23 Digest 429, 4998	320, 339
Glanville & Co., Ltd. v. Lyne, [1942] W.N. 65; 86 Sol. Jo. 147; 2nd Digest Supp.	483, 484
Glasgow Corporation v. Neilson, [1947] 2 All E.R. 346; [1948] A.C. 79; [1947] L.J.R. 1416; 111 J.P. 523; 39 B.W.C.C. 122; 2nd Digest Supp.	797, 798, 799, 800, 803, 804, 805, 806
Glasgow Corpn. v. Taylor, [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 36 Digest 70, 453	274, 279
Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 2nd Digest Supp.	1114, 1125
Gloucester (County) Circaster Division Case, Lawson v. Chester-Master , (1893), 4 O.M. & H. 194; 20 Digest 110, 890	503, 506, 507
Goffin v. Houlder, (1920), 90 L.J.Ch. 488; 124 L.T. 145; 40 Digest 264, 2291	415, 416, 417, 418
Goldstein v. Salvation Army Assurance Society, [1917] 2 K.B. 291; 86 L.J.K.B. 793; 117 L.T. 63; 7 Digest 522, 19	729, 730
Gooch v. Gooch, [1893] P. 99; 62 L.J.P. 73; 68 L.T. 462; 27 Digest 368, 3548	863, 867
Goodman v. Saltash Corpn., (1882), 7 A.C. 633; 52 L.J.Q.B. 193; 48 L.T. 239; 47 J.P. 276; H.L. revsq. , S.C., sub nom. , Saltash Corpn. v. Goodman , (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 106, C.A.; 8 Digest 327, 1099	842, 844
Goodman v. Serie, [1942] 2 All E.R. 318; [1947] K.B. 808; 177 L.T. 521; 111 J.P. 492; 2nd Digest Supp.	1065, 1069
Gossage (In the Estate of), Wood v. Gossage , [1921] P. 194; 90 L.J.P. 201; 124 L.T. 770; 39 Digest 338, 245	908, 910
Gottliffe v. Edelston, [1930] 2 K.B. 378; 99 L.J.K.B. 547; 143 L.T. 595; Digest Supp.	573, 574, 576
Gould v. McAuliffe, [1941] 2 All E.R. 527; 2nd Digest Supp.	274, 281
Graham, Re , Graham v. Graham , [1929] 2 Ch. 127; 98 L.J.Ch. 291; 141 L.T. 197; Digest Supp.	979, 982
Graham (or Miller) v. Glasgow Corpn., [1947] 1 All E.R. i; [1947] A.C. 368; [1947] L.J.R. 239; 176 L.T. 142; affg. , 1946 S.C. 109; 2nd Digest Supp.	797, 798, 799, 801, 803, 805, 806
Gramophone Co., Ltd. v. Stephen Cawardine & Co., [1934] Ch. 450; 103 L.J.Ch. 248; 150 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.	515
Granger v. George, (1826), 5 B. & C. 149; 7 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 729; 32 Digest 344, 264	89, 93
Grayson (H. & C.) v. Ellerman Line, Ltd., [1920] A.C. 466; 89 L.J.K.B. 924; 123 L.T. 65; 36 Digest 116, 780	105
Great Central Ry. Co. v. Hewlett, [1916] 2 A.C. 511; 85 L.J.K.B. 1705; 115 L.T. 349; 80 J.P. 365; 26 Digest 419, 1333	780, 782
Great Western Ry. Co. v. Mostyn (Owners), The Mostyn , [1928] A.C. 57; 97 L.J.P. 8; 138 L.T. 403, H.L.; revsq. , [1927] P. 25, C.A.; [1926] P. 46; 41 Digest 974, 8645	737, 744
Green v. Chelsea Waterworks Co., (1894), 70 L.T. 547; 38 Digest 23, 125	884, 835, 839
Greig v. Somerville, (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 338; 23 Digest 432, 5036	919, 930
Griffiths v. Davies, [1943] 2 All E.R. 209; [1943] K.B. 618; 112 L.J.K.B. 577; 169 L.T. 201; 87 Sol. Jo. 390, C.A.; 2nd Digest Supp.	439, 443
Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 147	151, 153
Grove v. Banson, (1669), 1 Cas. in Ch. 148; 22 E.R. 736; 44 Digest 291, 1229	319, 328
Guinness (Bob), Ltd. v. Salomonsen, [1948] 2 K.B. 42	1108, 1111
Gunner v. Gunner and Stirling, [1948] 2 All E.R. 771	779, 780
Gunter v. Davis, [1925] 1 K.B. 124; 94 L.J.K.B. 352; 132 L.T. 538; 31 Digest 585, 7347	691, 698
Gwilliam v. Twist, [1895] 2 Q.B. 84; 64 L.J.Q.B. 474; 72 L.T. 579; 59 J.P. 484; 1 Digest 390, 941	983, 985
H. v. H. (otherwise N.), (1929), 98 L.J.P. 155; Digest Supp.	640, 650
Haddon v. Haddon, (1919), The Times , Dec. 5	52, 53
Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 17 Digest 93, 101	416, 418, 806, 808, 810
Hadley v. Perks, (1866), L.R. 1 Q.B. 444; 7 B. & S. 375; 35 L.J.M.C. 177; 14 L.T. 325; 30 J.P. 485; 33 Digest 315, 322	921, 925
Haldane v. Sinclair, 1927, S.C. 562; Digest Supp.	439, 442
Hall, Re , Parker v. Knight , [1948] Ch. 437; [1948] L.J.R. 1430; 64 T.L.R. 243	131, 132, 961, 963
Hall v. Brooklands Auto Racing Club, [1933] 1 K.B. 205; 101 L.J.K.B. 679; 147 L.T. 404; Digest Supp.	662
Hall v. Hall, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 65; 9 L.T. 810; 27 Digest 323, 3022	52, 53
Hallett's Estate, Re , Knatchbull v. Hallett , (1880), 13 Ch.D. 696; sub nom. , Re Hallett's Estate , Knatchbull v. Hallett , Cotterell v. Hallett , 49 L.J.Ch. 415; 42 L.T. 421; 43 Digest 1021, 4614	319, 323, 345, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 357, 359, 364
Hamilton, Re , Trench v. Hamilton , [1895] 2 Ch. 370; 64 L.J.Ch. 799; 43 W.R. 577; 39 Sol. Jo. 524; 12 R. 355; sub nom. , Re Hamilton , Trench v. Hamilton , 72 L.T. 748, C.A.; 43 Digest 588, 376	193, 195
Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A.C. 14; 71 L.J.Ch. 149; 85 L.T. 729; 50 W.R. 321, H.L.; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Re Hancock , Watson v. Watson , [1901] 1 Ch. 482, C.A.; 43 Digest 644, 792	288, 289, 291, 956, 958
Hanlon v. Port of Liverpool Stevedoring Co., Ltd., [1937] 4 All E.R. 39; Digest Supp.	104
Hardy v. Central London Ry. Co., [1920] 3 K.B. 459; 89 L.J.K.B. 1187; 124 L.T. 136; 36 Digest 71, 457	1087, 1092
Harman v. Official Receiver, Petitioning Creditors & Trustee , [1934] A.C. 245; 103 L.J.Ch. 158; 150 L.T. 501; Digest Supp.	546, 548
Harman v. Richards, (1852), 10 Hare, 31; 22 L.J.Ch. 1066; 17 Digest 800, 1126	224, 228
Harper, Re , Plowman v. Harper , [1914] 1 Ch. 70; 83 L.J.Ch. 157; 109 L.T. 925; 44 Digest 845, 6955	961, 963
Harriman v. Harriman, [1909] P. 123; 78 L.J.P. 62; 100 L.T. 557; 73 J.P. 193; 27 Digest 321, 2995	16, 17, 862, 863, 867, 868, 869
Harrison v. Anderston Foundry Co., (1876), 1 App. Cas. 574; 36 Digest 563, 281	700, 710
Harrison v. Cronk & Sons, Ltd., [1936] 3 All E.R. 747; [1937] A.C. 185; 106 L.J.K.B. 70; 156 L.T. 20; sub nom. , Cronk & Sons, Ltd. v. Harrison , 20 Tax Cas. 612; Digest Supp.	380, 383, 384
Harrison v. Metropolitan Plywood Co., [1946] 1 All E.R. 243; [1946] K.B. 255; 115 L.J.K.B. 187; 174 L.T. 190; 2nd Digest Supp.	387, 390, 393
Harrow School Governors and Murray's Contract, Re , [1927] 1 Ch. 556; 96 L.J.Ch. 267; 137 L.T. 119; Digest Supp.	568, 572
Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 158; 82 L.J.K.B. 414; 108 L.T. 233; 6 B.W.C.C. 225; 34 Digest 348, 2803	253, 254, 258
Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 2nd Digest Supp.	104, 110, 1087, 1093.

	PAGE
Hasledine v. Hosken, [1933] 1 K.B. 822; 102 L.J.K.B. 441; 148 L.T. 510; Digest Supp. 36, 38, 39
Hatch, Re , Hatch v. Hatch, [1919] 1 Ch. 351; 88 L.J.Ch. 147; 120 L.T. 694; 35 Digest 318, 320, 333, 335, 336
95, 36
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp. 105, 1086, 1087, 1090, 1092
Head v. Head, (1823), Turn. & R. 138; 1 Sim. & St. 150; 3 Digest 359, 11	412
Heap v. Motorists Advisory Agency, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 577; 92 L.J.K.B. 553; 129 L.T. 146; 67 Sol. Jo. 300; 39 Digest 531, 1441	29, 30, 33
Heathcote v. Haunchwood Collieries, [1918] A.C. 52; 87 L.J.K.B. 226; 117 L.T. 677; 10 B.W.C.C. 647; 34 Digest 395, 3230	253, 259
Heaven v. Pender, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 503; 52 L.J.Q.B. 702; 49 L.T. 357; 47 J.P. 709; 36 Digest 8, 9	104, 109, 1087, 1091
Hector, The , (1883), 8 P.D. 213; 52 L.J.P. 47; 48 L.T. 890; 5 Asp. M.L.C. 101; 41 Digest 785, 6461	737, 741, 743
Hedderwick, Re , [1933] Ch. 669; 102 L.J.Ch. 193; 149 L.T. 188; Digest Supp. 996, 997
Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club, [1920] 1 K.B. 720; 89 L.J.K.B. 744; 122 L.T. 479; 31 Digest 548, 6945	283, 284
Henderson v. Henderson, (1843), 3 Hare 100; 1 L.T.O.S. 410; 21 Digest 174, 276	862, 863, 866
Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin, [1944] 1 All E.R. 44; [1944] A.C. 49; 113 L.J.P. 1; 170 L.T. 84; 2nd Digest Supp.	858, 861
Hennessy v. Wright (No. 2), (1888), 24 Q.B.D. 445, n.; 18 Digest 204, 1528	717, 719
Herod v. Herod, [1938] 3 All E.R. 722; [1939] P. 11; 108 L.J.P. 27; 159 L.T. 530; Digest Supp.	297, 301
Herron v. Rathmines & Rathgar Improvement Comrs., [1892] A.C. 498; 67 L.T. 658; 42 Digest 613, 134	1018, 1020
Hext v. Gill, (1872), 7 Ch. App. 699; 41 L.J.Ch. 761; 27 L.T. 291; 28 Digest 410, 354	1, 5
Heworth v. Heworth, [1948] 2 All E.R. 715; 112 J.P. 303	712, 714
Hewson v. Shelley, [1914] 2 Ch. 13; 83 L.J.Ch. 607; 110 L.T. 785; 23 Digest 60, 402	74
Hill (In the Goods of), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 276; 4 Notes of Cases, 174; 39 Digest 335, 209	908, 909, 914
Hill, Re , Hill v. Hill, [1902] 1 Ch. 537; 71 L.J.Ch. 222; 86 L.T. 146; affd. , [1902] 1 Ch. 807 C.A.; 44 Digest 951, 8037	193, 195, 196
Hill v. Crook, (1873), L.R. 6 H.L. 265; 42 L.J.Ch. 702; affg. , S.C., sub nom. , Crook v. Hill, (1871), 6 Ch. App. 311; 44 Digest 808, 6614	882, 884, 885
Hill v. Wolverhampton Corrugated Iron Co., Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 72; [1939] 2 K.B. 469; 108 L.J.K.B. 536; 161 L.T. 6; 32 B.W.C.C. 129; Digest Supp.	168, 170, 171
Hill & Son v. Tannerhill, [1944] K.B. 472; 113 L.J.K.B. 456; 170 L.T. 404; 2nd Digest Supp.	144, 145
Hillen & Pettigrew v. I.C.I. (Alkali), Ltd., [1936] A.C. 65; 104 L.J.K.B. 473; 153 L.T. 403; Digest Supp.	104, 109
Hilliard v. Fulford, (1876), 4 Ch.D. 389; 46 L.J.Ch. 43; 35 L.T. 750; 23 Digest 431, 5020	319, 333, 335
Hilton v. Green, (1862), 2 F. & P. 821; 25 Digest 358, 93	887, 888, 889, 893, 896
Hindle v. Birtwistle, [1897] 1 Q.B. 192; 76 L.T. 159; 61 J.P. 70; sub nom. , Birtwistle v. Hindle, 66 L.J.Q.B. 173; 24 Digest 909, 71	387, 390
Hodges v. Waddington, (1683), 2 Vent. 360; 23 Digest 430, 5011	320, 337
Holden v. Holden, (1810), 1 Hag. Con. 453; 27 Digest 285, 2563	52, 53
Holton v. Holton, [1946] 2 All E.R. 534; 176 L.T. 186; 2nd Digest Supp. 294, 296, 489, 491, 987, 989	717, 719
Hope v. Brash, [1897] 2 Q.B. 188; 66 L.J.Q.B. 653; 76 L.T. 823; 18 Digest 96, 479
Hope v. Hope, (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 94; 27 L.J.P. & M. 43; 31 L.T.O.S. 138; 22 J.P. 308; 27 Digest 369, 3559	640, 643
Horsford (In the Goods of), (1874), L.R. 3 P. & D. 211; 44 L.J.P. & M. 9; 31 L.T. 553; 44 Digest 307, 1381	1052, 1053
Horton v. Gwynne, [1921] 2 K.B. 661; 90 L.J.K.B. 1151; 125 L.T. 309; 85 J.P. 210; 14 Digest 37, 72	474, 476
Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 137; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314; 2nd Digest Supp.	52, 53
Horton v. Horton, [1947] 2 All E.R. 871; [1948] L.J.R. 396	639, 642
Hoystead v. Taxation Comrs., [1926] A.C. 155; 94 L.J.P.C. 79; 134 L.T. 354; Digest Supp. 862, 863, 866
Hubbard (otherwise Rogers) v. Hubbard, [1901] P. 157; 70 L.J.P. 34; 84 L.T. 441; 27 Digest 520, 5623	771, 772, 775, 777, 778
Hudd v. Matthews, [1930] 2 K.B. 197; 99 L.J.K.B. 621; 143 L.T. 383; 94 J.P. 204; Digest Supp.	451, 455
Huddersfield Police Authority v. Watson, [1947] 2 All E.R. 193; [1947] K.B. 842; [1948] L.J.R. 182; 177 L.T. 114	79, 80
Hudson v. Hudson, [1948] 1 All E.R. 773; [1948] P. 292; [1948] L.J.R. 907	863, 867
Hudson v. MacRae, (1863), 4 B. & S. 585; 3 New Rep. 76; 33 L.J.M.C. 65; 9 L.T. 678; 23 J.P. 436; 25 Digest 10, 64	474, 476
Hyams v. Stuart King, [1908] 2 K.B. 696; 77 L.J.K.B. 794; 99 L.T. 424; 25 Digest 401, 58	1108, 1111, 1112
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Broadway Car Co. (Wimbledon), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 609; 2nd Digest Supp.	1079, 1080, 1081, 1084, 1085
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Desoutter Bros., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 174 L.T. 162; 2nd Digest Supp.	515, 520, 521, 1079, 1080, 1081
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd., (1923), 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.	515, 522, 1080, 1083
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Mackinlay's Trustees, 1938, S.C. 765; 22 Tax Cas. 305; Digest Supp.	1042, 1046, 1048, 1049
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Marx (R.J.), 5 A.T.C. 25	1072, 1075, 1076
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Maxse, [1919] 1 K.B. 647; 88 L.J.K.B. 752; 120 L.T. 680; 12 Tax Cas. 41; Digest Supp.	1072, 1074, 1075
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ransom (William) & Son, Ltd., [1918] 2 K.B. 709; 88 L.J.K.B. 342; 119 L.T. 369; 12 Tax Cas. 21; Digest Supp.	1072, 1075
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Rolls-Royce, Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 340; 171 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.	515, 520, 521
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 409	515, 521
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn, [1920] 2 K.B. 553; 89 L.J.K.B. 590; 123 L.T. 338; 28 Digest 46, 236	81, 83
Innes (or Grant) v. Kynoch, [1919] A.C. 765; 88 L.J.P.C. 85; 121 L.T. 39; 12 B.W.C.C. 78; 34 Digest 272, 2308	202, 204, 205, 208
Isaacs & Sons v. Salbstein, [1916] 2 K.B. 139; 85 L.J.K.B. 1433; 114 L.T. 924; 30 Digest 136, 141	297, 299

Jackson v. Jackson, [1924] P. 19; 27 Digest 308, 2852	920, 922, 923, 924, 926
Jackson v. Jackson, (1932), 146 L.T. 406; 96 J.P. 97; Digest Supp.	1033, 1034
James v. British General Insurance Co., Ltd., [1927] 2 K.B. 311; 96 L.J.K.B. 729; 137 L.T. 156; 71 Sol. Jo. 273; Digest Supp.	36, 39
James v. James, [1948] 1 All E.R. 214	862, 863, 867
James v. Smith, (1921), [1931] 2 K.B. 317, n; 100 L.J.K.B. 585, n; 145 L.T. 457, n; Digest Supp.	914, 916
Jacques, Re , [1903] 1 Ch. 267; 72 L.J.Ch. 197; 88 L.T. 210; 20 Digest 472, 1982	1004, 1005, 1009, 1010
Jaslowitz v. Burstein, [1948] 1 All E.R. 40; [1948] K.B. 408	691, 698
Jay v. Johnstone, [1893] 1 Q.B. 189; 62 L.J.Q.B. 128; 68 L.T. 129; 57 J.P. 309	403, 407
Jee v. Audley, (1787), 1 Cox. Eq. Cas. 324; 29 E.R. 1186; 37 Digest 57, 15	882, 885
Jeffrey, Re , Welch v. Jeffrey, [1948] 2 All E.R. 131	961, 963
Johnson, Re , Sly v. Blake, (1885), 29 Ch.D. 964; 52 L.T. 682; 32 Digest 402, 808	320, 341
Johnson v. Johnson, [1900] P. 19; 69 L.J.P. 13; 81 L.T. 791; 64 J.P. 72; 27 Digest 567, 6252	712, 713
Jolly v. Arbuthnot, (1859), 4 De G. & J. 224; 28 L.J.Ch. 547; 33 L.T.O.S. 263; 23 J.P. 677; 21 Digest 250, 751	1022, 1024
Jones, Re , Lambert v. Colbourn, [1928] W.N. 227; Digest Supp.	933, 934
Jones v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 1; [1944] A.C. 14; 113 L.J.K.B. 49; 170 L.T. 78; 36 B.W.C.C. 195; 2nd Digest Supp.	253, 258
Jones v. Foley, [1891] 1 Q.B. 730; 60 L.J.Q.B. 464; 64 L.T. 538; 55 J.P. 521; 31 Digest 548, 6946	233
Jones v. Westcomb, (1711), Prec. Ch. 316; Gilb. Ch. 74; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245; 44 Digest 1175, 10165	979, 980, 981, 982
Jordeson & Co. v. Stora, etc., Aktiebolag, (1931), 41 Lloyd L.R. 201	186, 188
Joseph v. Joseph, [1915] P. 122; 84 L.J.P. 104; 112 L.T. 170; 27 Digest 562, 6183	1114, 1124
Joswiak v. Hierowski, [1948] 2 All E.R. 9	181, 184
Kahler v. Midland Bank, Ltd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 811	1025
Kara v. Kara, [1948] 2 All E.R. 16; [1948] P. 237; [1948] L.J.R. 1741	862, 863, 867
Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 28 L.J.P. & M. 57; 32 L.T.O.S. 321; 27 Digest 336, 3166	123, 125, 858, 860
Keen v. Mear, [1920] 2 Ch. 574; 89 L.J.Ch. 513; 124 L.T. 19; 12 Digest 156, 1102	968, 969
Kempthorne, Re , Charles v. Kempthorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111, C.A.; Digest Supp.	209, 212
Kent v. Fittall, [1911] 2 K.B. 1102; 81 L.J.K.B. 82; 105 L.T. 422; 75 J.P. 378; 20 Digest 22, 126	589, 590, 591
Kenyon v. Walker, Stevenson v. Kenyon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 595; 2nd Digest Supp.	95, 97
Kerr v. Bryde, [1923] A.C. 16; 92 L.J.P.C. 1; 128 L.T. 140; 87 J.P. 16; 31 Digest 569, 7171	846, 847
Kimber v. Gas Light & Coke Co., [1918] 1 K.B. 439; 87 L.J.K.B. 651; 118 L.T. 562; 82 J.P. 125; 36 Digest 18, 83	1087, 1093
Kinder v. Camberwell Borough Council, [1944] 2 All E.R. 315; 109 J.P. 81; 2nd Digest Supp.	387, 390, 393
King, Re , Mellor v. South Australian Land Mortgage & Agency Co., [1907] 1 Ch. 72; 76 L.J.Ch. 44; 95 L.T. 724; 24 Digest 608, 6385	585, 588
King v. King, [1941] 2 All E.R. 103; [1942] P. 1; 111 L.J.P. 90; 167 L.T. 241; 2nd Digest Supp.	1033, 1034
Kinseth, Re , [1947] 1 All E.R. 201; [1947] 1 Ch. 223; [1947] L.J.R. 642; 177 L.T. 3	712, 714
Kirkman v. Kirkman, (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 409; 27 Digest 286, 2579	52, 53
Kitchen, Re , Kitchen v. Allman, (1919), 35 T.L.R. 612; 39 Digest 334, 206	908, 912
Knight v. Minister of Pensions, (1948), Reports of Selected War Pension Appeals, vol. 1, 1143	789, 790
L. v. L., 1931 S.C. 477; Digest Supp.	640, 652
L— v. L— (otherwise D—), (1922), 38 T.L.R. 697; 27 Digest 267, 2357	147, 150, 151, 154
La Roche v. Armstrong, [1922] 1 K.B. 485; 91 L.J.K.B. 342; 126 L.T. 699; 22 Digest 86, 550	754, 755
Lacon, Re , [1891] 2 Ch. 482; 60 L.J.Ch. 403; 64 L.T. 429; 20 Digest 453, 1770	1005, 1008
Laidlaw, Re , Wilkinson v. Lyde, [1930] 2 Ch. 392; 99 L.J.Ch. 463; 143 L.T. 761; Digest Supp.	933, 934
Lake v. Simmons, [1927] A.C. 487; 35 Digest 97, 64	30, 31, 33
Lambert v. Keating and Another, [1947] L.J.N. C.C.R. 149	181, 183
Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Goldrick, [1948] 2 All E.R. 439; sub nom. , Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Goldrick, [1948] W.N. 257	675, 677
Langton v. Hughes, (1813), 1 M. & S. 593; 12 Digest 270, 2214	312, 313
Lassence v. Tierney, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 43 Digest 643, 790	956, 958, 959, 960
Last v. London Assurance Corp., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 438; 55 L.J.Q.B. 92; 53 L.T. 634; 50 J.P. 116; 2 Tax Cas. 100, H.L.; varying , (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 239, C.A.; 28 Digest 58, 297	396, 400
Latham v. Johnson (R.) & Nephew, Ltd., [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 82 L.J.K.B. 258; 108 L.T. 4; 77 J.P. 137; 36 Digest 38, 223	1087, 1092
Laurie v. Raglan Building Co., Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 332; [1942] 1 K.B. 152; 111 L.J.K.B. 292; 166 L.T. 63; 2nd Digest Supp.	461, 462, 463, 471
Lawrance v. Galsworthy, (1857), 30 L.T.O.S. 112; 35 Digest 598, 3388	906, 907
Leach v. R., [1912] A.C. 305; sub nom. Leach v. Public Prosecutions Director, 81 L.J.K.B. 616; 106 L.T. 281; 76 J.P. 203; 14 Digest 453, 4800	1113, 1115, 1121, 1126
Lees v. Dunkerley Brothers, [1911] A.C. 5; 80 L.J.K.B. 135; 103 L.T. 467; 4 B.W.C.C. 115; 34 Digest 496, 4096	104
Leightons Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 580; [1943] K.B. 493; 112 L.J.K.B. 83; 167 L.T. 348; C.A., [1943] 2 All E.R. 97; [1943] K.B. 493, at p. 496; 112 L.J.K.B. 438; 169 L.T. 116; H.L., [1945] 1 All E.R. 252; [1945] A.C. 221; 114 L.J.K.B. 110; 172 L.T. 140; 2nd Digest Supp.	141, 143
Leslie (R.), Ltd. v. Reliable Advertising and Addressing Agency, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 652; 84 L.J.K.B. 719; 112 L.T. 947; 17 Digest 114, 236	35, 36
Lewis v. Gilbertson & Co., Ltd., (1904), 91 L.T. 377; 68 J.P. 323; 24 Digest 898, 4	665, 670, 671, 672, 673
Liddle v. North Riding of Yorkshire County Council, [1934] 2 K.B. 101; 103 L.J.K.B. 527; 151 L.T. 202; 98 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.	1087, 1094
Littlewood v. Littlewood, [1942] 2 All E.R. 515; [1943] P. 11; 112 L.J.P. 17; 167 L.T. 388; 2nd Digest Supp.	921, 927

	PAGE
Liverpool Corn Trade Assocn., Ltd. v. Monks, [1926] 2 K.B. 110; 95 L.J.K.B. 519; 134 L.T. 756; 10 Tax Cas. 442; 28 Digest 18, 97	396, 401
Lochgey Iron & Coal Co., Ltd., v. M'Mullan [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; 26 B.W.C.C. 463; Digest Supp.	104
London and Northern Estates Co. v. Schlesinger, [1916] 1 K.B. 20; 85 L.J.K.B. 369; 114 L.T. 74; 30 Digest 343, 14	141, 143
London & South Western Ry. Co. v. Gomm, (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 37 Digest 79, 195	416, 417
London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Attenborough, London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Robertson (London), Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 206; 103 L.J.K.B. 429; 151 L.T. 124; 78 Sol. Jo. 413; 39 Com. Cas. 290; Digest Supp.	30, 33
Lord's Settlement, Re , Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Lord, [1947] 2 All E.R. 685; [1948] L.J.R. 207	262, 265
Lougher v. Donovan, [1948] 2 All E.R. 11	402, 403, 408
Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.	929, 931
Lynn v. Bamber, [1930] 2 K.B. 72; 99 L.J.K.B. 504; 143 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.	90, 93
Lysons v. Knowles (Andrew) & Sons, Ltd., Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce, [1901] A.C. 79; 70 L.J.K.B. 170; 84 L.T. 65; 65 J.P. 388; 34 Digest 423, 3433	611, 620
M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.	104, 110, 239, 245, 1086, 1087, 1090, 1091, 1092
McClelland v. Manchester Corpn., [1912] 1 K.B. 118; 81 L.J.K.B. 98; 105 L.T. 707; 76 J.P. 21; 26 Digest 404, 1270	780, 782
Macdonald v. Irvine, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 101; 47 L.J.Ch. 494; 38 L.T. 155; 44 Digest 198, 274	972, 974
Macdonald v. Longbottom, (1860), 1 E. & E. 987; 29 L.J.Q.B. 256; 2 L.T. 606; affg. , (1860), 1 E. & E. 977; 17 Digest 325, 1357	940, 947
Macdonald v. Wyllie & Sons, (1898), 1 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 339; 36 Sc.L.R. 262; 6 S.L.T. 209; 36 Digest 84, 556 xxviii	239, 245
Mackenzie & Co., Ltd., Re , [1916] 2 Ch. 450; 85 L.J.Ch. 804; 115 L.T. 440; 9 Digest 158, 903	594, 605
McM. v. McM., McK. v. McK., [1936] I.R. 177; Digest Supp.	640, 650, 651
Mahmoud and Ispahani, Re , [1921] 2 K.B. 716; 90 L.J.K.B. 821; 125 L.T. 161; 12 Digest 271, 2220	312, 313, 314
Maitland v. Raisbeck & Hewitt (R. T. & J.), Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 272; [1944] 1 K.B. 689; 113 L.J.K.B. 549; 171 L.T. 118; 2nd Digest Supp.	662, 664
Mann v. Nash, [1932] 1 K.B. 752; 101 L.J.K.B. 270; 147 L.T. 154; 76 Sol. Jo. 201; 16 Tax Cas. 523; Digest Supp.	81, 83
Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 154 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.	546, 547
Mansey v. Mansey, [1940] 2 All E.R. 424; [1940] P. 139; 109 L.J.P. 83; 163 L.T. 157; 2nd Digest Supp.	822, 823, 1033, 1034
Maria, The, (1839), 1 Wm. Rob. 95; 7 L.T. 648; 41 Digest 908, 8012	737, 742, 743
Maritime Electric Co., Ltd. v. General Dairies, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 748; [1937] A.C. 610; 106 L.J.P.C. 81; 156 L.T. 444; Digest Supp.	439, 443
Marlborough (Duke), Re , Davis v. Whitehead, (1894) 2 Ch. 133; 63 L.J.Ch. 471; 70 L.T. 314; 43 Digest 555, 62	133, 136
Marsh v. Marsh, [1945] A.C. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.	546, 547
Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., Gorley v. Backworth Collieries, (1905), 93 L.T. 360; 7 W.C.C. 19; 34 Digest 271, 2303	202, 205, 207
Martin v. Lowry, Martin v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1927] A.C. 312; 96 L.J.K.B. 379; 136 L.T. 580; 11 Tax Cas. 297	380, 385
Mason, Re , [1929] 1 Ch. 1; 97 L.J.Ch. 321; 139 L.T. 477; Digest Supp.; affg. , [1928] Ch. 385	318, 320, 336, 337, 341
Matthey v. Curling, [1922] 2 A.C. 180; 91 L.J.K.B. 593; 127 L.T. 247; 31 Digest 342, 4857	141, 143
May v. Burdett, (1846), 9 Q.B. 101; 16 L.J.Q.B. 64; 7 L.T.O.S. 253; 2 Digest 237, 240	274, 279
Mazarakis (A. & C.) v. Bunge Y. Bord, Ltd., (1925), 23 Lloyd L.R. 275, K.B.D.; (1926) 24 Lloyd L.R. 244, C.A.; 26 Lloyd L.R. 169, H.L.	523, 524, 525, 526
Medway v. Medway, [1900] P. 141; 69 L.J.P. 56; 82 L.T. 627; 64 J.P. 120; 27 Digest 556, 6104	16, 18
Melville v. Melville and Woodward, [1930] P. 159; 99 L.J.P. 65; 143 L.T. 206; Digest Supp.	771, 772, 774, 777
Mersey Docks v. Cameron, Jones v. Mersey Docks, (1865), 11 H.L. Cas. 443; 20 C.B.N.S. 56; 6 New Rep. 378; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 38 Digest 466, 286	432, 434
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Lucas, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 891; 53 L.J.Q.B. 4; 49 L.T. 781; 48 J.P. 212; 2 Tax Cas. 25; 28 Digest 21, 104	368, 372, 378
Metcalf v. London Passenger Transport Board, [1939] 2 All E.R. 542; 108 L.J.K.B. 733; 160 L.T. 599; 103 J.P. 246; Digest Supp.	797, 805
M.I.G. Trust, Ltd., Re , [1933] Ch. 542; 102 L.J.Ch. 179; 149 L.T. 56; affd. on other grounds, sub nom. Peat (Sir William Henry) v. Gresham Trust, Ltd., [1934] A.C. 252; Digest Supp.	1105, 1106, 1107
Miles v. Chilton (falsely calling herself Miles), (1849), 1 Rob. Eccl. 684; 6 Notes of Cases 636; 27 Digest 376, 3646	640, 648
Miller & Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 2nd Digest Supp.	387, 390
Miller v. Dell, [1891] 1 Q.B. 468; 60 L.J.Q.B. 404; 63 L.T. 693; 32 Digest 344, 272	89, 93
Millichamp v. Millichamp, (1931), 146 L.T. 96; 95 J.P. 207; Digest Supp.	1033, 1034
Mills v. Armstrong, The Bernina, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 1; 57 L.J.P. 65; 58 L.T. 423; 52 J.P. 212; affg. , The Bernina (2), (1887), 12 P.D. 58; 36 Digest 121, 807	239, 245
Milroy v. Lord, (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 264; 31 L.J.Ch. 798; 7 L.T. 178; 25 Digest 530, 206	972, 978
Mohan v. Broughton, [1900] P. 56; 69 L.J.P. 20; 82 L.T. 29, C.A., affg. , [1899] P. 211; 23 Digest 248, 3035	68, 69, 71, 76, 319, 328, 332
Moorecock, The, (1889), 14 P.D. 64; 58 L.J.P. 73; 60 L.T. 654; 12 Digest 611, 5048	737, 747, 748, 749
Mordaunt v. Moncreiffe, (1874), L.R. 2 Sc. & Div. 374; 43 L.J.P. & M. 49; 30 L.T. 649; 39 J.P. 4, H.L.; revsq. , S.C., sub nom. Mordaunt v. Mordaunt, (1870), L.R. 2 P. & D. 109, 382; 27 Digest 384, 3770	640, 646, 1114, 1122
Morris v. Davies, (1837), 5 Cl. & Fin. 163; 3 Digest 359, 12	412
Morton v. Woods, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 293; 9 B. & S. 632; 38 L.J.Q.B. 81; 21 Digest 250, 752	1022, 1024
Mosley v. Wimpey (George) & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 674; 173 L.T. 24; 2nd Digest Supp.	1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8
Moss v. Moss, [1897] P. 263; 66 L.J.P. 154; 77 L.T. 220; 27 Digest 36, 128	640, 646
Mourton v. Poulter, [1930] 2 K.B. 183; 99 L.J.K.B. 289; 143 L.T. 20; sub nom. Moulton v. Poulter, 94 J.P. 190; Digest Supp.	834, 839, 1087, 1093

	PAGE
Municipal Mutual Insurance, Ltd. v. Hills, (1932), 147 L.T. 62; 16 Tax Cas. 430; Digest Supp.	396, 401
Munro (Robert A.) & Co., Ltd. v. Meyer, [1930] 2 K.B. 312; 99 L.J.K.B. 703; 143 L.T. 565; Digest Supp.	725, 726 267, 269
Murphy v. Boese, (1875), L.R. 10 Exch. 126; 44 L.J.Ex. 40; 32 L.T. 122; 3 Digest S. 51
Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; 53 L.J.Ch. 745; 51 L.T. 462; revsq. , S.C., sub nom. , Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (The Crace-Calvert Case), (1882), 23 Ch.D. 440; 7 Digest 515, 367	320, 352, 353, 355, 356, 358
Nash v. Rochford Rural Council, [1917] 1 K.B. 384; 81 J.P. 57; 86 L.J.K.B. 370; 116 L.T. 129; 22 Digest 477, 5027	1021, 1022, 1023, 1024
National Bank of St. Charles v. De Bernales, (1825), 1 C. & P. 569; Ry. & M. 190; 13 Digest 280, 113	483, 485
Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 133; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	9, 76, 77, 95, 96, 97 319, 328
Nelthrop v. Hill, (1669), 1 Cas. in Ch. 135; 22 E.R. 730; 23 Digest 428, 4933
New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 381; 59 L.J.Q.B. 291; 61 L.T. 201; sub nom. , Styles v. New York Life Insurance Co., 2 Tax Cas. 460; 28 Digest 59, 300	395, 396, 398, 399, 400, 401
New Zealand (Bank of) v. Simpson, [1900] A.C. 182; 69 L.J.P.C. 22; 82 L.T. 102; 17 Digest 325, 1364	940, 947 319, 329
Newman v. Barton, (1690), 2 Vern. 205; 23 E.R. 733; 23 Digest 428, 4939
Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 2nd Digest Supp.	387, 390, 391, 393 700, 709
Nobel's Explosives Co., Ltd. v. Anderson, (1894), 11 R.P.C. 519; 36 Digest 552, 180	835, 839, 1102, 1103
Noble v. Harrison, (1926) 2 K.B. 332; 95 L.J.K.B. 813; 135 L.T. 325; 90 J.P. 188; 36 Digest 189, 316; Digest Supp.
Noel v. Robinson, (1862), 1 Vern. 90; 2 Vent. 358; 23 E.R. 334; 23 Digest 428, 4938	319, 328, 329, 330, 332, 335, 336
No-Nail Cases Proprietary, Ltd. v. No-Nail Boxes, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 528; [1944] 1 K.B. 629; 113 L.J.K.B. 353; 170 L.T. 384; 61 R.P.C. 94; affd. , [1946] 1 All E.R. 523; [1946] A.C. 447; 2nd Digest Supp.	700, 706, 707, 711
Norman v. Great Western Ry. Co., [1915] 1 K.B. 584; 84 L.J.K.B. 598; 112 L.T. 266; 38 Digest 352, 580	737
Norreys v. Zeffert, [1939] 2 All E.R. 187; Digest Supp.	1108, 1109
Norton v. Seton (falsely called Norton, (1819), 3 Phillim. 147; 27 Digest 266, 2340	639, 640, 645, 646, 647, 648
Nottage, Re , Jones v. Palmer (No. 2), [1895] 2 Ch. 657; 64 L.J.Ch. 695; sub nom. Re Nottage, Nottage v. Palmer (No. 1), 73 L.T. 265; 44 Digest 705, 5480	972, 975
Nottingham Guardians v. Tomkinson, (1879), 4 C.P.D. 343; 48 L.J.M.C. 171; 43 J.P. 735; 3 Digest 366, 63	1113, 1121, 1127
Nova Scotia Steel Co. v. Sutherland S.S. Co., (1899) 5 Com. Cas. 106; 41 Digest 363, 2111	940, 943, 946, 949, 951, 954
Nuthall (G. C. & E.) (1917), Ltd. v. Entertainments & General Investment Corp., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 384	451, 454, 459
Ochsenbein v. Papelier, (1873), 8 Ch. App. 695; 42 L.J.Ch. 861; 28 L.T. 459; 37 J.P. 724; 11 Digest 457, 1131	577, 579
O'Connor, Re , Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. O'Connor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 270; [1948] Ch. 628; [1948] L.J.R. 1606	972, 974, 976 197, 200
O'Connor v. Spaight, (1804), 1 Sch. & Lef. 305; 31 Digest 483, 6
Orme v. Holloway (falsely calling herself Orme), (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 267; 27 Digest 47, 259	731, 734
Ormond v. Holmes & Co., Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 795; 107 L.J.K.B. 21; 157 L.T. 56; 30 B.W.C.C. 254; Digest Supp.	202, 205 337, 333
Orr v. Kaines, (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 194; 28 E.R. 125; 23 Digest 430, 5013	319, 329, 333
Ottoman Bank v. Jebara, [1928] A.C. 269; 97 L.J.K.B. 502; 139 L.T. 194; revsq. S.C. sub nom. Jebara v. Ottoman Bank, [1927] 2 K.B. 254; 43 Digest 481, 183	983, 985
Otway v. Otway, Otway v. Otway and Hoffer, (1888), 13 P.D. 141; 57 L.J.P. 81; 59 L.T. 153; 27 Digest 363, 3539	16, 18 186, 188
Owen v. Nicholl, [1948] 1 All E.R. 707
Pain v. Cobb, (1931), 146 L.T. 13; 95 J.P. 201; Digest Supp.	845, 846
Palmer Re , Palmer v. Palmer, [1916] 2 Ch. 391; 85 L.J.Ch. 577; 115 L.T. 57; 21 Digest 35, 220	933, 934
Palser v. Grinling, Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1948] 1 All E.R. 1; [1948] A.C. 291; [1948] L.J.R. 600; affq. , [1946] 2 All E.R. 287; 294, [1946] K.B. 631, 645; [1947] L.J.R. 97; 115 L.J.K.B. 484; 175 L.T. 204, 192; 2nd Digest Supp.
9, 10, 11, 181, 183, 627, 628, 629, 630, 632, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881
Panouts v. Raymond Hadley Corp., of New York, [1917] 2 K.B. 473; 86 L.J.K.B. 1325; 117 L.T. 330; 12 Digest 434, 3516	940, 948
Papadopoulos v. Papadopoulos, [1930] P. 55; 99 L.J.P. 1; 142 L.T. 237; 94 J.P. 39; Digest Supp.	863, 865
Pardy v. Pardy, [1939] 3 All E.R. 779; [1939] P. 288; 108 L.J.P. 145; 161 L.T. 210; Digest Supp.	920, 922 574, 575
Park Gate Waggon Works Co., Re , (1881), 17 Ch.D. 234; 44 L.T. 901; 10 Digest 923, 6329
Parnell, Re , Ranks v. Holmes, [1944] Ch. 107; 113 L.J.Ch. 92; 170 L.T. 40; 2nd Digest Supp.	493, 498 168, 170
Paterson v. William Beardmore & Co., Ltd., [1948] W.N. 175
Pearks v. Moseley, Re Moseley's Trusts, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714; 50 L.J.Ch. 57; 43 L.T. 449; 37 Digest 68, 98	262, 264, 265
Pearce, Re , Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, [1914] 1 Ch. 254; 83 L.J.Ch. 266; 110 L.T. 168; 44 Digest 810, 6627	882, 885
Pease & Partners, Ltd. v. Birch, [1941] 1 All E.R. 343; sub nom. Birch v. Pease & Partners, Ltd., [1941] 1 K.B. 615; 110 L.J.K.B. 273; 165 L.T. 146; 2nd Digest Supp.	767, 770
Peck v. Hull & East Coast Stevedoring Co., Ltd., (1938), 82 Sol. Jo. 153; 60 Ll.L.R. 39; Digest Supp.	105
Peduzzi v. Peduzzi (unreported)	1011, 1013
Peech v. Best, [1931] 1 K.B. 1; 99 L.J.K.B. 537; 143 L.T. 266; Digest Supp.	887, 888, 892, 893
Peck v. Peck, [1948] 2 All E.R. 297; [1948] P. 46	546, 548

- Pellworm, The, [1922] 1 A.C. 292; 91 L.J.P. 102; 126 L.T. 780; (1922), 3 Br. & Col. Pr. 680, 683
 Cas. 1053; varying, [1920] P. 347; 37 Digest 590, 266
- Peterson v. Peterson, (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 111; 36 L.J.Ch. 101; 23 Digest 431, 5025 319, 332, 333, 334
- Petrel, The, [1893] P. 320; 62 L.J.P. 92; 70 L.T. 417; 34 Digest 213, 1747 797, 800, 801
- Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp. 297, 302, 546, 547, 548
- Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd., [1919] 2 K.B. 243; 88 L.K.J.B. 953; 121 L.T. 249; 24 Com. 29, 30, 33
 Cas. 263; 39 Digest 533, 1451
- Phipps (P.) & Co. (Northampton & Towcester Breweries), Ltd. v. Rogers, [1925] 1 K.B. 14; 93 L.J.K.B. 1009; 132 L.T. 240; 89 J.P. 1; 69 Sol. Jo. 50, C.A.; 31 Digest 448, 5947 101, 103
- Pickard v. Sears, (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 469; 2 Nev. & P.K.B. 488; Will. Woll. & Dav. 678; 21 Digest 290, 1032 640, 646
 197, 200
- Piggot v. Williams, (1821), 6 Madd. 95; 42 Digest 230, 2028
- Pinson v. Lloyds & National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 636; [1941] 2 K.B. 72; 110 L.J.K.B. 657; 165 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp. 138, 139, 140
- Plomien Fuel Economist Co., Ltd. v. National Marketing Co., [1941] 1 All E.R. 311; [1941] Ch. 248; 110 L.J.Ch. 180; 165 L.T. 119; 2nd Digest Supp. 294, 296, 462, 473, 489, 491, 987, 988, 990
- Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co., Ltd., [1914] A.C. 62; 83 L.J.K.B. 197; 109 L.T. 759; 7 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 288, 2415 201, 203
- Plymouth Mutual Co-operative and Industrial Society, Ltd. v. Traders' Publishing Assocn., Ltd., [1906] 1 K.B. 403; 75 L.J.K.B. 259; 94 L.T. 258; 18 Digest 205, 1532 717, 719
- Poland v. Parr (John) & Sons, [1927] 1 K.B. 236; 34 Digest, 117, 890 936, 937, 938
- Pope v. Fraser & Southern Rolling & Wire Mills, Ltd., (1938), 55 T.L.R. 324; Digest Supp. 835, 839
- Porter, Re, Porter v. Porter, [1925] Ch. 746; 95 L.J.Ch. 46; 133 L.T. 812; Digest Supp. 493, 498
- Portman v. Middleton, (1858), 4 C.B.N.S. 322; 27 L.J.C.P. 231; sub nom., Portman v. Nichol, 31 L.T.O.S. 152; 17 Digest 112, 230 806, 809
- Poteliakhoff v. Teakle, [1938] 3 All E.R. 686; [1938] 2 K.B. 816; 107 L.J.K.B. 678; 160 L.T. 1; Digest Supp. 1108, 1111
- Pratt, Re, Pratt v. Pratt, [1894] 1 Ch. 491; 63 L.J.Ch. 484; 70 L.T. 489; 23 Digest 424, 4952 972, 975
- Pratt v. Pratt, (1927), 96 L.J.P. 123; 137 L.T. 491; Digest Supp. 862, 863, 868
- Prinsep v. Prinsep, [1929] P. 225; 98 L.J.P. 105; 141 L.T. 220; Digest Supp. 772, 774, 776
- Proctor v. Proctor, (1819), 2 Hag. Com. 292; 27 Digest 369, 3549 639, 643
- Progress, The, (1810), 1 Edw. 210; 39 Digest 346, 330 680, 682
- Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark, [1948] 1 All E.R. 165; [1948] K.B. 630 224, 226, 227, 228
- Prosser, Re, Prosser v. Griffith, (1929), 167 L.T. Jo. 307; [1929] W.N. 85; Digest Supp. 961, 963
- Pulford v. Pulford, [1923] P. 18; 92 L.J.P. 14; 128 L.T. 256; 27 Digest 307, 2846 920, 923, 924
- Queleh v. Collett, [1948] 1 All E.R. 252; [1948] 1 K.B. 478; [1948] L.J.R. 956; 112 J.P. 167 1069, 1070, 1071
- R. v. Aberg, [1948] 1 All E.R. 601; [1948] 2 K.B. 173; 112 J.P. 206 964
- R. v. Grondkowski and Malinowski, [1946] 1 All E.R. 559; [1946] K.B. 369; 115 L.J.K.B. 289; 175 L.T. 32; 110 J.P. 193; 2nd Digest Supp. 763, 765
- R. v. Hansill, (1849), 13 J.P. 556; 3 Cox, C.C. 597; 14 Digest 100, 719 964
- R. v. Henley, [1892] 1 Q.B. 504; 61 L.J.M.C. 135; 66 L.T. 675; 56 J.P. 391; 25 Digest 63, 525 815, 816
- R. v. Heston and Isleworth Rating Authority, Ex parte Conti, [1941] 2 All E.R. 116; [1941] 2 K.B. 146; 110 L.J.K.B. 545; 165 L.T. 283; 105 J.P. 288; 2nd Digest Supp. 552, 555
- R. v. Kensington Income Tax Comrs., [1913] 3 K.B. 870; 83 L.J.K.B. 364; 109 L.T. 708; 6 Tax Cas. 279; on appeal, sub nom. Kensington Income Tax Comrs. v. Aramayo, [1916] 1 A.C. 215; 84 L.J.K.B. 2169; 113 L.T. 1083; 38 Digest 121, 888 1042, 1044, 1045
- R. v. Lapworth, [1931] 1 K.B. 117; 100 L.J.K.B. 52; 144 L.T. 126; 95 J.P. 2; Digest Supp. 1113, 1114, 1115
- R. v. Lee, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 394; 47 J.P. 118; 25 Digest 112, 358 815, 817
- R. v. Levy, [1912] 1 K.B. 158; 81 L.J.K.B. 264; 106 L.T. 192; 76 J.P. 123; 14 Digest 100, 717 964, 966
- R. v. Milledge, (1879), 4 Q.B.D. 332; 40 L.T. 748; sub nom., R. v. Weymouth JJ., 48 L.J.M.C. 139; 43 J.P. 606; 33 Digest 297, 118 815, 817
- R. v. Mills, (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534; 27 Digest 43, 222 639, 643
- R. v. Moore, (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 184; 1 L.J.M.C. 30; 36 Digest 240, 787 888, 892
- R. v. Reading Assessment Committee, Ex parte McCarthy E. Fitt, Ltd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 194 552, 555, 584
- R. v. Rowley, [1948] 1 All E.R. 570; 112 J.P. 207 964
- R. v. Ruscoe, (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 386; 3 Nev. & P.K.B. 423; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 435; 7 L.J. M.C. 94; 42 Digest 851, 56 556, 557
- R. v. St. Edmundsbury & Ipswich Diocese (Chancellor) and Another, Ex parte White and Another, [1947] 2 All E.R. 170; [1948] K.B. 195; 177 L.T. 488 640, 644
- R. v. Surrey (Mid-Eastern Area) Assessment Committee, Ex parte Merton and Morden Urban District Council and Another, [1948] 1 All E.R. 856 553, 555
- R. v. Thanet and District Assessment Area Assessment Committee and Kent County Valuation Committee, Ex parte Isle of Thanet Gas Light and Coke Co., [1939] 2 All E.R. 489; [1939] 2 K.B. 640; 108 L.J.K.B. 515; 160 L.T. 509; 103 J.P. 186; Digest Supp. 552, 554, 555, 584
- R. v. Tibshelf, Inhabitants of, (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 190; 8 L.J.O.S.M.C. 120; 109 E.R. 758; 27 Digest 47, 261 731, 733
- R. v. Wandsworth Licensing Justices, Ex parte Whitbread & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 487; 90 L.J.K.B. 1114; 125 L.T. 540; 85 J.P. 171; 30 Digest 44, 339 581, 582
- R. v. Watford Licensing Justices, Ex parte Trust Houses, Ltd., [1929] 1 K.B. 313; 98 L.J.K.B. 198; 140 L.T. 350; 93 J.P. 41; Digest Supp. 581, 582
- R. v. West Norfolk Assessment Committee, Ex parte Ward (F. B.), (1930), 94 J.P. 201; Digest Supp. 552, 553, 554, 555
- R. v. Weston-Super-Mare Licensing Justices, Ex parte Powell, [1939] 1 All E.R. 212; [1939] 1 K.B. 700; 108 L.J.K.B. 206; 160 L.T. 227; 103 J.P. 95; Digest Supp. 581, 583
- R. v. Wroxton, Inhabitants of, (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 640; 1 Nev. & M.K.B. 712; 1 Nev. & M.M.C. 479; 2 L.J.M.C. 64; 110 E.R. 597; 27 Digest 47, 254 731, 733
- Radcliffe v. Ribble Motor Services, Ltd., [1939] 1 All E.R. 637; [1939] A.C. 215; 108 L.J.K.B. 320; 160 L.T. 420; Digest Supp. 797, 800, 805
- Radford v. Willis, (1871), 7 Ch. App. 7; 41 L.J.Ch. 19; 25 L.T. 720; 44 Digest 875, 7313 303, 304, 305
- Ramsay v. Mackie, (1904), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 106; 24 Digest 917, 1 665, 668, 670, 674
- Rawson v. Samuel, (1841), Cr. & Ph. 161; 10 L.J.Ch. 214; 40 Digest 379, 105 197, 200, 201
- Ray v. Sherwood & Ray, (1836), 1 Curt. 193; affd., sub nom., Sherwood v. Ray, (1837), 1 Moo. P.C.C. 353, P.C.; 27 Digest 376, 3647 640, 645

Rayner, Re , [1904] 1 Ch. 176; 73 L.J.Ch. 111; 89 L.T. 681; 44 Digest 623, 4535	906, 907
Read v. Price, [1909] 2 K.B. 724; 78 L.J.K.B. 1137; 101 L.T. 60; 12 Digest 39, 190	1050, 1051
Readhead v. Midland Ry. Co., (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 379; 38 L.J.Q.B. 169; sub nom. , Redhead v. Midland Ry. Co., 9 B. & S. 519; 20 L.T. 628; 8 Digest 71, 480	462, 463
Red "R" S.S. Co. v. Allatini Brothers, (1909), 100 L.T. 268; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 192; 14 Com Cas. 82, K.B.D.; 101 L.T. 510; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 317, C.A.; (1910) 103 L.T. 86; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 434; 15 Com. Cas. 290, H.L.; 41 Digest 656, 4882	523, 524, 525, 526
Rederiaktiebolaget Amphitrite v. R., [1921] 3 K.B. 500; 91 L.J.K.B. 75; 126 L.T. 63; 16 Digest 238, 341	767, 770
Redfern v. Redfern, [1891] P. 139; 60 L.J.P. 9; 64 L.T. 68; 55 J.P. 37; 27 Digest 263, 2317	1113, 1115, 1122
Reichel v. Magrath, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 665; 59 L.J.Q.B. 159; 54 J.P. 196; Digest, Pleading 84, 701	230
Reid v. Fairbanks, (1858), 18 C.B. 692; 1 C.L.R. 787; 21 L.T.O.S. 166; sub nom. Read v. Fairbanks, 22 L.J.C.P. 206; 43 Digest 509, 484	983, 986
Reilly v. R., [1934] A.C. 176; 103 L.J.P.C. 41; 150 L.T. 384; Digest Supp.	767, 770
Rennison v. Knowler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 302; [1947] L.J.R. 555; 111 J.P. 171; sub nom. Knowler v. Rennison, [1947] K.B. 488; 176 L.T. 271; 2nd Digest Supp.	1062, 1063
Revely v. Minister of Pensions, (1948), Reports of Selected War Pension Appeals, vol. 3, 1573	789, 790
Rhondad's (Viscountess) Claim, [1922] 2 A.C. 339; 92 L.J.P.C. 81; 128 L.T. 155; 42 Digest 613, 137	568, 571
Rice v. Raynold-Spring-Rice, [1948] 1 All E.R. 188; [1948] L.J.R. 675	151, 155
Richards v. Goskar, [1936] 3 All E.R. 839; [1937] A.C. 304; 106 L.J.K.B. 85; 156 L.T. 52; 29 B.W.C.C. 357; Digest Supp.	253, 261
Richardson v. Richardson, (1942), 167 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp.	863, 865
Richmond (Duke) v. Dewar & Cadogan Hotel Co., Ltd., (1921), 38 T.L.R. 151; 31 Digest 558, 7058	189, 191
Rider v. Rollit, (1920), 36 T.L.R. 687; 84 J.P. Jo. 267; 31 Digest 557, 7038	675, 676, 677, 678
Ridgeway v. Ridgeway, (1881), 29 W.R. 612; 27 Digest 338, 3174	1114, 1125
Rivers, Re , Pullen v. Rivers, [1920] 1 Ch. 320; 88 L.J.Ch. 462; 121 L.T. 57; 24 Digest 596, 6298	319, 332, 333, 334, 337
Roberts v. Jones, [1946] 2 All E.R. 678; [1947] K.B. 221; [1947] L.J.R. 606; 176 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.	232, 234, 235, 237
Roberts v. Roberts & Temple, (1917), 117 L.T. 157; 27 Digest 339, 3182	1114, 1128
Robinson, Re , McLaren v. Public Trustee, [1911] 1 Ch. 502; 104 L.T. 331; sub nom. , Re Robinson, McLaren v. Robinson, 80 L.J.Ch. 351; 43 Digest 960, 4002	320, 333, 334
Robinson v. Addison, (1840), 2 Beav. 515; 9 L.J.Ch. 369; 4 Jur. 647; 48 E.R. 1281; 44 Digest 298, 1299	270, 272, 972, 974
Robinson v. Knights, (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 465; 42 L.J.C.P. 211; 28 L.T. 820; 41 Digest 620, 4512	524, 526
Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, [1897] 1 Ch. 196; 66 L.J.Ch. 74; 75 L.T. 502; 43 Digest 558, 87	133, 136
Rogers v. Ingham, (1876), 3 Ch.D. 351; 35 L.T. 677; 35 Digest 93, 25	320, 334
Roppel v. Bennett, [1948] 2 All E.R. 627	633, 634, 635
Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] K.B. 374; 115 L.J.K.B. 215; 174 L.T. 214; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 93, 983, 986
Roumanian, The, [1916] 1 A.C. 124; 85 L.J.P.C. 33; 114 L.T. 3; 1 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 552; aff. [1915] P. 26; 37 Digest 593, 291	680, 682
Rowson (In the Estate of), [1944] 2 All E.R. 36; 171 L.T. 70; 2nd Digest Supp.	908, 912
Royal Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Stephen, (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 22; Digest Supp.	380, 384
Rudler v. Franks, [1947] 1 K.B. 530; [1947] L.J.R. 658; 176 L.T. 326	432, 433
Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Keene (Inspector of Taxes), Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 699	368, 375, 377
Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661	52, 53
Russell v. Russell, [1924] A.C. 687; 93 L.J.P. 97; 131 L.T. 482; 27 Digest 297, 2743	870, 871
Russoff v. Lipovitch, [1925] 1 K.B. 628; 94 L.J.K.B. 355; 132 L.T. 789; 31 Digest 585, 7343	691, 698
Ryall v. Hoare, Ryall v. Honeywill, [1923] 2 K.B. 447; 92 L.J.K.B. 1010; 129 L.T. 505; 8 Tax Cas. 521; 28 Digest 81, 453	380, 385
Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311	834, 839
Rymer, Re , Rymer v. Stanfield, [1895] 1 Ch. 19; 64 L.J.Ch. 86; 71 L.T. 590; 43 W.R. 87; 39 Sol. Jo. 26; 12 R. 22, C.A.; 8 Digest 312, 926	23, 25
Sachs v. Miklos, [1948] 1 All E.R. 67; [1948] 2 K.B. 23; [1948] L.J.R. 1012	89, 93, 983, 985, 986
Salaman v. Warner, [1891] 1 Q.B. 734; 60 L.J.Q.B. 624; 30 Digest 135, 136	297, 299
Salomon v. Salomon & Co., [1897] A.C. 22; 66 L.J.Ch. 35; 75 L.T. 426; 42 Digest 622, 225	826, 830
Sanders v. Sanders, (1881), 19 Ch.D. 373; 51 L.J.Ch. 276; 45 L.T. 637; 32 Digest 458, 1250	1022, 1024
Sawers, Re , Ex parte Blain, (1879), 12 Ch.D. 522; 41 L.T. 46; 4 Digest 25, 197	534, 537, 544
Sawyer v. Birchmore, (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 611; 1 Keen, 825; 6 L.J.Ch. 277; 24 Digest 794, 8241	319, 330, 332, 333, 334
Scott, Re , [1903] 1 Ch. 1; 72 L.J.Ch. 20; 87 L.T. 574; 20 Digest 459, 1840	1005, 1010
Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865), 3 H. & C. 596; 5 New Rep. 420; 34 L.J.Ex. 220; 13 L.T. 148; 36 Digest 91, 601	461, 462, 463, 469
Scottish & Canadian General Investment Co. v. Easson, 1922 S.C. 242; 8 Tax Cas. 265; 28 Digest 20 h	380, 384
Searle v. Wallbank, [1947] 1 All E.R. 12; [1947] A.C. 341; [1947] L.J.R. 258; 176 L.T. 104	662
Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan, [1940] 3 All E.R. 349; [1940] A.C. 880; 164 L.T. 72; 2nd Digest Supp.	662, 1102, 1103
Selwyn v. Hamill, [1948] 1 All E.R. 70	439, 442
S.G. v. W.G., 1933 S.C. 738	640, 650, 652
Sharman v. Brandt, (1871), L.R. 6 Q.B. 720; 40 L.J.Q.B. 312; 19 W.R. 936, Ex. Ch.; 1 Digest 277, 94	267, 269
Sharpe v. Nicholls, [1945] 2 All E.R. 55; [1945] K.B. 382; 114 L.J.K.B. 409; 172 L.T. 363; 2nd Digest Supp.	95, 96
Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 168	173, 175
Shedden v. Patrick & A.-G., (1869), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 470; 22 L.T. 631, H.L.; 22 Digest 476, 5022	1021, 1022, 1023, 1024
Sheehan v. Cutler, [1946] K.B. 339; 115 L.J.K.B. 337; 174 L.T. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.	439, 441, 442
Shelley v. Shelley, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 540; 37 L.J.Ch. 357; 16 W.R. 1036; 44 Digest 950, 8034	193, 194, 195
Sheppard v. Glossop Corpn., [1921] 3 K.B. 132; 90 L.J.K.B. 994; 125 L.T. 520; 85 J.P. 205; 26 Digest 393, 1197	780, 782

Sherratt v. Bentley, (1834), 2 My. & K. 149; 44 Digest 601, 4273	111, 113
Shillito v. Hinchcliffe, [1922] 2 K.B. 236; 91 L.J.K.B. 730; 127 L.T. 367; 86 J.P. 170; 18 Digest 401, 1414	583, 584
Shilston v. Shilston, (1945), 174 L.T. 105; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 923
Shipman v. Shipman, [1924] 2 Ch. 140; 93 L.J.Ch. 382; 131 L.T. 394; 27 Digest 259, 2282	436, 437
Shipp v. Minister of Pensions, Minister of Pensions v. Pretty, [1946] 1 All E.R. 417; [1946] K.B. 386; 115 L.J.K.B. 269; 175 L.T. 140; 2nd Digest Supp.; (1946), Reports of Selected War Pension Appeals, vol. 1, 91	789, 790
Shubbrook v. Tufnell, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 621; 46 L.T. 749; 30 Digest 129, 71	297, 299
Sifton v. Sifton, [1938] 3 All E.R. 435; [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.	493, 500, 501
Simmons v. Swift, (1826), 5 B. & C. 857; 8 Dow. and Ry. K.B. 693; 5 L.J.O.S.K.B. 10; 39 Digest 484, 1042	1037, 1040
Simon v. Pawson and Leafs, Ltd., (1932), 38 Com. Cas. 151; 148 L.T. 154; Digest Supp.	36, 39
Simonson, Re, Ex parte Ball, [1894] 1 Q.B. 433; 63 L.J.Q.B. 242; 70 L.T. 32; 5 Digest 642 5773	217, 220, 221
Simper v. Coombs, [1948] 1 All E.R. 306	141, 143
Simpson v. London & North Western Ry. Co., (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 274; 45 L.J.Q.B. 182; 33 L.T. 805; 24 W.R. 294; 8 Digest 140, 921	806, 809
Sinclair, Re, Ex parte Payne, (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 616; 53 L.T. 767; 5 Digest 641, 5764	217, 222
Sinclair v. Brougham, [1914] A.C. 398; 83 L.J.Ch. 465; 111 L.T. 1; varying, S.C., sub nom., Re Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society, [1912] 2 Ch. 183; 35 Digest 167, 8 319, 323, 344, 345, 346, 348, 349, 350, 351, 353, 355, 356, 357, 359
Skinner v. Geary, [1981] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.	189, 190, 722, 723, 724
Slater v. Worthington's Cash Stores, (1930), Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 28; [1941] 1 K.B. 488; 111 L.J.K.B. 91; 2nd Digest Supp.	662, 835, 839
Small v. Small & Furber, (1923), 67 Sol. Jo. 277; 27 Digest 48, 276	731, 734
Smeeton v. A.-G., [1920] 1 Ch. 85; 88 L.J.Ch. 535; 122 L.T. 23; 30 Digest 144, 198	585, 587
Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., Ltd., [1911] A.C. 150; 80 L.J.K.B. 566; 104 L.T. 321; 5 Tax Cas. 568; 75 J.P. Jo. 87; 28 Digest 57, 291	368, 372
Smith v. Mather, [1948] 1 All E.R. 704; [1948] 2 K.B. 212; [1948] L.J.R. 1209	846, 847
Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 K.B. 314; 101 L.J.K.B. 110; 146 L.T. 133; Digest Supp.	114, 118
Smith v. Smith, [1897] P. 293; 66 L.J.P. 151; 77 L.T. 206; 27 Digest 490, 5221	546, 548
Smith v. Smith, [1939] 4 All E.R. 533; [1940] P. 49; 109 L.J.P. 100; 162 L.T. 333; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 922, 923, 927
Smith v. Smith, [1945] 1 All E.R. 584; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; 2nd Digest Supp.	772, 774, 777
Smith v. Wheatcroft, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 223; 47 L.J.Ch. 745; 39 L.T. 103; 35 Digest 98, 71	30, 31
Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. v. Bolland (Inspector of Taxes), Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1948] 2 All E.R. 367	378, 379
Sneyd v. Sneyd & Burgess, (1925), 42 T.L.R. 106; 27 Digest 431, 4391	1113, 1122
Snow v. Snow, (1842), 2 Notes of Cases, Supp. 1; 27 Digest 342, 3231	858, 861
Snowman (otherwise Besinger) v. Snowman, [1934] P. 186; 103 L.J.P. 87; 151 L.T. 180; Digest Supp.	147, 150
Sottomayer v. De Barrios, (1879), 5 P.D. 94; 49 L.J.P. 1; 41 L.T. 281; 27 Digest 36, 127	640, 646
South Suburban Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Orum, [1937] 3 All E.R. 133; [1937] 2 K.B. 690; 106 L.J.K.B. 555; 157 L.T. 93; Digest Supp.	717, 719, 720
Spackman v. Foster, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 99; 52 L.J.Q.B. 418; 48 L.T. 670; 47 J.P. 455; 32 Digest 344, 271	89, 93
Spark (In the Estate of), [1941] 2 All E.R. 782; [1941] P. 115; 110 L.J.P. 71; 165 L.T. 234; 2nd Digest Supp.	908, 912, 914
Stafford Corp'n. v. Bolton, (1797), 1 Bos. & P. 40; 13 Digest 284, 156	483, 485
Stearn v. Prentice Brothers, Ltd., [1919] 1 K.B. 394; 88 L.J.K.B. 422; 120 L.T. 445; 36 Digest 195, 358	888, 891
Stedall, (1902), 86 L.T. 124; 27 Digest 516, 5552	772, 774
Steel v. Cammell, Laird & Co., Ltd., [1905] 2 K.B. 232; 74 L.J.K.B. 610; 93 L.T. 357; 7 W.C.C. 9; 34 Digest 271, 2302	202, 205, 207
Stenning, Re, Wood v. Stenning, [1895] 2 Ch. 433; 73 L.T. 207; 43 Digest 1022, 4616	320, 364
Stephens, Ex parte, (1805), 11 Ves. 24; 4 Digest 390, 3572	197, 200
Stimpson's Trusts, Re, Stimpson v. Stimpson, [1931] 2 Ch. 77; 100 L.J.Ch. 312; 145 L.T. 249; Digest Supp.	209, 213
Stoddart, Re, Bird v. Grainger, [1916] 2 Ch. 444; 86 L.J.Ch. 29; 115 L.T. 540; 21 Digest 37, 232	933, 934
Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. v. Levitt, [1946] 2 All E.R. 653; [1947] A.C. 209; [1947] L.J.R. 65; 176 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	181, 184, 185
Stowel v. Zouch (Lord), (1569), 1 Plowd 353; 42 Digest 635, 378	680, 683
Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290	368, 369, 371, 372, 374, 376, 377
Struve's Trusts, Re, [1912] W.N. 149; 56 Sol. Jo. 551; 22 Digest 369, 3778	64, 67
Stuart v. Joy, [1904] 1 K.B. 362; 73 L.J.K.B. 97; 90 L.T. 78; 31 Digest 432, 5763	416, 418
Studds v. Watson, (1884), 28 Ch.D. 305; 54 L.J.Ch. 626; 52 L.T. 129; 12 Digest 141, 958	85, 87
Sturges v. Bridgman, (1879), 11 Ch.D. 852; 48 L.J.Ch. 785; 41 L.T. 219; 43 J.P. 716; 36 Digest 160, 30	888, 897
Sullivan v. Sullivan (falsely called Oldacre), (1818), 2 Hag. Con. 238; 161 E.R. 728; 27 Digest 49, 279	732, 735
Summers v. Donohue, [1945] 1 All E.R. 599; [1945] K.B. 376; 114 L.J.K.B. 401; 172 L.T. 310; 2nd Digest Supp.	845, 846, 848
Swanson's Agreement, Re, Hill v. Swanson, [1946] 2 All E.R. 628; 2nd Digest Supp.	691, 693, 695, 696
Swift v. McBean, [1942] 1 All E.R. 126; [1942] 1 K.B. 375; 111 L.J.K.B. 185; 166 L.T. 87; 2nd Digest Supp.	141, 143
Sykes, Re, Skelton and Dyson v. Sykes, [1940] 4 All E.R. 10; 2nd Digest Supp.	990, 991, 992
Symonds v. Hallett, (1883), 24 Ch.D. 346; 53 L.J.Ch. 60; 49 L.T. 380; 27 Digest 259, 2281	436, 438
Talbot-Ponsonby's Estate, Re, Talbot-Ponsonby v. Talbot-Ponsonby, [1937] 4 All E.R. 309; Digest Supp.	494, 501, 502
Taylor, Re, Martin v. Freeman, (1888), 58 L.T. 538; 8 Digest 299, 765	493, 498
Taylor v. Brighton Corp'n., [1947] 1 All E.R. 864; [1947] K.B. 736; [1947] L.J.R. 1103; 177 L.T. 153; 111 J.P. 343, C.A.	119, 122
Taylor v. Cairn Line, 32 L.L.R. 118	105
Taylor v. Caldwell, (1863), 3 B. & S. 826; 2 New Rep. 198; 32 L.J.Q.B. 164; 8 L.T. 356; 12 Digest 371, 3093	141, 143

Taylor v. Newman, (1863), 4 B. & S. 89; 2 New Rep. 275; 32 L.J.M.C. 186; 8 L.T. 424; 27 J.P. 502; 2 Digest 216, 119	474, 476, 477
Taylor v. Taylor, (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 155; 44 L.J.Ch. 718; 20 Digest 458, 1825	1005, 1009
Temperance Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Nevitt, [1940] 3 All E.R. 237; 163 L.T. 234; Digest Supp.	448, 449 432, 433
Territorial Forces Association v. Philpott, [1947] 2 All E.R. 376
Tetlow v. Orela, Ltd., [1920] 2 Ch. 24; 89 L.J.Ch. 465; 123 L.T. 388; Digest, Practice, 267, 50	144, 146, 147, 483, 484, 485 85, 88 737, 744
Thirkell v. Cambi, [1919] 2 K.B. 590; 89 L.J.K.B. 1; 121 L.T. 532; 12 Digest 135, 908
Thom v. Owners of S.S. Smerdis, 1925 Sc.L.T. 239	396, 401
Thomas v. Evans (Richard) & Co., Jones v. South West Lancashire Coal Owners' Assocn., [1927] 1 K.B. 33; 95 L.J.K.B. 990; 135 L.T. 673; 11 Tax Cas. 790, C.A.; affd. , sub nom. , Jones v. South-West Lancashire Coal Owners' Assocn., [1927] A.C. 827; 96 L.J.K.B. 894; 137 L.T. 737; Digest Supp.	319, 330
Thomas v. Griffith, (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 555; 30 L.J.Ch. 465; 3 L.T. 761; 20 Digest 268, 287
Thomas v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., Ltd., [1935] 2 K.B. 90; 104 L.J.K.B. 515; 152 L.T. 571; 28 B.W.C.C. 95; Digest Supp.	253, 254, 258 920, 925, 926
Thomas v. Thomas, [1948] 2 All E.R. 98; [1948] 2 K.B. 294	846, 847
Thynne v. Salmon, [1948] 1 All E.R. 49; [1948] 1 K.B. 482; [1948] L.J.R. 506	712, 713, 714
Timmins v. Timmins, [1919] P. 75; 88 L.J.P. 78; 120 L.T. 544; 27 Digest 567, 6255
Todrick v. Western National Omnibus Co., Ltd., [1934] Ch. 190; affd. , [1934] Ch. 561; 103 L.J.Ch. 224; 151 L.T. 163; Digest Supp.	791, 793, 794, 795, 796
Tonline's Will Trusts, Re , Pretymann v. Pretymann, [1931] 1 Ch. 521, 526; 100 L.J.Ch. 156; 144 L.T. 592; Digest Supp.	493, 495 731, 734
Tooth v. Barrow, (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 371; 164 E.R. 214; 27 Digest 48, 273	700, 710
Townsend v. Haworth, (1875), 12 Ch.D. 831, n.; 48 L.J.Ch. 770, n.; 36 Digest 746, 2333
Tinline v. White Cross Insurance, [1921] 3 K.B. 327; 90 L.J.K.B. 1118; 125 L.T. 632; 29 Digest 408, 3214	36, 39
Toleman v. Portbury, (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 288; 39 L.J.Q.B. 136; 22 L.T. 33; 18 W.R. 579 Ex. Ch.; 31 Digest 467, 6137	138, 139
Travers v. Gloucester Corporation, [1946] 2 All E.R. 506; [1947] K.B. 71; 115 L.J.K.B. 517; 175 L.T. 360; 110 J.P. 364; 2nd Digest Supp.	917, 918
Trawlers (Grimsby), Ltd. v. Crouchen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 253; 36 B.W.C.C. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.	168, 170, 171
Tredeggar v. Harwood, [1929] A.C. 72; 97 L.J.Ch. 392; 139 L.T. 642; Digest Supp.	40, 41, 43, 691, 693, 695
Trim Joint District School Board of Management v. Kelly, [1914] A.C. 667; 83 L.J.P.C. 220; 111 L.T. 305; 7 B.W.C.C. 274; 34 Digest 270, 2300	201, 203
Triplex Safety Glass Co. v. Scolah, [1937] 4 All E.R. 693; [1938] Ch. 211; 107 L.J.Ch. 91; 157 L.T. 576; Digest Supp.	45, 47
Tussaud's Estate, Re , (1878), 9 Ch.D. 363; 47 L.J.Ch. 849; 39 L.T. 113; 20 Digest 475, 2016	1005, 1009
Ulrich v. Litchfield, (1742), 2 Atk. 372; sub nom. , Francis v. Dichfield, 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 531; 44 Digest 632, 4642	111, 113
Underwood v. Underwood, [1945] 2 All E.R. 561; [1946] P. 84; 115 L.J.P. 49; 173 L.T. 274; 109 J.P. 248; 2nd Digest Supp.	712, 713
United Australia, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 20; [1941] A.C. 1; 109 L.J.K.B. 919; 164 L.T. 139; 2nd Digest Supp.	89, 93
United Telephone Co. v. Dale, (1884), 25 Ch.D. 778; 53 L.J.Ch. 295; 50 L.T. 85; 36 Digest 818, 3045	700, 710 1087, 1094
United Zinc and Chemical Co. v. van Britt, (1922) U.S. 268
Upper Agbrigg Assessment Committee v. Gartsides (Brookside Brewery), Ltd. and Bents Brewery Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 338; 114 L.J.B.K. 257; 172 L.T. 166; sub nom. , Upper Agbrigg Assessment Committee v. Bents Brewery Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 K.B. 196; sub nom. , Bents Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Upper Agbrigg Assessment Committee, 109 J.P. 84; C.A., rearg. , [1944] 2 All E.R. 37; [1944] K.B. 524; 2nd Digest Supp.	552, 553, 554, 555
Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne, [1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 115 L.J.K.B. 433; 175 L.T. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.	675, 676, 677, 678
Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 6 Tax Cas. 399; 28 Digest 56, 286	368, 372
Vadala v. Lawes, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 310; 63 L.T. 128; 11 Digest 457, 1133	577, 579
Vanbergen v. St Edmunds Properties, Ltd., [1933] 2 K.B. 223; 102 L.J.K.B. 369; 149 L.T. 182; Digest Supp.	1108, 1112
Vandyke v. Adams, [1942] 1 All E.R. 139; [1942] 1 Ch. 155; 111 L.J.Ch. 110; 166 L.T. 117; 86 Sol. Jo. 56; 2nd Digest Supp.	289, 292, 293
Vaux, Re , [1938] 4 All E.R. 297, 703; [1939] Ch. 465; 108 L.J.Ch. 60, 211; 160 L.T. 65, 74; Digest Supp.	1005, 1008
Vickers, Re , (1888), 37 Ch.D. 525; 57 L.J.Ch. 738; 58 L.T. 920; 20 Digest 472, 1981	1004, 1005, 1010
Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.	189, 191, 192, 193
Vokes, Ltd. v. Heather, (1945), 62 R.P.C. 135; 2nd Digest Supp.	45, 47
Vyricherla Narayana Gajapatiraju (Raja) v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Vizagapatam, [1939] A.C. 302; [1939] 2 All E.R. 317; 108 L.J.P.C. 51; Digest Supp.	509, 512
Wakefield v. Mackay (falsely called Wakefield), (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 394; 1 Phillim. 134, n.; 161 E.R. 593; 27 Digest 37, 135	732, 735
Wakeman, Re , National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Wakeman, [1945] 1 All E.R. 421; [1945] Ch. 177; 114 L.J.Ch. 145; 172 L.T. 226; 2nd Digest Supp.	209, 211 961, 963
Walbran, Re , Milner v. Walbran, [1906] 1 Ch. 64; 93 L.T. 745; 44 Digest 845, 6934	319, 330, 332, 333, 334
Walcott v. Hall, (1788), 2 Bro. C.C. 305; 23 Digest 430, 5015	202, 205, 207
Walker v. Hockney Brothers, (1909), 2 B.W.C.C. 20; 34 Digest 273, 2311
Walkinshaw v. Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co. Ltd., 1935 S.C. (H.L.) 36; sub nom. , Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. Walkinshaw, 23 B.W.C.C. 230	202, 208
Wallace v. Major, [1946] 2 All E.R. 87; [1946] K.B. 473; 115 L.J.K.B. 402; 175 L.T. 84; 110 J.P. 231; 2nd Digest Supp.	83
Wanbon v. Wanbon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 924, 925, 926, 927
Ward v. Van der Loeff, Burnyeat v. Van der Loeff, [1924] A.C. 653; 93 L.J.Ch. 397; 131 L.T. 292; rearg. , S.C., sub nom. , Re Burnyeat, Burnyeat v. Ward, [1923] 2 Ch. 52; 44 Digest 536, 1662	882, 885

	PAGE
Warner v. Payne, unrep., Apr. 15, 1935	176, 177
Watson v. Birch, (1847), 15 Sim. 523; 16 L.J.Ch. 188; 8 L.T.O.S. 531; 21 Digest 419, 20	403, 406
Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; [1948] L.J.R. 515; 176 L.T. 498	52, 60
Weatherley v. Weatherley [1947] 1 All E.R. 563; [1947] A.C. 628; [1947] L.J.R. 869; 176 L.T. 434; 111 J.P. 220; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 923
Weaver v. Commercial Process Co., Ltd., [1947] 63 T.L.R. 466	105
Wedgwood, Re, Allen v. Public Trustee, [1921] 1 Ch. 601; 90 L.J.Ch. 322; 125 L.T. 146; 21 Digest 36, 226	933, 934, 935
West v. Jones, (1851), 1 Sim. N.S. 205; 20 L.J.Ch. 362; 35 Digest 687, 4295	432, 435
Westhead v. Westhead, (1876), 2 P.D. 1	297, 298
Westmeath v. Westmarch, (1827), 2 Hag. Ecc. Supp. 1; on appeal, 2 Hag. Ecc. Supp. 61; 27 Digest 339, 3196	52, 60
Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Osler, [1933] A.C. 139; 102 L.J.K.B. 110; 148 L.T. 41; 17 Tax Cas. 381; Digest Supp.	380, 384
Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 756; [1937] 2 K.B. 426; 106 L.J.K.B. 667; 156 L.T. 490; 30 B.W.C.C. 171; Digest Supp.	253, 254, 256, 258, 261
Wheeler v. Wirral Estates, Ltd., [1935] 1 K.B. 294; 104 L.J.K.B. 30; 152 L.T. 111; Digest Supp.	432, 433
Whitby v. Burt Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556	105, 249, 252
White v. Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, Ltd., [1913] 1 Ch. 113; 82 L.J.Ch. 57; 107 L.T. 695; affd., sub nom., Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, Ltd. v. White, 84 L.J.Ch. 938; 110 L.T. 209; 19 Digest 114, 733	791, 794, 796
White v. Richmond Court, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 689; [1944] K.B. 576; 113 L.J.K.B. 497; 171 L.T. 41; 2nd Digest Supp.	224, 226, 227
Whitehall Court, Ltd. v. Ettlinger, [1920] 1 K.B. 680; 89 L.J.K.B. 126; 122 L.T. 540; 30 Digest 467, 1296	141, 143
Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin, [1934] 2 K.B. 35; 103 L.J.K.B. 328; 150 L.T. 354; Digest Supp.	114, 115, 116, 118, 450, 451, 453, 454, 457
Whittall v. Kirby, [1946] 2 All E.R. 552; [1947] K.B. 194; [1947] L.J.R. 234; 175 L.T. 449; 111 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	1069, 1070
Wightman, Re, Bradbury v. Cambridge University, (Apr. 17, 1945), [1947] 2 All E.R. 647, note	423, 424, 425
Wiles v. Maddison, [1943] 1 All E.R. 315; 168 L.T. 250; 107 J.P. 83; 2nd Digest Supp.	811, 812
Wilkes v. Wilkes, [1943] 1 All E.R. 433; [1943] P. 41; 112 L.J.P. 33; 168 L.T. 111; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 923
Wilkinson, Re, Page v. Public Trustee, [1926] Ch. 842; 95 L.J.Ch. 528; 135 L.T. 736; 44 Digest 442, 2678	494, 501, 502
Wilkinson v. Evans, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 407; Har. & Ruth. 552; 35 L.J.C.P. 224; 12 Digest 135, 911	85, 88
Wilkinson v. Verity, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 206; 40 L.J.C.P. 141; sub nom., Williamson v. Verity, 24 L.T. 32; 32 Digest 327, 136	89, 93
Wilcocks, Re, Warwick v. Wilcocks, [1921] 2 Ch. 327; 91 L.J.Ch. 27; 126 L.T. 86; sub nom., Re Wilcocks, Warwick v. Wilcocks, 65 Sol. Jo. 793; 44 Digest 296, 1276 270, 272, 974, 975	262, 265
Williams, Re, Metcalf v. Williams, [1914] 2 Ch. 61; 83 L.J.Ch. 570; 110 L.T. 923; 44 Digest 798, 6540	193, 195
Williams, Re, Williams v. Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12; 66 L.J.Ch. 485; 76 L.T. 600; 45 W.R. 519; 41 Sol. Jo. 452, C.A.; 43 Digest 552, 17	197, 200
Williams v. Davies, (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 464; 1 Dowl. 647; 3 Tyr. 383; 2 L.J.Ex. 102; 40 Digest 422, 429	1042, 1045, 1046, 1048
Williams v. Grundy's Trustees, [1934] 1 K.B. 524; 103 L.J.K.B. 204; 150 L.T. 378; 18 Tax Cas. 271; Digest Supp.	201, 202, 204, 205, 207
Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, [1926] 1 K.B. 497; 95 L.J.K.B. 676; 134 L.T. 459; 18 B.W.C.C. 535; 34 Digest 272, 2310	267, 269
Williams v. Millington, (1788), 1 Hy Bl. 81; 3 Digest 35, 255	68, 69, 72, 74, 76
Willis v. Beauchamp (Earl), [1886] 11 P.D. 59; 55 L.J.P. 17; 54 L.T. 185; 23 Digest 281, 3479	858, 860, 861
Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin, [1948] 2 All E.R. 123; [1948] L.J.R. 1336	640, 647
Wilson v. Wilson, (Archers 1795)	594, 599, 600, 603, 609
Wilson & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. Scottish Insurance Corp., Ltd., and Others, 1948 Session Notes 43	1114, 1125
Winscom v. Winscom & Plowden, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 380; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 45; 10 L.T. 100; 27 Digest 345, 3264	432, 433
Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw, [1932] 2 K.B. 247; 101 L.J.K.B. 370; 147 L.T. 87; 96 J.P. 143; Digest Supp.	412
Wood v. Wood, [1947] 2 All E.R. 95; [1947] P. 103; [1948] L.J.R. 784	461, 462, 463, 469, 471
Woods v. Duncan, Duncan v. Hambrook, Duncan v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 420, n; [1946] A.C. 401; 174 L.T. 286; 2nd Digest Supp.	546, 549
Woolfenden v. Woolfenden, [1947] 2 All E.R. 653; [1948] P. 27	996, 997
Woolgar, Re, [1942] 1 All E.R. 583; [1942] Ch. 318; 111 L.J.Ch. 209; 167 L.T. 60; 2nd Digest Supp.	732, 734
Wormald v. Neale and Wormald (falsely called Neale), (1868), 19 L.T. 93; 27 Digest 48, 274	772, 774, 777
Worsley v. Worsley and Wignall, (1869), L.R. 1 P. & D. 648; 38 L.J.P. & M. 43; 20 L.T. 546; 27 Digest 246, 2174	368, 378
Worsley Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 349	416, 417
Worthing Corp., v. Heather, [1906] 2 Ch. 532; 75 L.J.Ch. 761; 95 L.T. 718; 37 Digest 81, 212	494, 500
Wright, Re, Mott v. Issott, [1907] 1 Ch. 231; 76 L.J.Ch. 89; 95 L.T. 697; 44 Digest 468, 2833	267, 268
Wright v. Dannah, (1809), 2 Camp. 203; 1 Digest 277, 92	189, 192
Wright v. Howell, (1947), 204 L.T. Jo. 299	186, 188
Wright v. Howson, (1888), 4 T.L.R. 386, C.A.; 2 Digest 455, 1024	197, 199, 201
Young v. Kitchin, (1878), 3 Ex.D. 127; 47 L.J.Q.B. 579; 40 Digest 380, 115	493, 494
Zouche (Baroness), Re, Dugdale v. Zouche (Baroness), [1919] 2 Ch. 178; 88 L.J.Ch. 274; 121 L.T. 82; 44 Digest 712, 5563

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Marriage Act, 1823 (c. 76), ss. 7, 22	731
Stage Carriages Act, 1832 (c. 120), s. 48	556
Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 78	1064
Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 11	908
—, s. 21	1052
Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1	898
Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), s. 32	834
Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 74	736
London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (c. 33), ss. 7, 17 (2)	1065
Naval Prize Act, 1864 (c. 25), s. 16	679
Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), s. 44	782
Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (c. 88), ss. 1, 7	869
Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 186	1058
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75) s. 11	771
—, ss. 12, 24	573
—, s. 17	1011
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 7	760
Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925	712
Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1)	85, 267
—, ss. 7, 14 (2), 20	1037
—, s. 58 (2)	99
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 1	622
Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), s. 5 (b)	712
—, ss. 5 (c), 9	995
Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (c. 17), s. 1 (1)	1069
Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (c. 29), s. 29 (1) (1A) (as amended to 1946)	698
Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 71	581
Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (c. 28), s. 11	853
Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15	736
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (c)	533
—, ss. 30 (2), 37 (1)	216
Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), sched. I, r. 3	763
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 125 (1)	1041
—, sched. A, No. III, r. 3	1
—, sched. D, case I	379
—, sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)	367, 378
Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (c. 58), s. 5 (2)	908
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 2 (3)	658
—, s. 5 (4)	11
—, s. 9 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I)	633
—, s. 12 (2), proviso (i)	627
—, s. 10 (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I)	76
—, s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. I)	224, 232
—, s. 12 (1) (g)	845
—, s. 12 (2)	189, 875
—, s. 12 (2) (i) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), sched. I)	9, 181
—, s. 12 (3)	674
—, s. 17 (2)	690
Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), ss. 3 (b), 33 (3)	79
Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 14 (1) (2)	1076
—, s. 21	825
Rent Restrictions (Notices of Increase) Act, 1923 (c. 13), s. 1 (1)	845
Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (c. 16), s. 8 (1), s. 76	815
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1)	627, 875
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 28 (1)	209
—, s. 40	1050
Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), ss. 10 (1), Class C (iv), 13 (2)	871
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 35	492
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 1	413
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 27	297
—, ss. 27 (1), 190 (3)	285
—, s. 31 (1) (e)	545
—, s. 192	771, 778
—, s. 198	856, 1113
Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 2 (2)	98
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1)	201
—, s. 9 (3) (i), 43 (1) (c) (d)	252
—, sched. I, para. 4	172
Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), s. 23 (1)	588
—, s. 37 (2) (b)	552
Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 30, proviso (ii)	653, 1095
Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29), s. 8 (3)	727
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), 5 (1) (2) and (3) (b) (i)	450
—, ss. 4 (1), 5 (1), (3) (b) (i), (iv)	113
—, ss. 4 (1) proviso (b), 5 (1), 8 (1)	19
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 2 (2)	1060
Agricultural Rates Act, 1929 (c. 26), s. 1 (1)	1060
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 7 (4)	83
—, s. 26	1076
—, s. 35 (1) (2)	1062, 1069
—, s. 72 (1)	306
Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933 (c. 13), s. 4 (1) (a) (iv)	576
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16	439

	PAGE
—, s. 16 (1)	95
—, sched. I, para. (g)	160
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 29, sched. II, pt. III, paras. 18, 34 (a), (c), (d)	503
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (1), (2) (c)	729
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 75 (1)	658
Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 9 (1), 188 (4)	13
—, ss. 83 (1), 156 (1) (a)	898
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 6 (2)	16
—, s. 7 (1) (a)	147, 151
—, s. 7 (1) (d), proviso (ii)	408
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), ss. 13 (1), 14 (1)	386
—, s. 26 (1)	249
—, s. 60	104
—, s. 151 (1) (a) (c), (xiii), (6)	665
Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), ss. 8 (5) (c), 40 (1), (3)	610
Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (i) (b), (3), (4)	461
—, s. 1 (1) (3)	987
—, s. 1 (3)	294, 489
Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (c. 45)	179
—, ss. 1 (7), 2 (1)	426
—, s. 2 (1)	995
Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 38 (3), (4)	419
—, s. 41 (4) (a) (ii)	825
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 3 (1)	1054
—, ss. 70 (1), (2), 81 (1)	818
—, s. 81 (1)	1056
Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 2 (4)	11
—, ss. 3, 26 (a), (b)	89
—, s. 20	318
Finance Act, 1939 (c. 41), s. 13 (3)	825
Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 62), s. 7	550
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (2) (b)	181
—, s. 7	439
Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (1) (b) (2) (3)	223
Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 2 (1) (b)	238
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 12 (3)	1071
—, s. 14 (1)	367, 378
—, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1)	1079
—, sched. VII, pt. I, para. 6 (1) (2)	514
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), ss. 50 (1), 55 (2)	756
—, sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a)	367
Goods and Services (Price Control) Act, 1941 (c. 31), s. 1, 20 (4) (a)	810
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1)	168, 172
War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 6 (2)	444
Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 5 (2), sched. I, para. 3	119
Finance Act, 1944 (c. 23), s. 11 (1)	1058
Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), s. 87 (1) (2)	568
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 7	528
Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 25 (1)	593
Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 49	932
Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (c. 44), ss. 13, 23 (2) (b)	585
Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), ss. 2 (1), 3 (1), 65 (1)	306
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 101	1105
—, s. 209	638
Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 33 (2)	766
Great Orme Tramways Act, 1898 (c. xxvii), s. 57 (1)	782
City of London (Tithes) Act, 1947 (cxxx), s. 16 (1)	1018
Assam Agricultural Income Tax Act (No. IX of 1939), s. 3	395
R.S.C., Ord. 1A, r. 1, Ord. 54A, r. 1A, Ord. 55, r. 3, Ord. 55, r. 5	585
—, Ord. 14	196
—, Ord. 16, r. 2	144, 482
—, Ord. 16, r. 28 (1)	61
—, Ord. 19, r. 22	412
—, Ord. 31, r. 21	299
—, Ord. 41B, r. 3	576
—, Ord. 42, r. 23 (a)	402
—, Ord. 54, r. 22A (1) (a), (2)	1011
—, Ord. 54F, rr. 1, 14	179
—, Ord. 54F, r. 14	635
—, Ord. 55, rr. 5A, 5B	448
—, Ord. 58, r. 4	1021
—, Ord. 58, r. 15	297
County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 47, r. 8 (2)	849
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36	297, 545
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), r. 8 (2)	64
—, rr. 59, 81, 82	1011
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927 (as amended)), reg. 51 (1), (5)	550
—, reg. 55AB (4) (a)	81
—, (as amended) reg. 56A (2), (6)	558
—, (as amended by S.R. & O., 1941, Nos. 1596 and 2011, 1945, No. 502), reg. 56A (2), (6), (8)	312
—, reg. 62 (4A)	101
—, (as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452, and S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1622), reg. 68CB (1), (6)	165
—, (as amended), reg. 78 (5)	509
Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), regs. 12 (c), 37, 45	238
—, Duties, para. (d); reg. 42	104
Territorial Army Regulations, 1936 (S.R. & O., 1936, No. 1166), reg. 918	432
Defence (Patents, Trade Marks, etc.) Regulations, 1941 (S.R. & O., 1941, No. 1780), reg. 3 (5)	698
General Footwear (Maximum Prices and Charges) Order, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 1413) (as amended), arts. 1, 5	810
Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931 (S.R. & O., 1931, No. 342), para. 9 (2) (a)	252
Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 885), para. 9 (3)	252

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Ability	914
Able	914
Accident	252
Act of bankruptcy	533
Action based on fraud	89
All my bloodstock	990
Any event whereby any [person] entitled to any life interest would if such life interest belonged to him absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof	288
Apparent	1052
Article	665
Articles of vertu	492
As well the capital as the income . . . with such future or other trusts . . . and such provisions for their respective advancement . . . at the discretion of . . . my trustees	657
Attendance	875
Burden or liability	658
Carrying on business	533
Children	882
Decision	172
Discovers	1041
Driving	83
Dwelling-house	439
Enemy	288
Equally between daughters of S. de V. and to E.M.W.	961
Error of court at hearing	297
Fit for human habitation	13
For benefit of church and parish	842
Further legacy . . . duty	932
General fund	429
Have you ever committed adultery ?	856
If in the opinion of my trustees she shall have ceased permanently to reside therein	492
If the surveyor discovers . . . that a person chargeable . . . has been undercharged	1041
In the event of my grandson not marrying	303
Income arising under a settlement	825
Income received from investment	514
Indictable offence	1013
Information supplied	461
Injuring property of owner	556
Insanitary	13
Investments	906, 1079
Loose Equipment	1076
Motor-cars which shall be ordered for any dwelling-house	492
No benefit from the offence	81
Non-accidental injury	79
Notional accident	252
Passing	622
Perishing	1036
Person engaged in whole-time employment	160
Person interested	204, 460, 489, 987
Place	665
Plying for hire	1065
Previously to my death	971
Provided she is living with my sister at the time of my sister's death	156
Purchaser able and willing to complete	929
Purported exercise of belligerent rights	679
Rent	224
Required	450
Residence	492
Right of action concealed by fraud	89
Roadworthiness	127
Securities for money	906
Separate dwelling	95, 189
Special reasons	727, 1062, 1069
Special risks	79
Substantial detriment to livelihood	1018
Substantial part of whole rent	875
Surviving	927
Tenant	875
Their servants or agents	294
Thing in action	573
To be held by him and by his eldest son on his decease and to descend to the eldest son of such eldest son and so on to the eldest son of his descendants and I request my son to do all in his power by his will or otherwise to give effect to this my wish	193
To be used otherwise than as offices for the purpose of their business	40
To my brothers A. and B. also C. and D.—equally	131
To my son 10,000 preference shares	270
To the shares of the daughters of mine who shall at the time of the death of such daughter not have been married	955
To the wife of my grandson	303
Total capital of company actually invested in undertaking at time of purchase	782
Value to the tenant	875
Wanton and furious driving	556
With all faults and imperfections	724
Works reasonably executed for temporarily meeting the circumstances created by the damage	444
700	274

CORRIGENDA

[1948] Vol. 1.

P. 864. MINISTER OF PENSIONS v. HIGHAM. Counsel: for "Crispin" read "Wellwood." P. 866. Solicitors: for "Culross & Trelawny" read "Neil Maclean & Co."

[1948] Vol. 2.

P. 127. WEBSTER v. HIGGIN. Line D.7: for "allowed" read "dismissed." P. 130. Solicitors: for "I. Goldman & Son" read "Lieberman, Leigh & Co."

P. 223. Re THOMPSON (deceased). Counsel: for "R. L. Megarry" read "R. E. Megarry."

P. 312. BOSTEL BROS., LTD. v. HURLOCK. Line D.4: for "defendants" read "plaintiffs."

P. 474. HAMS v. DARBY. The dates of hearing were: June 29, 30, July 1, 2.

P. 486. MOATE v. MOATE. Counsel: for "T. R. Waters" read "Montague Waters."

P. 548. EVERITT v. EVERITT. Line F.2: for "an appeal a motion" read "an appeal on motion."

P. 551. CARLISH v. EAST HAM CORPN. Solicitors: for "Pritchard, Englefield & Co." read "Sharpe Pritchard & Co."

P. 674. COX v. S. CUTLER & SONS, LTD. For solicitors as printed read "Carpenters (for the contractors); J. Bingham & Co. (for the gas company); Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the plaintiff)."

P. 761. CLIFF v. CLIFF. Line B.6: After "in open court" insert: "The word 'thereby' in s. 7 means that the declaration must be made at the same time as the decree nisi or at the same time as the decree absolute. This was not done in the present case."

P. 921. HOPES v. HOPES. The appearances of counsel should read: "William Temple for the wife. Norman Black and Miss A. F. Dixon for the husband." P. 927. Solicitors: for "husband" read "wife," for "wife" read "husband."

P. 933. Re SHEPHERD. Counsel for the plaintiff: for "J. A. Wolfe" read "Jackson Wolfe."

P. 1041. HORN v. MINISTER OF FOOD. Solicitors engaged were: "Metcalfe, Copeman & Pettefar (for the seller); Treasury Solicitor (for the buyer)."

P. 1108. WILLIAM HILL (Park Lane) LTD. v. ROSE. Counsel for the defendant were "Gallop, K.C. and S. W. Magnus" and not as printed.

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE LAW TIMES REPORTS

RUSSELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. SCOTT.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord Normand and Lord Oaksey), April 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, May 13, 1948.]

Income Tax—Property in lands—Annual value—Sand pit—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. A, No. III, r. 3.

The owner of the freehold of a farm discovered sand in considerable depth under a small portion of the surface of his farm and allowed various contractors to dig the sand and take it away at a price varying with the quality of the sand. A sand-pit was thus formed, a road being constructed to it by one of the contractors from the county road, and the pit was worked continuously for three years until it was practically exhausted. A man was employed to record the tonnage of sand taken, to supervise the pit generally, and to direct the various contractors to the particular part of the pit where each should work, and there was a regular system for rendering accounts, for checking them, and for receiving payments.

HELD: the owner was carrying on "a concern" in connection with the sandpit, but it was not "a concern of the like nature" to those enumerated in r. 3 of No. III of sched. A to the Income Tax Act, 1918, and, therefore, income tax should be charged on the annual value of the farm as a whole and not be separately charged by reference to the profits on sales of sand made by the owner in the preceding year.

Mosley v. Wimpey (George) & Co., Ltd. ([1945] 1 All E.R. 674; 173 L.T. 24), overruled.

Edmonds v. Eastwood (1858) (2 H. & N. 811; 30 L.T. (O.S.) 304), approved.

[AS TO CONCERNS WITHIN SCHED. A, No. III, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 138-149, paras. 279-308; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 8, 9, Nos. 28-43.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Mosley v. Wimpey (George) & Co., Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 674; 173 L.T. 24; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Surveyor of Taxes, (1889) 17 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 154; sub nom., Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Kinmont, 2 Tax Cas. 516; 28 Digest 8, r.
- (3) Edmonds v. Eastwood, (1858), 2 H. & N. 811; 27 L.J.Ex. 209; 22 J.P. 275; sub nom., Edmunds v. Eastwood, 30 L.T.O.S. 304; 28 Digest 9, 42.
- (4) Heat v. Gill, (1872), 7 Ch. App. 699; 41 L.J.Ch. 761; 27 L.T. 291; 28 Digest 410, 354.
- (5) Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd.; Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd., [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the Crown from an order of the Court of Appeal of Northern Ireland (ANDREWS, C.J., BABINGTON and PORTER, L.JJ.).

The Special Commissioners of Income Tax held that the taxpayer was carrying on, in connection with a sand-pit discovered on his land, "a concern of the like nature" with those enumerated in r. 3 of No. III of sched. A to the Income Tax Act, 1918. On appeal by way of Case Stated to the King's Bench Division of Northern Ireland, BLACK, J., reversed the view of the commissioners. The Court of Appeal of Northern Ireland, by a majority, confirmed the commissioners' view that the taxpayer was conducting "a concern," but unanimously rejected the conclusion that it was a "concern of the like nature." On an appeal by the Crown, the House of Lords now affirm both conclusions of the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

Attorney-General for Northern Ireland (L. E. Curran, K.C.) (of the Bar of Northern Ireland), W. W. B. Topping, K.C. (of the Bar of Northern Ireland), R. P. Hills and F. A. L. Harrison (of the Bar of Northern Ireland) for the Crown.

Cyril King, K.C., W. F. McCoy, K.C. (of the Bar of Northern Ireland) and H. A. McVeigh (of the Bar of Northern Ireland) for the taxpayer.

The House took time for consideration.

May 13. VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, the question in this appeal is raised by a Case stated by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts for the opinion of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland. The taxpayer is the owner in fee simple of a farm of some twenty-five acres in the county of Londonderry. It was discovered that, under a portion of the surface of this farm extending to about one acre, sand existed in considerable depth and the taxpayer allowed various persons to come on his land, dig sand, and take it away, with the result that a sand-pit was formed which was regularly and continuously worked from January, 1941, until about October, 1944, by which time the pit was practically exhausted. The sand was of different qualities and the taxpayer's charges varied from between 6d. to 1s. per ton according to the quality of the sand gotten. The hours of working at the pit were from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily. A road to the sand-pit from the county road was, with the taxpayer's approval, made by a Mr. Moore who was the earliest and biggest contractor. The demand for this sand principally arose in connection with the construction of aerodromes in Northern Ireland. The sand was excavated by the various contractors' men by shovelling, and was loaded into lorries for removal. The taxpayer employed a man to record the tonnage of sand taken in each case, and this employee supervised the pit generally and directed the various contractors to the particular part of the face of the pit where each should work. There was a regular system for rendering accounts, for checking them, and for receiving payments. The profits made by the taxpayer from the disposal of sand from this sand-pit amounted to £150 in 1940-41, £1,250 in 1941-42 and £3,750 in 1942-43.

The Revenue contends that the taxpayer, in connection with this sand-pit, was carrying on a "concern of the like nature" within the meaning of those words in No. III, r. 3 of the Rules Applicable to sched. A. If so, income tax would be separately charged by reference to the profits made by him in the preceding year. The taxpayer, on the other hand, argues that what he was doing in connection with this sand-pit did not amount to the carrying on of a "concern" at all, and that, even if it did, it was not a "concern of the like nature" within the meaning of r. 3. If this contention prevails, income tax would be charged on the annual value of the farm as a whole, calculated as directed for Ireland by s. 187 of the Income Tax Act, 1918. The commissioners decided against the taxpayer on both points, but stated a Case which admirably sets out the facts found by them, and formulates their decision thus:

We find that the sales of sand by the [taxpayer], which amounted to more than 100,000 tons and extended over three years, were by way of trade, and that they were not merely casual and occasional but constituted a series of transactions carried out in pursuance of a regular method, and we arrive at the conclusion that the sandpit was a "concern" carried on by the appellant. Further, following the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (1) we hold that it was a "concern of a like nature" with those enumerated in r. 3 of No. III of sched. A. We, accordingly, confirm the assessments appealed against in principle and leave the figures to be agreed between the parties.

When the matter came on appeal before BLACK, J., that learned judge considered himself to be bound by the views expressed in an earlier stage of the same controversy by the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland, and consequently reversed the view of the commissioners. In the Court of Appeal ANDREWS,

C.J., confirmed the commissioners' view that the taxpayer was conducting a "concern," but rejected the commissioners' other conclusion that it was a "concern of the like nature." BABINGTON, L.J., considered the Crown's contention to be wrong on both points, saying as regards the first that he could find no evidence to justify the finding of the commissioners that the taxpayer carried on any "concern" or did anything more than convert his sand into money. PORTER, L.J., agreed with the view that there was no "concern of the like nature" being carried on by the taxpayer, and thus the Court of Appeal was unanimous in holding that the Revenue's claim failed. From this decision an appeal is now brought to this House.

To reach a correct conclusion in this difficult matter it is necessary to examine the language of parts of sched. A with much care. It is first to be observed that No. I is the general rule to which No. III, like No. II, is an exception. There is nothing, therefore, in the scheme of the schedule to require that No. III should be given a wider interpretation than its terms on their natural construction require. All that will happen when tax under sched. A is charged "in respect of the property in all lands, tenements, hereditaments and heritages in the United Kingdom" is that, if the case does not fall within either of the rules which constitute exceptions, it will fall under the general rule No. I and the tax will be calculated on annual value as therein defined. No. III is headed, "Rules for estimating the annual value of certain other lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages which are not to be charged according to the preceding general rule" and provides as follows:

1. In the case of quarries of stone, slate, limestone, or chalk, the annual value shall be understood to be the profits of the preceding year. 2. In the case of mines of coal, tin, lead, copper, mundic, iron, and other mines, the annual value shall be understood to be the average amount for one year of the profits of the five preceding years. 3. In the case of ironworks, gasworks, salt springs or works, alum mines or works, waterworks, streams of water, canals, inland navigations, docks, drains or levels, fishings, rights of markets and fairs, tolls, railways and other ways, bridges, ferries, and other concerns of the like nature having profits from or arising out of any lands, tenements, hereditaments or heritages, the annual value shall be understood to be the profits of the preceding year. 4. Tax under the above rules shall be assessed and charged on the person or body of persons carrying on the concern, or on the agents or other officers who have the direction or management of the concern or receive the profits thereof.

Section 28 of the Finance Act, 1926, transferred the calculation of tax in respect of properties included in No. III to Case I of sched. D, and, consequently, the measure is now the profits of the preceding year in r. 2 as well as in rr. 1 and 3.

I agree with ANDREWS, C.J., that what the taxpayer was doing in connection with his sand-pit amounted to the carrying on of a "concern." The question is not, of course, (as the language of the commissioners, if strictly read, might seem to imply) whether the sand-pit was itself a "concern," but whether the taxpayer's activities in connection with it amounted to the carrying on of a "concern," and this, I think, is what the commissioners really meant by their finding. "Concern" is a very wide word, and appears to imply an adequate degree of business organisation for the purpose of carrying on the undertaking, but the amount of organisation needed must depend on the character of the "concern" itself. It will be noted from the language of r. 4 that all the various enterprises in rr. 1, 2 and 3 are spoken of as "concerns" and it is obvious that the amount of organisation needed for a toll or for streams of water would be vastly less than for a mine of coal or for gasworks. The language of r. 4 implies that in order to amount to a "concern" there must be direction or management as well as the receipt of profits. Here the facts found by the commissioners show that there was a regular system of direction and management sufficient for the exploiting of the sand-pit by its owner, and the commissioners had material before them on which they could properly arrive at the conclusion of fact that the taxpayer was carrying on a "concern." Such a conclusion must be accepted unless there were no facts to support it, and, in my opinion, the conclusion can be supported by the material in the Case. I should myself draw the same conclusion.

All this, however, will not assist the Revenue unless the conclusion is also reached that the "concern" was "a concern of the like nature" within the meaning of r. 3. In view of the heterogeneous list of specific undertakings which precedes this phrase, it is a matter of the greatest difficulty to determine whether the phrase can properly include a sand-pit. Indeed, if a collection of items is heterogeneous, it almost seems a conflict in words to say that they belong to the same genus, but there the words are in the statute, and, if possible, the phrase must be given some meaning. The arguments before the House have sought an interpretation by pursuing two alternative methods. One method is to search for some common feature in the specific items regarded as a single collection. The other method is to treat the phrase as though it ran, "other concerns of the like nature to any one of the above." The two contrasted methods are illustrated in the judgments of SCOTT, L.J., and DU PARCQ, L.J., in Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (1), where the Court of Appeal held that the undertaking of working a gravel-pit by a company which had acquired the exclusive right to do so fell within the words now under examination. In that case SCOTT, L.J., took the view that the list of specific undertakings in r. 3 constituted a single genus because they all involve a special or intensive use of the land with a view to its exploitation for commercial profit as distinguished from what he regarded as the ordinary use of land for agricultural purposes (including forestry) or for the site of buildings and the like. DU PARCQ, L.J., on the other hand, was prepared to hold that a gravel-pit could be regarded as analagous to certain items in the list, viz., "salt works" or "alum works," as these are instances in which profits are made by commercially dealing with mineral deposits on or under the land.

The phrase "other concerns of the like nature" following a whole list of concerns which, with some more recent additions, constituted the specific subject-matters of what is now r. 3 of No. III first appears in the Income Tax Act, 1806, s. 74. "Gas-works" and "railways" were added to the list by the Act of 1842. Counsel for the taxpayer, in resisting the contention that a sand-pit could be included as ejusdem generis with what went before, pointed out that in nearly all of the specific cases in r. 3 the ground itself is substantially preserved while the concern is being carried on and there is no abstraction of the land but only a special use of it, whereas in rr. 1 and 2 the profit is made by abstraction of a wasting asset. Hence, he argued, a concern which involves the abstraction and ultimate exhaustion of sand or gravel could not be within r. 3. Moreover, as such concerns as these were neither any of the quarries specified in r. 1 nor mines dealt with in r. 2, it followed that the tax under sched. A of the concern of carrying on a sand-pit did not depend on profits, but fell within the general rule, No. 1. One difficulty in the way of this argument is that an alum mine would, apparently, involve substantial extraction. Moreover, this view of the matter would not only involve dissent from the Court of Appeal's decision in Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (1), but also would be inconsistent with views expressed as to the scope of r. 3 in Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Kinnmont (2). This last case deserves careful consideration in connection with the present matter, but it is not necessary in this appeal to reach a conclusion whether it is correctly decided or not.

The Crown's contention in the present case involves the drawing of a distinction between the "ordinary" and the "extraordinary" use of land, and by the latter is meant some intensive exploitation of the surface or subsoil by means of which a profit is derived which is likely to vary from year to year, as distinguished from the "normal" user of the land, of which its use for agriculture or forestry or for the site of buildings can be regarded as examples. In the latter case the assessment is by reference to annual value as defined in r. I and such annual value is not likely to vary each year. On this view of the matter No. III applies where the land is specially exploited as distinguished from being normally used. It is suggested that such a contrast, though difficult to work out exactly, corresponds with the common sense of the matter and with the general scheme of income tax, for, although the owner of land thus specially exploited was originally dealt with under sched. A, because his income was primarily derived from his property either in or under the land, it was still desirable to draw a distinction between the proprietor who made a valuable profit by extraordinary use and the proprietor in whose case the use to which the land was put was "normal." Whatever view may be taken of this contention, it does not, to my mind, decide the present issue in favour of the Revenue. The difficulty of classifying the exploitation of sand-pits or gravel-pits as extraordinary or abnormal uses of land still persists. The digging and carrying away of sand or of gravel have been, I apprehend, one of the normal uses of suitable areas of land from the earliest times. The very fact that a concern depending on a sand-pit requires so little organisation makes me doubt whether an enterprise of this sort can properly be thrown into the "extraordinary" class. If, in the contemplation of the legislature, the exploitation of sand-pits or gravel-pits was an example of the special cases included in r. 3 of No. III, it is difficult to imagine why the rule did not specifically mention so obvious and so common an example. The same consideration applies to clay for making bricks, and in Edmonds v. Eastwood (3) a very strong Court of Exchequer held that a brickfield was not within No. III. POLLOCK, C.B., WATSON, B., CHANNELL, B., and MARTIN, B., all took the view that the getting of such material from land would not bring into play the special rule. It does not appear that this decision was brought to the attention of the Court of Appeal in Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co. (1), nor is there any reference to it in the judgments delivered in that case. It is possible that it may have been overlooked because Edmonds v. Eastwood (3) is not a revenue case, but the importance of what the Court of Exchequer then laid down cannot be minimised.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the concern of working a sand-pit, such as is found to exist in this case, does not fall within the concerns covered by r. 3 of No. III and that the whole farm ought, as the Court of Appeal in Ireland held, to be assessed under the general rule. This conclusion involves the overruling of the ratio decidendi of Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co. (1). We were informed that concerns for working china-clay have been customarily assessed under r. 3 of No. III, and, in view of the much greater elaboration of that process, which involves operations akin to mining (see the account given in Hext v. Gill (4) (7 Ch. App. 699, 703)), the present decision does not necessarily affect that practice. I must add that the language of the rule is so obscure and so difficult to expound with confidence that—without seeking to apply any different principle of construction to a revenue Act than would be proper in the case of legislation of a different kind—I feel that the taxpayer is entitled to demand that his liability to a higher charge should be made out with reasonable clearness before he is adversely affected. In the present instance, this reasonable clearness is wanting. I move that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, I concur.

LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, the relevant facts of this case have been so fully stated that I need not repeat them, nor should I think it necessary to add anything on the general questions of law that arise but for the importance of the case and the fact that it is necessary to consider, and, in effect, overrule, the decision of the Court of Appeal in England in Mosley v. George Wimpey & Co., Ltd. (1). The two questions of law, which are, in truth, two branches of one question, are (1) whether that which the taxpayer did in relation to a sand-pit forming part of his farm at Glebe in the county of Londonderry was the carrying on of a "concern" and (2) if so, whether it was a "concern of the like nature having profits from or arising out of any lands" within the meaning of r. 3 of No. III of sched. A to the Income Tax Act, 1918. On the first question I will add nothing to what has been said by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack. It is on the second question that I wish to make some observations.

My Lords, there is a maxim of income tax law which, though it may sometimes be over-stressed, yet ought not to be forgotten. It is that the subject is not to be taxed unless the words of the taxing statute unambiguously impose the tax on him. It is necessary that this maxim should on occasion be re-asserted and this is such an occasion. Here it is sought to tax the owner and occupier of land in respect of the profits made by him from the sale of sand on the footing that, in effecting those sales, he is carrying on a concern which is of the like nature to "ironworks, gasworks, salt springs or works, alum mines or works, waterworks, streams of water, canals, inland navigation, docks, drains or levels, fishings, rights of markets and fairs, tolls, railways and other ways, bridges, and ferries." I need go no further into the history of this catalogue than to say that with some additions it goes back for nearly 150 years.

During the whole of that time there can have been no more familiar feature of the landscape than pits of sand or gravel or clay, and I cannot doubt that during that time and before it the owners of such pits have been accustomed, in greater or less degree, to exploit them, not only for their own use, but by profitable sales. Yet it is suggested that the legislature, while expressly including in the catalogue such comparatively rare concerns as alum mines or works and salt springs or works, yet left to the precarious embrace of the expression "other concerns of the like nature" the common place operations which it is now sought to tax. Nor does the matter rest there, for the catalogue which I have recited follows immediately after r. 1, which deals with quarries of stone, slate, limestone, or chalk, and r. 2 which deals with mines of coal, tin, lead, copper, mundic, and other mines. Here surely would be the appropriate setting in which, had the legislature so intended, pits of sand or gravel or clay should eo nomine have been placed or included by words of general description. I cannot bring myself to suppose that the legislature either overlooked what almost obtrudes itself on the eye of any observer, or, observing it, deliberately refrained either from mentioning it or from putting it in its proper place.

I am brought back, then, to the maxim that I have mentioned. For it appears to me that here is a case in which the subject is entitled to say that the words of the section under which it is sought to tax him do not do so with the clarity which the subject-matter demands. What I have said applies equally to gravel-pits and to sand-pits, and it follows that, in my view, Mosley's case (1) was wrongly decided. The argument of the learned ATTORNEY-GENERAL was properly founded on that decision. I must, therefore, observe on it that, while SCOTT, L.J., rested his judgment on the view that "the generic words should . . . be interpreted widely and as disclosing an express intention of Parliament to sweep into the net every concern of the general character I have endeavoured to describe above," DU PARCQ, L.J., disclaimed this view and found in a sand-pit a concern of a like nature to two of the particular concerns included in the catalogue, viz., salt works and alum mines. Your Lordships have not the advantage of knowing the opinion of UTHWATT, J., on this point. My Lords, I agree with DU PARCQ, L.J., in thinking that the general proposition of SCOTT, L.J., cannot be sustained. In the first place, I think with great respect that he ignores that No. III in sched. A comprises exceptions to the general rule which is to be found in No. I. What is not covered by the language of No. III falls within No. I if it is within sched. A at all, and does not fall within the other exceptions, and there is no need to give to No. III a wider meaning than, construed as a taxing statute, it strictly requires. Secondly, I cannot accept what I understand to be the view of SCOTT, L.J., as to the generic conception of the specified concerns, viz., that they have the common feature of a variable economic yield which makes the rack rent an untrue or impracticable measure of annual value and a dissimilarity to the "normal" use of land. It is not, I think, open to the House after the decision in Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. (5) to say that if a "concern" satisfies these two conditions it must necessarily fall within r. 3 of No. III. Nor, apart from that decision, should I be prepared to accept such a proposition. For, if these two conditions constituted the difference between the cases falling within No. I and No. III, I see no necessity for segregating the items in r. 1 from those in r. 3, nor, indeed, for any catalogue at all. Nor, my Lords, can I accept the view expressed by DU PARCQ, L.J., that a gravel-pit is a concern of like nature to alum mines or salt springs and therefore within r. 3. I would doubt whether, where a list is followed by such general words as "concerns of the like nature," it is proper to regard as covered by those words concerns which have a likeness to one or two of the items but do not exhibit a characteristic common to them all. But, however, this may be, I cannot find a sufficient likeness to the items chosen by DU PARCQ, L.J., to justify the inclusion of concerns which, if they had been intended to be included, would surely themselves have been selected as examples. In this connection I refer to my earlier observations and reinforce them by reference to Edmonds v. Eastwood (3), which appears not to have been called to the attention of the Court of Appeal in Mosley's case (1). In that case, which was decided 90 years ago and has never, so far as I am aware, been criticised, POLLOCK, C.B., used these words (2 H. & N. 811, 818):

I entertain considerable doubt—indeed more than a doubt—whether brickfields are to be treated as coal mines or salt works, or any of those matters specifically mentioned in the Rules to Schedule (A) No. III . . . My opinion is that the case of a brickfield was not intended to be included within No. III. With the public notoriety that property of that description exists to a great extent, especially in the neighbourhood of London, it seems almost impossible, if it was intended to include it, that it should not have been inserted by name in the same category as coal mines or salt works.

In this view WATSON, B., expressly concurred. MARTIN, B., observed that he concurred with the Lord Chief Baron that there was considerable doubt whether this was so—i.e., whether a brickfield fell within r. 3 of No. III. He appears to have underestimated the force of the Lord Chief Baron's conviction. CHANNELL, J., doubted whether the case fell within No. I or No. III.

My Lords, I do not think that your Lordships would be justified in disregarding these expressions which have gone so long unchallenged on the meaning and effect of a taxing statute, even if they did not wholly commend themselves, but for myself there is in them not only the force of almost venerable authority but also compelling reason. I would dismiss this appeal accordingly.

I must finally say a few words about the so-called cemetery cases which begin with the Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Kinmont (2). Your Lordships are not, I think, called on to review the correctness of these decisions. In the cited case the LORD PRESIDENT (INGLIS), without giving any further reason, said (2 Tax Cas. 516, 528) that it appeared to him that the cemetery company there under consideration fell "very fairly within the words 'other concerns of the like nature' as occurring in the rule." LORD SHAND (ibid.) said that the true solution of the question was to be found in the fact that "all of these different concerns relate to companies which, having purchased or acquired land, remain in the occupation of that land themselves, and are using it for the purpose of some trade or business whereby they acquire profits." I do not think that the learned judge is here laying any stress on companies as distinguished from natural persons, but I would respectfully suggest that, if he meant that all companies or persons, which satisfy the test that he indicates, at once come within r. 3 of No. III, the proposition is far too wide. It may well be that, if the matter came to be argued before your Lordships, there would be found some common characteristic which would justify the inclusion of cemetery companies in the rule. Remembering the high authority of the LORD PRESIDENT (INGLIS) I am not disposed without argument to decide the contrary, but in this case I do not feel called upon either to attempt a definition of the class which r. 3 embraces or to do more than reject the contention of the Inland Revenue that they have established that a sand-pit is a "concern of the like nature" to the concerns enumerated in r. 3 of No. III or to any one or more of them.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, I concur in the two speeches which have been delivered by my noble and learned friends.

LORD OAKSEY : My Lords, I agree that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland is right and should be affirmed. The question is whether the taxpayer in the way in which he dealt with a sand-pit on his farm was carrying on a concern of the like nature with the concerns referred to in r. 3 of No. III of sched. A. I agree with your Lordships that there was evidence on which the commissioners could find that the taxpayer was carrying on a concern. The question remains whether it was a concern of a like nature to the other concerns mentioned in r. 3. On this question I agree with the observations of my noble friend LORD SIMONDS on the maxim of income tax law that the subject is not taxed unless the words of the taxing statute unambiguously impose the tax on him.

It has been argued by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL for Northern Ireland that No. III of sched. A should be construed to include all concerns connected with land which are in their nature commercial and which produce varying profits, that the characteristic suggested by the taxpayer's counsel, namely, extraction of part of the soil, is inconsistent with the inclusion of salt springs and alum mines in r. 3, and further is unconnected with any reason for treating such concerns differently from any other concern connected with the land. It was also suggested that No. I dealt with the agricultural uses of land and No. III with all other uses. I am unable to accept these arguments. I do not think the interpretation of such provisions as sched. A, Nos. I and III, can be approached in this general way. It may be that it would have been perfectly reasonable to tax every profit arising from land, other than agricultural profit, in a different way from agricultural profit, but it is necessary to consider the words used and the frame of the schedule.

Schedule A provides by No. I :

General rule for estimating the annual value of lands, tenements, hereditaments or heritages. In the case of all lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages capable of actual occupation, of whatever nature, and for whatever purpose occupied or enjoyed, and of whatever value (except the properties mentioned in No. II and No. III of this schedule), the annual value shall be understood to be :—(1) the amount of the rent . . .

No. III is one of the exceptions and everything not dealt with in the exceptions must fall within the general provisions of No. I. No. I is not confined to agricultural uses of land, but refers to all uses except those in Nos. II and III. No. III, r. 1, I think, deals with quarries and r. 2 with mines exhaustively, with the single exception of alum mines, and it is conceded that sand-pits are not included in rr. 1 or 2. Now the digging of sand, gravel, clay or peat are, and have been from time immemorial, ordinary and well-known uses of land, and it is, in my view, impossible to construe r. 3, which deals expressly with a variety of subjects, none of which bears anything like such a close resemblance to digging for sand as do the subjects dealt with expressly in r. 1, as including sand-pits merely because alum mines are included in r. 3.

The reason why such subjects as sand-pits were omitted from the list in No. III (though it is not for the court to find a reason) was, I imagine, because the concern of using a sand-pit or the like was considered to be an ordinary use of land. In any event sand-pits are not expressly referred to in No. III and to bring them in under such words as "other concerns of the like nature" in r. 3 appears to me to be an unjustifiable extension of general words in an exception. For my own part, I am not at present prepared to hold that it is necessary to find a category to which all the subjects enumerated in r. 3 belong and that concerns of a like nature must fall within that category, but, in my opinion, digging sand is not of a like nature to any of the enumerated subjects, having regard to the context of rr. 1 and 2 in which r. 3 occurs. Apart from these reasons of construction, I think it is not unimportant that as long ago as 1859 in Edmonds v. Eastwood (3) POLLOCK, C.B., and BARONS MARTIN and WATSON all expressed the view that No. III did not include digging for clay. This case does not appear to have been cited to the Court of Appeal in England in Wimpey v. Mosley (1), where it was held that the extraction of gravel for commercial purposes was a concern within No. III. For the reasons which I have given, that case must, in my opinion, be over-ruled. I cannot agree with the view of SCOTT, L.J., that the widest possible interpretation ought to be given to the exceptions contained in No. III, nor can I agree with DU PARCQ, L.J., in holding that digging of gravel is a concern of a like nature with alum mines.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the appellant) ; Rising & Ravenscroft, agents for William J. G. Seeds, Belfast and Limavady (for the respondent).
[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JOZWIAK v. HIEROWSKI.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Asquith and Bucknill, L.J.J.), April 21, 22, 23, May 10, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Furnished letting—Rent of furniture substantial portion of whole—Date when comparison to be made—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2) (i) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1)).

In considering whether, for the purposes of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (2) (i) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, s. 10 (1)), the rent attributable to the use of furniture forms a substantial portion of the total rent, the date on which to compare the rent so attributable with the total rent is that on which the original contract of tenancy is made.

[AS TO PAYMENTS FOR THE USE OF FURNITURE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 314, 315, para. 370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 560, 561, Nos. 7078-7084.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] 1 K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 89 Sol. Jo. 130; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Palser v. Grinling; Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1948] 1 All E.R. 1; [1948] L.J.R. 600; affg., Palser v. Grinling, [1946] 2 All E.R. 287; [1946] K.B. 631; 175 L.T. 204; Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] K.B. 645; 175 L.T. 192; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE HARGREAVES at West London County Court, dated July 28, 1947, refusing an order in favour of the landlord for possession of certain premises. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal on the ground that the part of the total rent fairly attributable to the furniture let with the premises was a substantial proportion thereof, and that, therefore, the letting was a furnished one. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

C. A. Morgan Blake for the landlord.

R. Willis for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 10. ASQUITH, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. The landlord claimed that the tenancy was not protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts for two reasons—(i) that the premises were let at a rent which included payments in respect of the use of furniture and that the amount of rent fairly attributable to its use “formed a substantial portion of the whole rent” within s. 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, modifying s. 12 (2) (i) of the principal Act; and (ii) that the letting was of three rooms (two on the first floor and one on the ground floor back) plus joint user with another tenant or tenants of an essential living room, namely, the kitchen, and that the premises were, in accordance with the principle laid down in Neale v. Del Soto (1) and other cases, not “let as a separate dwelling.” The tenant counterclaimed for rent overpaid on the basis that he was and is a statutory tenant, and the judge, having found him such, awarded him £15 18s. 4d. under this head.

The landlord and tenant are both refugee Poles. In December, 1945, the landlord, finding the tenant unemployed and houseless, befriended him and let to him the three rooms in question. The terms of the letting are in dispute, but de facto it is clear that for the first week or two the tenant paid no rent, that for the month of February he paid £4 rent, that for subsequent months up to July he paid £6 a month, and that thenceforward he paid £10 a month. It is also clear that from the first the letting included certain furniture, but how much was in dispute. The furniture which figures in this case falls into three classes—items 1 to 7, which the landlord bought from one Heath from whom he also bought the house (I call these the Heath furniture); items 8 to 25 inclusive and item 33, which the tenant bought for the landlord as the landlord’s agent after the tenancy had started and of which the tenant had the use (these may be called the intermediate items); and, lastly, items 26 to 32 inclusive, which consisted of items supplied by the Polish Union (which may be called the Polish Union furniture). The landlord was treasurer or secretary of the Polish Union, a body whose function it was to make charitable provision for the needs of derelict Poles in this country, and, by the use of his influence as such, as the county court judge has found, he caused the Polish Union to lend these items gratuitously to the tenant. We think the judge was justified in so finding. He goes on to infer (which is more disputable) that no part of the rent paid by the tenant was in respect of these items. The exact nature of the contract of tenancy is not easy to ascertain since the whole transaction was coloured with a charitable element which did not make for precision. It is clear that the landlord intended from the start to provide the tenant with a substantially furnished tenancy (by which we mean such a tenancy as is described in s. 10 (1) of the Act of 1923). It is not clear whether progressive rises in the rent were provided for when first the contract of tenancy was entered into or whether from time to time the quantum of rent was revised by agreement to keep pace with the tenant's increased capacity to pay and also with the accession of new increments of furniture placed at his disposal.

We proceed to consider the two grounds on which the landlord relies in claiming that the tenant is unprotected by the Rent Restrictions Acts and that he, the landlord, is entitled to possession, having served on the tenant what the county court judge has held (and, in our view, rightly held) to be a valid notice to quit. The first ground is that this was a "furnished letting." The first point to determine under this head is what furniture was included in the letting. On any view, what I have called the Heath furniture (items 1 to 7) was let from the start. This furniture cost £75, and that may reasonably be taken as its capital value. Let us assume, first, that no more was let at any time. The county court judge has taken the annual value of this furniture at 15 per cent. of its capital value. Fifteen per cent. of £75 is between £11 and £12. The next thing to ascertain is the amount of the contractual rent in order to see whether £11 or £12 represents a "substantial portion of it." The county court judge found that the contractual rent was £6 per calendar month. We do not think there was any evidence to support this finding. It was not the rent, in fact, paid for the first month in which any rent was paid at all, namely, £4. It was not the rent being paid at the time of the hearing. That was £10. It was argued that the county court judge, in finding this figure, was simply accepting and acting on the evidence of the tenant to the effect that the rent originally contracted for was 10s. per week per room, which on three rooms would amount to £6 for 4 weeks, but this would, if accepted, point to a rent of £6 per lunar month and would be no evidence of an agreed rent of £6 per calendar month which the judge has found. Moreover, a rent book kept by the tenant in his own hand has entries showing £4 as the amount actually paid in February, the first month when anything was paid at all, and £6 or larger sums thereafter. Each such entry is opposite the first day of each calendar month. We do not think there was any evidence to support the judge's finding of a £6 monthly rent, and, in our view, the evidence before him left him with no alternative but to find the original tenancy was at £4 per month. That is £48 a year and, without treating any mere arithmetical formula or ratio as decisive, we think £11 or £12 must on any basis be accounted as representing a substantial portion of £48. We are further of opinion that the relevant date on which to compare the part of the rent attributable to the use of furniture with the whole rent is the time when the original contract of tenancy is made. In Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (2) in the Court of Appeal, where the rent was raised from £275 to £375 in the last 6 months of the tenancy, that court assumed (and on this point was not questioned by the House of Lords) that the original figure was the material one, though it happened that for the purpose of that case it did not matter which. To take any other date would create serious inconvenience and uncertainty. A house could be removed from the protection of the Acts by an agreed rise in the rent and later reinvested with their protection by an increase in the amount of furniture placed at the tenant's disposal. We are not overlooking the proviso to s. 12 (1) (a) of the Act of 1920 dealing with "progressive" rents in a different connection and providing that the maximum rent shall be standard. If we are wrong in holding that £4 a month was the governing figure so far as rent was concerned in deciding whether the letting was substantially a furnished letting, and if either £6 or £10 ought to be taken in its place, yet the evidence leaves us in no doubt (a) that a large amount of furniture, additional to the "Heath furniture" was, in fact, bought by the landlord and made available to the tenant at various times after he entered (items 8 to 25 and 33 that have been called "the miscellaneous items") leaving aside altogether the Polish Union furniture, and (b) that this was done in pursuance of a contractual undertaking which from the first was to provide the tenant with a "substantially" furnished letting, and (even allowing for the higher rents assumed) had that effect. We should add that the learned judge applied the arithmetical formulae of 15 per cent and 20 per cent, suggested by the Court of Appeal in Palser v. Grinling (2) and Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (2), which decisions had not then been reversed on this point or questioned on this point by the House of Lords. Since his decision the House of Lords has disapproved of such formulae, at all events as in themselves decisive. We are, therefore, of opinion that the landlord's first point succeeds.

On his other point, the contention that there was a sharing or joint user of the kitchen de facto or de jure, and that, consequently, the premises were not "let as a separate dwelling" and were outside the Acts, the learned judge found that no such sharing or joint user had been established. Having regard to the view that we take on the earlier issue, it is unnecessary for us to express any view on this point. The appeal must be allowed with costs. There must be judgment for the landlord both on the claim and on the counterclaim, for the latter proceeds on the assumption, which we have decided to be ill founded, that the Rent Acts apply, the question of arrears of rent and mesne profits to be referred to the learned registrar in the county court for assessment.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: H. Davis & Co. (for the landlord); Willis & Willis, agents for Freeborough & Co., West Kensington (for the tenant).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Distinguished. W. T. LAMB & SONS
v. RIDER. [1948] 2 All E.R. 402.

LOUGHER v. DONOVAN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), May 3, 4, 11, 1948.]

Limitation of Action—Landlord and tenant—Possession—Warrant obtained 14 years before claim for order to extend time for execution—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 2 (4)—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (4).

The Limitation Act, 1939, s. 2 (4) provides: "An action shall not be brought upon any judgment after the expiration of twelve years from the date on which the judgment became enforceable . . .", and by s. 31 (1) "action" includes "any proceeding in a court of law."

On Jan. 23, 1929, the landlord obtained an order for possession of a house which was suspended if and so long as the rent was paid. After Jan. 18, 1932, no rent was paid, and at some date before May 17, 1933, a warrant for possession was obtained by the landlord. On May 17, 1933, the time for executing the warrant was extended for six months. In 1937 the tenant died, but his widow remained in occupation continuously until July 4, 1947, when she was substituted as defendant in the action for possession against her husband. In August, 1947, the landlord's executor claimed an order further extending the time for executing the original warrant for possession.

HELD: the claim was barred by s. 2 (4) of the Limitation Act, 1939, which was not overridden by s. 5 (4) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.

[FOR THE LIMITATION ACT, 1939, s. 2 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, p. 226.]

APPEAL by defendant (a tenant) from an order of His Honour JUDGE THOMAS, made at Pontypool County Court dismissing an appeal from an order of the registrar whereby he gave leave to the plaintiff (the landlord's executor) to extend the time for the execution of a warrant for possession obtained by the landlord 14 years previously. The appeal was allowed. The facts appear in the judgment of the court read by SCOTT, L.J., R. G. Micklethwait and Olson for the defendant.

N. MacDermot and T. Stringer for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 11. SCOTT, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal by the defendant, Margaret Donovan, from an order of His Honour JUDGE THOMAS in the Pontypool county court dismissing an appeal by her from an order of the registrar of Aug. 20, 1947, whereby he gave leave to the plaintiff, as surviving executor of the will of the original owner, to extend by three months the time for execution of a warrant for possession of a house, known as "No. 12, The Woodlands," at Talywain in the county of Monmouth. The house was originally let by the testator, as owner, to the defendant's late husband, John Donovan, at some previous time, not in evidence, but before January, 1929. On Jan. 23, 1929, the court made an order against him and in favour of the landlord for possession, but suspended it if and so long as the rent was paid. On Sept. 15, 1930, the local authority made a closing order, and on Jan. 18, 1932, a demolition order, both under the Housing Act, 1925, but no action was taken under those orders, apparently because the local authority were unable to provide alternative accommodation. No rent was ever paid after January, 1932, when the demolition order was made. At some date, not now in evidence, but before May 17, 1933, a warrant for possession had been obtained from the county court by the landlord, presumably under s. 59 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and certainly under the County Court Rules, Ord. 25, r. 71, and Form 200 (which is printed in extenso in the ANNUAL COUNTY COURTS PRACTICE for 1942 at p. 699). On May. 17, 1933, the time for executing it was extended by the court for six months. At some date thereafter, though not now in evidence (but I think agreed as having taken place in 1937) John Donovan died, but his widow remained in occupation continuously, except recently, when for a very short period she was absent, but returned to the house before the present proceedings were started, which was on July 4, 1947. On that date the plaintiff made an application to the registrar of the Pontypool county court to substitute the widow's name as defendant in the old action for possession against her husband pursuant to an affidavit by the plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. F. H. Dauncey, filed on behalf of the plaintiff, and an order was made by him accordingly. No rent had ever been claimed or paid from the date of the demolition order in January, 1932, and the last payment recorded in the rent book was April, 1931. Repeated requests had been made, subsequent to John Donovan's death, to the widow to go out, but she had remained in occupation. Obviously, her possession was adverse from the angle of the Limitation Act, 1939.

The above facts appear in another affidavit of the said F. H. Dauncey which was sworn on July 22, 1947. In his last paragraph that deponent asked for "a further extension of time for enforcing the warrant for possession," namely, the old warrant issued before May, 1933, more than 12 years before. The informality of that claim was waived and a defence was filed on Aug. 11, 1947, pleading the Statute of Limitations (i) to the claim for possession, and (ii) to the proceedings on the order of Jan. 23, 1929. That application for extension of time was clearly an "action" within the definition contained in s. 31 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939. The widow, so substituted as defendant by the registrar, appealed to the judge, but he affirmed the order of the registrar and the present appeal is from his order. The learned judge was asked by the defendant's solicitor for a copy of his notes, but, improperly, he refused. It is difficult to understand how the learned judge could have been guilty of what in the circumstances amounted to so grave an act of injustice. Fortunately, counsel on both sides have agreed a note of what took place before him and so make it possible for us to decide the important question raised by his order.

The present appeal is solely on the question whether the claim to an order extending the time for executing the 14 years old warrant was not barred by the Limitation Act, 1939. Section 2 (4) of that Act provides: "An action shall not be brought upon any judgment after the expiration of twelve years from the date on which the judgment became enforceable . . .", and the definition of "action" in s. 31 (1) of the Act reads as follows: "'Action' includes any proceeding in a court of law, including an ecclesiastical court." If the appeal succeeds the plaintiff will be left to take such other steps as he may be advised for the purpose of meeting the defendant's claim to a possessory title under the Act.

In the argument below and before us reliance has been placed on behalf of the plaintiff on s. 5 (4) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in s. 143 of the County Courts Act, 1888, or in s. 1 of the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, every warrant for delivery of possession of, or to enter and give possession of, any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, shall remain in force for three months from the day next after the last day named in the judgment or order for delivery of possession or ejectment, or, in the case of a warrant under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, from the date of the issue of the warrant, and in either case for such further period or periods, if any, as the court shall from time to time, whether before or after the expiration of such three months, direct.

In our opinion, that sub-section is irrelevant. It cannot be interpreted as over-riding the Limitation Act, and we say no more about it. Another argument for the plaintiff was that a statutory tenant within the Rent Restrictions Acts cannot acquire title by possession. That contention, whether well or ill-founded, will be open to the plaintiff if he starts a new action for possession against the present defendant, but it is not relevant to the issue now before us on the order extending the time for execution of the warrant. Even if it be well-founded, it assumes and depends on the plaintiff having shown the defendant to be a statutory tenant. In our opinion, the learned judge had no evidence before him to justify any such inference. The late husband was a contractual tenant when he died, and there is no evidence that notice to quit was given by the landlord to the President of the Probate Division under s. 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. I do not think that the Rent Restrictions Acts have any relevance to this appeal. For these reasons, we are clearly of opinion that the order appealed from was wrong and that the extension of time for executing the defunct warrant must be set aside, with costs to the defendant here and below. The costs in the court below will be on the same scale as previously.

Appeal allowed with costs in both courts.

Solicitors : Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for D. G. West, Newbridge, Mon. (for the defendant) ; Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash, agents for Dauncey & Sons, Newport, Mon. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DALY v. ELSTREE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), May 7, 1948].

Housing—Working classes—“Insanitary” house—“Fit for human habitation” —General standard in district—Hot water system out of order—Other facilities for heating water—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 9 (1), 188 (4).

A local authority, pursuant to s. 9 (1) of the Housing Act, 1936, served a notice on the owner of a house suitable for occupation by persons of the working classes within s. 9 (1) requiring him to execute certain work in connection with the hot water system in the house. On appeal to the county court the judge found, inter alia, that the hot water system worked by an Ideal boiler was at all material times out of order, but that the house had running water and a gas cooking stove and that gas and electricity were laid on. He also found that 25 per cent. of comparable houses in the district had no hot water system. On those facts he held that the absence of a domestic hot water system did not constitute the house “unfit for human habitation” within the meaning of s. 9 (1) of the Act, having regard, as required by s. 188 (4) of the Act, to the general standard of accommodation for working classes in the district :—

Held : the judge was not bound by the particular proportion which houses of a certain standard in the district bore to houses of a lower standard to say that the house was not up to the general standard, since s. 188 (4) of the Act did not lay down that exclusive regard must be had to that factor, and, there being no dichotomy between houses which were up to the general standard, on the one hand, and houses which were unfit for human habitation, on the other, it did not follow that a house was unfit for human habitation because it was below the general standard, and the judge was, therefore, right in his conclusion.

[AS TO REPAIR OF INSANITARY HOUSES OF THE WORKING CLASSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 550-554, paras. 1162-1166; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 214, 215, Nos. 489-502.]

APPEAL by the local authority from an order of His Honour JUDGE WHITMEE, at Barnet County Court, dated Sept. 25, 1947, whereby he quashed a notice served on the owner of a working class house under s. 9 (1) of the Housing Act, 1936, requiring him to execute certain works in connection with the supply of hot water in the house. The appeal was dismissed. The facts appear in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J.

L. A. Blundell for the local authority.

The owner appeared in person.

SCOTT, L.J.: This is an appeal from a county court judge, who, under s. 15 of the Housing Act, 1936, had jurisdiction, on an appeal, to "make such order either confirming or quashing or varying" a notice from the local sanitary authority requiring the person having control of a working class dwelling to execute the works which were specified in the notice "as he thinks fit," a wide discretionary power on fact and law, in the exercise of which he made an order with regard to an order by the local authority under s. 9 (1) of the same Act, which reads as follows:

Where a local authority, upon consideration of an official representation, or a report from any of their officers, or other information in their possession, are satisfied that any house which is occupied, or is of a type suitable for occupation, by persons of the working classes is in any respect unfit for human habitation, they shall . . . serve upon the person having control of the house a notice requiring him, within such reasonable time . . . as may be specified in the notice, to execute the works specified in the notice and stating that, in the opinion of the authority, those works will render the house fit for human habitation.

A notice was served on the owner or person having control of a house within the meaning of the section, No. 61, Whitehouse Avenue, Boreham Wood. Before the learned judge the sanitary inspector of the rural district council said that he had inspected the cottage and found that the hot water system was out of order and needed repair and that the tenant had to heat water on the gas stove which he had for cooking in the kitchen. He then said:

I have examined records of properties in our district up to a rateable value of £25. 995 houses have a hot water system like this. 331 have no domestic hot water system. These are generally older types of property in the district. Nothing to prevent tenant putting geyser in bathroom.

The learned judge made these findings of fact:

(1) The hot water system worked by an Ideal boiler was at all material times out of operation. (2) The cottage, nevertheless, had running water and facilities—a gas cooker—for heating it. (3) The cottage had gas and electricity laid on. (4) The Ideal boiler was used for providing hot water and to some extent, incidentally, heating the kitchen which also had a gas cooker. (5) No complaint was made about the cottage except the broken hot water system. (6) Neither the landlord nor the tenant was contractually liable to the other for repairs. (7) Out of some 1,326 houses in the district with a rateable value of £25 or less, 331 have no hot water system at all.

He held:

(1) That the cottage was of a type suitable for occupation by persons of the working classes within s. 9 of the Housing Act, 1936. (2) That the absence of a working hot water system in this cottage which, nevertheless, had running water and facilities for heating it, did not constitute the cottage in any respect unfit for human habitation within the meaning of s. 9 of the Housing Act, 1936, having regard to the general standard of accommodation for working classes in the district.

The latter phrase comes from s. 188 (4) of the Act which provides:

In determining for the purposes of this Act whether a house is fit for human habitation, regard shall be had to the extent, if any, to which by reason of disrepair or sanitary defects the house falls short of the provisions of any byelaws in operation in the district or of any enactment in any local Act in operation in the district dealing with the construction . . . of new streets or of the general standard of housing accommodation for working classes in the district.

Counsel for the local authority has argued that the learned judge must be taken to have misdirected himself in law in coming to those conclusions because this house for the time being was not in accord with the standard of three-quarters of the houses in the district, which would constitute the general standard of accommodation. In my view, the learned judge was not bound by any numerical proportion to say that this house was not up to the general standard. I think myself that, there being an existing means of heating water by gas in the kitchen and potential means by the electricity which was laid on, and the house being in other respects fit for human habitation, the judge was right in coming to the conclusion that it had not fallen short of the standard required by the Act and in allowing the appeal in favour of the owner. The present appeal must, accordingly, be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. Prima facie, the question whether premises are fit for human habitation is a question of fact, but it is said by counsel for the local authority that s. 188 (4) of the Housing Act, 1936, imports an element of law. So it does, in my view, to the extent to which it provides that "regard shall be had to the extent to which the house falls short of the general standard of housing accommodation for working classes in the district." If it could be shown on the face of the judgment that the learned county court judge paid no regard to that factor, his judgment might be open to attack in the sphere of law, but the section is careful not to say that exclusive regard must be had to the general local standard. It does not say that that factor is to be decisive, and there is nothing to show that the learned county court judge has left it out of account. He has, no doubt, taken other factors into account, such as the fact that there is running water in the house which can be heated on the gas cooker, and that, although it is inconvenient, it is not impossible to get hot water. Indeed, it seems to me that some part of counsel's argument, at any rate, proceeded on the assumption that, if the house were below the general standard, it was, therefore, unfit for human habitation. That appears to me to be a non sequitur. There is no dichotomy between houses which are up to the general standard, on the one hand, and houses which are unfit for human habitation, on the other. One can imagine at least three classes of houses. A house may be unfit for human habitation, it may be fit for human habitation though below the general local standard, or it may be equal to or above the local standard. For those reasons, and the reasons given by my Lord, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

JENKINS, J.: I agree. Notwithstanding the attempt made by counsel for the local authority to show that the judge proceeded on some wrong principle, it seems to me to be plain that, after taking into consideration all relevant facts that were before him, including the general standard of accommodation for the working classes in the district, he came to the right conclusion, namely, that the mere fact that this house—in other respects adequate—has no domestic hot water system, but did have other means of heating water, could not be said to constitute that house unfit for human habitation within the meaning of the Act.

Appeal dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors: Turner & Evans (for the local authority).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KARA v. KARA AND HOLMAN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Bucknill, L.J., and Hodson, J.), March 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, April 26, May 12, 1948.]

Divorce—Cruelty—Evidence—Order of court of summary jurisdiction on similar issue—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 6 (2).

Divorce—Costs—Appeal—Wife's costs of husband's appeal—Discretion of court —Wife's allegation of husband's cruelty—Liability of co-respondent on issue of cruelty.

A
B
C
A husband's petition for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery was refused, and the wife was granted a decree nisi on the ground of the husband's cruelty. The husband appealed, and the Court of Appeal, having reviewed the evidence, held that the wife had committed adultery. Before the divorce proceedings a court of summary jurisdiction had given a decision in favour of the wife on an issue of cruelty which was substantially the same as that raised in the divorce proceedings. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 6 (2) provides that, on a petition for divorce, the court may treat an order under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895-1925, "as sufficient proof of the adultery, desertion or other ground on which it was granted, but the court shall not pronounce a decree of divorce without receiving evidence from the petitioner."

D
E
Held: (i) a finding of a court of summary jurisdiction against one of the parties to a divorce suit, who was accused of a matrimonial offence, might be admitted as evidence that he or she had committed the offence charged, but the court hearing the divorce suit was not absolved from examining the evidence given at the trial on the issues there raised; the "evidence of the petitioner" referred to in s. 6 (2) of the Act of 1937 was intended to relate to evidence directed to the main issue in the case and was not confined to such matters as absolute and discretionary bars; and, on the facts, the charge of cruelty was not proved, notwithstanding the decision of the court of summary jurisdiction, and the husband was entitled to a decree nisi.

(ii) since the facts showed that his association and eventual adultery with the wife were bound up with the matrimonial disputes from which the allegations of cruelty arose, the co-respondent must pay to the husband the costs of the whole proceedings, including the costs of the issue of cruelty.

F
G
(iii) the proposition that a wife who had obtained a decree was entitled to defend herself on appeal and that the husband should pay the costs of the appeal even if he succeeded was too wide and would operate as a fetter on the exercise of the discretion of the court. Although it was necessary, in the exercise of the discretion in regard to the costs of an unsuccessful wife vis-a-vis her husband, to consider her means and her right to defend her position in the Court of Appeal, the court should also consider other points, e.g., (a) the desirability of enabling the wife to litigate a reasonable case; (b) the importance of a point of law, raised and decided; (c) the fact that the wife had manifestly committed perjury; (d) the discouragement of speculative actions; and (e) the misconduct of the wife, or her advisers, in respect of the litigation.

[As to COSTS IN DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 758-767, paras. 1197-1209, and pp. 780, 781, para. 1234; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 463-470, Nos. 4826-4937, and pp. 473, 474, Nos. 4976-4987.]

Cases referred to:

- H
(1) Harriman v. Harriman, [1909] P. 123; 78 L.J.P. 62; 100 L.T. 557; 73 J.P. 193; 27 Digest 321, 2995.
(2) Darnborough v. Darnborough and Smith, (1926), 96 L.J.P. 24; 136 L.T. 384; Digest Supp.
(3) Otway v. Otway, Otway v. Otway and Hoffer, (1888), 13 P.D. 141; 57 L.J.P. 81; 59 L.T. 153; 27 Digest 368, 3539.
(4) Earnshaw v. Earnshaw, [1896] P. 160; 65 L.J.P. 89; 74 L.T. 560; 60 J.P. 377; 27 Digest 557, 6124.
(5) Medway v. Medway, [1900] P. 141; 69 L.J.P. 56; 82 L.T. 627; 64 J.P. 120; 27 Digest 556, 6104.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of Mr. COMMISSIONER TYNDALE, K.C., dated June 24, 1947, refusing the husband's petition for a divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery and granting a decree nisi to the wife on the ground of the husband's cruelty. The Court of Appeal now allowed the appeal.

The report deals only with the decision of the court (i) on the effect of a previous finding of a court of summary jurisdiction in favour of the wife on an issue of cruelty which was substantially the same as that raised in the divorce proceedings, and (ii) the costs of the proceedings.

Colin Duncan and James Campbell for the husband.
Gorst for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

Apr. 26. LORD GREENE M.R., read the following judgment of the court. The husband is seeking a decree of divorce from the wife on the ground of her alleged adultery with the co-respondent during the husband's absence on military service. The wife successfully resisted the claim before Mr. COMMISSIONER TYNDALE, K.C., and obtained from him a decree nisi of divorce on the ground of cruelty by the husband alleged to have taken place both before and after his departure on military service. The husband appeals against the dismissal of his suit and against the decree nisi obtained by the wife.

It is obvious that, if the learned commissioner erred in believing the evidence of the wife and the co-respondent on the issue of adultery, this, in itself, will provide serious reasons for doubting the truthfulness of their evidence on the issue of cruelty. [His LORDSHIP, after reviewing the evidence, held that the wife had committed adultery with the co-respondent, and continued:—] There remains to be considered the finding of the stipendiary magistrate in favour of the wife on the issue of cruelty, which was substantially the same as that raised in the divorce proceedings. In divorce cases, for special reasons, as explained by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J. ([1909] P. 123, 142) in Harriman v. Harriman (1) no estoppel is created. There may, however, be something less than an estoppel, i.e., the findings may be treated as of strong probative value. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 6, must be considered in this connection. The wife having obtained an order under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925, on the ground of cruelty, the court may treat the order as sufficient evidence of cruelty, under s. 6 (2). The same sub-section provides: " . . . the court shall not pronounce a decree . . . without receiving evidence from the petitioner." In our opinion, the evidence of the petitioner referred to in this sub-section is intended to relate to evidence directed to the main issue in the case, and is not confined to such matters as absolute and discretionary bars to a decree of divorce. There is nothing in the wording of the sub-section to constrain the court to limit the meaning of the word "evidence" within such narrow bounds, and the evidence of the parties at the trial was, in our opinion, rightly directed to the charges which had already been the subject-matter of proceedings in the magistrate's court. A finding of a court of summary jurisdiction against one of the parties to a divorce suit who is accused of a matrimonial offence may be admitted as evidence that he or she has committed the offence charged, but, in our opinion, this does not absolve the court from examining the evidence given at the trial on the issues there raised. In the result, notwithstanding the decision of the stipendiary magistrate, the charge of cruelty is not proved to our satisfaction, and the findings of the learned commissioner on this issue must also be reversed.

[After hearing argument by counsel in regard to costs, their LORDSHIPS indicated the order to be made and intimated that they would put their reasons into writing.]

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. HODSON, J., read the following judgment of the court. In this case the order of the court has already been made directing the co-respondent to pay to the husband the costs of the proceedings, here and below, including the costs attributable to the allegation of cruelty made by the wife against the husband. It was further ordered that the husband should pay to the wife her costs in this court, not limited to the security ordered, and that the husband should be at liberty to recover those costs from the co-respondent. It was further ordered, that the order for costs against the husband in the court below be set aside. No order for costs was made, or sought, against the wife.

It is desirable that some explanation should be given showing the reasons why this order was made in the exercise of the discretion of the court and to indicate certain considerations which may be of assistance generally in the exercise of discretion as to costs in matrimonial appeals. The suit was instituted by the husband for divorce on the ground of the alleged adultery of the wife. Both the wife and the co-respondent denied adultery by their answers, and, in addition, the wife made allegations of cruelty and claimed a divorce on that ground. The case came to trial without the wife having obtained or asked for security for her costs. The husband failed on both issues and on the prayer of the petition being rejected and a decree being pronounced in favour of the wife, the husband was condemned in the costs of the wife and of the co-respondent. On appeal, the findings of the court below were reversed. We condemned the co-respondent in the costs of the allegations of cruelty on the ground that the history of the case showed that his association and eventual adultery with the wife were bound up with the matrimonial disputes from which the allegations of cruelty arose. In particular, he was closely concerned with the final act of cruelty relied on and was a discredited witness called to support the wife in respect of this final act. In this connection the court was referred to a decision of HILL, J., in Darnborough v. Darnborough and Smith (2), in which considerations of this kind actuated the learned judge to make a like order.

The wife, though successful in the court below, was found on appeal to have succeeded wrongfully, and, since she had not applied in that court for security and, accordingly, must be taken to have been in a position to litigate independently of her husband's resources, it was considered proper that the order for costs in her favour should be set aside as well as that which had been made in favour of the co-respondent. The position of a wife who obtains a decree and seeks to uphold her order in opposition to the husband's appeal has been considered in this court in Otway v. Otway (3), and there are statements in textbooks, e.g., RAYDEN ON DIVORCE, 4th ed., p. 391, based on the decision in this case, to the effect that such a wife is entitled to defend herself and the husband must pay the costs of the appeal even if he succeeds. Similar language also appears in cases which have been heard before the Divisional Court on appeal from courts of summary jurisdiction, e.g., Earnshaw v. Earnshaw (4) and Medway v. Medway (5). In our view, the proposition so stated is too wide and would appear to operate as a fetter on the exercise of the discretion which ought to be struck off. It remains true that the proposition enunciates an important consideration which commonly arises in matrimonial appeals. The position of the wife in matrimonial litigation has developed from the days when, broadly speaking, she could hold no property independently of her husband, and the decision in Otway v. Otway (3), decided in 1888, recognises the possible effect of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, on her position. The wife in that case had been married before the passing of the Act so that the effect of the Act did not arise. The position at the present time is that, although some wives have independent means, a very large proportion are dependent on their husbands wholly or in part. The Act of 1882, therefore, does not affect the position of many litigant wives and it is necessary in the exercise of the discretion as to the costs of an unsuccessful wife, vis-a-vis her husband, to consider her means.

In the present case, the wife obtained a limited order for security for costs of the appeal on the footing that she was without means to uphold the judgment in her favour and on the strength of an under-estimate of the length of the hearing. The wife having obtained such an order for security on this basis and the hearing having lasted for longer than was anticipated, this court has thought it fit in the circumstances of this particular case to order the husband to pay her the whole costs of the appeal, with a remedy over against the co-respondent. That the wife should be able to defend her position in the Court of Appeal and the amount of her means are not the only considerations which, in our view, should affect the mind of the court in the exercise of its discretion. There are other considerations which might properly be taken into account, such as : (i) the desirability of enabling a wife to litigate a reasonable case ; (ii) the importance of a point of law, raised and decided ; (iii) the fact that the wife has manifestly committed perjury ; (iv) the discouragement of speculative actions ; (v) the misconduct of the wife, or her advisers, in respect of the litigation. Finally, we would emphasise that, in making the above suggestions, we have no intention of limiting the discretion of the court as defined by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 50.

Appeal allowed. Co-respondent to pay the husband's costs of the proceedings, here and below. The husband to pay the wife's costs on the appeal, and the order for costs against the husband in the court below to be set aside.

Solicitors : Franks, Charlesly & Co. (for the husband) ; J. C. Clifford Watts (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

RACKETT v. ASTON & CO., LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), May 10, 1948.]

Lease—New lease—Claim by tenant—Notice of willingness to grant—Notice served only by superior landlord more than two months after tenant's claim—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1) proviso (b), 5 (1), 8 (1).

Proviso (b) to s. 4 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, provides that a tenant shall not be entitled to compensation under that section in respect of goodwill "if within two months after the making of the claim the landlord serves on the tenant notice that he is willing and able to grant to the tenant, or obtain the grant to him of a renewal of, the tenancy of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on at such rent and for such term not exceeding 14 years as, failing agreement, the tribunal may consider reasonable ; and if the tenant does not within one month from the service of the notice send to the landlord an acceptance in writing of the offer the tenant shall be deemed to have declined the offer . . ."

The tenant's lease was due to expire on May 8, 1949, and that of his mesne landlord on May 9, 1949. On May 10, 1946, the tenant served on the mesne landlord a notice under s. 5 (1) of the Act, claiming a new lease or, in the alternative, compensation for loss of goodwill. On May 23, 1946, the mesne landlord forwarded the notice to the head landlord, who, on July 18, 1946, sent a notice to the tenant, which purported to be pursuant to s. 4 (1), proviso (b), that, in lieu of compensation, he, the head landlord, was willing and able to grant a new tenancy direct. The offer was not accepted within one month of receipt of the notice.

HELD : proviso (b) to s. 4 (1) contemplated an offer of willingness to grant a new lease from the tenant's immediate landlord within the time limit therein prescribed, and no such offer had been made in this case ; the offer of the superior landlord (which, in any event, was out of time), and its rejection, were a nullity, and could not disentitle the tenant to compensation under s. 4 of the Act ; and there was nothing to disqualify the tenant from claiming a new lease under s. 5 of the Act.

[AS TO TENANT'S RIGHT TO A NEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 297-301, paras. 340-345 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour DEPUTY JUDGE KONSTAM, made at Worthing County Court, and dated Oct. 14, 1947, dismissing an application for a new lease under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. The facts appear in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J. The appeal was allowed and the case remitted to the county court.

L. A. Blundell and Curtis-Raleigh for the tenant.

Anthony Harmsworth for the landlords.

SCOTT, L.J.: The notice of appeal in this case is in these terms :

This court will be moved . . . that the judgment of His Honour DEPUTY JUDGE KONSTAM made herein on Oct. 14, 1947, wherein he gave judgment for the [landlords] dismissing the [tenant's] application for a new lease under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, may be reversed. The following are the grounds of appeal. (1) That the learned judge was wrong in law in holding that the serving of a notice dated July 18, 1946, on the [tenant] by the . . . superior landlord, whereby a new tenancy was offered to the [tenant] on terms therein stated, disentitled the [tenant] from claiming a new lease under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. (2) That the learned judge wrongly gave effect under s. 4, proviso (b), of the said Act to a notice not served within the limit of time mentioned in the said proviso to the said section.

In substance the appeal will be disposed of on ground 2.

The application in respect of which judgment was given against the tenant was an application under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for a new lease which he was claiming under the terms of that section on the ground that there was what the courts now know as an adherent goodwill in respect of which he was entitled to compensation under s. 4 of the Act. Section 5, which confers a conditional right to a new lease, provides by sub-s. (1) :

Where the tenant alleges that, though he would be entitled to compensation under [s. 4], the sum which would be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill he will suffer if he removes to and carries on his trade or business in other premises, he may in lieu of claiming such compensation, at any time within the period allowed for making a claim under the said section, serve on the landlord notice requiring a new lease of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on to be granted to him.

The tenant's immediate landlords were Aston & Co., Ltd., who had a lease from the head landlord, Mr. Cornelius, who was the freeholder. The time within which that sub-section requires the claim for a new lease to be made is the same as the time for making a claim for compensation under s. 4, which in so far as relevant, runs as follows :

(1) The tenant of a holding to which this Part of this Act applies shall, if a claim for the purpose is made in the prescribed manner . . . (ii) . . . not more than 36 nor less than 12 months before the termination of the tenancy; be entitled, at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding, to be paid by his landlord compensation for goodwill if he proves to the satisfaction of the tribunal that by reason of the carrying on by him or his predecessors in title at the premises of a trade or business for a period of not less than five years goodwill has become attached . . . Provided that . . . (b) the tenant shall not be entitled to compensation in respect of such goodwill if within two months after the making of the claim the landlord serves on the tenant notice that he is willing and able to grant to the tenant, or obtain the grant to him of a renewal of, the tenancy of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on at such rent and for such term not exceeding 14 years as, failing agreement, the tribunal may consider reasonable; and if the tenant does not within one month from the service of the notice send to the landlord an acceptance in writing of the offer the tenant shall be deemed to have declined the offer . . .

There is a further provision in s. 25 of the Act, defining the word "landlord" as having its ordinary meaning of a person who, under a lease, is, as between himself and the tenant, for the time being entitled to the rents and profits. In addition, there is in s. 8 (1) provision for the common position, such as existed in this case, of a series of relationships of landlord and tenant from the freeholder down to the last sub-tenant :

Where, in the case of any holding, there are several persons standing in the relation to each other of lessor and lessee, the following provisions shall apply:—Any mesne landlord who . . . is liable to pay compensation . . . shall, at the end of his term, be entitled to compensation from his immediate landlord in like manner and on the same conditions as if he had himself made the improvement or created the goodwill in question, except that it shall be sufficient if the claim for compensation is made at least two months before the expiration of his term: A mesne landlord shall not be entitled to make a claim under this section unless he has, within the time and in the manner prescribed, served on his immediate superior landlord copies of all documents relating to proposed improvements and claims which have been sent to him in pursuance of this Part of this Act: Where such copies are so served, the said superior landlord shall have, in addition to the mesne landlord, the powers conferred by or in pursuance of this Part of this Act in like manner as if he were the immediate landlord of the occupying tenant, and shall, in the manner and to the extent prescribed, be at liberty to appear before the tribunal and shall be bound by the proceedings . . .

A The lease of Aston & Co., Ltd., the mesne landlords, was due to expire on May 9, 1949, the lease of the tenant, party to this appeal, was due to expire on May 8, 1949, and Mr. Cornelius, the freeholder, was the reversioner of the lease of Aston & Co., Ltd. On May 10, 1946, a notice was served by the tenant on his immediate landlord, giving notice of a claim, following the terms of s. 5 (1), for a new lease, or, in the alternative, for £1,000 as compensation for loss of goodwill. That would satisfy the requirements of s. 5 (1) that the tenant, to be entitled to a new lease, must allege a right to compensation under s. 4. On May 23 Messrs. Bowles & Stevens, solicitors for Aston & Co., Ltd., wrote this letter to Mr. Cornelius, the freeholder.

We send you herewith notice in duplicate under the Landlord and Tenant Act. Kindly acknowledge receipt on the duplicate copy sent herewith.

B On July 18 the solicitors for Mr. Cornelius sent a notice, which purported to be pursuant to the Act, to the tenant or his solicitors :

C In reply to your notice of claim for compensation for goodwill dated May 10, 1946, and addressed to Aston & Co., Ltd., your immediate landlords, and forwarded to Mr. C. E. Cornelius of Findon Road, Worthing, Sussex, under notice bearing date May 20, 1946, by Messrs. Bowles & Stevens, as solicitors for and on behalf of Aston & Co., Ltd., I hereby give you notice, as solicitor for and on behalf of Mr. C. E. Cornelius, that in lieu of such compensation he is willing and able to grant you a tenancy direct from him of the premises known as No. 28a Findon Road, Worthing, aforesaid, at which the trade or business in respect of which your claim for goodwill is carried on at the rent of £120 per annum for the term of seven years or at such rent and for such term not exceeding 14 years as failing agreement between us the tribunal may consider reasonable.

D In my view, that counter-notice was not a notice given within the time required by s. 4 (1), proviso (b). The learned judge held that it was, but I think it was too late. The scheme of the Act is clearly to deal with each relationship of landlord and tenant between that tenant and his landlord, and for that reason, in my opinion, the notice of willingness to grant a new lease which gives the landlord the right to free himself from the obligation to pay compensation must be a notice from the tenant's immediate landlord to him, and it is that notice which must be within the limited period of two months imposed by proviso (b). Whether a superior landlord might give a notice on behalf of himself and also on behalf of the mesne landlord is a question which it is not necessary to decide, because the right of the landlord to escape his obligation to pay compensation is a right given to the landlord who is primarily liable to the tenant for compensation, i.e., the immediate landlord whose lease the tenant holds, and nobody else, and, if the tenant who is claiming compensation does not get a notice within two months, proviso (b) has no application at all.

F If that be the case, the argument addressed to the court by counsel for the landlords—that the tenant lost his right to compensation, and, therefore, his right to a new lease under s. 5 (1)—falls to the ground. The first premise of that argument was that a right to a new lease is made, by s. 5 (1), absolutely conditional on a title to compensation under s. 4. He says, therefore, if s. 4 (1), by proviso (b), removes the right to compensation, it has gone for the purpose also of s. 5. That is a perfectly just argument, but the point which was taken by the learned judge was a false point, for he assumed that the notice of the offer of a lease by the superior landlord was an offer by the landlord referred to in s. 4 (1), proviso (b). I only add that s. 8 seems to me definitely to bear out that interpretation of s. 4. That section shows that in each case of a tier of landlords the Act is aimed primarily at the relationship of tenant and landlord between each couple and at nothing else. That is the interpretation I put on s. 4 (1) (b). The counter-offer here was out of time, and the proceedings will have to continue, therefore, on the claim for a new lease made on May 10, 1946. That condition precedent to the right having failed, the whole question must be gone into as if no such offer had ever been made. The appeal will be allowed, with costs here and below.

H ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. To claim a new lease under s. 5 the tenant has to show, inter alia, that he would be entitled to compensation under s. 4. It is said that in this case he would not be entitled to compensation under s. 4 because the provisions of s. 4 (1), proviso (b), apply and disentitle him to such compensation. It is said, in other words, that there was an offer of a new lease and a rejection thereof, complying with the requirements of s. 4 (1), proviso (b). I agree with my Lord that there was no such offer complying with the time limits laid down in the proviso. The date of the making of the claim for the purposes of s. 4 (1), proviso (b), was May 10, 1946, and not later—the date when the tenant made his claim against his immediate landlord. The offer of the superior landlord was made more than two months after and so, was out of time, and it and its rejection are, accordingly, a nullity. Being a nullity, the offer and its rejection cannot disentitle the tenant to compensation under s. 4. There is nothing in this transaction to disqualify him from claiming a new lease under s. 5. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

JENKINS, J. : I also agree. Reading proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of s. 4 of the Act in the light of the definition of “landlord” contained in s. 25 of the Act, but disregarding for the moment the provisions of s. 8, it is plain that the landlord for the purposes of proviso (b) is the immediate landlord, and he is given a period of two months after the making of the claim to serve notice offering a new lease. Thus, in this case the person to give the notice would be the immediate landlords, i.e., Aston & Co., Ltd., and they would have two months to serve that notice from May 10, 1946, when the occupying tenant made the claim for compensation. The meaning of the word “landlord” may be extended by virtue of the provisions of s. 8 so as to include a superior landlord, i.e., in the present case, Mr. Cornelius. Section 8 provides that where copies of claims and documents, etc., are served by the intermediate landlord on a superior landlord “the said superior landlord shall have, in addition to the mesne landlord, the powers conferred by or in pursuance of this Part of this Act in like manner as if he were the immediate landlord.” That, as my Lord has observed, may have the effect of entitling the superior landlord to serve a notice on behalf of himself and the intermediate landlord, but I can find nothing in that part of the language of s. 8 to extend the time within which the superior landlord is allowed to serve that notice. The time seems to me to be fixed once and for all by proviso (b), which provides a period of two months from the making of the claim. There is nothing in s. 8, so far as I can see, which would warrant the court in inferring a new period of time, running from the date when the superior landlord received the copies of the particular notice. For these reasons, in addition to those given by my Lord, I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs. Case remitted to County Court.

Solicitors: Petch & Co., agents for Bowles & Stevens, Worthing (for the tenant); Carter & Barber, agents for V. H. O. Jackson, Littlehampton (for the landlords). [Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re LUCAS (deceased), SHEARD v. MELLOR.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell, L.J., and Jenkins, J.), April 29, 30, May 14, 1948.]

Charitable Bequest—Gift to institution—Institution closed in lifetime of testatrix—Funds of charity applied cy pres—Whether gift to endowment or towards maintenance of particular premises.

By her will, dated Oct. 12, 1942, the testatrix, who died on Dec. 19, 1943, bequeathed a legacy to “the Crippled Children’s Home Lindley Moor Huddersfield,” and a share of her residuary estate to “the Crippled Children’s Home” without repeating the address, but clearly intending to refer to the same object. The home which had existed at that address and had been called “The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children,” had been closed on the expiration of the lease on Apr. 6, 1939, but on Oct. 17, 1941, as funds still remained, a scheme, maintaining the primary purpose of the charity, was sealed by the Charity Commissioners, under the title of “The Huddersfield Charity for Crippled Children.” The testatrix was unaware at the time of making her will that the home had been closed and that a scheme was in operation.

HELD : on their true construction, the bequests were by way of addition to the endowment of the charity and not merely for the upkeep of the particular premises of the home, and were effective gifts to the Huddersfield

Charity for Crippled Children.

Decision of ROXBURGH, J. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 773), reversed.

[AS TO GIFTS TO INSTITUTIONS WHICH CEASE TO EXIST, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, p. 180, para. 243; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 310-312, Nos. 911-927.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Faraker, Faraker v. Durell, [1912] 2 Ch. 488; 81 L.J.Ch. 635; 107 L.T. 36; 56 Sol. Jo. 688; 8 Digest 311, 921.

(2) Re Rymer, Rymer v. Stanfield, [1895] 1 Ch. 19; 64 L.J.Ch. 86; 71 L.T. 590; 43 W.R. 87; 39 Sol. Jo. 26; 12 R. 22, C.A.; 8 Digest 312, 926.

APPEAL by the Attorney-General from an order of ROXBURGH, J., dated Nov. 21, 1947 ([1947] 2 All E.R. 773), who held that gifts under the testatrix's will were for the upkeep of a particular institution and lapsed when that institution ceased to exist in the testatrix's lifetime. The Court of Appeal reversed that decision, holding that the gifts were additions to the endowment of the charity which continued to subsist under a cy pres scheme. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Danckwerts for H.M. Attorney-General.

Wilfrid Hunt for the trustees under the will.

C. A. J. Bonner for a trustee of the Huddersfield Charity for Crippled Children.

Jennings, K.C., and B. S. Tatham for the Huddersfield & District Victoria

Nurses Association (a residuary devisee).

Newsom for the next of kin.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14. LORD GREENE, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. In this case the testatrix, Elizabeth Lucas, who died on Dec. 19, 1943, by her will dated Oct. 12, 1942, made a number of charitable bequests including a legacy of the sum of £500 to "the Crippled Children's Home Lindley Moor Huddersfield" and a gift of three equal twenty-second parts of her net residuary estate to "the Crippled Children's Home," without repeating the address, but clearly intending to refer to the same object.

The facts relevant to the destination of these gifts to "the Crippled Children's Home Lindley Moor Huddersfield" are as follows. By a trust deed dated Mar. 29, 1915, the executors of the will of a testator named John Sykes, pursuant to arrangements initiated by him in his lifetime and directions for the completion of those arrangements contained in his will, established a charity called "The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children." This deed contained assignments by the executors to the trustees therein named of (i) a leasehold site at Lindley Moor, Huddersfield, held for a term of 25 years from Apr. 6, 1914, on which buildings designed for use as a home had been or were in the course of being erected and equipped, and (ii) a terminable annuity of £120 per annum payable half yearly from Apr. 6, 1915, down to Oct. 6, 1938. Part I of the deed contained a number of definitions of which it is only necessary to mention "the institution," defined as meaning "the home which is now in course of erection as aforesaid together with the buildings annexed or appurtenant thereto," but, as clearly appears from other provisions of the deed, also used to denote the charitable undertaking to be carried on thereunder as opposed to the mere premises, and "the endowment," defined as meaning the terminable annuity mentioned. Part II of the deed (headed "Name and Objects") was (so far as material) in the following terms:

2. The institution shall be called "The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children."
3. The objects of the institution are to provide a holiday home for poor crippled children living within the district and to supply gratuitous medical and surgical advice and aid and maintenance and education to such crippled children as shall for the time being be resident in the institution; and also (during such times as the institution shall not be used as such holiday home) to provide a home to which convalescent or other patients of the infirmary [i.e., the Huddersfield Royal Infirmary] may be sent for rest or treatment . . . 4. In furtherance of the objects of the institution the income of the institution may also be expended to such amount as the committee [i.e., the committee of management appointed under the deed] may sanction from time to time in subscriptions to convalescent homes and other similar institutions and in sending patients to and maintaining them at such institutions.

Part III of the deed, which contained the assignments to the trustees of the leasehold property and endowment, conferred on the trustees (by cl. 9) a discretionary power of sale of any of the trust property or effects and provided that the proceeds of any such sale should be applied and dealt with in such manner in every respect as the trustees should think fit consistently with the trusts and provisions of the deed, and provided (by cl. 10) that, if at any time thereafter the trust property or effects or the endowment should not be required for the purposes provided in the deed, the same should be transferred to or used for the benefit of the infirmary. The only other provisions of the deed to which it is necessary to refer are those contained in Part VIII. These (so far as material) were to the effect (cl. 39) that, the primary object of the institution being to provide a holiday home for poor crippled children residing in the district, the institution should be used solely for that purpose from May 15 to Sept. 15 each year; (cl. 40) that during this yearly period the control and management of the institution should be delegated to the committee of the Cripples Huddersfield Mission Guild; and (cl. 41) that, subject to the payment of certain expenses and outgoings, the income resulting from the endowment (together with any subscriptions or donations which might be specifically given to the Cripples Guild or for the benefit of crippled children) should be paid to and applied by the committee of the Cripples Guild primarily for the purposes of the institution as such holiday home, and any surplus income of the endowment not so applied should be accounted for by the committee of the Cripples Guild to the committee of the institution and (together with any subscriptions, donations or other income which might be available for the other purposes of the institution) should be applied for the other purposes of the institution as set forth in the deed.

The lease of the premises at Lindley Moor, Huddersfield, expired on Apr. 6, 1939. The premises were, accordingly, vacated, the home formerly carried on there was closed, and no other premises for use as a home were acquired. The last payment of the terminable annuity had been received on Oct. 6 in the previous year, but the trustees still held on the trusts of the deed funds in the form of cash in hand or bequests receivable amounting to some £1,700. In these circumstances the trustees applied to the Charity Commissioners for a scheme under the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1939, and on Oct. 17, 1941, the Charity Commissioners duly sealed a scheme entitled:

In the matter of the charity consisting of the endowments of the Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children formerly carried on at Lindley Moor in the county borough of Huddersfield . . .

The scheme (so far as material) provided:

1. Administration of charity. The above-mentioned charity and the endowments thereof specified in the schedule hereto and all other the endowments of the charity shall be administered and managed, subject to and in conformity with the provisions of this scheme under the title of the Huddersfield Charity for Crippled Children by a body of trustees consisting of the members for the time being of the finance committee of the institution called "The Huddersfield Royal Infirmary in the county borough of Huddersfield . . ." 4. Application of income . . . the yearly income of the charity shall be applied by the trustees in or towards sending poor crippled children to holiday or convalescent homes.

The position both at the date of the testatrix's will and at the date of her death, therefore, was that there were no longer any premises in use as a home for crippled children at Lindley Moor, and that the charity which formerly had for its primary (though not its sole) object the maintenance and operation of such a home (but not necessarily at that address) for the benefit of poor crippled children living within the Huddersfield district had been converted by the scheme into a charity differently named and constituted and having for its object the sending of poor crippled children to holiday or convalescent homes provided by other organisations, the class of crippled children eligible as beneficiaries being no longer expressly confined to those living within the Huddersfield district, though a similar limitation might, perhaps, be implied from the retention of "Huddersfield" as part of the name, or might, at all events, result, in practice, from the fact that the trustees were to be the members for the time being of the finance committee of the Huddersfield Royal Infirmary. It may, however, fairly be said that the essential primary purpose of the charity, namely, the provision of holidays under suitable care and in suitable surroundings for poor crippled children, was preserved by the scheme although the means originally prescribed of carrying out that purpose were altered to suit the altered circumstances. In these circumstances the question arose whether the gifts made by the testatrix to "the Crippled Children's Home Lindley Moor Huddersfield" took effect as gifts to the Huddersfield Charity for Crippled Children (that is to say, to the charity established by the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915, in the reconstituted form in which it was continued under the scheme), or whether they lapsed as gifts made for a particular charitable purpose which had wholly failed with the closing of the home at Lindley Moor, with the result that the legacy so given fell into residue and the share of residue so given was undisposed of by the will and passed as on intestacy.

It is settled by authority binding on this court that so long as there are funds held in trust for the purposes of a charity the charity continues in existence and is not destroyed by any alteration in its constitution or objects made in accordance with law, as, for example, by a scheme under the Charitable Trusts Acts: see Re Faraker (1). There is no doubt that the facts stated regarding the charity established by the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915, in the present case are such as to bring it well within this principle. Accordingly, if the gifts made by the testatrix were on their true construction gifts to the charity, that is to say, gifts simply in augmentation of the funds held by the trustees of the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915, for the objects of the Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children as defined by the deed, they took effect as gifts to that same charity in the re-constituted form in which it was continued under the scheme, i.e., as gifts in augmentation of the funds held by the trustees appointed by the scheme for the modified objects thereby prescribed. On the other hand, it is equally well settled that (in the absence of general charitable intention which is not in question here) a gift for a particular charitable purpose which has wholly failed is subject to the ordinary doctrine of lapse: see Re Rymer (2). Accordingly, if the testatrix's gifts were, on their true construction, gifts for the upkeep of the premises at Lindley Moor as a home for crippled children and for no other purpose, they lapsed with the consequences indicated above, as gifts for a particular charitable purpose which had wholly failed in the lifetime of the testatrix, and, indeed, before the date of the will, with the expiry of the lease and consequent closing of the home. The learned judge was, therefore, perfectly right in holding, as he did, that the case turns on this short question of construction. His conclusion on it was to the effect that the gifts, on their true construction, were gifts for the upkeep of the particular home and not gifts by way of addition to the endowment of the charity, and, accordingly, that they lapsed on the second of the two principles stated above. He based this conclusion mainly on two grounds—(i) the inclusion of the address "Lindley Moor Huddersfield" as indicating a localisation "more appropriate to a particular institution than to its endowment," and (ii) on the use of the description "The Crippled Children's Home" as being a mis-description if applied to the charity, and as pointing, in conjunction with the accurate address, to a reference to the particular establishment located at that address rather than to the charity. He seems also to have founded himself to some extent on the absence of evidence that the testatrix knew anything about the constitution or objects of the charity as distinct from the existence of a particular home for crippled children at the particular address, the point of this being that, if she knew nothing of the charity, but did know of the existence of the particular home and assumed it to be still in use as such, she could only have intended to benefit the particular home and nothing else.

We find ourselves unable to accept the learned judge's view. It seems to us that the inclusion of the address was just as necessary or desirable and just as appropriate for the purpose of identifying the charity as for the purpose of identifying the particular home carried on at the address, more especially if the testatrix was in doubt as to the correct name. A reference to "The Crippled Children's Home" without any address would obviously have been insufficient on either view. As to the misdescription (i.e., "the Crippled Children's Home" for "the Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children") the description given by the testatrix was no more an accurate description of the particular home than it was of the charity. If the testatrix did not know or had forgotten the correct name of the charity, the misdescription can obviously throw no light on her intention. If she did know the correct name of the charity (i.e., "the Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children") and had intended to use some other expression to show that her bounty was to be limited to the upkeep of the particular home, it is, we think, inconceivable that she should have used an expression so ambiguous in this vital respect as "The Crippled Children's Home," without the addition of some specific reference to its upkeep or maintenance. To infer that the testatrix intended to confine her bounty to the upkeep of the home from the absence of evidence that she knew anything about the constitution or objects of the charity seems to us to involve the construction of the will by reference to what is really a mere guess at the testatrix's state of mind. The mere fact that the testatrix, when she made her will, was under the impression that the particular home was still being carried on in the premises at Lindley Moor (and this is, we think, a legitimate inference from the terms of the gift) is clearly no indication that she intended to benefit only and exclusively the particular home as distinct from the charity carrying it on.

We think it pertinent to consider what the position would have been if the home at Lindley Moor had, in fact, remained subject to the trusts of the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915, and in use in accordance with its provisions, down to a date subsequent to the death of the testatrix. If, in this assumed state of affairs, the court had been called on to decide the destination of the testatrix's gifts to "The Crippled Children's Home Lindley Moor Huddersfield," we think it is reasonably plain that the court, on evidence that there was a charity called "The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children," established by the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915, with the objects therein mentioned, and carrying on a home for crippled children at the address specified by the testatrix, would have held that the description given by the testatrix was a mere misdescription of "The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children," and would, accordingly, have construed the gifts as equivalent to gifts expressed to be made simply to "The Huddersfield Home for Crippled Children." On being apprised of the constitution of the charity, the court would, we think, have held further that the gifts took effect as gifts to the trustees for the time being of the trust deed of Mar. 29, 1915. If the court had further been called on to decide on what trusts the trustees would hold the gifts when received, we think the answer would necessarily have been: "On the trusts of the trust deed as an addition to the funds subject to those trusts." This conclusion would, we think, have followed from the absence of any words in the will to indicate that the gifts were to be held for some special or restricted purpose as distinct from the general purposes of the charity. No such indication could have been collected from the references to crippled children and to a home in the inaccurate description used by the testatrix, inasmuch as the correct description itself contains similar references. In a word, the court would, we think, have properly construed the gifts as gifts to the trustees of the charity for the general purposes of the charity. If that would have been the right construction of the gifts on the footing that the home at Lindley Moor had remained in use under the provisions of the trust deed until after the death of the testatrix, it must, in our view, still be the right construction in the events which actually happened. The fact that the home had actually been closed before the date of the will and the testatrix's apparent ignorance of that fact cannot alter the meaning of the language which she used. The effect in the events which have happened of the gifts as so construed is determined, so far as this court is concerned, by Re Faraker (1).

For these reasons we hold that the appeal should be allowed and that the order of ROXBURGH, J., should be varied by substituting for the declaration therein contained a declaration to the effect that the gifts in question constitute valid and effectual charitable bequests and that the trustees of the Huddersfield Charity for Crippled Children are entitled to such bequests by way of addition to the endowment of such charity, and by omitting the inquiry and directions consequential thereon. There will be the same order as in the court below with respect to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed, costs of all parties as between solicitor and client out of the estate.

Solicitors: the Treasury Solicitor; Dixon, Hunt & Tayler, agents for Cartwright & Fieldhouse, Huddersfield (for the plaintiff); Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Ramsden, Sykes & Ramsden, Huddersfield (for the first defendant); Crossman, Block & Co., agents for Eaton Smith & Downey, Huddersfield (for the second defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

READING v. REGEM.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), May 10, 1948.]

Master and Servant—Profits obtained by servant dishonestly by virtue of employment—Recovery by master—Soldier—Bribes by civilian—Recovery by Crown.

If a servant takes advantage of his service and violates his duty of honesty and good faith to make a profit for himself, in the sense that the assets of which he has control, the facilities which he enjoys, or the position which he occupies, are the real cause of his obtaining the money as distinct from merely affording the opportunity for getting it, i.e., if they play the predominant part in his obtaining the money, he is accountable for it to his master, and it matters not that the master has not lost any profit or suffered any damage or that the master could not have done the act himself.

A sergeant in the army stationed at Cairo on several occasions while in uniform boarded a private lorry and escorted it through Cairo, thus enabling it to pass the civilian police without being inspected. The lorry was loaded with cases, the contents of which were unknown. On each occasion the sergeant received from a civilian a large sum of money of which the military authorities later took possession. On a petition of right for its return :—

HELD : the wearing of the uniform of the Crown and his position as a servant of the Crown was the sole cause of his obtaining the money, which he did dishonestly, and, although the Crown had suffered no loss, the money belonged to the Crown as his master.

A.-G. v. Goddard, (1929) (98 L.J.K.B. 743), distinguished.

[AS TO RECEIPT OF BRIBES BY AGENT OR SERVANT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, p. 252, para. 426; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 1, pp. 480-483, Nos. 1601-1627.]

Case referred to :

(1) A.-G. v. Goddard, (1929), 98 L.J.K.B. 743; Digest Supp.

PETITION OF RIGHT for the restitution of money had and received to the use of the suppliant with interest or for the payment to the suppliant of money taken possession of on behalf of the Crown.

The suppliant was at all material times in the service of the Crown as a soldier in the regular Army. After Sept. 3, 1939, he was stationed at the general hospital in Cairo and in May, 1946, he held the rank of sergeant in charge of medical stores at the hospital. The Crown admitted taking possession of the sums claimed, but said that they were part of the proceeds of bribes improperly accepted by the suppliant for accompanying a loaded lorry in and about Cairo while dressed in uniform and for thereby falsely representing himself as acting in the course of his military duties as a servant of the Crown in order to avoid police inspection of the lorry, and that the suppliant accordingly became accountable to the Crown for the bribes which he held in trust for the Crown. The court upheld the Crown's contentions. The facts appear in the judgment.

Salmon, K.C., Colin Pearson and Cassels for the suppliant.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.), Barry, K.C., and H. L. Parker for the Crown.

DENNING, J. : The suppliant joined the army in 1936, and at the beginning of 1944 he was a sergeant in the Royal Army Medical Corps stationed at the general hospital in Cairo, where he was in charge of the medical stores.

The suppliant had not had any opportunities, in his life as a soldier, of making money, but in March, 1944, there were found standing to his credit at banks in Egypt, several thousands of pounds, and he had more thousands of pounds in notes in his flat. He had also acquired a motor car worth £1,500. The Special Investigation Branch of the army looked into the matter, and he was asked how he came by these moneys. He made a statement, from which it appears that they were paid to him by a man by the name of Manole in these circumstances. A lorry used to arrive loaded with cases, the contents of which were unknown. Then the suppliant, in full uniform, boarded the lorry, and escorted it through Cairo, so that it was able to pass the civilian police without being inspected. When it arrived at its destination, it was unloaded, or the contents were transferred to another lorry. After the first occasion when this happened, the suppliant saw Manole in a restaurant in Cairo. Manole handed him an envelope which he put in his pocket. On examining it when he arrived home, he found that it contained £2,000. Two or three weeks later, another load arrived, and another £2,000 was paid. £3,000 was paid after the third load, and so it went on until eventually some £20,000 had gone into the pocket of the suppliant. The services which he rendered for that money were that he accompanied this lorry from one part of Cairo to another, and it is plain that he got it because he was a sergeant in the British army, and, while in uniform, escorted these lorries through Cairo. It is also plain that he was clearly violating his duty in so doing. The military authorities took possession of the money. The money in the bank was taken under a military proclamation then in force, the military governor of the Cairo area ordering the banks to place the money at the disposal of the headquarters of the British Middle East Forces. The money in the suppliant's flat was taken possession of by the special investigation branch.

In this petition of right, the suppliant alleges that these moneys are his and should be returned to him by the Crown. In answer, the Crown say: "These were bribes received by you by reason of your military employment, and you hold the money for the Crown. Even if we were wrong in the way in which we seized them, we are entitled to recover the amount of them, and to set off that amount against any claim you may have." In these circumstances, it is not necessary to dwell on the form of the claim. The question is whether or not the Crown is entitled to the money. It is not entitled to it simply because it is the Crown—moneys which are unlawfully obtained are not ipso facto forfeited to the Crown. The claim of the Crown rests on the fact that at the material time it was the suppliant's employer.

There are many cases in the books where a master has been held entitled to the unauthorised gains of his servant or agent. At law, the action took the form of money had and received. In equity it was put on the basis of a constructive trust due to a fiduciary relationship. Nowadays it is unnecessary to draw a distinction between law and equity. The real cause of action is a claim for restitution of moneys which, in justice, ought to be paid over. In my judgment, it is a principle of law that, if a servant takes advantage of his service and violates his duty of honesty and good faith to make a profit for himself, in the sense that the assets of which he has control, the facilities which he enjoys, or the position which he occupies, are the real cause of his obtaining the money as distinct from merely affording the opportunity for getting it, that is to say, if they play the predominant part in his obtaining the money, then he is accountable for it to his master. It matters not that the master has not lost any profit nor suffered any damage, nor does it matter that the master could not have done the act himself. If the servant has unjustly enriched himself by virtue of his service without his master's sanction, the law says that he ought not to be allowed to keep the money, but it shall be taken from him and given to his master, because he got it solely by reason of the position which he occupied as a servant of his master. Instances readily occur to mind. Take the case of the master who tells his servant to exercise his horses, and while the master is away, the servant lets them out and makes a profit by so doing. There is no loss to the master, the horses have been exercised, but the servant must account for the profits he makes. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL put in argument the case of a uniformed policeman who, at the request of thieves and in return for a bribe, directs traffic away from the site of the crime. Is he to be allowed to keep the money? So, also, here, the use of the facilities provided by the Crown in the shape of the uniform and the use of his position in the army were the only reason why the suppliant was able to get this money. It was solely on that account that he was able to sit in the front of these lorries and give them a safe conduct through Cairo. There was no loss of profit to the Crown. The Crown would have been violating its duty if it had undertaken the task, but the suppliant was certainly violating his duty, and it is money which must be paid over to his master—in this case, the Crown.

Attorney-General v. Goddard (1), where a police sergeant was ordered to hand over bribes which he had received, is parallel to this case, but it does not cover it, because ROWLATT, J., put his decision on the ground that Sergeant Goddard got the money in the course of making confidential enquiries. The present case goes a step further. There was not, in this case, a fiduciary relationship. The suppliant was not acting in the course of his employment. In my opinion, however, those are not essential ingredients of the cause of action. The uniform of the Crown and the position of the suppliant as a servant of the Crown were the only reasons why he was able to get this money, and that is sufficient to make him liable to hand it over to the Crown. The case is to be distinguished from cases where the service merely gives the opportunity of making money. A servant may, during his master's time, in breach of his contract, do other things to make money for himself, such as gambling, but he is entitled to keep that money himself. The master has a claim for damages for breach of contract, but he has no claim to the money. So, also, the fact that a soldier is stationed in a certain place may give him the opportunity, contrary to the King's Regulations, of engaging in trade and making money in that way. In such a case, the mere fact that his service gave the opportunity for getting the money would not entitle the Crown to it, but if, as here, the wearing of the King's uniform and his position as a soldier is the sole cause of his getting the money and he gets it dishonestly, that is an advantage which he is not allowed to keep. Although the Crown has suffered no loss, the court orders the money to be handed over to the Crown, because the Crown is the only person to whom it can properly be paid. The suppliant must not be allowed to enrich himself in this way. He got the money by virtue of his employment, and must hand it over.

Petition dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Lewis & Lewis & Gisborne & Co. (for the suppliant); the Treasury Solicitor (for the Crown).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DENNANT v. SKINNER AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Hallett, J.), May 4, 5, 1948.]

Auction—Passing of property—Unconditional sale—Representations made after fall of hammer—Subsequent undertaking that property should not pass until cheque honoured—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 58 (2).

On Nov. 8, 1946, the plaintiff at an auction knocked down a van to the highest bidder, and inquired his name. The bidder replied that his name was King, and that he was the son of the proprietor of King's Motors, of Oxford, a well known and reputable firm, which he was representing at the sales. The plaintiff knocked down five more vehicles to King including a Standard motor car. After the sales, King said he would like to pay by cheque, and the plaintiff replied that it was not his practice to accept cheques from people he did not know. King repeated his representations as to his connection with King's Motors, and produced the counterfoils in his cheque book according to which he had been paying large amounts to well known auctioneers. The plaintiff then accepted the cheque, King signing a form which stated : "I hereby certify my cheque No. — will be met on presentation at my bank. Furthermore, I agree that the ownership of the vehicles will not pass to me until such time as the proceeds of my cheque have been credited to South London Motor Auction account at Lloyds Bank." King was permitted to remove the vehicles, and he sold the Standard car to the third party, C., who sold it to the defendant, S. The cheque was dishonoured on presentation and it transpired that King had no connection with King's Motors. The plaintiff sought from S. the return of the car or payment of its value.

HELD : (i) there being no mistake as to the identity of the contracting parties at the time when the contract of sale was made, which was at the fall of the plaintiff's hammer, the plaintiff's assent to the sale and to the passing of the property to King was not vitiated.

Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. ([1919] 2 K.B. 243; 121 L.T. 249), applied.

Heap v. Motorists Advisory Agency, Ltd. ([1923] 1 K.B. 577; 129 L.T. 146), distinguished.

(ii) the contract for sale was unconditional, and, therefore, the property in the car passed on the fall of the hammer under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 18 (1), and the plaintiff's right under s. 39 (1) (a) of that Act to retain the car until payment was made was relinquished when he gave possession to King.

(iii) the certificate signed by King could not have the effect of preventing the ownership of the car from passing to King because it had already passed, and it was ineffective to divest King of the ownership and re-vest it in the plaintiff.

[AS TO MISTAKE AS TO PERSON, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 95, 96, para. 134; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 97-99, Nos. 64-75.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Lake v. Simmons, [1927] A.C. 487; 35 Digest 97, 64.
- (2) Smith v. Wheatcroft, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 223; 47 L.J.Ch. 745; 39 L.T. 103; 35 Digest 98, 71.
- (3) Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd., [1919] 2 K.B. 243; 88 L.J.K.B. 953; 121 L.T. 249; 24 Com. Cas. 263; 39 Digest 533, 1451.
- (4) Heap v. Motorists Advisory Agency, Ltd., [1923] 1 K.B. 577; 92 L.J.K.B. 553; 129 L.T. 146; 67 Sol. Jo. 300; 39 Digest 531, 1441.
- (5) Folkes v. King, [1923] 1 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 125; 128 L.T. 405; 67 Sol. Jo. 227; 28 Com. Cas. 110; 86 J.P. Jo. 552; Digest Supp.
- (6) London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Attenborough, London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Robertsons (London), Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 206; 103 L.J.K.B. 429; 151 L.T. 124; 78 Sol. Jo. 413; 39 Com. Cas. 290; Digest Supp.

ACTION for the return of a motor car or for its value.

The plaintiff was a certificated auctioneer who had sold the car at an auction sale to a person fraudulently representing himself to be the Portsmouth representative of a well known and highly reputable firm in the motor vehicle trade at Oxford and the son of its proprietor. In reliance on these representations the plaintiff had accepted a cheque in payment, together with a written undertaking that the ownership of the car should not pass until the cheque was met, and had then given delivery of the car. He now sought to recover the car from the defendant, who had acquired it in good faith from a person whom he brought in as third party and who had also acquired it in good faith. The fraudulent purchaser had meanwhile been convicted of obtaining the property by false pretences, but the plaintiff's claim was based on the ground that the offence he had actually committed was larceny by a trick and that the property in the car had never passed to him. The plaintiff also contended that in the special circumstances the property had never passed, particularly having regard to the undertaking signed by the purchaser. HALLETT, J., held that the offence had been obtaining property by false pretences, that the property in the car had passed on the fall of the hammer at the auction sale, and that, by delivering the car to the purchaser, the plaintiff had lost his right of lien and of re-sale on non-payment and so had no such property in or possession of the car as would entitle him to bring an action. The facts appear in the judgment.

D. F. Brundrit for the plaintiff.

Mattar for the defendant.

Landau for the third party.

HALLETT, J.: This case raises questions of some interest, but not, I think, having regard to the evidence called before me, of any real difficulty. The plaintiff, George Edward Kenneth Dennant, carries on business as the South London Motor Auctions and is a certificated auctioneer. On Nov. 8, 1946, he held an auction sale at which there were some 35 motor vehicles for sale and some 150 people present as prospective buyers. A Standard saloon motor car was knocked down by the plaintiff to a man named George Albert King for £345. After the sale the plaintiff delivered that car to King in exchange for a cheque for £1,190 which represented the price of the car together with five other vehicles which had also been knocked down to King by the plaintiff at the sale. The cheque was dishonoured on presentation, and, on Apr. 12, 1947, King was convicted at Surrey Quarter Sessions at Croydon, of obtaining the six motor vehicles from this firm by false pretences with intent to defraud and was sent to prison. Subsequently, the plaintiff discovered that the Standard motor car was in the possession of the defendant in this action, Mr. Leslie Cecil Skinner, and on Feb. 14, and again on Feb. 21, 1947, by his solicitor he demanded delivery up to him of the car. The defendant having refused delivery, this action was started for the return of the car or its value. The defendant, on whose good faith there has been no reflection whatever, had bought the car from a Mr. Collom, with the warranty of good title implied by virtue of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and, accordingly, the defendant brought in Mr. Collom as a third party. There was no imputation against the third party's good faith.

The plaintiff having knocked this car down to King and delivered it and allowed him to take it away, the onus is on him (the plaintiff) to establish to the satisfaction of the court that he was still entitled to possession of the car at the time when he demanded possession from the defendant. He seeks to discharge that burden in three ways. In the first place, he says that the transaction which led to King having possession of the car amounted to what is sometimes known as "larceny by a trick." Although King was convicted of obtaining that car and five others by false pretences, the view taken in the criminal proceedings is not in any way binding on or even helpful to me for various reasons. King ultimately pleaded Guilty, and in any case, as is pointed out in ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE, the distinction between larceny by a trick, on the one hand, and obtaining by false pretences, on the other, has now for the purpose of criminal cases, become of little importance, because of the provisions of the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 44. In this case, however, the distinction is of vital importance and in some cases there is no doubt that the distinction between the two offences is very difficult to draw. At p. 503 of ARCHBOLD, 31st ed., it is suggested that the most intelligible distinction is as follows:

In larceny the owner of the thing stolen has no intention to part with his property therein to the person taking it, although he may intend to part with the possession; in false pretences the owner does intend to part with his property in the money or chattel, but it is obtained from him by fraud.

Certain other tests have been suggested, however, in various cases, for instance, in Lake v. Simmonds (1) where LORD HALDANE ([1927] A.C. 501) cites the passage which was adopted by FRY, J., in Smith v. Wheatcroft (2) (9 Ch.D. 230):

"Does error in regard to the person with whom I contract destroy the consent and annul the agreement? I think that this question ought to be decided by a distinction. Whenever the consideration of the person with whom I am willing to contract enters as an element into the contract which I am willing to make, error with regard to the person destroys my consent and consequently annuls the contract . . . On the contrary, when the consideration of the person with whom I thought I was contracting does not enter at all into the contract, and I should have been equally willing to make the contract with any person whatever as with him with whom I thought I was contracting, the contract ought to stand."

There was no catalogue of this auction, but certain printed terms or conditions of sale are said to be exhibited in the auction room, and I have been furnished with a copy of that document. I feel considerable doubt how far it is satisfactorily proved that those conditions of sale were brought to the notice of the bidders so as to render it right to incorporate them in the contract of sale, but I do not propose to allow that doubt to influence me in my decision which proceeds on other grounds.

During the sale the plaintiff offered a vehicle called a Commer van for which the highest bid was made by King. The plaintiff had never seen him before and did not know who he was. The plaintiff said: "I sold the van to him. When I knocked it down I asked his name." It is agreed by counsel for the plaintiff that on a sale by auction a contract is completed on the fall of the hammer, and it is agreed also that prima facie the property in the lot knocked down then passes to the bidder. In so far as the printed conditions have any relevance, condition 3 provided that on the fall of the hammer the lot, with all errors of description, was to be at the risk and cost of the buyer. Up to that time the plaintiff had not inquired the name of the bidder or concerned himself in any way with his identity. He had knocked down that Commer van, or, in his own language, he had sold it, to the man who had made the highest bid irrespective of his identity. When asked his name, the man said it was King, and he was from King's Motors of Oxford, and, in fact, was the son of the proprietor of that firm. King's Motors of Oxford is well known to the plaintiff as a highly reputable firm in the motor vehicle trade, and the plaintiff accepted these statements. They were untrue, and George Albert King has no connection with the firm and is not the son of the proprietor. The plaintiff knocked down five more vehicles to George Albert King, including the Standard motor car with which I am concerned, and when the sale was over King went to the plaintiff's office in the usual way to arrange for payment and removal. At this time, subject to the second aspect of the matter which I shall discuss presently, the property in the Standard car, to my mind, had passed to King. The contract of sale had been made with King, and there seems to me to be no ground whatsoever on which I could properly hold that the consideration of the person with whom the plaintiff was willing to contract entered as an element into the contract which he was willing to make. At an auction sale, apart from any question of the reserve price, the lot is knocked down to the highest bidder, whoever the highest bidder may happen to be. When it comes to removing the lot without paying cash for it, other questions arise, but, so far as the contract is concerned and the passing of the property in the object sold, ordinarily the identity of the buyer does not enter into the question any more than it ordinarily does on the sale of an article in a retail shop. In these days the identity of the customer may influence the willingness of the shopkeeper to sell something to him where, for instance, goods are kept for registered customers, but in normal and sane times the shopkeeper is not concerned with the identity of the customer in deciding whether to sell goods to him, although he is concerned in deciding whether, having effected the sale, he should give the purchaser credit. When King went to the plaintiff's office the plaintiff asked him how he meant to pay, and King replied that he would like to pay by cheque, to which the plaintiff rejoined that it was not his normal practice to accept cheques from people he did not know. King had appeared to be in possession of trade plates, which would suggest he was in the business, and he had some drivers there to drive away the vehicles. King repeated that he was of King's of Oxford, was running the Portsmouth branch, and that he was the son of the proprietor, and he showed to the plaintiff the counterfoils in his cheque book, according to which he had been paying away large amounts to other well known auctioneers. The plaintiff believed those representations and took the cheque for £1,190 to which I have referred.

Two sentences from the plaintiff's evidence seem to me to be crucial. He said :

When I took the cheque from King I believed him to be King's of Oxford. If I had not so believed him I should not have accepted the cheque.

That seems to be really important on the question of the effect the verbal representation had on the plaintiff's mind. There is no evidence, it seems to me, that the plaintiff was induced to sell the car to King in the belief that King was connected in the manner which he had described with this highly reputable firm. That seems to have been entirely immaterial from the point of view of selling the car. The Commer van had been sold before King's identity was mentioned at all, and the mention of his identity was only made in the ordinary way, as I interpret the evidence, for the purpose of the plaintiff's completing the auctioneer's memorandum. The effect which the misrepresentation had on the plaintiff's mind was to induce him to accept the cheque instead of requiring cash to be paid before the vehicle was delivered. The conditions again, if they are of any relevance, which I doubt, provided that the entire purchase money was to be paid before the lots were removed on the day of the sale, and conditions 10 and 11 dealt with cheques being tendered in payment, it being stated that : "Cheques tendered in payment will not be accepted unless satisfactory references are given." When the plaintiff, persuaded by those lies, consented to take the cheque for £1,190, he procured the signature by this man King to a form which is before me :

I hereby certify my cheque No. — will be met on presentation at my bank. Furthermore, I agree that the ownership of the vehicles will not pass to me until such time as the proceeds of my cheque have been credited to South London Motor Auction account at Lloyds Bank.

I can now express my judgment at once on the question whether the trans-

A action by which this car passed into the possession of King amounted to larceny by a trick. To my mind Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3) is in principle indistinguishable, and so far as I am aware the correctness of that decision has never been judicially in question. There have, of course, been many cases since then where questions as to the distinction between larceny by a trick and obtaining by false pretences have been considered, but my attention has not been called to any case which is as much in point as Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3). The case was mentioned in Lake v. Simmons (1) already cited, and in his speech, immediately after the passage of FRY, J., which I have already quoted, LORD HALDANE deals ([1927] A.C. 501) with Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3). I can see nothing there to suggest that he doubted the correctness of the earlier decision. Counsel for the plaintiff, however, have drawn my attention to what is said in the well known text book, ANSON ON THE LAW OF CONTRACT. In the 17th ed., published in 1929, given to me in the first instance, at pp. 158 and 159, the learned authors of that edition, SIR JOHN MILES and PROFESSOR BRIERLEY, dealing with Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3) in a footnote say :

~ This case does not appear to be affected by the decision in Lake v. Simmons (1), for in that case when the jeweller handed the goods to the swindler he did so merely to enable her to show them to a supposed intending purchaser. He intended to make her his bailee and not to enter into a contract of sale with her.

C I respectfully agree with that note. I think if one looks at some of the cases on which the plaintiff here might seek to rely, the distinction between them and the present case is obvious. In Heap v. Motorists Advisory Agency, Ltd. (4) the plaintiff never gave any real consent to the fraudulent person having or passing the property in the motor car in question. The car was put into the possession of the fraudulent person, and LUSH, J., had to consider, as I have to consider, the difference between larceny by a trick and obtaining goods by false pretences. LUSH, J., came to the gist of the whole matter in three sentences : ([1923] 1 K.B. 583) :

D It is said by counsel for the defendants that it is a case of obtaining a car by false pretences, and not by larceny by a trick. In order to make that out he has to establish that the plaintiff intended to part with the property in the car to North. If he can establish that then he is right, but if he cannot he is wrong.

E The learned judge held on the facts of that case that the plaintiff never intended to part with the property in the car to North, but merely intended to let North have the custody of the car in order that he might drive it to Uxbridge, show it to the entirely imaginary person named Hargreaves, and if possible sell it to Hargreaves for £210. There never was a Hargreaves. There was no question of passing the property, according to the intention of the plaintiff, to a person called Hargreaves who just did not exist, and to whom the car was going to be shown by the fraudulent person, North. Such a case seems to me to be very easy to explain. I have read what is said in regard to Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3) in the 17th ed. of ANSON ON LAW OF CONTRACT, but in the 19th ed. of that work, published in 1945, where PROFESSOR BRIERLEY is the sole editor, he appears to have taken a different view (p. 158). I need not read what he says, but he clearly suggests that Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3) is a wrong decision, and that LORD HALDANE's decision in Lake v. Simmons (1) is a right decision on the wrong grounds. I am not, however, bound in any way by the opinion of text book writers, however eminent they may be, and, indeed, I prefer to decide this case not on authority so much as on principle. Two more cases I will mention : Folkes v. King (5) and London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Attenborough (6). While those cases deal with other points which do not arise here, on the essential points they seem to me to indicate where I should be if I relied solely on Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3). In London Jewellers, Ltd. v. Attenborough (6) SCRUTTON, L.J., refers ([1934] 2 K.B. 217) to Phillips v. Brooks, Ltd. (3), but without expressing any opinion about the decision and saying merely that the effect of the statement between the parties may have to be considered at some future time. In the present case, I am of the opinion, on the evidence, that there was no mistake as to the contracting parties at the time the contract of sale was made and so no mistake affecting the plaintiff's assent to the sale and the passing of the property. Accordingly, the plaintiff's case, as far as it depends on the contention that this was larceny by a trick, in my judgment, fails.

The second point on which the plaintiff relies is that the property in the circumstances of this case did not pass until the price was paid by the cheque being in order or cash substituted for it. A contract of sale is concluded in an auction sale on the fall of the hammer, and, indeed, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 58 (2), so provides. Section 18 provides :

Rule 1 : Where there is an unconditional contract for the sale of specific goods, in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether the time of payment or the time of delivery or both be postponed.

Accordingly, on the fall of the hammer the property of this car passed to King unless that prima facie rule is excluded from applying because of a different intention appearing or because there was some condition in the contract which prevented the rule from applying. In my view, this was clearly an unconditional contract of sale, and I can see nothing whatever to make a different intention appear. The only evidence on which it was ever suggested to exist was the printed conditions, but I can see nothing in those conditions to negative an intention that the property should pass on the fall of the hammer. I think the conditions are entirely consistent with such an intention. If, however, the conditions are to be regarded as incorporated in the contract of sale, as to which I have some doubt, that makes no difference to the claim of the plaintiff. By the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 28 : " Unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions," and, finally by s. 39 (1) (a) and (c), an unpaid seller of goods has a lien on the goods or right to retain them for the price while he is in possession of them and he also has a right of re-sale as limited by the Act. However, the passing of the property and the right to possession are two different things. Here, in my judgment, the property had passed on the fall of the hammer, but still the plaintiff had a right to retain possession of the goods until payment was made. If, when he was ready to deliver the goods, payment was not made, he could have sued for the price, or he could have exercised powers of re-sale, and he could have secured himself by way of lien on the goods for the price, but once he chose, for reasons good, bad, or indifferent, as a result of statements fraudulent or honest, to part with the possession of the vehicle by giving delivery of it, he then lost his seller's lien and he no longer had a right to possession of the vehicle. He had a right until it was delivered, but as the right of retainer was not exercised he had no right in the vehicle. The property in the vehicle had passed to King. In my view, therefore, the second contention for the plaintiff also fails. His right to the property had gone and his right to possession had gone.

There was a third aspect of the matter arising out of the document which I have read. The document contemplates that the ownership of the vehicle has not passed to the bidder, but, as I have already said, in my judgment, it had passed on the fall of the hammer, and, if subsequently the bidder executed the document acknowledging that the ownership of the vehicle would not pass to him, that could not have any effect on what had already taken place. Accordingly, the only way it seems to me in which this document could be used to satisfy the plaintiff's argument is to find that it had the effect of divesting the property from King and re-vesting it in the plaintiff, the seller. I do not think that such a view of the document is sound. In my view, the property had passed on the falling of the hammer. The right to possession had passed when the plaintiff, persuaded and misled by King's lies, parted with his seller's lien, and there was nothing left on which he could found a claim in detinue against some third person, in this case the defendant, who was thus put in possession of the vehicle. The result seems to me to be that there must be judgment for the defendant with costs. As regards proceedings between the defendant and the third party, the third party is entitled to judgment against the defendant with costs.

Since the plaintiff knew perfectly well that he had not sold the car to the defendant, he must have contemplated when these proceedings were pending that the defendant had acquired the car from somebody else, a third party, and in those circumstances it was at least highly probable that, if the defendant were sued, he would desire to bring in that third party, whoever it might be, for his own protection. Secondly, I think it was obviously reasonable for the defendant here to take proceedings against the third party to protect himself in the light of the claim which had been brought against him by the plaintiff, and which in the result has been shown to be unsustainable. If a defendant incurs costs reasonably to protect himself against a claim by a plaintiff which fails, it seems to me there are good grounds on which a judge, exercising his judicial discretion, should say that those costs incurred by the defendant should be borne by the plaintiff. Accordingly, in this case I propose to add to my order that the costs payable by the plaintiff to the defendant should include all costs properly incurred by the defendant in the third party proceedings.

Judgment for the defendant against the plaintiff with costs. Judgment for the third party against the defendant with costs. Order for defendant's costs against the plaintiff to include all party and party costs of defendant and third party proceedings.

Solicitors: W. F. Hollands & Son (for the plaintiff); Amery-Parkes & Co., (for the defendant); Simon, Haynes, Barlas & Cassels (for the third party.)

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ASKEY v. GOLDEN WINE CO., LTD., AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), May 5, 6, 7, 14, 1948.]

Fraud—Conspiracy—Damages—Supply of contaminated goods to wholesaler—Wholesaler fined for selling goods—Repayment by wholesaler to retailers—Recovery of damages from supplier by wholesaler.

It is a principle of our law that the punishment inflicted by a criminal court is personal to the offender, and that the civil courts will not entertain an action by the offender to recover an indemnity against the consequences of that punishment. In every criminal court the punishment is fixed having regard to the personal responsibility of the offender in respect of the offence, to the necessity for deterring him and others from doing the same thing again, to reform him, and, in cases such as the present, to make him and others more careful in their dealings, to make him choose with more discrimination his suppliers or his servants, and to make him more exact and scrupulous in his supervision of the matters for which he is responsible. All these objects would be nullified if the offender could recover the amount of the fine and costs from another by process of the civil courts.

From Dec. 20, 1943, onwards the defendants supplied large quantities of liquor for cocktails to the plaintiff who resold it to retailers. On Sept. 22, 1944, the defendants were charged with selling for human consumption liquid contaminated with methylated spirit, and they were all fined, two of them also being sentenced to terms of imprisonment. The plaintiff was assured by the defendants that their conviction had nothing to do with the liquor they manufactured for him, and he went on dealing with them. In January, 1945, the plaintiff was himself convicted inter alia of selling cocktails unfit for human consumption, and fined £316. In consequence of this conviction, all bottles in the hands of retailers were returned to the plaintiff, and he had to refund £1,735. On a claim by him for damages for fraud and conspiracy against the defendants, HELD: (i) although the plaintiff was not a party to the conspiracy to do an unlawful act of which the defendants were guilty, as a result of which he had suffered damage, he had been guilty of gross negligence, and so could not recover as damages the amount of the fine and costs imposed on him, nor damages for the injury to his reputation by reason of his conviction.

Principle expressed by LORD LYNDHURST, C.B., in Colburn v. Patmore (1834) (4 Tyr. 677, 688) and ROWLATT, J., in Leslie (R.), Ltd. v. Reliable Advertising and Addressing Agency, Ltd. ([1915] 1 K.B. 652, 658; 112 L.T. 947, 948), applied.

(ii) the money which the plaintiff had to repay to the retailers was reparation for his own crime, and public policy required that there should be enforced no right of indemnity or contribution or damages in respect of it.

Haseldine v. Hosken ([1933] 1 K.B. 822; 148 L.T. 510) and Beresford v. Royal Insurance Co., Ltd. ([1938] 2 All E.R. 602; [1938] A.C. 586; 158 L.T. 459), applied.

Tinline v. White Cross Insurance ([1921] 3 K.B. 327; 125 L.T. 632), James v. British General Insurance Co., Ltd. ([1927] 2 K.B. 311; 137 L.T. 156), Crage v. Fry (1903) (67 J.P. 240) and Cointat v. Myham & Son ([1913] 2 K.B. 220; 108 L.T. 556), distinguished.

[AS TO DAMAGES FOR CRIMINAL CONVICTION OWING TO DEFENDANT'S WRONGFUL ACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 118, para. 148; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 17, pp. 113, 114, Nos. 235, 236; and Vol. 35, p. 50, No. 455.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Colburn v. Patmore, (1834), 4 Tyr. 677; 1 Cr. M. & R. 73; 3 L.J.Ex. 317; 149 E.R. 99; 42 Digest 980, 111.
- (2) Leslie (R.), Ltd. v. Reliable Advertising and Addressing Agency, Ltd., [1915] 1 K.B. 652; 84 L.J.K.B. 719; 112 L.T. 947; 17 Digest 114, 236.
- (3) Haseldine v. Hosken, [1933] 1 K.B. 822; 102 L.J.K.B. 441; 148 L.T. 510; Digest Supp.
- (4) Beresford v. Royal Insurance Co., Ltd., [1938] 2 All E.R. 602; [1938] A.C. 586; 107 L.J.K.B. 464; 158 L.T. 459; Digest Supp.
- (5) Tinline v. White Cross Insurance, [1921] 3 K.B. 327; 90 L.J.K.B. 1118; 125 L.T. 632; 29 Digest 408, 3214.
- (6) James v. British General Insurance Co., Ltd., [1927] 2 K.B. 311; 96 L.J.K.B. 729; 137 L.T. 156; 71 Sol. Jo. 273; Digest Supp.
- (7) Crage v. Fry, (1903), 67 J.P. 240; 1 L.G.R. 253; 17 Digest 113, 235.
- (8) Cointat v. Myham & Son, [1913] 2 K.B. 220; 82 L.J.K.B. 551; 108 L.T. 556; 77 J.P. 217; 11 L.G.R. 760; 17 Digest 97, 123.
- (9) Simon v. Pawson and Leafs, Ltd., (1932), 38 Com. Cas. 151; 148 L.T. 154; Digest Supp.
- (10) Fitzgerald v. Leonard, (1893), 32 L.R.Ir. 675; 17 Digest 107, n.

ACTION for damages for breach of contract against the Golden Wine Co., Ltd., and for fraud and conspiracy against the other defendants, who were those principally concerned with the manufacture of wine sold by the company to the plaintiff. The company went into liquidation and the action against it was stayed. DENNING, J., dismissed the remaining claim on the general ground of public policy. The facts appear in the judgment.

F. Whitworth for the plaintiff.

L. Caplan for the defendant, Oestreicher.

E. Dennis Smith and D. R. Davis for the defendant, Grunberg.

A third defendant was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14. DENNING, J., read the following judgment. In 1944 there appeared on the market a quantity of so-called cocktails which contained methylated spirit and on that account were unfit for human consumption. The principal participators have been convicted in the criminal courts. This case is the outcome in the civil courts.

Mr. Askey, who was the wholesale merchant marketing the mixture, is the plaintiff. The Golden Wine Co., Ltd., which manufactured it, is the defendant, together with the individuals principally concerned in the manufacture. In October, 1943, the plaintiff, then trading as Gordon Products, was introduced to the Golden Wine Co., Ltd., which was run by three men named Oestreicher, Junger and Grunberg. Only Grunberg spoke English. The others understood a little English, but could not speak it intelligibly. The company had a ramshackle factory in the east end of London, where they professed to make wine. The plaintiff visited the factory and, as a result of discussions with the three men, he paid the company, on Dec. 20, 1943, the sum of £100 as a deposit for the manufacture of cocktails. From that time onward, a large amount of business was done between them. The company made the liquid and bottled it. The plaintiff supplied the labels for the bottles, which described the contents as "Red Lady" or "Paradise" cocktails and the proprietors as Gordon Products. The plaintiff had no warehouse of his own. He used to collect the cases of bottles from the factory of the Golden Wine Co., Ltd., and deliver it direct to the retailers to whom he sold it. He used to pay the Golden Wine Co., Ltd., 7s. 6d. a bottle. He would resell to retailers at 12s. 6d. a bottle. The retailers sold to the public at 15s. 9d. a bottle. He advertised it as being "in full strength." It was a great success. Intoxicating liquor was in short supply and there was a great demand for it. By the middle of 1944, the plaintiff had bought and paid for quantities to the value of £6,600.

Then there was a new development. The Customs and Excise officers visited the premises of the Golden Wine Co. They came to see whether duty had been paid on their products. It had not. While there, the officers examined the liquid that was there and found that it was contaminated with methylated spirit. The result was that the company and the three men were brought before the Old Street magistrate on Sept. 22, 1944. All pleaded Guilty. The company was fined £535 and £47 5s. costs for evasion of duty and for offences against the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, notably for selling and possessing wine to which methylated spirit had been added. Junger, who was the wine maker, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment and fined £325 and £26 5s. costs. Grunberg was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and fined £340 and £26 5s. costs. Oestreicher, who only pleaded Guilty to a customs offence, was fined £50 and £26 5s. costs. Junger and Grunberg appealed to quarter sessions against their sentences of imprisonment, and they were allowed out on bail pending appeal. When news of the conviction came to the plaintiff's ears, he went to the company's premises and saw all the three men. They assured him that the conviction had nothing to do with the wine they manufactured for him and that the contaminated liquid had been destroyed. He then accepted that assurance and went on dealing with them. In the next three months he did a much larger business than before. The price had gone up to 9s. a bottle and he bought and paid for quantities to the value of £9,300 in three months. By that time a well known firm had objected to his using the name "Gordon Products" and he changed the name to Dallington Wine Products. The appeals of Junger and Grunberg against sentence were heard in November, 1944, and were dismissed. So those two men went to prison, but the other man, Oestreicher, remained out and carried on the company's business. The plaintiff continued his purchases, paying large cheques and receiving large supplies.

In January, 1945, this very profitable business came to an end. The plaintiff was himself summoned in the justices' courts at Aylesbury, Acton, Guildford and Chelmsford for offences under the Food and Drugs Act, such as selling cocktails containing methylated spirit, selling cocktails unfit for human consumption, selling cocktails not of the nature, substance and quality demanded, unlawfully giving labels and publishing advertisements calculated to mislead, and for being the person responsible for offences by retailers. The summonses were heard in March and April, 1945. When the first summonses were heard, he pleaded Not Guilty, but was found Guilty. On the later summonses, he pleaded Guilty. In all, he was fined £316 15s. and £83 costs. In consequence of these convictions, all the bottles then in the hands of retailers were returned and the plaintiff had to refund them the amount they had paid him, namely, £1,735 17s. 8d. The Press also refused to accept advertisements from him. So his loss was severe. He now seeks to get it all back in this action. He claims against the company damages for breach of contract, and against the three men damages for fraud and conspiracy. The company is now in liquidation and the action is stayed against it. Junger agreed to give evidence for the plaintiff on condition that the plaintiff would not proceed further against him, so the action is not effective against him. Grunberg and Oestreicher remain the only effective defendants. Even Grunberg is in America and did not appear personally at the trial, so I only saw Junger and Oestreicher.

Inasmuch as the action is stayed against the company, I have only to consider the claims in tort against the personal defendants. They were not, of course, liable for the company's breach of contract, nor for inducing that breach, but they are liable for their own torts. They were clearly under a duty to exercise care and to be honest in their manufacture of these cocktails. They owed this duty to every person who might be concerned in the selling or consumption of them, including the plaintiff. They broke that duty. I find that they were all three guilty of a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, namely, to put methylated spirit into this liquid and that, as a result of that conspiracy, the plaintiff did, in fact, suffer the damage that he claims. The important question in the case, however, is whether in law he can recover in respect of that damage. He was himself guilty of criminal offences in selling this liquid to the retailers. Is he to be allowed to come to this court and ask to be indemnified against the consequences? He was not himself a party to the conspiracy, but I am satisfied he was much to blame in that he did not take proper steps to see that the liquid was fit for sale. Even after he knew that three men had been convicted and two of them had gone to prison, he went on dealing with the third one and dealt on a large scale. He did not even have the stuff analysed. He was, I find, tempted by the large profits he was making to take a risk on it. It suited him to accept the assurances of these men at their face value without taking any steps to verify them. This view of the facts is confirmed by the convictions which were recorded against him. If he could have proved that he had used all due diligence and that he had no reason to believe that the liquid was contaminated, he would have had a defence to the summonses and he could have thrown the responsibility on to the company and the three other defendants: see the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, ss. 83, 84 and 86. But he did not prove it. He did not even bring the Golden Wine Co., and the three men before the justices' court, as he might have done under s. 83 of the Act, if he alleged that the contravention was due to their act or default. In these circumstances, the conclusion is irresistible that, although he was not a party to the conspiracy, he was guilty of gross negligence.

What are the consequences of this finding? I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiff cannot recover any of the fines imposed on him by the justices, nor the costs he was ordered to pay, nor his own costs. Nor can he recover damages for the consequences of the convictions so far as they affected his reputation. It is, I think, a principle of our law that the punishment inflicted by a criminal court is personal to the offender, and that the civil courts will not entertain an action by the offender to recover an indemnity against the consequences of that punishment. In every criminal court the punishment is fixed having regard to the personal responsibility of the offender in respect of the offence, to the necessity for deterring him and others from doing the same thing again, to reform him, and, in cases such as the present, to make him and others more careful in their dealings, to make him choose with more discrimination his suppliers or his servants, and to make him more exact and scrupulous in his supervision of the matters for which he is responsible. All these objects would be nullified if the offender could recover the amount of the fine and costs from another by process of the civil courts. This was the view expressed by LORD LYNTHURST, C.B., in Colburn v. Patmore (1) and by ROWLATT, J., in R. Leslie, Ltd. v. Reliable Advertising and Addressing Agency, Ltd. (2).

More difficulty exists with regard to the payments of £1,735 17s. 8d. by the plaintiff to the retailers in respect of contaminated goods which were returned. There are three reasons why the plaintiff had to repay the retailers:—(i) the fact that the liquid was contaminated by the addition of methylated spirit; (ii) the fact that the plaintiff had sold the contaminated liquid and had been negligent in not discovering that it was not contaminated, and (iii), the fact that the plaintiff had, in consequence been convicted of the offence. If he had never been prosecuted and the inevitable publicity attaching to it had thus been avoided, it is very possible that in many cases the contamination would not have been discovered by the retailers or consumers. The contamination was not apparent in the small doses in which cocktails are usually taken. It was only apparent by its ill effects when the cocktails were taken copiously. If it were not for these prosecutions, therefore, the plaintiff might have escaped without repaying the money. Thus, two out of the three cases for the repayments (being the second and third clauses above) were due to his own criminality, not in the sense of a positively wicked mind, but in the sense of a grossly negligent one—negligence which the legislature considered so serious that it should be regarded as a crime. Does that debar him from claiming damages from those guilty of the contamination? I think it does. Speaking generally, public policy requires that no right of indemnity or contribution or damages should be enforced in respect of expenses which the plaintiff has incurred by reason of being compelled to make reparation for his own crime. That principle is to be gathered from Haseldine v. Hosken (3) and Beresford

v. Royal Insurance Co., Ltd. (4). This case comes within that principle. The money which the plaintiff had to repay the retailers was reparation for his own crime, that is, the crime of selling contaminated liquor without lawful excuse.

I am aware that in Tinline v. White Cross Insurance (5) and James v. British General Insurance Company, Ltd. (6), both cases of motor manslaughter, the judges held that policies against third-party liability were enforceable, but, as GREER, L.J., pointed out in Haseldine v. Hosken (3) ([1933] 1 K.B. 838), in those cases the act to be indemnified was one intended by the law that people should insure against. In cases such as the present, however, the policy of the law is different. The wholesale merchant is a critical link in the chain of distribution from manufacturer to consumer. If he is careful in selecting his manufacturer and in seeing that the goods are pure, it will be a great help in ensuring that the public receive wholesome goods. If he is careless and accepts anything that is offered for the sake of quick and large profits, there is a real risk of contaminated food being distributed. So important is this that the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, makes his conduct criminal unless he can prove that he acted with due diligence. That affords a guide to the public policy which the civil courts should adopt. If it appears in the course of the case, as it does here, that the plaintiff was plainly guilty of the criminal offence of selling contaminated food without lawful excuse and has no defence to it, then the court, whether the point is pleaded or not, will not assist him to recover the expenses to which he has been put by reason of his own crime. It leaves all those in the chain of distribution who are guilty of a crime to the strong arm of the criminal law and will not assist them to adjust their money claims between one another. If they were allowed to be negligent and yet recover damages, it would offer an inducement to them to turn a blind eye to contamination. Take the present case. The £300 or £400 which the plaintiff had to pay in fines and costs is a trifling sum compared to the large profits he has made. If he is left himself to bear the loss of the £1,735 refunded to the retailers, it will tend to reduce the profits and thus be an added deterrent.

There are two decisions of judges of first instance which may appear at first sight to conflict with the law as I have stated it, namely, the decision of KENNEDY, J., in Crage v. Fry (7) and of COLERIDGE, J., in Cointat v. Myham & Son (8). In neither of them, however, was the question of public policy considered. Moreover, in Crage v. Fry (7) the judge found that the plaintiff had no reason to suspect that the fish was not fit for the ordinary purposes of food, and the judgment in Cointat v. Myham & Son (8) was set aside on appeal on another ground and a new trial ordered. In a subsequent case, SCRUTTON, L.J., said that he disagreed with the reasoning of COLERIDGE, J.: see Simon v. Pawson and Leafs, Ltd. (9) (38 Com. Cas. 158). He said that he preferred the reasoning of HOLMES, J., in the Irish case of Fitzgerald v. Leonard (10), which seems to me to be in accordance with the principle I have stated. I would only add that, in so far as KENNEDY, J., and HOLMES, J., gave damages in respect of goods which were worthless and had to be destroyed, that is a different matter. The crime which I have considered is the crime of selling contaminated food to third persons without lawful excuse, which is a crime of such a character that, in my judgment, no person is entitled to reparation for the expenses to which he has been put by reason of it. This action is, therefore, dismissed, but I shall not give the defendants any costs. They, too, will not get any assistance from this court.

Action dismissed without costs.

Solicitors: Russell & Arnholz (for the plaintiff); Kingsley, Napley & Co. (for the defendant Oestreicher); Leonard Tubbs & Co. (for the defendant Grunberg).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILSON v. FYNN AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), April 22, 23, 26, 1948.]

Lease—Forfeiture—Breach of covenant—Premises not to be sub-let without landlord's previous consent—Consent not to be unreasonably withheld—Reasonableness—Landlord to have time for consideration—Lessees not to permit premises "to be used otherwise than as offices for the purpose of their business"—Sub-lessees' business different from that of lessees. A

W., a chartered accountant, was the tenant of the second and third floors of a building. In 1945 he sub-let the second floor to G., another chartered accountant. In 1946 G. became a partner in a firm of chartered accountants, S. & Co., and obtained a sub-lease of the second floor for his firm. The lease, dated Feb. 15, 1947, was from Aug. 1, 1946, to Michaelmas Day, 1949, and contained (inter alia) the following covenants by the tenants: (a) not to make alterations without consent, (b) not to use or permit the premises or any part thereof to be used except for offices "for the purpose of their business," and (c) not to underlet without the previous written consent of the landlord, "such consent however not to be unreasonably withheld in respect of a respectable and responsible tenant," and there was a proviso for re-entry. There was a collateral agreement in regard to various facilities to be enjoyed by the parties on each other's premises. In June, 1947, S. & Co., obtained other offices for themselves, and on Aug. 21, they wrote to W. stating that they were giving "temporary occupation" in the premises leased from W. to T., a client of theirs, and hoped that the arrangement would not be unsatisfactory to W. W. was away at the time and his representative replied to S. & Co. on Aug. 22, informing them of that fact, and requesting them not to part with possession of the premises until W. had had an opportunity of considering the matter. S. & Co. replied on Aug. 23, stating that the matter was urgent and that their client would be moving in on Aug. 25. On Aug. 25, T. & Co., Ltd., who were manufacturers of kitchen equipment, moved into the premises and immediately changed the lock on the outer door so that the facilities provided for in the collateral agreement could not be carried out. W. claimed possession of the premises on the ground of breaches of covenant:— B C D E

HELD: (i) while, if the lessees during the period of the lease had changed the nature of their business, they would not have been in breach of the covenant not to permit the premises to be used "otherwise than as offices for the purpose of their business," that covenant meant otherwise than for the purpose of the business for the time being of the lessees or their assigns, namely, that of chartered accountants, and the lessees were in breach of that covenant. F

(ii) the proviso that the landlord's consent to an underletting was not to be unreasonably withheld in respect of a respectable and responsible tenant did not do away with the necessity for asking for the consent and giving the landlord a reasonable time to consider the matter, and, accordingly, the lessees were in breach of the covenant not to underlet without obtaining the landlord's permission. G

(iii) the landlord was entitled under the lease to refuse his consent to the underletting, even though there was no dispute that the proposed sub-tenants were respectable and responsible tenants, and, in deciding whether or not the landlord's consent was unreasonably withheld, the court was entitled to consider not merely the terms of the lease but also the collateral agreement between the parties when the lease was made. H In the circumstances of the case, the landlord was justified in withholding his consent and the tenants were not entitled to relief from forfeiture.

Observations of VISCOUNT DUNEDIN in Tredegar v. Harwood ([1929] A.C. 72, 78), applied.

Case referred to :

(1) Tredgar v. Harwood, [1929] A.C. 72 ; 97 L.J.Ch. 392 ; 139 L.T. 642 ; Digest Supp.

ACTION for possession of premises on the ground of breaches of covenant by the tenants (a) in sub-letting the premises without the previous consent of the landlord, and (b) in allowing them to be used otherwise than as offices for chartered accountants, the business of the tenants.

A The landlord, a chartered accountant, was the tenant of the second and third floors of 28a, Devonshire Street, Marylebone, London. In 1945, his own business being insufficient to enable him to occupy both floors, he let the second floor to a Colonel George, another chartered accountant, with the intention that he and Colonel George should work in collaboration. In 1946, Colonel George became a partner in a firm of chartered accountants, Smallfield, Lindsay, Fynn, Fitzhugh, Tillett & Co., and obtained a lease of the second floor for this firm. The lease, dated Feb. 15, 1947, was from Aug. 1, 1946, to Michaelmas Day, 1949, and there was a collateral agreement in regard to various facilities to be enjoyed by the parties on each other's premises. The lease contained covenants by the tenants not to make alterations without consent, not to permit the premises to be used except for the purpose of their business, and not to assign or underlet the premises without the consent of the landlord, whose consent was not to be unreasonably withheld. In June, 1947, the tenants, Smallfield & Co., obtained other offices for themselves, and on Aug. 21, they wrote to the landlord stating that they were giving "temporary occupation" of the premises leased from him to Mr. Julius Trup, a client of theirs, and that "we shall be glad to hear that this arrangement will not be unsatisfactory to you." The landlord was away at the time, and on Aug. 22 his representative replied to the tenants, informing them of that fact and requesting them not to part with possession of the premises until the landlord had had an opportunity of considering the matter. The letter also said that, as the landlord was not the head lessor, "it is not within his power to agree to the suggested arrangement without first obtaining the consent of the head lessor, and for this purpose he will require . . . a note of the precise use to which the premises are to be put by Mr. Trup. Such use will, of course, be subject to the same conditions as stated in the head lease and in your firm's sub-lease." On Aug. 23, the tenants wrote stating that the matter was urgent and that their client would be moving in on Aug. 25. On Aug. 25, Messrs. Nathaniel Trup & Co., manufacturers of kitchen equipment, entered into occupation of the premises, and after a day or two they changed the lock on the outer door, so that the facilities provided for in the collateral agreement could not be carried out. When the landlord returned on Sept. 1, 1947, his solicitors gave notice, under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, specifying the breaches of the lease which they contended had occurred and requiring them to be remedied within seven days as otherwise proceedings would be commenced. The breaches were not remedied by Sept. 30, 1947, and the landlord brought this action. The tenants claimed that, on the true construction of the lease, there had been no breaches of covenant, and, in a counterclaim, applied for relief from forfeiture under the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146 (2). DENNING, J., held that there had been breaches of covenant and that, in the circumstances of the case, the tenants were not entitled to relief.

Roy Wilson for the landlord.

Comyn for the tenants.

H DENNING, J., [after stating the facts] : Questions have arisen whether there have been breaches of the agreement, and whether, if there are breaches, there should be relief or not. The lease, dated Feb. 15, 1947, and made between the landlord and the four partners in Smallfield & Co., is for just over three years, and in it the lessees covenant not to make alterations without consent, and [by cl. 9] not to use or permit the demised premises or any part thereof to be used except for offices for the purpose of their business. Clause 13 is also important :

Not to assign, underlet or part with the possession of the demised premises without the previous written consent of the lessor, such consent however not to be unreasonably withheld in respect of a respectable and responsible tenant.

There is the usual proviso for re-entry.

The first clause with which I have to deal is cl. 9 whereby the lessees covenant :

Not to use or permit the premises to be used otherwise than as offices for the purpose of their business.

Counsel for the landlord says that that covenant has been broken because the business of Trup & Co., Ltd., is the business of making kitchen equipment, whereas the business of the lessees is that of chartered accountants. The clause gives rise to difficulties of construction. The material words are "for the purpose of their business." Counsel for the landlord put it as high as to say that that means for the purposes of the lessees' business at the date of the lease. I think that that is too narrow a view. I think that, if the lessees during the period of the lease changed the nature of their business from chartered accountants to some other business, they would not be in breach of that clause. The phrase does not mean the business of the original lessees as persons, because the covenant is for them and their assigns. If the firm has a change of partners, the phrase would include their business or that of their heirs or assigns. It does not, however, assume as wide a meaning as is contended for by counsel for the lessees. It seems to me the words, "for the purpose of their business," mean for the purpose of the business for the time being of the lessees or their successors or their assigns. If, however, the lessees or their successors or assigns wish to use the premises, or any part of them, or allow them to be used, for any other business, then they can only do so if they obtain the landlord's consent for the purpose. Throughout this case, the business of the lessees or their successors in title or assigns has been, and it still is, that of chartered accountants. The business of Nathaniel Trup & Co., Ltd., who are now in occupation under an underlease, is not the business of the lessees or their successors in title or their assigns. Therefore, it seems to me that for Smallfield & Co. to permit the demised premises to be used for the business of Trup & Co., Ltd., is a breach of the covenant in cl. 9 in the lease.

The next clause I have to consider is cl. 13, whereby the lessees were not to assign the demised premises without the consent of the lessor. In this case it is quite plain that on Monday, Aug. 25, 1947, Smallfield & Co. parted with the possession of the demised premises without the previous written consent of the lessor, and there was, therefore, a breach of that covenant. I bear in mind the proviso that such consent is not to be unreasonably withheld in respect of a respectable and responsible assignee or tenant. The proviso does not, however, do away with the necessity for the lessees to perform that part of the covenant with regard to obtaining the consent of the landlord, or, at any rate, asking for his consent, and giving him a reasonable time to consider the matter and to give or withhold his consent. In the letter dated Aug. 21, 1947, a Thursday, a Mr. Julius Trup is mentioned as the person suggested as occupier, some inquiries on behalf of the landlord were made on Aug. 22, 1947, and then on Monday, Aug. 25, 1947, Nathaniel Trup & Co., Ltd., were let into occupation. It seems to me that that was a plain breach of cl. 13 of the lease and the proper notice which was required by the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, was given on Sept. 1, 1947. The breach was not remedied by Sept. 30, 1947, when the writ was issued. In these circumstances, it seems plain to me that, at the date of the writ, the premises were liable to forfeiture.

The question then is whether or not I should give relief. I find that consent was not obtained nor was any reasonable time given with regard to the matter, but, nevertheless, if it were a case in which the landlord could not withhold his consent, then the breach might well be said to be a technical matter and I should certainly give relief. I have, therefore, to consider whether this is a case where the landlord could, or could not, withhold his consent. It is not in dispute that Trup & Co., Ltd., were respectable and responsible tenants. The question is whether the consent was unreasonably withheld, notwithstanding that fact. It is not sufficient, as seems to be thought by the lessees, for the assignees to be respectable and responsible. The landlord is still entitled to consider the matter, because there may be reasonable grounds on which he

A can withhold his consent, however respectable they may be. The personnel of the proposed sub-tenant, and the nature or character or the user are material matters which the landlord should have an opportunity of considering. It is contended by the landlord that he could reasonably withhold his consent, because, apart from the words in cl. 9 of the lease, there was the understanding with Colonel George when the matter was initiated that the second floor of the premises was to be occupied by chartered accountants or professional men, and, since the tenants of the two floors had to live in close proximity and share facilities common to both, the personnel of the sub-tenants was of the utmost importance. The landlord says that he was also entitled to consider the collateral agreement made at the time of the lease. On that part of the case it seems to me, following what VISCOUNT DUNEDIN said ([1929] A.C. 72, 78) in Tredegar v. Harwood (1), that reasonableness does not refer only to something which touches both parties to the lease, but should be read in a general sense. I do not think it is necessary to lay down specific grounds whether conduct is reasonable or unreasonable. The circumstances of each case must be considered, and, in considering that point, I am not confined to the evidence with regard to the construction of the lease, but am entitled to have regard to the understanding that was contemplated by the parties when the lease was instituted. In my judgment, cl. 9 of the lease does not permit the premises to be used otherwise than as offices for the purposes of the business of the lessees and their assigns, and that covenant largely goes to support the landlord's view as to the user. Having regard to the close proximity of the parties on these two floors and the necessity for having people of corresponding outlook, and in view of the collateral agreement made when Colonel George and his firm became lessees, this is, in my opinion, a case where the landlord could reasonably withhold his consent.

B On Nov. 7, 1947, after the writ had been served, Trup & Co., Ltd., made an agreement with the lessees from which it is plain that Trup & Co. were to go out of legal possession for a few days, while the lessees re-took possession. The lessees were, thereupon, going to inform the landlord that the breach had been remedied, and they would then apply for a fresh licence to grant a sub-tenancy to Trup & Co., Ltd. The agreement further provided that, if the lessees were satisfied that Trup & Co., Ltd., were respectable and responsible, then in 18 days Trup & Co., Ltd., were to be re-allowed into possession under a tenancy agreement by the lessees, whatever the landlord had to say on the matter, because it is expressly stated in that agreement that, if the licence to sub-let was not granted, then Trup & Co., Ltd., were to be let into possession of the premises. Indeed, in the notice which they gave to the landlord's solicitors, the lessees' solicitors said :

F We are advised that your client has no right to refuse to grant a licence to sub-let the premises in the case of a respectable and responsible sub-tenant. We have to give you notice that after Nov. 22, 1947, our clients will let Messrs. Nathaniel Trup & Co. into the premises.

The lessees are there misconstruing the clause of the lease, because it is not sufficient for the purpose for the sub-tenant to be respectable and responsible. The landlord is entitled to have time to consider whether or not he should give his consent, and the lessees are not entitled to sub-let without that consent if the landlord has not had an opportunity of considering the matter. How can they say that the landlord is unreasonably withholding his consent unless they know his reasons for so doing and what his grounds are ? In these circumstances it seems to me that the lessees were not interpreting their lease correctly in acting as they did and insisting that, in any event, they should be granted a licence, because they were omitting to take into consideration the very relevant word, "unreasonably." They were treating the lease as if the words were "not to be withheld," instead of "not to be unreasonably withheld." In some circumstances, the question whether the proposed sub-tenants are respectable and responsible may be all that matters, but in this case it is not. Many other matters (e.g., the personnel of the sub-tenants, their action in altering locks without leave, and their whole conduct in this matter) have to be considered in deciding whether it is reasonable or unreasonable to withhold consent, and it seems to me that, even apart from the terms of cl. 9 of the lease, the landlord acted reasonably in withholding his consent.

The result, therefore, is that there was a breach by the lessees in parting with the premises in August, 1947, and a further breach in November, 1947, in under-letting the premises without the consent of the landlord in circumstances in which the landlord could withhold his consent. The breach has been persisted in, and I see no reason on the facts of the case for saying that there should be relief. Accordingly, I give judgment for the plaintiff for possession and mesne profits from the date of the writ at £250 a year until delivery of possession with costs.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Underwood & Co. (for the landlord); Francis & Calder (for the tenants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH CELANESE, LTD. v. MONCRIEFF.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Somervell, L.J., and Vaisey, J.), May 11, 12, 13, 1948.]

Master and Servant—Invention—Agreement for inventions made during employment to become exclusive property of master—Servant trustee for master—Obligation of servant, after termination of employment, to procure patent protection for master in other countries—Effect of agreement terminating service agreement.

M. was employed by a company as a research chemist, his service agreement, dated Dec. 24, 1942, containing the following provisions. By cl. 4, M. agreed to treat as confidential the affairs of the company and not to divulge them during the period of his employment or for 5 years thereafter, and, by cl. 5, he agreed, so long as he was bound by the agreement, to communicate to the company all inventions or improvements which he might make or discover. Clause 5 further provided that all such inventions and improvements without payment should become the sole exclusive property of the company, which would give M. such remuneration in respect of them as it thought reasonable, and M. would, if required by the company, but at its cost, apply to obtain letters patent or other equivalent protection for such inventions or improvements in all such countries as the company might require, would vest such letters patent or other protection in the company or as it should direct, and would do all he could to help the company to obtain and maintain them. In 1943, M. made certain inventions for which letters patent in Great Britain were obtained. By an agreement made between the company and M., and contained in a letter dated June 29, 1945, the service agreement was "terminated" as from June 30, 1945. Clause 3 of the leaving agreement provided: "In consideration of the termination of the agreement and the release by the company from your duties thereunder, you hereby agree and undertake with the company as follows . . ." Clause 3 (a) was a repetition of cl. 4 of the service agreement and cl. 3 (b) was, with certain modifications, a repetition of cl. 6 of the service agreement, with the variation, in each case, that M.'s obligation thereunder should cease on June 30, 1950. There was, however, no clause in the leaving agreement dealing with the future of the subject-matter contained in cl. 5 of the service agreement, i.e., in regard to the facilitating of the obtaining of patents for inventions made by M. during his employment by the company. In 1947 the company asked M. to assist it to obtain patent protection for the inventions in foreign countries, but he refused on the ground that his duty to do so under cl. 5 of the service agreement had been terminated by the leaving agreement:—

HELD: the effect of the service agreement was to set up by contract the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust in respect of the inventions, and, since M. was under a continuing obligation to hold the inventions as the sole exclusive property of the company and would not be fulfilling that obligation unless he was prepared to give the company the benefit of obtaining the patents, the leaving agreement did not terminate his obligation to execute the documents necessary to enable the company to secure patent protection in foreign countries. The obligations in regard to facilitating the obtaining of patents, which were set out in cl. 5 of the service agreement, were mere machinery for giving effect to the grant of the sole exclusive property in the inventions which the company was to have, and, therefore, express reference to them in the leaving agreement was not necessary, since they would have been implied by law in the undertaking by M. that the invention should be the sole exclusive property of the company. The object of the use of the words "termination" and "duties" in the leaving agreement was merely to put the parties in the same position (with slight modifications) as they would have been put if the service agreement had come to an end by effluxion of time.

Vokes, Ltd. v. Heather (1945) (62 R.P.C. 135), considered. Triplex Safety Glass Co. v. Scorah ([1937] 4 All E.R. 693), explained.

Decision of ROMER, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 123), affirmed.

[AS TO AGREEMENTS BETWEEN MASTER AND SERVANT IN REGARD TO INVENTIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 24, p. 537, para. 1028; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 538-540, Nos. 40-58, and Supplements.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Vokes, Ltd. v. Heather, (1945), 62 R.P.C. 135; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Triplex Safety Glass Co. v. Scorah, [1937] 4 All E.R. 693; [1938] Ch. 211; 107 L.J.Ch. 91; 157 L.T. 576; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of ROMER, J., dated Dec. 19, 1947, and reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 123, in an action by the plaintiff company for a declaration that the defendant was a trustee for the company of certain inventions and for orders on the defendant to assign to the company his interest in applications for letters patent for the inventions in some of the Dominions and in certain foreign countries. ROMER, J., held that, on the true construction of a service agreement between the company and the defendant, the defendant was the trustee for the company of the inventions, notwithstanding that the service agreement had been determined and the defendant had left the company's employment, and, accordingly, he was bound to execute the documents in question. The defendant appealed, but the Court of Appeal now dismissed his appeal. The facts and the relevant clauses of the service agreement and of an agreement to terminate the service agreement appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Shelley, K.C., and H. J. B. Brewis for the defendant.

Salt, K.C., and Teague for the plaintiff company.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: The controversy which has given rise to this appeal is due to the fact that the parties have not succeeded in expressing their contractual wishes in as clear and precise a manner as might, perhaps, have been desired, but, after a full and careful argument, I have come clearly to the conclusion that the decision of ROMER, J., was right and that the reasons that he gives are the right ones. The plaintiff company desired in the action to obtain the execution by the defendant of certain documents required for the purpose of making patent applications in various countries of the world. The proposed applications related to certain inventions for which patents had already been obtained in this country and, I think, the United States of America and Canada. The inventions had been made by the defendant when he was in the service of the plaintiff company and it is not disputed that, under the terms of the current service agreement, which was dated Dec. 24, 1942, he would have been liable to facilitate the applications for these foreign patents if the agreement had still been on foot. The difficulty arises from the fact that on June 29, 1945, an agreement was come to (which has been conveniently referred to as "the leaving contract") which terminated the service agreement, and the question is whether, on the true construction of that leaving agreement, read in its application to the service agreement and the nature of the subject-matter and other relevant surrounding circumstances, the defendant is freed from the obligation to facilitate the foreign applications which lay on him under the service agreement and would, undoubtedly, have had to be carried out by him if that agreement had not been put an end to.

The service agreement of 1942 took the place of an earlier service agreement of a similar character and cl. 15 of the 1942 service agreement provided that it should supersede as from June 1, 1943, the earlier agreement, which was dated June 13, 1938. It was thought that the inventions in question in this case had been discovered by the defendant during the currency of the 1942 agreement. The only thing, apparently, that was known by the plaintiff company was that the inventions had been made in 1943, but it so turned out that the inventions, or some of them, were made in the early part of 1943, at which time the 1938 agreement was still current. Nothing, however, in practice results from that, for the following reason. Counsel for the plaintiff company said that, the whole action having been framed and fought on the footing that the inventions were discovered during the currency of the 1942 agreement, he did not propose to argue that the question before us was governed otherwise than by the leaving agreement. In other words, we are to do what was obviously done in the court below, i.e., we are to treat the obligations, if any, of the defendant in respect of those inventions as having arisen under the 1942 agreement and having been cancelled or got rid of, or not cancelled or not got rid of, as the case may be, by the leaving agreement.

The defendant was employed as a research chemist under the service agreement which was to remain in force for a period of three years. The company was to have the right to terminate the agreement on May 31, 1946, by giving six months' notice in writing. If it was not terminated, it was then to run for a further three years, and so on. The agreement contains various provisions designed to protect the company in respect of matters connected with the defendant's duties. He was engaged to perform such duties as might be allocated to him by the managing directors of the company, and was to devote the whole of his time to such work as the managing directors might require. Then come three clauses, cl. 4, 5 and 6, all of which are relevant to the question which we have to decide and one of which, cl. 5, is most particularly relevant. Clause 4 deals with the confidential affairs of the company, their processes and so forth, which the defendant agrees to treat as confidential and undertakes not to divulge during the period of his employment or for five years thereafter. Clause 6 restrains the defendant during the period of his employment and for five years thereafter from being engaged or interested in a competing business without the written consent of the company, with the proviso that, if the company were to refuse his request for its consent, it was to pay him compensation or consideration, to be calculated in accordance with a formula there laid down. Clause 5 is as follows :

The employed agrees so long as he is bound by any of the provisions of this agreement to at once communicate to the company all inventions or improvements of every nature which he may make or discover or may control or be in a position to communicate. Such inventions and improvements shall without payment become the sole exclusive property of the company if they desire to have them and the company shall give to the employed in respect of any such discovery invention or improvement whether patented or not such remuneration as they in their absolute discretion shall think reasonable. And the employed will if required by the company so to do but at the cost of the company apply for through patent agents or others nominated by the company and do all acts necessary to obtain letters patent or other equivalent protection for the said inventions or improvements in all such countries as the company may require and will vest such letters patent or other equivalent protection in the company or as they shall direct . . .

Then comes a provision that the company may use the name of the employed for the purpose of obtaining patents. He undertakes to render all possible assistance in obtaining and helping the company to obtain and maintain patents and not to disclose or give any information in respect of such inventions except as the company may direct.

The argument on behalf of the defendant may be summarised in this way. The leaving agreement, it is said, put an end to all obligations of the defendant under the service agreement, and one of the obligations under the service agreement so terminated was to do acts necessary to obtain foreign patents. Counsel for the defendant submitted that the learned judge had based himself on a wrong principle. That wrong principle, he says, was that there existed side by side with the contractual obligations of the defendant a different, separate and independent obligation arising from a relationship of trust, not based on the contract and not arising out of it. I do not think that the comment of counsel for the defendant in any way does justice to the judgment of the learned judge, which to me seems to be quite clear and to avoid any such erroneous statement of the law. It was said in this court in Vokes, Ltd. v. Heather (1) that the obligations of confidence in the case of master and servant were based on the contract of employment—either on the express terms of such a contract or on the terms which the law would imply having regard to the relationship of the parties and to the subject-matter with which the contract was concerned. Of course, nothing that was said in that case was in any way intended to suggest that the contract might not of itself and by its own force create a trusteeship in the employed person. The court merely said (in answer to argument to the contrary effect addressed to it) that there cannot exist side by side in a contract of employment two quite separate obligations, one arising from the contract and the other disconnected from the contract and arising, not by virtue of the contract, but by virtue of some equitable doctrine. Counsel for the defendant suggested that the principle there laid down was different from something which had been said by FARWELL, J., in Triplex Safety Glass Co. v. Scrorah (2). That, in my opinion, is a misreading of what FARWELL, J., said. FARWELL, J., certainly found a relationship of trust in that case, but he found it, not as something independent of the contract of employment, but as something which arose out of the unwritten contract of employment and having, therefore, a contractual basis. That case is entirely consistent with the decision of this court in Vokes, Ltd. v. Heather (1). Not only did FARWELL, J., not fall into the error of which counsel for the defendant accuses him, but the learned judge in the present case did not fall into that error either. In the present case, ROMER, J., referred to the Triplex case (2) for one purpose and one purpose only—as confirming the view that he himself took that what is described as an invention in the service agreement in this case was a subject-matter susceptible of a relationship of trustee and cestui que trust. Beyond that he did not use the Triplex case (2). He found that the effect of the service agreement was to set up by contract the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust in respect of these inventions. I do not read his judgment as in any way finding the existence of some relationship other than that which depended on and arose from the contract itself.

I will now examine the leaving agreement. It was entered into, apparently, because the parties had in some way come to a difference of opinion with one another. It provides as follows. Clause 1 says that it is mutually agreed “that your service agreement dated Dec. 24, 1942, be and it is hereby terminated as from June 30, 1945.” I call attention to the word “terminated.” Clause 2 provides for compensation for loss of office. Clause 3 is very important. It runs as follows :

In consideration of the termination of the agreement and the release by the company from your duties thereunder, you hereby agree and undertake with the company as follows . . .

Then come two lettered paragraphs (a) and (b). Paragraph (a) is a reproduction, with a variation which I will mention, of cl. 4 of the service agreement, which deals with the keeping secret of confidential information belonging to the company. The variation is that, whereas cl. 4 of the service agreement did not, and, indeed, could not, give a precise date for the life of the obligation of confidence, para. (a) of cl. 3 of the leaving agreement inserted the period of five years from July 1, 1945. That corresponds to what in the service agreement was described as five years after the period of the employment. Paragraph (b) gives the defendant the consent of the company to accept a particular engagement with a named company, but imposes on him an obligation, similar to that imposed by cl. 6 of the service agreement, not to accept other employment save with the company's consent. Refusal of that consent was to entitle the defendant to compensation or consideration, as had been provided by cl. 6 of the service agreement for a similar situation. Paragraph (b) however, although in substance it reproduces cl. 6, differs from it in three respects—(i) it gives the company's consent to a particular named employment; (ii) it gives the limit during which the obligation of the defendant not to accept employment without consent is to last, that limit being five years from the date of the leaving agreement, i.e., June 30, 1950, as in the case of para. (a); (iii) it fixes in terms of pounds, shillings and pence the compensation to be paid by the company in the event of their refusing leave to the defendant to engage in another employment. Under cl. 6 of the service agreement that compensation had been left to be determined by the formula there laid down.

I make particular mention of those two paragraphs (a) and (b), because they have an important bearing on the argument, and the argument based on them is a serious one, deserving of careful consideration. What is said is this. Here in the service agreement were three particular clauses, cl. 4, 5 and 6. In the leaving agreement cl. 3 (a) takes care for the future of the subject-matter intended to be protected by cl. 4 of the service agreement, and cl. 3 (b) of the leaving agreement similarly takes care for the future of the subject-matter intended to be taken care of by cl. 6 of the service agreement. Where is the corresponding clause to take care for the future of the subject-matter covered by cl. 5, viz., the facilitating of the obtaining of patents, if I may use that comprehensive phrase to cover all the obligations expressed in that respect in cl. 5? It is said that the fact that no such obligations under cl. 5 are preserved for the future, as had been the case with the obligations under cl. 4 and 6, shows that the parties did not intend that the obligations under cl. 5 should be continued after the date when the leaving agreement became operative. The argument is, at first sight, no doubt, an attractive one, but, in my opinion, it cannot prevail when certain fundamental considerations are borne in mind. Clause 5 of the service agreement is a very special clause. It deals with something of an entirely different character from what is dealt with by cl. 4 and 6—something which prima facie would belong to the employee. It provides that the inventions or improvements which the employed shall make are, if the company so desire, to be the sole exclusive property of the company. Clause 5, therefore, purports to deal with property which is going to belong to the company and property which obviously will be in the possession of the defendant, in the sense that the invention or the improvement may consist of something which he may have committed to paper, but, whatever it is, it is a thing which has a real and true existence. It may be in the shape of something committed to a piece of paper or a formula in his notebook or something in his head, but it is to be the exclusive property of the company. That is what I mean by saying that cl. 5 is dealing with a very different subject-matter, because it is providing for the transfer to the company of something which started by being the property of the servant, or, at any rate, in his possession and under his control.

A great deal of argument has turned on the nature of the obligations imposed by cl. 5 of the service agreement. It is said by counsel for the plaintiff company that cl. 5 is a contract under which the employee agrees to assume the duties of a trustee in respect of the inventions or improvements. I should think myself that the phrase "trustee" is not a perfectly accurate one, for the reason that "inventions and improvements" may not be property of such a character as that to which one usually finds a trust attaching, but the phrase is a convenient one because the obligations of the defendant, when he undertakes that his inventions shall be the sole exclusive property of the company, are, as it seems to me, analogous to the obligations of a person who declares himself a trustee of a more tangible piece of property. He must do everything necessary, I should have thought, to place the invention, the sole exclusive property of which the company is to have, fully and freely at the disposal of the company, with everything that that entails. It imports a negative obligation. He may not, any more than any other trustee may make use of trust property, make use of the invention for his own benefit. He must make the subject-matter of the trust (if I may use that word) available to the fullest extent to the beneficiary for whom he holds it and no one else. If cl. 5 had stopped there, the effect of it would, I think, have been that any invention and improvement made by the defendant during the currency of the service agreement would automatically have become, as between him and the company, the exclusive property of the company, provided that the company desired to have it, and, in the present case, the company did admittedly desire, and express their desire, to have the inventions and improvements with which we are concerned. The contract, however, does not stop there. It goes on to express the obligations under which the employed is to be in connection with his obligation to hold inventions and improvements as the sole exclusive property of the company. The particular obligation which it is now sought to enforce is the obligation to facilitate the obtaining of patents. Speaking for myself, I should have thought that, even without the express reference to those matters in this clause, the undertaking that the inventions should be the sole exclusive property of the company would have imported the obligation to facilitate the applications for those patents, but, in this agreement, the parties have set it out expressly.

Counsel for the defendant is perfectly right in saying that here are express undertakings, detailed and specifically enumerated, of the obligations under which the employed is put in respect of the obtaining of patents for inventions that he has made. Now, says counsel for the defendant (and this is the point of his argument), the leaving agreement puts an end in terms to the duties of the defendant, among the duties of the defendant is the duty to facilitate the grant of patents, and, therefore, he is relieved of any duty to sign patent applications as he was requested to do and has been ordered to do in this case. It will be seen that the real solution of this case depends on a very few words contained in the leaving agreement, and the words on which counsel for the defendant particularly relies are the words "terminated" in cl. 1 of the leaving agreement and the word "duties" in cl. 3. Clause 1 provides that the service agreement "be and it is hereby terminated as from June 30, 1945." That, says counsel for the defendant, means that none of the obligations expressed in the service agreement is to be operative thereafter, save in so far as it is an obligation which had arisen previously to June 30, but had not been fulfilled. He agrees, as I understand him, that the word "terminated" has a limited meaning, in the sense that it does not destroy an obligation under the service agreement which had arisen, but had not been fulfilled. He says that the obligation to sign these documents had not arisen before June 30, because that obligation only arises when the defendant is required by the company to execute such documents. They did not require him to execute these documents until after June 30, 1945, and, therefore, says counsel for the defendant, that was a future obligation which had not arisen by June 30, and the effect of the termination of the service agreement is to prevent that obligation from ever arising. Clause 3 of the leaving agreement not merely repeats the word "termination," but it also contains a release by the company of the defendant from his duties under the service agreement. Counsel for the defendant contends that the obligation to facilitate the granting of patents is a duty expressed in contractual terms, all duties have been released, and, therefore, there is no longer any duty capable of arising in the future, after June 30, 1945. The argument has the merit of simplicity, but, in my opinion, it does not prevail. In dealing with a contract of this kind, it is most important, to my mind, to adhere to the rule that words must be read in relation to the subject-matter to which they are directed. The leaving agreement was directed to a rather complicated subject-matter, part of which was merely contractual, part of which related to confidential information belonging to the company and part of which provided for the formation of what I call (possibly by analogy, but I think sufficiently for this purpose) the obligation of trusteeship imposed by the provision that the inventions and improvements should become the sole exclusive property of the company. Counsel for the defendant does, I believe, admit that certain obligations under cl. 5 continue after the termination of the service agreement by the leaving agreement. He admits that these inventions and improvements are not things that the defendant is entitled to use for himself. He admits (although he declines to use the word "trusteeship") a continuing obligation for all time to hold these inventions and improvements as the sole exclusive property of the company. He admits that the defendant is not entitled to communicate the inventions to anybody else (the obligation not to disclose any such invention being an obligation expressly mentioned in cl. 4 of the service agreement). Counsel for the defendant, therefore, cannot construe the word "terminated" as meaning that all legal relationships between the parties are to come to an end. He quite clearly admits that certain legal relationships continue. The obligation to hold the inventions as the sole exclusive property of the company is a continuing obligation; the obligation not to make use of the inventions for his own purpose is a continuing obligation; the obligation not to disclose to anybody else is a continuing obligation. On his own admission, therefore, counsel for the defendant is bound to put a very important limitation on what might otherwise have been the meaning of the word "terminated."

His argument does not, however, rest there, because there is the word "duties" and the more attractive part of his argument is, I think, based on his interpretation of that word. In the context and in relation to the subject-matter, the word is not, in my opinion, one which must have one meaning attributed to it and one meaning only. Quite clearly, from what I have said, on the admission of counsel for the defendant, certain duties are continuing, because, whatever he may say of the obligation of non-disclosure, the obligation not to use the inventions for the defendant's own purposes and the obligation to hold them as the sole exclusive property of the company are duties and they are continuing. Counsel for the defendant, therefore, is bound to admit, as I see it, that the word "duties" cannot apply to every legal obligation arising under the service agreement. Therefore, he is admitting that it has to have a more circumscribed application. Turning back for a moment to cl. 5, I have already explained part of what, I think, is the effect of it, namely, that it is dealing with the vesting in the company of a beneficial interest in something which has had its origin in the brain of the inventor. The clause provides means and machinery for getting the full fruit and benefit of that invention into the ownership of the company. The provisions for facilitating the obtaining of patents are really nothing more than machinery for giving full effect to the exclusive property in the invention which the company is to have. It is quite clear, to my mind, that the defendant could not be fulfilling his obligation to give the company the sole exclusive property unless he was prepared to give them one of the benefits which flows from having made an invention, namely, the benefit of obtaining a patent, provided, of course, that the subject-matter is a patentable one. But the parties have not left those obligations to be read out of the words "sole exclusive property." They have set them out in terms. One finds in ordinary trust documents that the obligations of trustees are very often set out in numbered paragraphs, for the sake of convenience or for safety. Even if implied by law, they are, nevertheless, often set out in express terms. These provisions about facilitating the obtaining of patents have no meaning and no possible application save in connection with and for the purpose of the grant of the sole exclusive property. By themselves they have no existence because the subject-matter which gives them a content would be missing. The whole clause, in effect, is dealing with the method of getting the invention from its origin in the mind of the inventor into a patent in the name of the company.

The result of the argument of counsel for the defendant would be—as he frankly admits—that these inventions, being the exclusive property of the company and being inventions of which the defendant may never make use for his own purposes, cannot be effectively vested in the company by the obtaining of the patent rights because the defendant is entitled, so to speak, to stop the process which I have mentioned by which the invention starts in the inventor's brain and ends up in a patent in the name of the company. He is (says counsel) entitled to say: "That process I can stop in transitu, so to speak. Up to a point you, the company, are to retain the benefits of cl. 5, but when it comes to signing a document for the purpose of making effective the right of exclusive property, which I, the defendant, recognise, the operation of cl. 5 has been broken off." Of course, the parties may have so intended. The result would be, as I ventured to put it, to leave the defendant as a dog in the manger because he could, according to his argument, effectively prevent the company from obtaining the foreign patents, but might not obtain the foreign patents himself and could not make use of the invention. As I have said, the parties may have so intended—people intend curious things sometimes—but the question that we have to consider is whether they have said it. I am far from suggesting that the absurd nature of the result is by itself a sufficient reason for interpreting a written agreement in such a way as to avoid it—the language must entitle one so to do—but it is a factor which can be taken into consideration when you are dealing with the interpretation of words which are susceptible of a variety of meanings, as it appears to me that the words "terminated" and "duties" are susceptible in this leaving agreement. I regard these provisions about facilitating the obtaining of patents as mere machinery and nothing else, to give effect to the substantive matter, namely, the grant of the sole exclusive property which makes the company the beneficial owner of the invention. The argument that, though the reality exists, namely, the sole exclusive property, the machinery for giving effect to it has been sterilised and made incapable of working is not one that appeals to me, and I do not feel myself forced to adopt such an unreasonable construction of the words "terminated" and "duties." In my opinion, the object of the use of those words was in effect to put the parties in the same position as that in which they would have been if the service agreement had come to an end by effluxion of time, with the modification that paras. (a) and (b) of cl. 3 were inserted for the special reasons which I have mentioned. Counsel for the defendant agrees that, if the service agreement had come to an end by effluxion of time, the company's demand in this case would have been perfectly right and that the defendant would have remained under the obligation to sign these applications for the foreign patents. He says, however, that that is not the position, because the service agreement has not come to an end by effluxion of time, but has been prematurely killed by the leaving agreement. There, again, we get back to precisely the same question: Has the leaving agreement had such an effect, or has it, at any rate for this purpose, no greater effect than advancing contractually the time of the natural termination of the service agreement? In my opinion, it does no more than that, so far as the subject with which we are concerned is affected. In my opinion, the judgment of the learned judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree.

VAISEY, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Robbins, Olivey & Lake, agents for Longbothams, Horsfield & Fielding, Halifax (for the defendant); Linklaters & Paines (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

plied. KASLEFSKY v. KASLEFSKY.
50] 2 All E.R. 398.

SQUIRE v. SQUIRE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Evershed, L.JJ., and Hodson, J.) April 19, 20, 21, May 14, 1948.]

Divorce—Cruelty—Need of deliberation, malignity and intent—Conduct arising from illness.

The proposition that a person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts applies to acts amounting to cruelty in matrimonial causes. If a spouse commits acts amounting to cruelty, they constitute cruelty notwithstanding that the conduct was the consequence of the spouse's illness (not amounting to insanity) and not of any spiteful or malignant intention.

Per TUCKER, L.J.: I must not, however, be understood to suggest that, in considering whether or not a case of cruelty has been established, the state of health of the parties is not a relevant matter to be taken into consideration, together with all the other surrounding circumstances of the case, or that the same weight is to be attached to every act whether committed in sickness or in health, or that it is not the duty of each spouse to care for and tend and show forbearance towards the other in case of illness.

Per EVERSLED, L.J.: I do not say that proof of such an intention (i.e., a spiteful or malignant intention) may not be an important, or, in some cases, even an essential consideration.

Decision of FINNEMORE, J. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 529), reversed.

Dicta of SIR WILLIAM SCOTT in Holden v. Holden (1 Hag. Con. 453, 458) and Kirkman v. Kirkman (1 Hag. Con. 409, 410), of WILDE, J., in Hall v. Hall (3 Sw. & Tr. 347, 349), and of SHEARMAN, J., in Hadden v. Hadden (The Times, Dec. 5, 1919), approved.

Dictum of HENN COLLINS, J., in Astle v. Astle ([1939] 3 All E.R. 967, 971), not approved.

[AS TO LEGAL CRUELTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 649-654, paras. 954-962; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 281-293, Nos. 2513-2694.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.
- (2) Horton v. Horton, [1940] 3 All E.R. 380; [1940] P. 187; 109 L.J.P. 108; 163 L.T. 314; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Atkins v. Atkins, [1942] 2 All E.R. 637; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Russell v. Russell, [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 27 Digest 291, 2661.
- (5) Holden v. Holden, (1810), 1 Hag. Con. 453; 27 Digest 285, 2563.
- (6) Kirkman v. Kirkman, (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 409; 27 Digest 286, 2579.
- (7) Hall v. Hall, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 65; 9 L.T. 810; 27 Digest 323, 3022.
- (8) Hadden v. Hadden, (1919), The Times, Dec. 5.
- (9) Edwards v. Edwards, [1948] 1 All E.R. 157; [1948] L.J.R. 670.
- (10) Evans v. Evans, (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 35; 27 Digest 281, 2522.
- (11) Westmeath v. Westmeath, (1827), 2 Hag. Ecc. Supp. 1; on appeal 2 Hag. Ecc. Supp. 61; 27 Digest 339, 3196.
- (12) Curtis v. Curtis, (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 192; 27 L.J.P. & M. 73; 31 L.T.O.S. 272; affd., (1859), 4 Sw. & Tr. 234; 27 Digest 450, 4650.
- (13) Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas, [1947] 1 All E.R. 582; [1947] A.C. 484; [1948] L.J.R. 515; 176 L.T. 498.
- (14) Buchler v. Buchler, [1947] 1 All E.R. 319; [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of FINNEMORE, J., dated July 9, 1947, and reported [1947] 2 All E.R. 529, dismissing his petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's cruelty.

The conduct complained of was the consequence of the wife's illness, and did not consist of deliberate malignant acts done with the intention of injuring the husband. Inter alia it was that from 1940 to 1944, at whatever place the husband and the wife might be residing together, the wife systematically for nights on end prevented the husband from sleeping, demanding that he read to or conversed with her. If he showed signs of going to sleep, she unreasonably demanded that he should perform various menial services for her and/or stripped the clothes from his bed, and/or moved furniture about the room, and/or switched electric lights on in the room, whereby the husband was deprived of sleep and suffered in health. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal, holding unanimously that malignant intention was not an essential element of cruelty, and that (HODSON, J., dissenting) the judge in the court below had found cruelty in fact, or, if he had not so found, that the evidence clearly established cruelty.

Salmon, K.C., Roland Adams and Harold Cassel for the husband.

Theodore Turner, K.C., and R. J. A. Temple for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14. The following judgments were read:

TUCKER, L.J.: In this case FINNEMORE, J., has dismissed the husband's petition for divorce for his wife's cruelty on the ground that the conduct complained of was the consequence of the wife's illness and did not consist of deliberate malignant acts done with the intention of injuring the husband. In his judgment the learned judge states the argument for the husband on this part of the case in these words:

If I understand the argument of counsel for the husband it is this, that it does not matter if, in fact, the wife was making these demands on her husband; she must be taken to have appreciated the effect they had upon him, and intended the natural consequence, which is that he would suffer in health. She knew that night by night she was requiring him to read to her, and she knew, or ought to have known, that he could not sleep; and she knew or ought to have known therefore that sooner or later his health would break down under her conduct; and she was responsible and, therefore, she was cruel. The only defence to that—I am still taking the argument, as I understand it, for the husband—would be insanity, and short of that if she knew what she was doing, she must be presumed to have understood and intended the natural consequences.

Having dealt with the evidence, he says :

I, therefore, come to these conclusions on the facts. I think that the husband was required to do this reading. I think the wife did make a good many complaints. I am quite sure she was extremely difficult to live with and finally impossible, situated as they were, and I think further that the cause of all that was not a desire to hurt her husband, to whom she was devoted, as he was to her. I think she was an invalid, a very serious invalid, suffering pain, weakness and psychological or mental troubles, requiring many things to be done for her and unable to settle down to have things done for her except by her husband.

Later on he says :

I do not think that she ever deliberately set out, out of spite to her husband, to say : “ I am going to hurt him,” or as I mentioned before : “ As I can't sleep, he shan't.” I am quite satisfied about that.

The learned judge then referred to Astle v. Astle (1), Horton v. Horton (2) and Atkins v. Atkins (3), and expressed his view of the law as follows :

All these cases emphasise, as I think the cases before 1937 laid down, the fact that cruelty must be deliberate, malignant and intended—whatever precise words you like to use.

On this single ground he dismissed the petition.

In my opinion, the learned judge formed an erroneous view as to the effect of the authorities. One starts with the undisputed proposition that, generally speaking, a man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts. Is there any authority which decides that this is inapplicable to acts amounting to cruelty in matrimonial causes? No such case was cited to us. On the contrary, there is a considerable body of authority to the opposite effect. It is to be observed that in the well known and much quoted case of Russell v. Russell (4) it is nowhere suggested that motive is a necessary element in cruelty. More than 80 years earlier in Holden v. Holden (5) LORD STOWELL (as he later became) had used this language (1 Hag. Con. 453, 458) :

It is not necessary . . . to inquire from what motive such treatment proceeds. It may be from turbulent passion, or sometimes from causes which are not inconsistent with affection . . . If bitter waters are flowing, it is not necessary to inquire from what source they spring.

In Kirkman v. Kirkman (6) the same judge had previously observed (1 Hag. Con. 409, 410) :

If that safety is endangered by violent and disorderly affections of the mind, it is the same, in its effects, as if it proceeded from mere malignity alone ; it cannot be necessary, that, in order to obtain the protection of the court, it should be made to appear to proceed from malignity.

In Hall v. Hall (7) the JUDGE ORDINARY says (3 Sw. & Tr. 347, 349) :

With danger to the wife in view, the court does not hold its hand to inquire into motives and causes. The sources of the husband's conduct are, for the most part, immaterial. Thus, I have no doubt that cruelty does not cease to be a cause of suit if it proceeded from “ violent and disorderly affections,” as said in one case, or from “ violence of disposition, want of moral control, or eccentricity ” as said in another, or “ from a liability to become excited in controversy,” in the language of a third ; but madness, dementia, positive disease of the mind, this is quite another matter.

In more modern times there is a case of Hadden v. Hadden (8), in which SHEARMAN, J., said :

I do not question he had no intention of being cruel but his intentional acts amounted to cruelty.

Quite recently, in dealing with a case of constructive desertion by a husband founded on his conduct which resulted in his wife leaving the matrimonial home, LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Edwards v. Edwards (9) said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 157, 159) :

I have mentioned that this court, and, indeed, many judges in the Division individually, have referred over and over again to the principle that a man must be taken to intend the natural consequences of his acts. If it is a natural consequence of a man's direct treatment of his wife that she leaves him, it is a commonplace that, whatever he says in words, he must be taken to intend that she will do so.

There is nothing in the cases referred to by FINNEMORE, J., which conflicts with this line of authority. I need only refer to Astle v. Astle (1), which might at first sight appear to lend support to the learned judge's view, but on closer examination it will be seen that HENN COLLINS, J., was dealing with a case of insanity, where it was pleaded and found by the judge that during a certain period the respondent did not know the nature and quality of the acts committed by him and relied on as cruelty. It was in dealing with the question whether these acts were intentional acts for which the respondent was responsible that HENN COLLINS, J., used the language which is summarised in the headnote. He said ([1939] P. 415, 419; [1939] 3 All E.R. 967, 971):

I have said that my conclusion of fact is that the respondent did not know the nature and quality of the acts which he committed in the year 1927, and, if those acts stood alone the petitioner could not get relief, since in my judgment intention or malignity is an essential ingredient in cruelty.

Even in its restricted context I do not, however, agree with the use of the word "malignity." In my view, the law on this point cannot be more clearly expressed than in the brief statement of SHEARMAN, J., quoted above. It follows, therefore, that this case cannot be disposed of on the short ground that the wife's conduct was not actuated by spite, but was due solely to her state of health. I must not, however, be understood to suggest that, in considering whether or not a case of cruelty has been established, the state of health of the parties is not a relevant matter to be taken into consideration, together with all the other surrounding circumstances of the case, or that the same weight is to be attached to every act, whether committed in sickness or in health, or that it is not the duty of each spouse to care for and tend and show forbearance towards the other in case of illness. As, in my view, the learned judge's decision cannot be supported on the ground on which he based his judgment, it becomes necessary to examine the evidence and his findings of fact, if any, in relation thereto in order to decide whether or not a case of cruelty has been established by the husband. A number of incidents were relied on in the petition, and were referred to in the evidence, and are dealt with in the judgment, with regard to which the learned judge came to the conclusion that they did not in the circumstances of this case amount to cruelty. He expressed the view, with which I agree, that the case stands or falls on the question of sleep and nagging, viz., whether the wife by her exacting demands and nagging deprived her husband of sleep to such a degree that his health was impaired.

[HIS LORDSHIP stated the facts, reviewed the evidence in this connection and continued:] After a careful study of the whole of the evidence I have come to the conclusion that the evidence given by and on behalf of the husband was substantially unchallenged. There was a suggestion in general terms that the husband's story had "improved in the telling" and that he had not been kept up all night on as many occasions as he said, but the real defence throughout was, not that the incidents never took place nor that the husband willingly acquiesced in the demands of his sick wife, but that the behaviour described by the husband was solely attributable to his wife's state of health and was not actuated by spite.

I have read and re-read the learned judge's judgment to see if I could obtain any assistance from his findings of fact on this vital issue, viz., whether the husband was, in effect, compelled by violence to submit to his wife's demands or whether he was throughout willingly ministering to her, or, at any rate, of his own free will yielding to her demands. There are passages in the judgment in which the judge describes him as a man of honour with a high sense of duty doing all he could to get his wife better, which, taken by themselves, might indicate a finding of acquiescence on his part, but, on the other hand, there is nothing to suggest that the judge rejected any part of his evidence, or considered it exaggerated, or regarded him as anything but a truthful and reliable witness. He accepted his evidence on the controversial issue as to the terms on which he finally parted from his wife in 1944. The only matter with regard to which the judge expressed any doubt was as to his present recollection concerning his motives in writing letters in affectionate terms to his wife at a time when she was behaving in the way complained of. FINNEMORE, J.'s judgment must be read as a whole, and, so read, it is, I think, plain that he was not directing his mind to this issue at all, and, consequently, it is unhelpful and misleading to quote isolated passages therefrom out of their context.

In this court, therefore, I find myself without the benefit of the trial judge's findings directed to what I regard as the material issue in the case. In such circumstances it is necessary carefully to consider whether we have sufficient material to enable us to deal with the case ourselves or whether we are compelled to direct a new trial. Were it not for the fact that a study of the whole of the evidence leads me to the conclusion that the husband's evidence, corroborated as it was, was not seriously challenged, I should have felt compelled to the view that there must be a new trial, but, as I think, having regard to the way the case was conducted below, there was really only one conclusion at which the learned judge could have arrived on this aspect of the case, I feel that we are in a position to enable us to grant the relief to which I think the husband, who was regarded by the judge as a truthful and reliable witness, is entitled on his unchallenged evidence, coupled with the undisputed effect on his health of his wife's conduct. I would add that I have not lost sight of the letters of affection written by the husband to the wife during the material period, nor to his delay in seeking a divorce on the grounds now relied on. As to these matters I would, first, observe that, though they would, no doubt, afford material for cross-examination—and were, in fact, so used on the issue of the husband's belief in the motives of his wife—they are of no value unless, so used, they result in discrediting the testimony of the husband. As that evidence was not in fact challenged, I feel difficulty in seeing how this material can now avail the wife. In any event, it does not seem to me that the existence and persistence of a deep affection for his wife is in any way inconsistent with the husband's evidence as to his wife's behaviour, which was admittedly due to her neurotic condition.

For these reasons I think this appeal succeeds and that the husband is entitled to a decree nisi on the ground of the wife's cruelty.

EVERSHED, L.J.: In my judgment, this appeal should succeed. As I read his judgment, the learned judge was of opinion that the absence of any spiteful or malignant intention on the part of the wife (as he found to have been the fact) was fatal to the husband's claim. I am unable to agree with this view of the law. I do not say that proof of such an intention may not be an important, or, in some cases, even an essential, consideration, but in the circumstances of the present case, for reasons which have been stated by TUCKER, L.J., and which I need not repeat, I do not think proof of such an intention was a requisite for the husband's success. It is conceded that the wife, though her mind and judgment were distracted by the illnesses from which she had suffered, was not insane. She remained at all material times responsible for her actions. If, therefore, her conduct to her husband was, in fact, cruel, she cannot, as it seems to me, escape its natural consequences.

Shorn, then, of what I hold to be the learned judge's misdirection in law, the case presents itself thus: On a fair reading of his judgment has the judge found cruelty in fact? Has he, on the other hand, found voluntary submission or acquiescence on the husband's part? And, if no certain answer can be given to these questions, can this court, on a perusal of the transcript of the evidence in the case, though without the advantage of seeing the witnesses in the witness box, itself reach a conclusion on the facts? Although the case has presented many difficulties, and although on the view taken of the facts of the case by TUCKER, L.J. (with which I agree) it is not necessary for our decision, my own view is, on the judgment as I read it, that the judge has found cruelty in fact and that he would, but for the view of the law which he took, on his findings, have pronounced—and, in my judgment, properly pronounced—in the husband's favour. Further, if I am wrong in this conclusion, at least there is, in my judgment, no finding by the learned judge sufficient to defeat the husband's claim, and on my reading of the evidence as a whole I think, as I have already indicated, that the husband has made good his case for dissolution of his marriage. I do not attempt any definition of the words "cruel" or "cruelty" save to say that the conduct complained of must at least satisfy the ordinary acceptance of those English words, and that, on well settled authority, it must be such as to have injured, in fact, the complainant's mental or physical health or be such as to cause real apprehension of such injury. On the second qualification no difficulty arises. It has not been disputed before us that, as a result of the wife's conduct, the health of the husband was most seriously affected. As to the first qualification, I do not forget the obligation of a spouse to take his or her partner in sickness and in health, for better or for worse, nor must I be thought to suggest that the substance of that obligation has lost any of its validity, but some limit must necessarily be set to it. If it be conceded, as, in my view, it must, that, in such a case as the present, proof of malevolent design is unnecessary, all, or almost all, acts of cruelty, not, in fact, malevolent, must proceed from some sickness or disorder of the mind, though in many cases falling short of insanity. A husband or wife who, by repeated acts of uncontrolled violence, inflicts serious bodily injury on his or her spouse, or who, by consciously depriving her or him of food, reduces her or him to a state of semi-starvation, cannot, as it seems to me, escape the consequences of those acts by praying in aid the obligation of the marriage vow. In the present case the conduct complained of by the husband deprived him, time and again, of the sleep which is no less necessary than food for bodily refreshment. That the wife's conduct proceeded from her sickness may properly absolve her from the stigma which malignancy would have imposed, but the result, in my judgment, on the facts of the case (and, as I think, on the judge's findings) was beyond what the husband could be properly called on to endure.

I turn, first, to the question which formed the subject of the main contest before us: Has the judge held the husband to have voluntarily assented to the demands made on him by his wife and on that ground deprived himself of his right to relief? The point is wholly distinct from that of condonation on which the judge expressed no conclusion. What is said by counsel for the wife is, in effect, that, though the demands made by the wife on the husband, because of her illness, were at times exacting in the extreme, nevertheless the husband, as a dutiful and loving husband, was held by the judge to have voluntarily and willingly submitted to those demands, and that, if a husband, so voluntarily submitting himself, ruins his own health in the process, then (though he may be greatly deserving of sympathy) he cannot claim relief in these courts. The passage in the judgment most strongly relied on in support of this argument reads as follows:

The picture I see, and I think it is much more creditable to both of them, is of a wife, undoubtedly seriously ill, and a husband, undoubtedly a man of honour with a high sense of duty, doing all that he could, even at the expense of his own comfort and health, to get his wife better. I do not doubt that ultimately he broke under the strain, and the task proved for him too much, and I think for that reason he has probably thought back to rather far-off days.

Bereft of the context these sentences, no doubt, lend colour to the argument, but, in my judgment, it is clear that, when read in their context, the words I have quoted were not intended as a finding that the husband had willingly acquiesced in the course of conduct imposed on him by his wife. The words represent the learned judge's conclusion, or part of his conclusion, on the question which he regarded as the main question, i.e., whether the wife was acting spitefully or maliciously towards her husband, and, more particularly in that regard, whether the judge could accept the husband's evidence given at the trial that, notwithstanding his contemporary letters, he had thought so at the time. When the whole of this part of the judgment is read, it is, to my mind, clear that the material sentences cannot be construed as a finding of such acquiescence on the husband's part as defeats his claim. In my judgment, these sentences amount to no more than a rejection (in this one instance) of the husband's evidence that at the time he wrote the letters he thought his wife was actuated by malice, and a finding that, in writing the letters, the husband was prompted by duty and affection, hoping and believing that his wife might recover from the sickness which was responsible for her actions. I am confirmed in this opinion by other considerations, and, first, by the whole tenor of the judgment. As I have already stated, the judge plainly regarded the main question for his decision: Aye or no, was the wife acting malevolently? At the beginning of his judgment the learned judge posed for himself the dilemma—either he must refuse relief to the husband or he must “fix fairly and squarely on the shoulders of the wife" the matrimonial offence of cruelty, notwithstanding that her conduct emanated from her illness. If "acquiescence" in the sense for which counsel for the wife has contended was the answer to the husband's claim and he so intended to find, then malevolence was not the main issue, or, indeed, a necessary issue at all, and he put to himself a choice and difficulty which did not really arise. Nor was it necessary for him to examine, as he did, the various incidents relied on and to reject some of them as (apart from malignity) not amounting to cruelty. As I read the whole judgment, I think it follows that (apart from the possibility of condonation with which he did not deal) had he either found malice in fact on the part of the wife or held malice to be unnecessary as a matter of law he would have pronounced for the husband. A second matter which supports the view I have formed is that acquiescence, as distinct from condonation, was not pleaded as a defence, nor, in my judgment, was it ever really put to the husband in cross-examination.

There is a third consideration going to the root of the suggested defence which, if not, perhaps, directly bearing on the terms of the judgment, may here be mentioned. In putting the point before us counsel for the wife suggested the analogy of a claim for cruelty based on acts of sexual perversion and a defence of acquiescence in the sense of voluntary participation in those acts, but I am not satisfied of the truth of the analogy. In such a case refusal to submit does not present the difficulties with which a husband in circumstances like those in the present case is faced. What were the choices before the husband, situated as he was with his wife in India in war time? He might have retaliated with violence, or done so to a greater extent than he did, for it was proved that on some occasions he did strike her. The choice is not one likely to commend itself to a husband with a sense of duty and propriety or to a husband who loved his wife. He might have deserted her in India. Was such a course, however, reasonably practicable for him, particularly when regard is had to the demands she made on him and the kind of offensive telegrams she sent to him when away from him? The only remaining course open to the husband was to submit in one form or another until they could both leave India. In a case of cruelty such as the present (for I assume for this purpose that the wife's acts were cruel), a spouse may, in practice, have no choice but to submit until further submission becomes impossible. In my judgment, however, it would not be right to say that such submission amounted to acquiescence so as to defeat the claim for relief. I conclude, therefore, that there is in the judgment no finding of acquiescence as counsel for the wife contended.

There remains the question: Has the judge found cruelty in fact? As already indicated, once the suggested finding of acquiescence is out of the way, an answer to the question is not, on the view of the facts which I take, strictly necessary, but were it necessary I should be prepared to hold that he has. In my judgment, indeed, the answer really follows by necessary inference from what has been already said in reference to the general form of the judgment—the dilemma posed at the beginning, the formulation of the issue of malice as the main question to be determined, and the judge's examination of the various incidents complained of and the rejection of some of them (such as that of upsetting the wireless) as insufficient to amount in any case to cruelty. Counsel for the wife referred us to the well-known judgment of LORD STOWELL in Evans v. Evans (10) (to which I refer again later) and it was argued that the language of the learned judge fell short of a finding of acts imposed on the husband as distinct from mere requests made to him. However, as counsel for the husband pointed out, the material word used almost exclusively by the judge in reference to the calls made on her husband by the wife was "require"—a word at least more consistent with command than request. Moreover, in a context referring to certain incidents the word must have imported compulsion. In any case, as it seems to me, once the alleged finding of acquiescence is out of the way, the significance of the search for words importing compulsion is largely disposed of. I shall not travel through the whole judgment, but the conclusion is thus stated in the following passage:

Now, I think, considering them as well as I can, that those letters are consistent with the attitude of a man who has faced a desperately difficult and unhappy situation as a husband should, and realised that it was not really his wife's fault, but was the result of her desperate ill health and insomnia. I, therefore, come to these conclusions on the facts. I think that the husband was required to do this reading. I think his wife did make a good many complaints. I am quite sure she was extremely difficult to live with, and finally impossible, situated as they were, and I think further that the cause of all that was not a desire to hurt her husband, to whom she was devoted as he was to her. I think she was an invalid, a very serious invalid, suffering pain, weakness, and psychological or mental troubles, requiring many things to be done for her and unable to settle down to have things done for her except by her husband.

In my view, the learned judge intended to find and did find conduct on the part of the wife amounting to cruelty in fact, and such that, had it not been for his finding and conclusion of law in regard to malice, and apart from condonation (with which he did not deal), he would have held the husband entitled to a decree.

If, however, there be no sufficient finding of cruelty in fact, then, at least, in my view, there is no finding of fact sufficient to negative cruelty. This conclusion follows and follows, in my view, a fortiori from what I have already said on the whole form and tenor of the judgment. If the judge intended to find nothing which, apart from malignity, would amount to cruelty in fact, it was not only unnecessary to deal with the question of malignity, but inconsistent and senseless to treat it as being the main issue in the case. It was also pointless to refer to certain of the incidents alleged as distinct from others, and to find as regards them that they did not in any case fall within the meaning of the word "cruel." Equally unnecessary and pointless, on this hypothesis, was the judge's formulation of the case in the following passage:

Life having become impossible between them in that sense, was that because the wife was treating her husband cruelly, or was it that her illness and ill-health became so bad and she needed so much care, because of her illness, and made so many demands on her husband, that he could no longer meet them without breaking down himself? If I understand Mr. Salmon's argument, it is this, that it does not matter. If, in fact, the wife was making these demands on her husband, she must be taken to have appreciated the effect they had on him and intended the natural consequence, which is that he would suffer in health. She knew that night by night she was requiring him to read to her, and she knew, or ought to have known, that he could not sleep, and she knew, or ought to have known, therefore, that sooner or later his health would break down under her conduct, and she was responsible, and, therefore, she was cruel.

The judge thereupon proceeded to a discussion of what he calls "the real difficulty" and "the main question" in the case, namely, the issue of malignity, and to a citation of the various authorities on that point. I have already referred to the statement of conclusion in one part of the judgment. I cite finally two further passages—first:

In the result, as I say, I have come to this conclusion, that this was a case of a woman very seriously ill and in great pain, unable to sleep, making very wide demands on her husband, the only member of her family she had, demands which became from a practical point of view impossible for him to comply with indefinitely. I do not think that she ever deliberately set out, out of spite to her husband, to say: "I am going to hurt him," or, as I mentioned before: "As I can't sleep, he shan't." I am quite satisfied about that. I am satisfied that because of the illness life became impossible for them. Now, is that cruelty?

Secondly:

I think in a case where on the facts the court is satisfied that there was no deliberately adopted intention (as I find in this case), but, owing to illness and in the course of illness and arising out of illness, there was conduct and there were demands made upon the other partner to the marriage which were heavy and became impossible, you do not establish cruelty.

For these reasons I find it impossible to interpret the judgment as containing such findings as negative cruelty in fact.

If, therefore, the true view is that there are in the judgment no findings of fact one way or the other, true it becomes the duty of the court, if it can, to reach its own conclusion of fact on all the evidence assisted by the findings of the learned judge so far as they go. On this aspect of the case I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of TUCKER, L.J., with which I find myself in entire agreement. In approaching the evidence, which TUCKER, L.J., has fully analysed, it is important to have in mind (as pointed out by my Lord) that the learned judge accepted the husband as a truthful and candid witness plainly preferring—and I am not surprised that he did prefer—the husband's evidence to that of the wife. The judge's finding on the issue of what occurred when the husband left the wife in February, 1944, strikingly illustrates, in my view, the reliance which can be placed on the husband's testimony. It is, no doubt, a point of substance that, until the presentation of the petition, the husband does not appear to have regarded himself as a victim of cruelty, and had, indeed, suggested that his wife should herself bring proceedings for divorce based on his desertion since February, 1944, and, further, that the husband, having sought advice in India in 1942, was not then advised that he had any case for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of cruelty or otherwise, but, as it seems to me, the weight and importance of these matters goes rather to the credibility of the husband's testimony. It is clear that the learned judge accepted his evidence of his wife's conduct as true. Once it is established that the various acts alleged did occur, in fact, it cannot matter that it may not have occurred to the husband that they constituted cruelty, or that a lawyer in India in 1942 advised that they did not. The facts having been established, it was for FINNEMORE, J., to decide, and it is now for this court to decide, what are their legal consequences. I bear in mind the passage from LORD STOWELL'S judgment in Evans v. Evans (10) (1 Hag. Con. 35, 38) to which I have already referred. In my view, the conduct proved far exceeds Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, if they do not threaten bodily harm, do not amount to legal cruelty: they are high moral offences in the marriage-state undoubtedly, not innocent surely in any state of life, but still they are not that cruelty against which the law can relieve. Under such misconduct of either of the parties, for it may exist on the one side as well as on the other, the suffering party must bear in some degree the consequences of an injudicious connection; must subdue by decent resistance or by prudent conciliation.

It is not seldom emphasised that every case must depend on its own peculiar facts, and that observation is particularly applicable to a case of cruelty such as the present, depending on the conclusion to be derived from a consideration of conduct extending over a period of years, during which a number of specific instances of varying significance stand against and illustrate a general background. In my judgment, it is clearly proved that over that period the wife, who suffered from insomnia at night (though not even able to sleep by day) and serious nervous distractions, including a good deal of self-pity as a result of many illnesses, demanded of her husband an altogether extraordinary degree of ministration, and as part of her demands, time and again, refused to allow him to sleep at all until 3 or 4 in the morning, or, at times, at all throughout the night, and that when from natural weariness he went to sleep she roused him by such means as pulling off his clothes, moving furniture and turning on taps. There was corroborated evidence of incidents illustrating such conduct. I observe also that, as regards these acts, the wife in her evidence did not attempt to say, as I understand her, that the husband was voluntarily ministering to her, but denied the facts or any recollection of them. To this must be added "nagging" of an intemperate kind, illustrated by various incidents. The result was, beyond doubt, seriously to injure the husband's health and to render it, as a medical witness said and the learned judge found, "impossible" for the husband to live longer with his wife. I, therefore, think that, if there was no finding by the judge of cruelty in fact, such cruelty is established by the evidence. On the defence of condonation I agree with TUCKER, L.J., for the reasons which he has given that that defence is not established. I, therefore, would allow the appeal and grant a decree nisi on the petition.

HODSON, J. [having stated the facts]: Unfortunately, at the trial the case appears to have been so conducted that the attention of the learned judge was distracted from the true issue, viz., whether or not cruelty had been established on the evidence, apart from the question whether or not the wife had the intention of being cruel. I agree that the judgment appealed from is to a great extent vitiated by this distraction, and that it is necessary to examine the evidence and the learned judge's findings of fact in relation thereto in order to decide whether a case of cruelty has been proved. I also agree that a vital issue in the case is whether the husband was compelled to submit to his wife's demands or whether he was willingly ministering to her, impelled by natural sympathy and affection and the sense of duty to tend her in her sickness. It is true that, in so far as the judgment in favour of the wife depends on a finding that there was no intention on her part to injure her husband, it appears that the existence of compulsion does not arise for consideration, and it may fairly be argued that absence of motive does not arise except on the view that the evidence of the husband was accepted as establishing a case of cruelty. I have, however, considered the judgment to the best of my ability and have formed the opinion that, no intention to injure having been found, the case was also dealt with by the learned judge on the alternative basis that, apart from the question of intention, no cruelty had been proved. It is at this point that I respectfully dissent from my Lords. I recognise the danger of taking isolated parts of his judgment in order to support this view, but I am, nevertheless, of opinion that, whenever in his judgment findings of fact appear, they are really consistent only with a finding that there were no acts of cruelty and no compulsion at any time. I do not think that these findings are inextricably confused with the learned judge's misconception as to intention. There are, indeed, references in the judgment to "another aspect of the case," viz., whether the wife was actuated by spite, which show that the learned judge was looking at the case from more than one point of view. [HIS LORDSHIP referred to extracts from the judgment and the correspondence and continued:] It is true that the repeated use of the word "require" approximates to a finding of compulsion, but the learned judge, in my opinion, rightly attached great importance to letters written by the husband to the wife during the relevant period, including, as they did, a request by him to her to join him because he realised she was unhappy as well as for financial reasons. These letters, if genuine, as they were found to be notwithstanding the husband's denial, throw a strong light on the view which the husband took of his wife's conduct at the time and go some way towards negating the husband's case that he was acting under compulsion. As to his attitude at the time, the observations of the judge of the Consistory Court in Westmeath v. Westmeath (11) (2 Hag. Ecc. Supp. 1, 52) (cited in Curtis v. Curtis (12) (1 Sw. & Tr. 192, 197)) are material. He says:

... if they are not resented as injuries at the time, a state of things intervenes which either detracts from the weight of particular evidence when brought forward at a subsequent period, or may introduce quite another view of the relative situation of the parties.

If he had then resented the exacting requirements of his invalid wife he could have, at least, refrained from encouraging her to join him. Moreover, his forbearance from making allegations of cruelty until many years after the events complained of and only when his efforts to induce his wife to divorce him on the footing that he had deserted her without any cause is hardly consistent with the resentment which he now alleges.

The passage from the judgment read by EVERSLED, L.J. (p. 56 ante) refers to the picture of the parties as of a wife seriously ill and a husband doing all that he could even at the expense of his own comfort and health to get his wife better. This passage appears to summarise the general view which the learned judge took of the whole case.

The findings of fact lead me to consider whether the evidence can support them, having regard to the views expressed in the House of Lords in Watt v. Thomas (13) as to the weight to be attached to the findings of a trial judge who has seen and heard the witnesses. LORD THANKERTON said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 582, 587):

It will hardly be disputed that consistorial cases form a class in which it is generally most important to see and hear the witnesses, and particularly the spouses themselves, and, further, within that class, cases of alleged cruelty will afford an even stronger example of such an advantage. Normally, the cruelty is alleged to have occurred within the family establishment, and the physique, temperament, standard of culture, habits of verbal expression and of action, and the interaction between the spouses in their daily life, cannot be adequately judged except by seeing and hearing them in the witness box. The law has no footrule by which to measure the personalities of the spouses.

Looking at the established acts of the wife against the background of the special facts of this case, including what is surely not an uncommon feature of married life, viz., one ailing spouse making exacting and unreasonable demands on the other partner—demands which deprived the other of sleep from time to time—I am unable for myself to form the view that the learned judge came to an erroneous decision on the facts. Acts between spouses must necessarily be examined in relation to the obligation of each to accept the other for better, for worse, in sickness and in health. In a recent case of Buchler v. Buchler (14) this court had to consider the nature of conduct short of cruelty which may justify one spouse in refusing to live with the other. Expressions used in that case, so far as they are of general application, seem to me to apply a fortiori to a case where cruelty itself is alleged. In dealing with conduct not amounting to cruelty, ASQUITH, L.J., said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 319, 326) :

... it must exceed in gravity such behaviour, vexatious and trying though it may be, as every spouse bargains to endure when accepting the other "for better or worse." The ordinary wear and tear of conjugal life does not in itself suffice.

For my part, I have come to the conclusion that the finding in favour of the wife ought not to be disturbed and that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal allowed with costs to the husband. Decree nisi granted.

Solicitors : Lewis & Lewis and Gisborne & Co. (for the husband) ; Preston, Lane-Claypon & O'Kelly, agents for Fardells, Ryde, Isle of Wight (for the wife).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Followed. HUNTINGFORD v. HUNTINGFORD. [1950] 1 All E.R. 785.

OLDS v. OLDS. BRITTAN v. BRITTAN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Evershed, L.JJ., and Hodson, J.), April 30, May 14, 1948.]

Divorce—Costs—Poor person—Discretion to order poor person to pay opponent's costs—Basis of payment—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 28 (1).

Under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 28 (1), a judge has an unfettered discretion in any proper case to order a poor person to make such contribution as he thinks proper to the costs of the opposing party. If the opposing party is himself a poor person, such contribution will be limited to a poor person's costs, but if the opposing party is an ordinary litigant there is no such limitation. This general discretion is not limited by the special power under r. 31BB which only enables an order as to costs to be made against a poor person who has obtained his certificate by fraud or misrepresentation.

If a poor person is ordered to pay the costs of an ordinary litigant, he is thereby made liable to pay that litigant's costs taxed on the ordinary basis, i.e., there is no foundation for the suggestion that a poor person ordered to pay the costs of an ordinary litigant pays costs taxed on some special or reduced basis, so, for example, as to exclude profit costs and charges. The latter result will only be achieved (in the absence of special direction) when the party whose costs are ordered to be paid by a poor person is himself a poor person. On the other hand, in a proper case a judge may order a poor person to pay or contribute some fixed sum towards the other party's costs. At the same time, although there may be cases in which it is proper, after careful investigation of evidence as to increase of means or other matters, to make an order for a poor person to make some contribution towards the costs of the opposing party, the circumstances would have to be wholly exceptional to justify an order against a poor person to pay the full taxed profit costs.

[AS TO ORDERS FOR COSTS IN POOR PERSONS' CASES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 704, para. 1053, and pp. 758, 759, para. 1198 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 477, Nos. 5050-5052.]

OLDS v. OLDS.

APPEAL by an unsuccessful husband petitioner by leave of His Honour JUDGE KIRKHOUSE JENKINS, sitting as a Commissioner in Divorce at Bristol, against that part of an order made by him whereby he ordered the husband, suing as a poor person, to pay the full taxed costs of the wife respondent who was defending as an ordinary litigant. The Court of Appeal took the view that there were no circumstances which would warrant making an order for payment of these costs by the husband, and allowed the appeal.

BRITTAN v. BRITTAN.

APPLICATION by an unsuccessful husband respondent, defending as a poor person, for leave to appeal against a similar order made against him by the same commissioner on Oct. 6, 1947, in favour of the wife petitioner suing as an ordinary litigant, the commissioner having refused leave to appeal. The Court of Appeal refused the application, since they had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the commissioner's refusal to give leave. If the order had been one which the commissioner had no jurisdiction to make, an appeal could have been brought without leave. The facts of both cases appear in the judgment of the court, delivered by TUCKER, L.J.

Bryant Irvine for the husband in both cases.

C. M. Hughes for the wife in Brittan v. Brittan.

The wife in Olds v. Olds did not appear and was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14. TUCKER, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. In Olds v. Olds, the learned commissioner dismissed the husband's petition for divorce after a contest, and, in dealing with costs, said: "I order that the respondent shall have the costs of these proceedings. I make it a special order." To this counsel for the husband replied: "I am entitled to ask that the costs will be poor person's costs," and the learned commissioner rejoined: "The taxing master will settle that." The order drawn condemned the husband in the costs incurred on behalf of the wife as if the husband were not a poor person. Application was made to the learned commissioner, who, we are informed, felt himself unable to correct the order under the "slip rule," but gave leave to appeal, and made a note for the information of the court stating that the order was made without full argument and could not, in his judgment, be supported. We read his note as indicating that he had not fully appreciated either the possible implication of the words "special order" or the circumstances which might justify his making such an order, and that in this case he was now satisfied that there were no circumstances which would warrant his making any order for payment of costs by the husband. We took the same view and for these reasons allowed the appeal, with the result that the order must be varied by striking out the words:

... and condemned the petitioner in the costs incurred on behalf of the said respondent as if he, the said petitioner, were not a poor person.

In Brittan v. Brittan, before making the order as to costs, the commissioner was informed, and the accuracy of the information is now admitted, that the husband at the date of the trial was earning £6 or £7 a week as an employee of the Bristol Aeroplane Co., whereas, when the poor person's certificate was granted to him, he was serving as a member of His Majesty's Forces. There had, accordingly, been an appreciable improvement in his financial position. On this material the learned commissioner, exercising the discretion which he considered was conferred on him by R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 28 (1), made the order indicated above and refused leave to appeal.

Under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 31 (1) (h), no appeal lies:

... without the leave of the court or judge making the order, from an order of the High Court or any judge thereof made ... as to costs only which by law are left to the discretion of the court.

If, therefore, this order was one which the commissioner had a discretion to make, no appeal lies to this court without his leave, provided he has, in fact, exercised that discretion. It was contended by counsel for the husband that the discretion of the commissioner under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 28 (1) with regard to awarding costs against a poor person was limited to making an order that he should pay such costs as would have been recoverable by him as a poor person had he succeeded and obtained an order for costs in his favour, and that the learned commissioner had no jurisdiction to make the order complained of. It was argued that R.S.C., Ord. 16, must be read as a whole, and that, so read, and, more especially, having regard to r. 31BB, the true view was that no poor person could ever be ordered to pay the profit costs of the opposing party, or any part thereof, unless the same came within r. 31BB. In the alternative, it was argued that, where the court orders a poor person to pay the costs of an ordinary litigant, the order should be drawn up and the costs taxed as if the successful litigant was a poor person.

The material provisions of R.S.C., Ord. 16, are as follows. Rule 28 (1) provides :

No court fee shall be payable in respect of the filing of the certificate nor in respect of the memorandum to be issued under r. 27 of this Order and after such filing the poor person named in the certificate shall not be liable for any court fees and unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order no poor person shall be liable to pay costs to any other party or be entitled to receive from any other party any profit costs or charges.

Rule 29 (1) provides :

The court or a judge may at any time (and whether or not any application be made by any Law Society or by any person for that purpose) discharge the certificate and direct it to be taken off the file and thereupon the poor person shall not be entitled to the benefit of this Order in any proceedings to which the certificate relates unless otherwise ordered.

Rule 23B (4) provides :

Where a certificate has been granted to a poor person under r. 23A of this Order or under this rule, it shall not be discharged under r. 29 hereof on the grounds only (a) that the conditions specified in paras. (1) and (2) of the said r. 23A are no longer applicable in the case of the poor person ; or (b) that the means of the poor person or, as the case may be, of the poor person and her husband, exceed the amounts specified in paras. (1), (2) and (3) of r. 23 of this Order : Provided that the committee may discharge any certificate so issued in any case in which they are satisfied that the means of the poor person or of the poor person and her husband jointly, as the case may be, so greatly exceed the amounts specified in paras. (1) (2) and (3) of the said r. 23 as to render it unreasonable that the poor person should be entitled to the benefit of this Order.

Rule 31BB is as follows :

Where it appears to the court or a judge that the certificate was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation the court or judge may order the poor person to pay the costs of the other party, and where such an order is made, the costs shall be taxed as if the party ordered to pay them were not a poor person.

In our view, there is nothing in R.S.C., Ord. 16, to limit the discretion clearly conferred on the court by the words "unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order," in r. 28 (1). We think that it was intended to leave the matter to the unfettered discretion of the judge so as to enable him in any proper case to order a poor person whose financial position has improved, or where the circumstances otherwise justify, to make such contribution as he thinks proper towards the costs of the opposing party. In our judgment, this general discretion is not limited by the special power under r. 31BB to make an order as to costs against a poor person who has obtained his certificate by fraud or misrepresentation, whatever his financial position might be at the date of the order. If a poor person is ordered to pay the costs of an ordinary litigant, he is thereby made liable to pay that litigant's costs taxed on the ordinary basis, i.e., there is no foundation for the suggestion that a poor person ordered to pay the costs of an ordinary litigant pays costs taxed on some special or reduced basis, so, for example, as to exclude profit costs and charges. This result will be only achieved (in the absence of special direction) when the party whose costs are ordered to be paid by a poor person is himself a poor person. On the other hand, in a proper case a judge may order a poor person to pay or contribute some fixed sum, £x, towards the other party's costs.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned commissioner had jurisdiction to make this order, which was within his discretion, and, in the absence of leave by him to appeal, this court cannot entertain this application. We should, perhaps, observe that in form the husband was asking this court to give him leave to appeal. If he was right in his contention that the commissioner was acting without jurisdiction, he could have appealed without leave. On the other hand, if the matter, as we hold, was within the discretion of the commissioner, we have no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from his refusal to give leave. In coming to our decision, we are not to be understood as approving the exercise of the commissioner's discretion in this particular case. Although there may be cases in which it is proper, after careful investigation of evidence as to increase of means or other matters, to make an order for a poor person to make some contribution towards the costs of the opposing party, the circumstances would have to be wholly exceptional to justify an order against a poor person to pay the full taxed profit costs, but for the reasons stated we have no jurisdiction to interfere. The result is that the appeal in Olds v. Olds is allowed, and the application in Brittan v. Brittan is refused.

No order as to costs. A

Solicitors: J. C. Hodgson, agent for C. A. Potter, Bristol, Law Society's Divorce Dept. (for the husbands); Darley, Cumberland & Co., agents for Wansbroughs, Robinson, Tayler and Taylor, Bristol (for the wife in Brittan v. Brittan).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GILBERT v. GILBERT AND BROOKS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Merriman, P., Bucknill, L.J. and Wynn-Parry, J.), May 7, 12, 1948.]

Divorce—Costs—Co-respondent—No appearance—Proof of signature on acknowledgment of service—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523), r. 8 (2). C

To charge a co-respondent who does not appear or take any part in divorce proceedings with the costs of a successful petition, it is not necessary to prove his signature on the acknowledgment of service of the petition sent to him by registered post under r. 8 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947.

[FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES RULES, 1947, r. 8 (2), see RAYDEN ON DIVORCE, 4th Edn., Special Supplement, p. 10.] D

Case referred to:

(1) Re Struve's Trusts, [1912] W.N. 149; 56 Sol. Jo. 551; 22 Digest 369, 3778.

APPEAL by the husband petitioner from a refusal of His Honour JUDGE STEWART, sitting as a Commissioner in Divorce, to make an order for costs against the co-respondent on the ground that there was no proof of the signature of the co-respondent on the acknowledgment of service of the petition. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of the PRESIDENT. E Karminski, K.C., and A. G. Sharp for the husband.

The co-respondent did not appear and was not represented.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: The husband's petition, which was dated July 30, 1947, was undefended. It charged the wife with adultery with a named co-respondent. Neither the wife nor the co-respondent entered an appearance and neither of them has taken any part in the proceedings. Nevertheless, it is right to mention that as a matter of precaution the co-respondent has been given notice of this appeal and of the probable date of hearing, but has taken no steps to be present or to be represented. When the petition came on for hearing on Sept. 29, 1947, the adultery was clearly proved, and no question turns on that. The wife had signed an acknowledgment of service, and her signature was identified by the husband, and, therefore, proof of service was complete in her case. The transcript of the evidence shows, however, that there was no proof of the identity of the signature of the co-respondent from whom an acknowledgment of the service had been received. In those circumstances the learned commissioner, making it clear that he had experienced doubts about the matter—and others, I happen to know, have experienced like doubts—adhered to his already expressed opinion that in the circumstances he was not entitled to make an order for costs against the co-respondent. F

Until very recently a petition for divorce required personal service both on the respondent spouse and on any co-respondent. Among the procedural reforms which have resulted from recent enquiry into the practice and procedure of the Divorce Division there has been added as an alternative to personal service, both in the case of a respondent spouse and of a co-respondent, service G H by registered post. That change was embodied in the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, r. 8, which provides :

(1) Unless otherwise directed—(a) a copy of every petition shall be served personally or by registered post upon every respondent and co-respondent named therein . . . (2) For the purposes of the foregoing paragraph of this rule a document shall be deemed to have been duly served by registered post if the document is sent by pre-paid registered post to the party to be served, and an acknowledgment of service in accordance with Form 4 of his identity and of his receipt of the document is signed by him and returned to the solicitor for the petitioner, or to the petitioner if he is acting in person, at the address for service : Provided that where the party to be served is a respondent, his signature on the acknowledgment of service shall be proved at the trial or hearing. On the face of sub-r. (2) several things appear to require strict proof. The registered letter has to be sent by prepaid registered post to the party to be served. That implies not merely that his name is on it, but that it is sent to some address the sending to which can be properly described as sending it to him. Moreover, the document, called Form 4, which is to be enclosed with the petition with the intention that it shall be sent back by the party to be served contains two statements of fact—(i) an acknowledgment that the person to whom the letter is addressed is the person named as (in this case) the co-respondent, and (ii) that that person has received a copy of the petition. Thus, when the rule goes on to say “an acknowledgment of service in accordance with Form 4 of his identity and of his receipt of the document” is to be signed by him and returned to the solicitor for the petitioner, one would suppose, even if there were no qualifying clause, that it would certainly be necessary to prove strictly that he had received it and signed it. The proviso to r. 8 (2), however, reads : “Provided that where the party to be served is a respondent, his signature on the acknowledgment of service shall be proved at the trial or hearing.”

The first question is whether the word “respondent” in the proviso to r. 8 includes a co-respondent. Our attention has been very carefully called by counsel for the husband, as he has no opponent, to everything in the rules and elsewhere which could assist us, and to the contrasts in the rules or distinctions drawn in the rules between a respondent in the sense of a respondent spouse, on the one hand, and a respondent other than a spouse and co-respondent, on the other. It is important to look at the statute which is the foundation of the obligation to make a male adulterer a party to the proceedings. That is the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 177, which provides :

(1) On a petition for divorce presented by the husband or in the answer of a husband praying for divorce the petitioner or respondent, as the case may be, shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent unless he is excused by the court on special grounds from doing. (2) On a petition for divorce presented by the wife the court may, if it thinks fit, direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent.

In other words, the male adulterer must be made a co-respondent unless that is excused, whereas a woman named need not be made a respondent unless the court so directs. It is from that section that the nomenclature is derived. A male adulterer is, so far as I know, without any exception whatever in connection with divorce procedure, at any rate, in an original petition, described as a “co-respondent.”

Having looked at the provisions with regard to service, it is well to look at some of the provisions dealing with subsequent procedure, to see whether the same line of thought is carried on through the rules. Rule 10 provides :

Unless otherwise directed, and save where the provisions of r. 8 (4) have been complied with, a petition shall not proceed to trial or hearing unless the respondent and every co-respondent thereto and every person named therein—(a) has entered an appearance ; or (b) is shown by affidavit . . . to have been served with the petition personally or in accordance with an order for substituted service ; or (c) has returned to the solicitor for the petitioner, or to the petitioner if he is acting in person, an acknowledgment of service in accordance with Form 4, which shall be lodged with the registrar.

It is to be observed that even there the same difficulty about establishing the identity of the person who returns the form occurs, but I think it is reasonably clear that at that stage, which is that at which the registrar gives his certificate that the case is fit to be entered for trial, all that is required is that he should see that the respondent or co-respondent, as the case may be, has returned this form signed. For, it will be remembered, it is not until the trial or hearing that actual proof of the signature of the respondent, whatever that word may mean, on the acknowledgment of service is required. I am deliberately omitting other rules from which the same implication can be drawn, but sub-r. (6) of r. 14, which relates to "Supplemental and amended petitions," provides:

Unless otherwise directed, a copy of the supplemental petition or of the amended petition together with a copy of the order (if any) made under this rule, shall be served upon the respondent, co-respondent or person named therein and, in the case of a respondent, co-respondent or person not named in the original petition, the supplemental petition or amended petition shall be accompanied by a notice to appear . . .

There again the distinction is plainly drawn between the description "respondent, co-respondent or person named." The same thing applies to the answer. When one of these persons by appearing has qualified to deliver an answer, his rights are described in these words in r. 16:

A respondent, co-respondent or person named who has entered an appearance to a petition may, within fourteen days after the expiration of the time limited for the entry of such appearance, file an answer to the petition . . .

Finally, for I do not want to multiply instances, r. 33 is directly in point on the rights of the co-respondent in this case:

After entering an appearance, a respondent or co-respondent may, without filing an answer, be heard in respect of any question as to costs or damages and a respondent spouse may, without filing an answer, be heard as to any question of custody of or access to any children of the marriage.

At first sight that rather suggests that it may be intended to draw a distinction for the purposes of this rule between a respondent and a respondent spouse, and that a "respondent," therefore, may include respondents other than respondent spouses, but the explanation of that distinction in this rule is, I think, due to the fact that two distinct classes of relief are being dealt with, costs and damages on the one hand, and the question of custody or access to children, on the other. Plainly, questions of custody and access affect only respondent spouses, and it is necessary, therefore, to distinguish in connection with custody and access a respondent spouse from any more inclusive use of the word "respondent." That the word "respondent" in this rule does include a party other than the respondent spouse is shown by looking at r. 5, whereby:

Unless otherwise directed, where in a husband's petition there is a charge against a male adulterer, the alleged adulterer shall, if living at the date of the filing of the petition, be made a co-respondent in the cause and where a wife's petition contains a claim for costs against a woman named she shall be made a respondent in the cause.

It will be remembered that under s. 177 of the Act of 1925 there was power for the court to direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent. This rule makes it obligatory in a case where there is a positive claim for costs against her. Going back, therefore, to the wording of r. 8, it is plain that the word "respondent," where first used, does not only include the respondent spouse, because it might also include a woman named against whom a claim for costs has been made, and who is, therefore, entitled to be heard on it, and who, by virtue of r. 5 and s. 177 of the Act has become a respondent, but there is contrasted with the two alternative meanings in that connection of the word "respondent," the word "co-respondent." That introduces, not only the question of costs, but also that of damages, for the co-respondent alone is the object of a claim for damages. That seems to me to show in the plainest way that there is throughout the rules a distinction drawn between "respondent" and "co-respondent," and, therefore, I read the word "respondent" in the proviso to r. 8 (2) as exclusive of a co-respondent.

What then is the result? It still remains that the acknowledgment of service on the prescribed form has to be proved. The question is, how is it proved? In the case of the respondent spouse there is the express requirement that the identity of the signature must be established at the trial. It seems to me that the only inference to be drawn from that is that in the case of the co-respondent that proof is not necessary. After all, this matter does not depend merely on the presumption that a registered letter shown to have been posted is prima facie evidence of its delivery to the person to whom it is addressed, a presumption which was, after consideration of the authorities, re-affirmed by PARKER, J., in the case of Re Struve's Trusts (1). There is more than that. The registered envelope contains two documents at least, the petition and the unsigned Form 4, the form acknowledging the identity of the recipient and the receipt of the petition. The latter document has been returned, which shows that the envelope has been opened by somebody and that the document has been signed by somebody. I agree that, unless the wording of the rule leads to a contrary conclusion, that would not ordinarily be sufficient to prove that the document had been signed by the person whose name it bears. In my opinion, this rule does provide for a contrary conclusion. The condition of the proviso that it is only, as I think, in the case of a respondent that proof of his signature is required at the trial or hearing tends irresistibly to the conclusion that that proof is not necessary in the case of a co-respondent. There is no doubt, as BUCKNILL, L.J., pointed out in the course of the argument and as the learned commissioner pointed out at the trial, that this may mean that a heavy claim for damages may be decided on this evidence of service. At the moment, of course, we are only concerned with costs, and with regard to costs it is provided by r. 33 (ii) and (iii) that no bill of costs which is not directly referable to the decree nisi or the decree absolute shall be taxed against a co-respondent at all, if he has appeared, without giving him notice, or, if he has not appeared, without giving him his right to apply to discharge the order. We are not, however, concerned with questions of policy, but solely with the interpretation of this rule. For these reasons I think that the learned commissioner's decision that he had no jurisdiction to make an order for costs against the co-respondent was wrong and must be reversed.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree. I entirely agree with what my Lord has said as to the meaning of the word "respondent" in the proviso to r. 8 (2). It is quite clear it does not include a co-respondent. What troubled the learned commissioner was that there was no proof of service on the co-respondent except, as he said, "that some person has signed the name of Brooks." That is true, and, as WYNN-PARRY, J., pointed out during the argument, one must read r. 8 (2) in this way: "For the purposes of the foregoing paragraph of this rule a document shall be deemed to have been duly served by registered post if the document is sent by pre-paid registered post to the party to be served, and an acknowledgment of service in accordance with Form 4 of his identity and of his receipt of the document purporting to be signed by him has been returned to the solicitor for the petitioner, or to the petitioner if he is acting in person, at the address for service." The learned commissioner was in error in reading that rule as if it was necessary that there should be proof of the co-respondent's signature before he could make an order against him for costs. In this case, in April, 1947, the co-respondent was a corporal in the army living at Otley, Yorkshire. We were told by counsel that the petition was sent to him at his private address, which is given by Mrs. Gilbert as 49, Council Bungalows, New Horton, near Mansfield. I have no doubt that he received the petition and signed Form 4. One can well understand, however, that the registered packet might have been received by someone else at his home address. The postman does not require to be satisfied that the addressee signs the receipt for a registered packet. It might have been opened, and, in a desire to avoid troubling him while he was abroad, Form 4 might have been signed by someone else. I point that out to show the danger of a rule of this kind. The same thing applies in the case of r. 10. That rule must be read in this way: "A petition shall not proceed to trial or hearing unless someone purporting to be the co-respondent has returned to the petitioner or his solicitor an acknowledgment of service in accordance with Form 4." I think the learned commissioner put too strict an interpretation on r. 8 (2), and that the appeal must be allowed.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with poor person's costs.

Solicitor: W. O. Nicholls, agent for F. H. G. Craze, Leeds, Law Society's Divorce Department (for the husband).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re COGHLAN (deceased), BRISCOE v. BROUGHTON.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Evershed, L.J.J., and Hodson J.), April 6, 7, 8, 9, 26 and May 14, 1948.]

Administration—Revocation of grant—Effect of laches.

In November, 1892, the deceased, Henry Thomas Coghlan, died, and, no will being found, in December, 1892, letters of administration were granted to Sir H.D.B., one of his next of kin. In 1899 Sir H.D.B. died, and in 1908 letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of the deceased were granted to H.D.L.B. In 1914 H.D.L.B. died, and no further letters of administration were taken out. At the time of the present proceedings the estate of the deceased (with the exception of one asset mentioned below) had been fully administered and distributed under the supervision and by order of the court, and part of the assets or property representing them had passed by virtue of wills and a settlement into the hands of the defendants as the present trustees of a fund settled by the will of H.D.L.B. and by a resettlement made in 1940. In 1943 the plaintiff, in proceedings issued for the purpose, claimed the revocation of the letters of administration granted in 1892 and 1908 and sought to establish an alleged will of the deceased, dated Dec. 23, 1891, by which the deceased had devised and bequeathed all his estate to his cousin, S.W., and appointed him sole executor. In 1909 S.W. had died intestate, and in 1912 a Mrs. C. obtained a grant of letters of administration to his estate. Mrs. C. died in 1922, and in 1936 the plaintiff took out letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of S.W. The plaintiff had been aware of the alleged will since 1912. The proceedings were originally instituted against one only of the present defendants, Lady B., in her capacity of executrix of the will of H.J.D.B., the son of H.D.L.B., but by arrangement made before the registrar of the court those proceedings were terminated and the present proceedings taken against all the defendants in their capacity of trustees. The defendants failed to deliver a statement of defence, but they took out a summons to have the action dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, contending that, even if the plaintiff succeeded in establishing the authenticity of the will, it would avail him nothing as any subsequent proceedings in the Chancery Division would inevitably be defeated by reason of the laches of the plaintiff or that of persons in whose shoes he stood. The defendants admitted, for the purpose of the present proceedings only, that there were assets of the estate of the deceased in their hands which it might be possible to follow in appropriate proceedings in the Chancery Division if the will were established. It appeared for the first time in the proceedings before the Court of Appeal that there still remained, out of the deceased's estate of over £600,000 in value, a piece of ground containing a family tomb of the value of £157 10s. 0d. vested in H.D.L.B. at the date of his death as administrator of the deceased's estate.

HELD: the action should not be dismissed as frivolous and vexatious (i) (per TUCKER, L.J.) because the defendants had failed to discharge the heavy burden lying on them to show that the action should be dismissed as an abuse of the process of the court; (ii) (per EVERSLED, L.J., and HODSON, J.) because the fact that the piece of ground containing the family tomb still remained outstanding as part of the deceased's estate compelled the court to conclude that the action was not frivolous and vexatious, the value of the ground not being so wholly negligible as to invoke any application of the principle de minimis; and (iii) (per HODSON, J.) because, in view of the arrangement to terminate the original proceedings and to start the present proceedings with the object, to the knowledge of the defendants and their advisors, of establishing the alleged will, the defendants ought not to succeed in limine in preventing the plaintiff from seeking to prove the validity of the will.

Decision of WILLMER, J. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 367), reversed.

Mohan v. Broughton ([1900] P. 56) and Willis v. Beauchamp (Earl) ([1886] 11 P.D. 59), considered.

[AS TO JURISDICTION OF PROBATE DIVISION TO STAY FRIVOLOUS PROCEEDINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 226, 289, paras. 386, 515; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 248, 281, Nos. 3034-3036, 3479-3484.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Mohan v. Broughton, [1900] P. 56 ; 69 L.J.P. 20 ; 82 L.T. 29, C.A., affg., [1899] P. 211 ; 23 Digest 248, 3035.
- (2) Willis v. Beauchamp (Earl), [1886] 11 P.D. 59 ; 55 L.J.P. 17 ; 54 L.T. 185 ; 23 Digest 281, 3479.
- (3) Hewson v. Shelley, [1914] 2 Ch. 13 ; 83 L.J.Ch. 607 ; 110 L.T. 785 ; 23 Digest 60, 402.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of WILLMER, J., dated Feb. 3, 1948, and reported ([1948] 1 All E.R. 367), allowing an appeal from an order of the registrar dismissing the defendants' application for an order that the action brought by the plaintiff for revocation of a grant of administration be dismissed as frivolous and vexatious. The appeal was allowed and the registrar's order restored. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Shelley, K.C., and C. Burke for the plaintiff.

H. C. Leon for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14. The following judgments were read.

TUCKER, L.J. : In this action the plaintiff is claiming revocation of letters of administration to the estate of Henry Thomas Coghlan deceased granted in December, 1892, to Sir Henry Delves Broughton as one of the next of kin of the deceased and letters of administration de bonis non to the same estate granted on July 28, 1908, to Henry Delves Louis Broughton, the son of Sir Henry Delves Broughton who had died in February, 1899, and praying that the court will pronounce for a will of the deceased dated Dec. 23, 1891, and that letters of administration with the will annexed be granted to him. The statement of claim alleges that the deceased died on Nov. 24, 1892, and that letters of administration to his estate were granted in December, 1892, to Sir Henry Delves Broughton as one of the next of kin who received one-fourth share more or less of the estate ; that the said Sir Henry Delves Broughton died on Feb. 26, 1899, and, subject to certain annuities, devised the whole of his estate to his son Henry Delves Louis Broughton ; that on July 28, 1908, letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of the deceased were granted to the said Henry Delves Louis Broughton ; that Henry Delves Louis Broughton died on Apr. 15, 1914, and by his will settled his real and personal estate on his son, Sir Henry John Delves Broughton, since deceased, with remainder to his eldest son (now Sir Evelyn Broughton), one of the defendants, who are the trustees of the Delves Louis Broughton will trust fund and also of a resettlement thereof made in 1940. The statement of claim goes on to allege that, by a will dated Dec. 23, 1891, Henry Thomas Coghlan had devised and bequeathed all his estate, both real and personal, to his cousin, Samuel Williams, the sole beneficiary under the will, and therein appointed the said Samuel Williams sole executor ; that Samuel Williams died intestate on Feb. 13, 1909 ; and that on Jan. 16, 1936, letters of administration de bonis non of his estate were granted to the plaintiff. On those allegations the plaintiff claimed the relief set out above.

On Aug. 17, 1943, an action was started by the plaintiff against the first-named defendant, Lady Broughton, the executrix of the will of Sir Henry John Delves Broughton, to establish the alleged will of Dec. 23, 1891. On Oct. 16, 1944, a statement of claim was delivered. During the course of the preliminary proceedings in that action Messrs. Travers Smith, Braithwaite & Co., objected to the capacity in which their client, the defendant, had been sued, and on Sept. 11, 1945, they wrote a letter in these terms to the plaintiff's solicitors :

Dear Sirs, Referring to the summons taken out by Lady Broughton objecting to her joinder as executrix of Sir Henry John Delves Broughton's will, we have arranged that she and her son, Sir Evelyn Delves Broughton (the present baronet) shall defend the action in the following circumstances. Sir Henry Delves Broughton, who died in 1899 and who shared in the estate of Coghlan deceased, bequeathed by his will various annuities and subject thereto half his estate to his son Sir Delves Louis Broughton. Some part of the annuity fund is still in the hands of the Public Trustee who is administering this fund as trustee of Sir Henry Delves Broughton's will. The reversion to the fund is, however, in the estate of Sir Delves Louis Broughton who by his will settled his real and personal estate on his son Sir Henry John Delves Broughton with remainder to his eldest son (now Sir Evelyn Broughton). Lady Broughton and Sir Evelyn Delves Broughton are the trustees of the Delves Louis Broughton will trust fund and also of a resettlement thereof made in 1940. To the original suggestion that the Public Trustee intervened in the proceedings as trustee of Sir Henry Delves Broughton's will has been raised the objection that the fund is ear-marked for annuities only, that the Public Trustee is not otherwise interested, and that the persons interested are the trustees of Sir Delves Louis Broughton's will to whom the fund passes on the cesser of the annuities. We suggest when you are ready to make the necessary amendment (and we should like to have ample notice thereof) that our summons be restored, the position explained to the registrar, and the necessary order obtained joining Sir Evelyn Delves Broughton and changing the capacity in which Lady Broughton is sued. We should not like the matter to come before the registrar while counsel who was instructed by us is on vacation. Messrs. Witham & Co. will act for those parties as trustees. No admission is hereby made that your client has any rights to any funds held by these trustees or by the Public Trustee should the will propounded by your client be admitted to probate. Yours faithfully, (Sgd.) Travers Smith & Co.

Their proposals were not immediately agreed to, but eventually, on the hearing of a summons before the registrar on July 2, 1946, it was arranged that those proceedings should terminate and that the plaintiff should start fresh proceedings against the present defendants, for whom Messrs. Witham & Co. would act in accordance with the suggestions made in the letter of Sept. 11, 1945. Accordingly, that action was dismissed and the present proceedings begun by writ dated Nov. 28, 1946. The statement of claim was delivered on Jan. 6, 1947, and thereafter several requests were made by and granted to the defendants for extension of time for the delivery of their defence, but such defence was not delivered, and on Mar. 18, 1947, the defendants took out a summons to dismiss the action under the inherent jurisdiction of the court as frivolous and vexatious. This summons was dismissed by the registrar, but on appeal WILLMER, J., made the order asked for.

The defendants, by their counsel, have admitted throughout, but for the purposes of this summons only, that there are assets of the estate of the deceased in their hands which it might be possible to follow in appropriate proceedings in the Chancery Division if the will were established. Several affidavits were read on the hearings below and further affidavits were, by our leave, used on this appeal. I do not intend to refer to them in detail, but those filed on behalf of the defendants were relied on to support their contention that, assuming the plaintiff succeeded in establishing the authenticity of the will of 1891, it would avail him nothing, as any subsequent proceedings in the Chancery Division would inevitably be defeated by reason of the laches of the plaintiff or other persons in whose shoes he now stands. From these affidavits and those sworn in answer thereto it appears that the alleged will was first discovered in 1912, in which year a Mrs. Casey obtained a grant of letters of administration to Samuel Williams' estate. This lady continued to be the administratrix until her death in 1922, during which time she had taken no steps to establish her claim, although the discovery of the will and its terms had been communicated to the solicitors acting for Sir Henry Delves Louis Broughton, such solicitors being the predecessors of the defendants' present solicitors, and also to a solicitor in London, Mr. Brabant, who, through the intervention of a friend—a Lady Coote Stewart—was acting for Mrs. Casey. According to the plaintiff, Mrs. Casey's inactivity was due to her domicile in Ireland, to the outbreak of the first world war, to the death of Mr. Brabant in 1914, to her age—which was 86 at her death—and to lack of means. The plaintiff himself has been aware of the existence of the alleged will since 1912, but he left matters to the administratrix, Mrs. Casey, until her death. Thereafter he explains the subsequent delay on the score that in 1923 he was advised by a solicitor in Dublin that any claim to establish the will was barred by the Statute of Limitations, that he was not in a position to incur the necessary expense, that it was not until 1927 that he got possession of the will, and that in 1933 he was advised, for the first time, that the Statute of Limitations was no bar to the proving of the will. Thereafter, he says, he set out to discover the necessary evidence to establish the will, one of the attesting witnesses was discovered, and as soon as he was advised that he was in a position to prove the will he took proceedings. It further appears from the affidavits and the orders made by the court in the administration of the estate of the deceased to which we have referred that all the assets have been fully administered and distributed under the supervision and by order of the court, with the possible exception of the family vault in Highgate Cemetery.

A It is obvious from this bare recital that a number of questions will arise for determination if this action is allowed to proceed. Some of the more obvious are as follows: (1) Is laches on the part of the plaintiff or his predecessors in itself a bar to proceedings in the Probate Court apart from its effect on any subsequent and consequential proceedings in Chancery or elsewhere? (2) If not, to what extent will the Probate Court investigate the existence of laches with a view to deciding whether the subsequent and consequential proceedings can succeed? (3) Of what, in fact, do the assets ultimately sought to be recovered consist, and what are the possible appropriate forms of action? (4) Has the plaintiff, in fact, been guilty of such laches as to preclude him from succeeding (a) in the Probate Court, (b) in the Chancery Division? (5) If he himself has not been guilty of laches, is he affected by the laches, if any, of Mrs. Casey?

B Counsel for the defendants agreed that, although he would, if necessary, eventually contend under No. (1) above that laches would be a defence to the probate proceedings themselves, he had not sufficient authority for this proposition to justify him in asking us on this ground to support the learned judge's order dismissing the action as vexatious. He based his whole case C on the ground that on a summons to dismiss a probate action as frivolous and vexatious under its inherent jurisdiction the court will investigate the facts, and, if satisfied that laches would bar any subsequent proceedings in Chancery for which purpose the action had been brought, will dismiss the action in limine as frivolous and vexatious. His authority for this proposition was Mohan v. Broughton (1) which WILLMER, J., accepted in the following words ([1948] 1 All E.R. 367, 368):

D The proceedings in this action are reported under the name of Mohan v. Broughton (1) and resulted in an order of the Court of Appeal dismissing the action under the inherent jurisdiction of the court as an abuse of the process of the court. In that action, the report of which was cited to me and very much relied on by the defendants as an authority in the present proceedings, a plea of res judicata failed, but it was held by E GORELL BARNES, J., that the action failed by reason of the laches of the plaintiff, who had stood by and practically acquiesced in the previous administration proceedings, and by the Court of Appeal on the additional ground that the action was quite pointless, seeing that the plaintiff could assert any right which she might have by commencing proceedings right away in the Chancery Division without the necessity for any order of this court.

F Examination of the reports of this case, however, reveal that, although a summons to dismiss the action on the ground of res judicata and that the action was vexatious had been taken out, the actual order was made on certain questions which by consent had been dealt with by the court on the hearing of the summons. The report in [1899] P. 211, begins as follows:

Hearing, upon certain questions left for the decision of the court under an order made by consent, upon an adjourned summons to stay proceedings and dismiss the action, on the grounds of res judicata and laches.

G The course taken is set out at p. 215 in the judgment of GORELL BARNES, J., where he says:

H On June 7, 1898, the writ in the present action was issued. On June 30, 1898, a summons was taken out by the late baronet to show cause why the action should not be dismissed on the ground—first, that the issue had already been adjudicated upon in the Chancery Division; and, secondly, that the action was vexatious. That summons came on for hearing before me, and was adjourned into court, and at the hearing in court it was ordered, by consent, that all questions in the action between the parties, other than the question of the relationship of the plaintiff and the late baronet to Henry Thomas Coghlan, the deceased, should be tried at the next sittings before me, upon the materials already supplied to the court and any further evidence. The case subsequently came on for hearing on these questions other than the relationship of the plaintiff and the late baronet to the deceased, on Feb. 24 last, when two questions were raised for the defence as a bar to the plaintiff's claim in this action. They were—first, that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata; and, secondly, that the plaintiff had been guilty of such laches as debarred her from prosecuting her claim.

The decision was, therefore, one which was arrived at after trial by consent of certain issues and the case is no authority for the circumstances in which an action should be dismissed in limine as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court. This accounts for the observation of LINDLEY, M.R., in the Court of Appeal ([1900] P. 56, 58), where he says :

I think that he was perfectly justified in dismissing the action. I do not say it was frivolous or vexatious. Still less do I think that technically there is anything like res judicata.

The other authority principally relied on by the learned judge was Willis v. Earl Beauchamp (2). In this case the facts were beyond dispute and the circumstances peculiar. They are set out in the judgment of COTTON, L.J., in the following language (11 P.D. 59, 61) :

This action is of a somewhat curious nature. A person named Jennens died in 1798, and in that year administration was taken out to his estate by Lord Beauchamp and Lady Andover. They both died, and administration de bonis non was taken out in 1817 by Lady Beauchamp. That administratrix died, and administration de bonis non was granted to Isaac Martin in 1882. What the object of that was we are not told, but the personal estate not administered was then sworn to be under £20, so that administration was taken out for some other purpose, and not with the view of getting in any assets. Then the present plaintiff and others brought an action to get from Lord Beauchamp's representatives a large sum of money (the estate of Jennens) on the ground of some fraud on the part of Lord Beauchamp and Lady Andover. That action failed, and he has now taken proceedings against Isaac Martin to recall the letters of administration granted to him ; and he has also commenced this action to have revoked the letters of administration which were granted in 1798, and also those which were granted in 1817.

The learned Lord Justice proceeds as follows :

What is his object ? It was said on his behalf that this was necessary in order to enable him to establish his right to obtain administration to the deceased, he now coming forward and saying that he represents a nearer relative to the deceased than those who had obtained letters of administration in 1798. But so far as we can learn that is an erroneous view. If the letters of administration to Isaac Martin, which are still subsisting, are in the way of his obtaining the grant of letters of administration, undoubtedly he must get those letters of administration recalled or cancelled. But the power granted by letters of administration entirely ceases on the death of the persons to whom the court has granted the administration. It is transmissible in no way to their representatives, and so far as one can see it cannot be in any way necessary to recall those letters of administration when the persons to whom they were granted have long since died, and all the power and authority granted to them has long since come to an end. The executors of administrators do not have any power under the letters of administration, and in no way do they represent the administrators, except as having the personal estate, which of course, the administrators had. So far as we can learn, although there was a difference here between counsel on each side as to what was the ordinary practice, the ordinary practice of the Court of Probate does not require in such a case that any such action as this should be instituted.

BOWEN, L.J., said (ibid., 63) :

We have had no satisfactory explanation offered to us why these defendants are made defendants in the suit. Grant of administration is a personal grant. On the death of the administrator there is no succession, and no authority derived from the original grant is transmitted to the personal representatives of the deceased administrator. It seems to me to follow from this, in the first place, that it is wholly unnecessary to apply to revoke the grant of letters of administration to a deceased person, because the grant is already extinct with his death. We have been unable to discover any precedent for such a suit, and though it is not necessary to say that it cannot be maintained, it appears to me clear that even in a suit to revoke administration granted to a deceased person, joining his personal representatives, is a misapprehension of legal principle. I cannot see how they have anything to do with such an action, and in fact I think they have been joined in this particular suit by a confusion of thought.

The court went on to deal with the case on the assumption that the proceedings were amended by asking for a grant to the plaintiff and bringing in Isaac Martin and asking to recall his letters and found that the plaintiff was mistaken in thinking that a large sum remained unadministered and expressed the view that the action was one which could produce no good result. The passages from the judgments quoted above are, however, sufficient to show that the action on its face was unnecessary and that the defendants who were sued as the present representatives of the administrators of 1798 and the administratrix of 1817 were wrongly joined as defendants. This case does not, in my opinion, afford much assistance in deciding whether a probate action should be dismissed in limine as vexatious if it appears that subsequent proceedings in Chancery would be defeated by a plea of laches.

Having regard to the facts that the jurisdiction to dismiss in limine is one which is sparingly exercised and then only in exceptional and clear cases, I have come to the conclusion, having regard to the terms of the letter of Sept. 11, 1945, the state of the authorities with regard to laches as applied to probate actions, and the fact that some of the material facts with regard to laches are in dispute, that the defendants have not been able to discharge the heavy burden that lies on them to show that this action should be dismissed as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court. It is inevitable that in the very full discussion of the various issues that has taken place in this court I should have reached certain conclusions on some of the points that have arisen, but, having arrived at the decision that the action must proceed, I think it undesirable in an endeavour to save costs to express any view thereon at this stage. In my opinion, this appeal succeeds and the order of the registrar should be restored.

EVERSHED, L.J. : This is, indeed, a remarkable case, and not the less so because, since it first came before this court, a mass of evidence has, by our leave, been added to the considerable material which was before WILLMER, J. Out of the mass one fact has emerged which, as matters stand, is, in my judgment, fatal to the defendants' application. To that fact I refer more particularly hereafter, but it has compelled me to conclude, whatever be the answer to the many other points which have been debated before us, that the present action cannot be stayed in limine as frivolous and vexatious and, accordingly, that this appeal must succeed.

I confess that I have reached this conclusion with considerable reluctance. Stated in its briefest terms, the plaintiff's claim in the action is startling in the extreme. It is a claim to establish an alleged will 54 years after the death of the testator, the whole of whose estate has, with the exception presently mentioned, long since been distributed (for the most part pursuant to orders of the court) on the footing that he died intestate. Moreover, the plaintiff—whose claim must rest on his title as personal representative of the universal legatee and devisee named in the alleged will—has by his own admissions been fully aware of the existence and terms of the will since the year 1912. Not only that, but another individual, an aunt of his, by name Mrs. Casey, obtained a grant of letters of administration to the estate of the universal legatee and devisee named in the alleged will in 1912, but herself took no step before her death in 1922 to establish the will which the plaintiff, clothed since 1936 with the representative capacity formerly attached to Mrs. Casey, now seeks to propound. In these circumstances, it is not surprising that the defendants (who derive title under the will of a testator found by order of the court to be one of Mr. Coghlan's next of kin) have alleged that in the circumstances and after so long a lapse of time a grant of letters of administration cum testamento annexo to the plaintiff must be futile, since any attempt on the plaintiff's part after a grant to get in or recover any property formerly belonging to Mr. Coghlan's estate must necessarily be defeated by the plaintiff's laches and the laches of his predecessor in title, Mrs. Casey. WILLMER, J., so held, and on that ground, in the exercise of his discretion, made an order staying the proceedings in the action under the inherent jurisdiction of the court.

It is unnecessary for me to repeat the facts of the case which have already been stated by TUCKER, L.J. Beyond doubt there has been great delay on the plaintiff's part and on the part of the plaintiff's predecessor in title as personal representative of Samuel Williams. For the purposes of the present appeal counsel for the defendants has not thought it right, in the absence of any authority directly in point, to contend that this delay—even though amounting to such laches as would in a court of equity be a bar to any proceeding to follow and recover property—is a bar in the Probate Court to a claim to establish a will assumed to be valid, or that the statutes of limitation apply to defeat such a claim. It follows, therefore, that the case of the defendants in this court for summary dismissal of the action must rest on the proposition that (as WILLMER, J. held) the plaintiff, even though he obtained his grant, could not possibly succeed either in his capacity of personal representative of the testator or as beneficiary under the testator's will in deriving any practical advantage—i.e., in recovering any property from the defendants or from any other persons. The hearing of the appeal has taken many days, and apart from the main question, aye or no, of the validity of the above proposition itself, has involved several other and subsidiary questions—for example, whether or not the plaintiff is bound or affected by the inactivity of Mrs. Casey; whether or not, having regard to the explanations put forward, the delay on the part of the plaintiff or on the part of Mrs. Casey amounts to such laches as would defeat any proprietary claim which the plaintiff might otherwise put forward; whether or not—particularly having regard to the decision of this court in Hewson v. Shelley (3)—the plaintiff, as personal representative of Mr. Coghlan, could successfully lay claim to any assets identifiable as having formerly been part of Mr. Coghlan's estate. On all these and other matters, the court has had the advantage of hearing exhaustive arguments by the learned counsel for the plaintiff and for the defendants, and I confess that I have felt, having heard those arguments, that this court is as well able to express its conclusion as any court before whom these same matters may be argued again, at no little cost to the parties, when the present action comes on for hearing. Nor, for my part, do I think that the difficulties and complexities of the points involved of themselves necessarily form any ground for a refusal on the part of the court to decide them on such an application as the present. If, with all relevant facts before it, the court is able on such an application to reach a clear conclusion on the questions of law to which those facts give rise, then, as it seems to me, the court is entitled to express that conclusion and the result will, at least, be a great saving of time and money to the parties concerned. And on the main proposition advanced by the defendants (viz., that the court may, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, dismiss an action in limine where it is shown that though the action itself may succeed no useful or fruitful result can thereby be achieved by the plaintiff) I find myself, for my part, in agreement with WILLMER, J. For, in approaching the question whether the action is frivolous or vexatious, the court is entitled to ask of the plaintiff, what is his object? If it is apparent that the plaintiff can achieve no real or material advantage for himself or for anyone else from his success, then I think that the court may fairly hold his proceeding to be, in truth, vexatious. I think further that the court is properly entitled to take account of the fact that to any proprietary claim which the plaintiff may make either the relevant statutes of limitation or laches would be a conclusive defence, if, in all the circumstances, it is plain that such pleas will be raised though the time for raising them has not yet, strictly, arrived. In my judgment, Willis v. Beauchamp (2) provides authority, if authority be needed, for both propositions. It is true that the action there before the court was one in which the plaintiff only sought revocation of the grant of letters of administration to persons already dead so that it was a sufficient answer to the claim that the administrations had died with the administrators and nothing was left to revoke, but all three members of the court (as I follow the judgments) dealt also with the case on the footing that the plaintiff had amended his proceedings by adding as a defendant the administrator who was still living and by including a claim for the revocation of the grant to the living administrator. On that basis COTTON, L.J., observed (11 P.D. 59, 62):

What evidence is there, or what ground is there, for supposing that there will be any good result as regards money if letters of administration are granted to the plaintiff? Looking at this action as an action which might be amended by making it one for a grant to Mr. Willis and bringing in Isaac Martin, and asking to recall his letters, Mr. Inderwick hardly suggested that there was any probability that if letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff, he would get any money by that means.

BOWEN, L.J., said (ibid., 64):

But if we proceed further and consider what possible advantage can be obtained by the plaintiff, there is no ground for supposing that he can get a single farthing of benefit or a single right declared which is of any value to him whatever. As regards all acts done by the administrator, the grant, even if it was set aside, would be voidable only, and not void, and the revocation of it would not displace all acts which have been done under the revoked grant. And as regards property outstanding, the ordinary Statutes of Limitation would apply.

Finally, FRY, L.J., added (ibid., 65) :

I think that this action ought to be stayed under the general jurisdiction of the court to prevent the prosecution of frivolous and vexatious actions, and I think it is hardly going too far to say that an action begun nearly ninety years after the death of the person to whose estate it relates is almost prima facie vexatious. I say that because one knows the presumption which the law lends in favour of the possessors of property and the existence of Statutes of Limitations, one or other of which is almost always found to stand in the way of proceedings after such a lapse of time.

As, however, I have indicated at the beginning of this judgment, one fact has emerged from the evidence filed since the hearing before this court began which seems to me fatal to the defendants' application. For it appears that there is a piece of ground containing a family tomb which at the date of the death of Sir Henry Delves Louis Broughton still remained vested in him as administrator of Mr. Coghlan. It is remarkable that no mention appears to have been made of the property in the administration proceedings started in the year 1893, and it may be that some explanation will hereafter be forthcoming, but, as the evidence stands, it is, in my judgment, impossible to deny that that piece of property still remains outstanding as part of Mr. Coghlan's estate, to which none save Mr. Coghlan's personal representative can make title. Nor does it seem to me that the comparative smallness of the value of the property—it is said in the evidence to be worth £157 10s. 0d., compared with a total estate of over £600,000—can affect the result. It cannot be said that the value is so wholly negligible as to invoke any application of the principle of "de minimis." I, therefore, have felt compelled to conclude that, whatever be the answers to the several questions indicated above, the evidence in regard to the family tomb is of itself decisive of the appeal. Having reached that conclusion and having regard to the view taken by both my brethren, not only on this matter but on the wider issues involved, I feel that it would not be right for me further to express conclusions on those other issues. So to do could serve no useful purpose on the present appeal and might embarrass the judge before whom the action will, in due course, come on for hearing. I do not, indeed, forget that the jurisdiction here invoked is one that, as has been said many times, should be exercised sparingly and only in clear cases, nor do I forget that, whatever be the merits of the case, the present action was brought by the plaintiff, in effect, on the invitation of the defendants contained in the letter of Sept. 11, 1945. In the circumstances, therefore, though I cannot conceal my regret that the considerable and careful arguments which have been addressed to us have led to so inconclusive a result, I feel I can do no other than concur in the order which my brethren propose.

HODSON, J. : I have had the advantage of reading the judgments prepared by TUCKER, L.J., and EVERSHEDE, L.J., and it is unnecessary for me to set out the facts relevant to the application.

The first head of the plaintiff's claim, namely, the claim for the revocation of the existing grants of administration is, in my opinion, clearly demurrable since, the administrators being stated on the face of the claim to be dead, the administration died with them. The remaining claim, namely, the claim to establish the alleged will dated Dec. 23, 1891, is not demurrable and in order that the defendants may succeed they rely on the inherent jurisdiction of the court to dismiss frivolous and vexatious actions. On such an application the court is not confined to the pleadings, but is entitled to look at the facts. These have been presented in this case on affidavits which have multiplied in the course of the investigation. The defendants base their application to dismiss the action on the ground, taken in this court, before the learned judge and before the registrar, that it is plain that, even if the claim may succeed, no fruitful consequence can be achieved by the plaintiff.

So far as the defendants themselves are concerned, there is one matter which, in my judgment, is detrimental, if not fatal, to their application. The plaintiff first instituted proceedings against the first-named defendant, who objected to the capacity in which she had been sued. By the letter of Sept. 11, 1945, which has already been read, her solicitors made proposals which eventually led to the issue of a summons heard on July 2, 1946, by the registrar when it was arranged that the existing proceedings should terminate and the plaintiff should start fresh proceedings against the present defendants. The writ in this action was, accordingly, issued on Nov. 28, 1946. The object of these proceedings was, to the knowledge of the defendants and their advisers, to establish the alleged will of 1891. In these circumstances, the defendants ought not, in my judgment, to succeed in limine in preventing the plaintiff from seeking to prove the validity of the will.

Apart from the objection outlined above, it is, in my view, not established by authority that the mere existence of laches such as would bar a claim in subsequent proceedings would justify the court in taking the drastic step of dismissing the action in limine. A close examination of the authorities principally relied on by the defendants, viz., Mohan v. Broughton (1) and Willis v. Earl Beauchamp (2), leads me to the same conclusion as TUCKER, L.J., on this aspect of the matter. Laches, like the Statute of Limitations, must normally be pleaded in order to defeat a claim, and there are grave difficulties in determining on affidavit evidence whether the facts proved against the plaintiff establish laches against him. In spite of the lapse of time and the admitted inactivity of the plaintiff and his predecessor, I express no opinion as to the prospects of a defence of laches succeeding in this or subsequent proceedings by the plaintiff.

Again, the defendants have undertaken to establish on this application that the plaintiff could recover nothing, not only from themselves but also from any other person as identifiable with, or otherwise referable to, assets originally forming part of H. T. Coghlan's estate. On this part of the case a curious fact emerged in the evidence, namely, that a somewhat valuable family tomb exists which forms to this day part of the unadministered estate of H. T. Coghlan. There was no evidence of any other unadministered assets except possibly some pedigree books, but for my part I see great difficulty in applying the de minimis principle, even to the tomb alone, so as to justify the dismissal of the action in limine. In my judgment, the appeal succeeds and the order of the registrar should be restored.

TUCKER, L.J. : The order with regard to costs is that the costs of the hearing before the registrar will be costs in the cause, and the costs before WILLMER, J., and in this court will be the plaintiff's in any event. Twenty-eight days for defence.

Appeal allowed. Costs of hearing before the registrar to be costs in the cause, costs in the court below and in the Court of Appeal to be the plaintiff's in any event.

Solicitors : Piper, Smith & Piper (for the plaintiff) ; Witham & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BANKS v. COPE-BROWN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Sellers, JJ.), May 27, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Extortionate rent—Rent including right to use kitchen, bath-room and garden in common with other tenant—Application of Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 10 (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. I).

A landlord who let a furnished room to a tenant with the right to use, in common with the tenant of another room, the kitchen, bathroom and garden, was convicted under s. 10 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 3 (1), sched. I) of letting part of a house to which the Rent Acts applied at a rent including payment in respect of the use of furniture which was extortionate.

HELD : as the letting of the room included the use of the kitchen in common with the tenant of another part of the house, the room was not "let as a separate dwelling" within the meaning of the Acts, and, therefore, the Rent Acts did not apply and there was no offence under s. 10 of the Act of 1920.

Neale v. Del Soto ([1945] 1 All E.R. 191), and Cole v. Harris ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146), applied.

[AS TO "SEPARATE DWELLING" AND RENT INCLUDING PAYMENTS FOR USE OF FURNITURE, see HALSBURY, Vol. 20, pp. 313, 314, paras. 369, 370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 557, 560, 561, Nos. 7044-7046, 7073-7084.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 114 L.J.K.B. 481; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Middlesex justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Ealing an information was preferred by the respondent, the town clerk of Ealing, charging the appellant, Eileen Greengrass Banks, with having let to Albert William Holyman, a furnished back room on the ground floor of No. 22, The Park, Ealing, together with the use of the kitchen, bathroom and garden and the provision of electric light on the stairs and in the bathroom, at an extortionate rent, contrary to s. 10 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as amended. At the hearing on Jan. 19, 1948, the appellant contended inter alia that s. 10 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, had no application to the letting, because there was a sharing of the kitchen, which was an essential living room, by Mr. Holyman with the tenant of the front room on the ground floor of the premises, and Mr. Holyman was, accordingly, not the tenant of a separate dwelling-house within the meaning of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The justices held that the offence charged had been committed and fined the appellant £15 with £10 10s. costs. The appellant appealed and the Divisional Court now allowed the appeal.

Russell Vick, K.C., and I. H. Jacob for the appellant.

W. G. Wingate for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The appellant let rooms in her house to more than one person, but to each of those persons she gave the right to use, in common with the other tenant, the kitchen, bathroom and garden. The question is whether or not, in those circumstances, the Rent Restrictions Acts apply. If they do not, s. 10 of the Act of 1920, which imposes a penalty on a person who lets a place at an extortionate rent, has no application. Section 10 (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, s. 10 (2), and the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 3 (1), sched. I) provides :

Where any person after the commencement of [the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939] lets any dwelling-house to which this Act applies or any part thereof at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture, and the rent charged yields to the landlord a profit which, having regard to all the circumstances of the case is extortionate, then, without prejudice to any other remedy under this Act, the landlord shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £100 . . .

That section provides in the clearest possible terms that the penalty shall be recoverable if the person lets a house or part of a house to which the Acts apply. If the Acts do not apply, it follows that the section does not apply. As they originally stood the Acts had no application to furnished lettings at all and landlords avoided the provisions of the Act by putting into the house some inconsiderable piece of furniture and then saying that the rent included, not only the house, but also the use of the furniture, and, therefore, the house was outside the scope of the Rent Restriction legislation. To remedy that state of affairs s. 9 of the Act of 1920 provided :

(1) Where any person lets, or has, before the passing of this Act, let any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, or any part thereof, at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the county court on the application of the lessee that the rent charged is yielding or will yield to the lessor a profit more than 25 per cent. in excess of the normal profit as hereinafter defined, the court may order that the rent, so far as it exceeds such sum as would yield such normal profit and 25 per cent. shall be irrecoverable, and that the amount of any payment of rent in excess of such sum which may have been made in respect of any period after the passing of this Act, shall be repaid to the lessee.

That provision was varied by s. 3 (1) and sched. I of the Act of 1939, and it now reads :

(1) Where any person lets, or has, since the beginning of the date of the passing of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, let any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, or any part thereof, at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the county court on the application of the tenant that the rent charged is yielding or will yield to the landlord a profit in excess of the normal profit as hereinafter defined, the court may order that the rent, so far as it exceeds such sum as would yield such normal profit shall be irrecoverable, and that the amount of any payment of rent in excess of such sum which may have been made in respect of any period after the commencement of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions, Act 1939, shall be repaid to the tenant. (2) For the purpose of this section "normal profit" means the profit which might reasonably have been expected from a similar letting in the year ending on Sept. 1, 1939.

The Act of 1939 also amended s. 10 by omitting the direction to the court to pay particular attention to the margin of profit allowed under s. 9. Section 16 of the Act of 1933 provides that :

"Dwelling house" has the same meaning as in the principal Acts, that is to say, a house let as a separate dwelling or a part of a house being a part so let.

It follows that before there can be a conviction under s. 10 of the Act of 1920 there must be a letting of a dwelling-house as a whole or a letting of a part of a house as a separate dwelling. The objection which is taken in this case is that the part of the house that was let to the tenant was not let as a separate dwelling, and, for that, reliance is placed on Neale v. Del Soto (1), a case which is binding on this court. It was decided there that where there was a letting of certain rooms in a house together with the right to use the kitchen in common with the landlord, there was no letting as a separate dwelling-house. Cole v. Harris (2) followed the principle which Neale v. Del Soto (1) laid down, although it was distinguished on the facts. In Cole v. Harris (2) certain rooms were used in common by a landlord and two tenants, but these rooms did not include the kitchen. All the members of the court applied the principle of Neale v. Del Soto (1). The only difference there was that one member of the court, LAWRENCE, L.J., thought the principle of Neale v. Del Soto (1) would apply where the rooms occupied in common were a bathroom and a water closet while the other two members of the court thought that that was not enough and that only if the use of a kitchen had been let there would be enough to apply the principle of Neale v. Del Soto (1) and to say that no longer was there a separate letting of a part of the house.

In the present case the right to use the kitchen is conferred on both the tenants of the house, and it seems to me, and, indeed, counsel for the respondent (the prosecutor) has conceded, that he cannot draw any distinction in principle between the case where part of a house is let to a tenant who has the right to use the kitchen in common with the landlord and the case where the tenant is entitled to use the kitchen in common with another tenant. He is right to make that admission, because in Cole v. Harris (2) MORTON, L.J., in delivering the leading judgment of the court, said this ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146, 152) :

I think that the true test, where the tenant has the exclusive use of some rooms and shares certain accommodation with others, is as follows : there is a letting of part of a house as a separate dwelling, within the meaning of the relevant Acts if, and only if, the accommodation which is shared with others does not comprise any of the rooms which may fairly be described as "living rooms" or "dwelling rooms." To my mind a kitchen is fairly described as a "living room," and thus nobody who shares a kitchen can be said to be tenant of a part of a house let as a separate dwelling.

That obviously applies here, although the common use is a use common to two tenants and not common to a tenant and a landlord. For these reasons, in my opinion, this letting was never within the Rent Restrictions Act, 1920, as amended by the Act of 1939, and it follows that the penal section cannot apply to it. This appeal must be allowed.

BIRKETT, J.: I am of the same opinion and for the same reasons.

SELLERS, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Osmond, Bard & Westbrook (for the appellant); E. J. Cope-Brown, Town Clerk, Ealing (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GORDON v. BARNSLEY POLICE AUTHORITY.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Sellers, JJ.), May 28, 1948.]

Police—Pension—Widow's special pension—"Non-accidental injury"—"Special risks"—Heart disease aggravated by duty—Police Pensions Act, 1921 (c. 31), ss. 3 (b), 33 (3).

By the Police Pensions Act, 1921, s. 3 (b): "Where . . . a member of a police force dies whilst serving in the force from the effects of an injury received in the execution of his duty . . . his widow shall be entitled, where the injury was accidental to a widow's ordinary pension, and where the injury was non-accidental to a widow's special pension." By s. 33 (3): "Any injury intentionally inflicted, or incurred in the performance of a duty involving special risks, shall be deemed to be a non-accidental injury." By previous decisions of the Divisional Court, a disease can be an injury within the meaning of the Act.

A police officer died from the effects of heart disease which was aggravated by his duty, and his widow claimed a special pension under s. 3 (b), on the ground that his death was caused by a "non-accidental injury":—

HELD: although the definition in s. 33 (3) of the Act was not comprehensive, a "non-accidental injury" must be, or must be sui generis with, an injury intentionally inflicted, or incurred in the performance of a duty involving special risks, and the special risks must be risks special to the duty which the police officer was called on to perform and not risks special to the officer, and, therefore, the widow was not entitled to a special pension.

[AS TO WIDOWS' PENSIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 351, 352, para. 583.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Garvin v. City of London Police Authority, [1944] 1 All E.R. 378; [1944] K.B. 358; 113 L.J.K.B. 305; 170 L.T. 336; 108 J.P. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Huddersfield Police Authority v. Watson, [1947] 2 All E.R. 193; [1947] K.B. 842; [1948] L.J.R. 182; 177 L.T. 114.

APPEAL by the widow of a police officer, under the Police Pensions Act, 1921, s. 17 (2), from a decision of the West Riding, Yorkshire, Quarter Sessions, dated Jan. 19, 1948. Quarter sessions held that the widow was not entitled to a special pension under s. 3 (b) of the Act, because the police officer's death was not the result of a "non-accidental injury," and the Divisional Court now affirmed their decision. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

R. Lyons for the widow.

G. W. Wrangham for the police authority.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is an appeal brought under the Police Pensions Act, 1921, s. 17 (2), which enables a decision of quarter sessions to be reviewed by this court on a point of law. I think it is a transparently clear case in which quarter sessions decided rightly. The Police Pensions Act, 1921, s. 3 (b), provides:

. . . where in any case a member of a police force dies whilst serving in the force from the effects of an injury received in the execution of his duty without his own default, or, having been granted a pension in respect of any such injury, dies from the effects of such injury, his widow shall be entitled, where the injury was accidental to a widow's ordinary pension, and where the injury was non-accidental to a widow's special pension.

Section 33 (3) provides :

Any injury intentionally inflicted, or incurred in the performance of a duty involving special risks, shall be deemed to be a non-accidental injury.

That definition is not comprehensive, since it does not say that no other injury can be a non-accidental injury, but it indicates a class of injury which the legislature had in mind as a non-accidental injury. A

The police constable in question died from the effects of heart disease. He suffered from that disease for probably a long time, but it was not known. During the war he was on a heavy beat, which he worked by means of a bicycle, and, as everyone knows, a bicycle is a very bad thing, especially in hilly country, for a man with heart disease. By reason of the decisions of this court [in Garvin v. City of London Police Authority (1) and Huddersfield Police Authority v. Watson (2), that a disease can be an "injury" within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (c) of the Act], where a police officer dies from what would ordinarily be called "natural causes," his death is held to be the result of an injury received in the execution of his duty, and, consequently, the widow is entitled to a pension under s. 3 (b) of the Act if those causes have been aggravated by his duty or if his duty has caused the "natural cause" which existed to be fatal. In this case the question is whether or not the injury which the police officer suffered is to be regarded as an accidental or non-accidental injury. Quarter sessions held that a non-accidental injury must be, or must be sui generis with, an injury intentionally inflicted or incurred in the performance of a duty involving a special risk. That is a perfectly right decision, and I do not think we can improve on it. It is obvious, from the facts found by quarter sessions, that this was not an injury intentionally inflicted nor one incurred in the performance of a duty involving a special risk, but that it was simply incurred in performing the ordinary duties of a police officer. Counsel for the widow put forward an alternative submission that, if the risk was one which was special to the officer himself, it would be a non-accidental risk. I cannot agree with that. I think the risk must be special to the duty and not to the particular officer. No one knew at the time that this officer was suffering from this disease. He did not know it himself. I think that the "special risk" must be a risk special to the duty which he is called on to perform, and not a risk which is special to the officer because it so happens that, unknown to everyone, he is in a particular state of health. For these reasons I think that the decision of quarter sessions was right and that this appeal should be dismissed. B
C
D
E

BIRKETT, J.: I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons. I should be content to accept and adopt as my own the very careful judgment of the learned chairman of quarter sessions. I agree with the reasons of my Lord. F

SELLERS, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Alf. Masser & Co., Leeds (for the widow); Torr & Co., agents for A. E. Gilfillan, Town Clerk, Barnsley (for the police authority). G

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BETTELEY, ADDYMAN & JALLAND, LTD. v. SINGTON.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Streetfeild, JJ.),
May 26, 1948.]

Price Control—Exceeding maximum price—Penalty—Minimum penalty—Offender to derive “no benefit from the offence”—Deduction of tax paid on excessive profit—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 55AB (4) (a).

A During the 12 months ending Dec. 19, 1946, a manufacturing company received by the sale of its goods £33,353, which exceeded its permitted maximum charge by £3,789. The company was liable to pay £3,293 in income tax and excess profits tax on the excess. In assessing the minimum amount of the fine to be imposed under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB, which provides by para. 4 (a) that “the minimum amount [of the fine] shall be such amount as will, in the opinion of the court, secure that the offender derives no benefit from the offence,”

B HELD: on the construction of the regulation, the company should be fined the amount by which it had, in fact, profited, and, in arriving at that amount, it was proper to deduct the amount of the tax from the total amount of illegal profit.

C [FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 55AB, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 992-994.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn, [1920] 2 K.B. 553; 89 L.J.K.B. 590; 123 L.T. 338; 28 Digest 46, 236.
- (2) Mann v. Nash, [1932] 1 K.B. 752; 101 L.J.K.B. 270; 147 L.T. 154; 76 Sol. Jo. 201; 16 Tax Cas. 523; Digest Supp.

D CASE STATED by Nottingham justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Nottingham an information was preferred by the respondent on behalf of the Board of Trade under the Apparel and Textiles Order, 1942, art. 1, the Utility Apparel (Infants and Girls Wear) (Consolidation) Directions, 1945, para. 3 (2), and the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB, charging the appellants with having charged, in the course of their business, in respect of all relevant goods supplied by sale during the twelve months ending on Dec. 19, 1946, £33,353, an aggregate of gross prices exceeding by £3,789 the manufacturers' costs of production and other costs and 5 per cent. thereon. The appellants pleaded Guilty, but contended that the facts warranted the imposition of the minimum penalty only and that such minimum penalty was the sum of £3,789 less £3,293 income tax and excess profits tax payable by the appellants on this sum, i.e., £496. In imposing a fine of £3,789, the justices held that the proper penalty was the minimum penalty, but that, in assessing it, there was no power to deduct the amount of income tax and excess profits tax payable by the appellants. The Divisional Court now held that the liability for tax should be taken into account and allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Vaughan, K.C., and Geoffrey Lane for the appellants.

G H. L. Parker for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This case raises a short but very important point in regard to penalties which may be imposed for exceeding maximum prices under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB, made in December, 1945, in pursuance of the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945, s. 2.

H The appellants, who were manufacturers of clothing, during the period of twelve months ending Dec. 18, 1946, sold £33,353 worth of goods. On aggregate of gross prices, that exceeded by £3,789 the sum they were entitled to charge under the Apparel and Textiles Order, 1942. It was proved before the justices and accepted by the prosecution that the amount of tax which they would have to pay, either in income tax or excess profits tax, on that sum was £3,293, and it was contended by the appellants that on the true construction of the regulation they were entitled to deduct that £3,293 from the £3,789 for the purpose of assessing the minimum penalty to which they were liable, which would mean that the balance, £496, would be the amount of the minimum penalty. The justices held that they had no power to take into account the amount of tax, and, therefore, they fined the appellants £3,789. Regulation 55AB provides :

(3) Any person guilty of an offence against this regulation shall be liable—(a) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the maximum amount provided in the next following paragraph . . . and shall in every case be ordered to pay such a fine as aforesaid, of an amount not less than the minimum amount provided in the next following paragraph, unless, having regard to any special circumstances, the court thinks there is good reason for not imposing a fine or for imposing a fine of less amount.

(4) The minimum and maximum amounts of the fine referred to in the last foregoing paragraph shall be as follows, that is to say—(a) whether on summary conviction or on conviction on indictment, the minimum amount shall be such amount as will, in the opinion of the court, secure that the offender derives no benefit from the offence ; (b) On summary conviction the maximum amount shall be an amount which exceeds the minimum amount by £500 or by the treble penalty, whichever is the greater . . . and for the purposes of this paragraph the expression “treble penalty” means—(i) in a case where the offence was a sale of, or an offer or agreement to buy or sell, or an invitation of an offer to buy or sell, controlled goods at too high a price, an amount equal to three times that price.

Therefore, with regard to the maximum penalty, which is meant to be highly punitive, being imposed in what I may call a bad case of deliberate over-charging, there is no question. It is simply the price multiplied by three. Observe the difference between that and the provision with regard to the minimum penalty, which is to be “such amount as will, in the opinion of the court, secure that the offender derives no benefit from the offence.” It seems to me that what Parliament means is that the offender, in the absence of special circumstances (and none was found here), is to pay a sum of money which will leave him no better off than if he had not got the illegal profit into his pocket and no worse off than he would have been if he had not offended against the regulation. That may be, in many cases, difficult of assessment, and the words “in the opinion of the court” show that Parliament is leaving the court to use the best means that it can in deciding the proper amount. It is not to be measured by some particular yardstick. There may, however, be cases (and it is said that this is one, because the prosecution was brought after the assessment for taxes had been ascertained) in which the court will not have any difficulty in applying a measurement because it has already been done for them. If I am right in my view that the intention of the section is that the offender is to be fined such an amount as will leave him in the same position as he would have been in if he had not made the over-charge, the present matter becomes clear, because, while, in making the over-charge, the appellants put into their pockets £3,700 odd, they will have to pay thereout to the State some £3,200 in taxation. The justices, therefore, can see at once what sum has to be brought into account to find out whether or not the appellants are getting a benefit. Manifestly they are required to measure the benefit which the appellants have received by their illegal profit and to take that sum from them by way of a minimum fine. Therefore, the justices were in error in thinking that they could not take into account the tax which the appellants have to pay. If Parliament had meant that the offender was, in every case, to pay the full amount of the illegal profit, it would have been easy to say so. Comparing the provision for the minimum penalty with the words used in regard to the maximum penalty, it seems clear that the legislature intended that a man who, in the opinion of the justices, should be fined a minimum penalty, should only pay that amount by which he was, in fact, better off.

There was ample evidence before the justices to show that the true amount by which the appellants were better off was £496 and that that was the only benefit which they received. Therefore, this case will go back to the justices with an intimation that they had power to take the tax into account and that, therefore, the proper penalty for them to impose was £496, and the conviction must be amended accordingly.

BIRKETT, J.: I am of the same opinion and for the same reasons. I would base my own judgment on the concluding sentence of my Lord's judgment with regard to the true duty which lay on the justices. No doubt, as counsel for the respondent has forcibly pointed out, these are important cases, and he has shown some of the difficulties which may arise in dealing with them. In the present case, however, I think the facts are quite clear. The justices found as a fact that £3,789 was the illegal excess contrary to the provisions of the Apparel and Textiles Order, 1942. They also found that the appellants must pay taxes amounting to £3,293, leaving the sum of £496. The justices were wrong in saying that they had no power to consider the taxation. That ignores entirely the meaning of the words "in the opinion of the court." The words of the regulation are: "the minimum amount shall be such amount as will, in the opinion of the court, secure that the offender derives no benefit from the offence." The justices had before them the clearest evidence that the amount which the appellants must pay by way of income tax and excess profits tax was £3,293, and the clearest evidence that the net cash benefit was £496. They say in the Case Stated: "We are of opinion that we had no power to deduct that sum [the amount of the tax]." I think they had, and that, on the true construction of the words of the regulation, they ought to have considered it.

STREATFEILD, J.: I also am of the same opinion. Whatever the result of a fine in this case, the amount of the income tax and excess profits tax which the appellants are liable to pay cannot be recovered by them from the Revenue. The two cases which have been cited to the court: Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Von Glehn (1) and Mann v. Nash (2) make that quite clear, but, in my opinion, in assessing the minimum amount under the regulation the justices have wrongly fettered themselves by saying that they had no power to take into consideration the amount of tax for which the appellants are liable. I agree with my Lord that, in assessing the amount which, "in the opinion of the court, shall secure that the offender derives no benefit from the offence," it is impossible to shut out the tax which has been suffered by the appellants in this case. In assessing the minimum punishment the justices had to form an opinion as to what amount would secure that there was no benefit to the appellants. I do not see how that could be done unless they took into consideration what the appellants were liable to pay in income tax and excess profits tax. I agree that this case should be sent back with the directions the Lord Chief Justice has indicated.

Appeal allowed, with costs.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker, agents for Browne, Jacobson & Hallam, Nottingham (for the appellants); the Solicitor for the Board of Trade (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SAYCELL v. BOOL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Sellers, JJ.), May 28, 1948.]

Motor Vehicle—"Driving"—Steering lorry down incline without engine running—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 7 (4).

On Dec. 10, 1947, the respondent, who was then disqualified for holding a licence to drive a motor vehicle, released the brake of a lorry which he owned and which was standing at the head of an incline and steered it down the road into his garage, a distance of about 100 yards. The engine was not started, and there was no petrol in the tank.

HELD: the respondent was guilty of driving a motor vehicle while disqualified for holding a licence, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 7 (4).

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 7 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 616.]

Case referred to:

(1) Wallace v. Major, [1946] 2 All E.R. 87; [1946] K.B. 473; 115 L.J.K.B. 402; 175 L.T. 84; 110 J.P. 231; 2nd Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Sheffield justices.

Informations were preferred by the appellant, a police inspector, against the respondent, charging him with driving, on Dec. 10, 1947, a motor lorry while being a person disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence to drive motor vehicles, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 7 (4), and with driving the lorry when there was no third-party insurance policy in force in relation thereto, contrary to s. 35 (1) of the said Act. The justices, being of the opinion that in the circumstances the van was not mechanically propelled and was not a motor vehicle within the meaning of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, dismissed the said informations. The present appeal to the Divisional Court was allowed. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Wrangham for the appellant.

Harry Morris for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : This is a Special Case stated by justices for the city of Sheffield who dismissed a charge preferred against the respondent of having driven a motor vehicle on the road when he was disqualified. As a concomitant of that charge, he was also charged with driving an uninsured vehicle, because the policy of which he was possessed only covered a person holding a licence. The alleged offence was committed on Dec. 10, 1947, and the justices heard the case on Feb. 17, 1948. Meanwhile, on Feb. 6, 1948, the Recorder of Sheffield had allowed the respondent's appeal against his disqualification for holding a driving licence.

The question raised in this case is whether the respondent was driving the lorry at the time in question. The lorry, which he owned, was standing at the head of an incline. There was no petrol in the tank, and the respondent, having released the brake, set the lorry in motion by pushing it, got into the driving seat, and let the lorry go down the hill so as to get it into his garage. I dare say he thought he was not committing an offence, but it seems impossible to say that in those circumstances he was not "driving" the vehicle. He controlled it by operating the brakes and the steering wheel, and one cannot say that he was not the "driver" for the purposes of the Road Traffic Act.

This case has been brought here after the respondent's disqualification was removed. It appears very unfortunate that the respondent should have been convicted after his disqualification had been removed—when the appellate court had expressed the opinion that he ought not to have been disqualified. We shall send the case back to the justices with an intimation that a technical offence was committed. We shall not give any costs of this appeal. If the police want to get a decision on a point of principle they must get it at their own expense. We shall also indicate to the justices that we think that in the circumstances of the case, having regard to the removal of the disqualification which had taken place before the case was heard, the case can properly be met by a nominal fine, and that special reasons do exist for not disqualifying the respondent for holding a licence by reason of his conviction.

BIRKETT, J. : I agree.

SELLERS, J. : I agree.

Appeal allowed ; no order as to costs.

Solicitors : Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for John Heys, town clerk, Sheffield (for the appellant) ; Paisner & Co., agents for R. Howard Boyers, Sheffield (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WALFORD v. NARIN.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), April 23, 26, 1948.]

Sale of Goods—Note or memorandum in writing—Sufficiency—Omission of vendor's name—Deficiency supplied by purchaser's admission—Omission of term as to delivery—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1).

On Jan. 20, 1948, the defendant agreed to buy certain furniture from the plaintiff and signed the following memorandum: "11 Nether Close, Finchley, N.3 [the defendant's address]. I agree to purchase the following second-hand furniture and will forward a cheque for £150 in payment for same within three days." The articles were set out underneath. It was orally agreed that the plaintiff should send the furniture to a factory where one article was to be sprayed, and that after the spraying he would send all the furniture to the defendant. On Jan. 21, 1948, the defendant told the plaintiff that he no longer desired to take delivery of the furniture. On that day the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendant calling for payment, and, on Jan. 22, 1948, in reply, the defendant's solicitors wrote: "Your letter of yesterday's date addressed to Mr. S. N. has been handed to us with instructions to deal with same on his behalf. He informs us that he has no copy of the memorandum signed by him, and we shall, therefore, be obliged if you will favour us with a copy of same and give us an opportunity of inspecting the original." In an action by the plaintiff for payment of the money alleged to be due under the contract, it was submitted on behalf of the defendant that there was no sufficient memorandum for the purposes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4.

HELD: (i) the letter of Jan. 22, 1948, was an admission by the defendant through his agent that he signed the memorandum of Jan. 20, 1948, and was sufficient to supply the deficiency in that memorandum caused by the omission therefrom of the plaintiff's name.

(ii) the oral agreement as to delivery was a term of the contract which should have appeared in the memorandum, and its omission rendered the memorandum insufficient for the purposes of s. 4.

Dicta of SCRUTTON, L.J., and BANKES, L.J., in Thirkell v. Cambi ([1919] 2 K.B. 590, 598, 593), applied.

Wilkinson v. Evans (1866) (L.R. 1 C.P. 407), distinguished.

[AS TO NOTE OR MEMORANDUM OF CONTRACTS FOR £10 OR UPWARDS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 33-37, paras. 34-38; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 383-393, Nos. 212-295.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Studds v. Watson, (1884), 28 Ch.D. 305; 54 L.J.Ch. 626; 52 L.T. 129; 12 Digest 141, 958.
- (2) Wilkinson v. Evans, (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 407; Har. & Ruth. 552; 35 L.J.C.P. 224; 12 Digest 135, 911.
- (3) Thirkell v. Cambi, [1919] 2 K.B. 590; 89 L.J.K.B. 1; 121 L.T. 532; 12 Digest 135, 908.

ACTION for moneys due and payable under a contract for the sale of goods, with interest. The defendant set up the absence of a sufficient memorandum in writing as required by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4 (1), on the ground that neither the name of the plaintiff nor a term of the contract as to the delivery of the goods appeared in the note of the contract signed by the defendant. The facts appear in the judgment.

G. E. Duveen for the plaintiff (the seller).

Pearl and Wellwood for the defendant (the buyer).

MORRIS, J.: The plaintiff, Mr. Herbert Abraham Walford, claims the sum of £150 from the defendant, Mr. Samuel Narin, as moneys due and payable by the defendant to the plaintiff under a contract for the sale of goods. On Feb. 23, 1948, the defendant swore an affidavit in which he denied that he was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum alleged, or at all, and in which he said:

The money the subject-matter of the plaintiff's claim herein is the price alleged to be due to him in respect of the sale to me by the plaintiff of certain articles of furniture. I am advised and verily believe that the said alleged contract of sale is unenforceable in that there is no sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the said contract as required by law and I have not accepted or received the goods, neither have I given anything in earnest to bind the contract.

When the matter came to court the defendant took, not only the point that there was no memorandum of the contract because the name of the plaintiff did not appear in the document signed by the defendant on Jan. 20, 1948, but also a further point that a term of the contract relating to delivery is not to be found in any document or documents signed by him (the defendant).

The plaintiff advertised in a newspaper certain furniture for sale. The defendant, who was setting up a home, went with his wife to see the furniture. Ultimately, it was orally agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the defendant would buy the furniture for £150. There is no dispute as to what constituted the items of furniture. They are set out in a document, dated Jan. 20, 1948, signed by the defendant. One of the articles of furniture, a dressing table, was not quite in the condition that the defendant would have liked it to be in or that the plaintiff was willing to have it put in. The plaintiff was agreeable to having that dressing table sprayed, and he was willing to undertake the spraying at a factory in Edgware with which he was connected. There was a discussion as to delivery, and I find that the parties agreed that the plaintiff would send the furniture to the factory so that the dressing table might be sprayed, and that, when that had been done, the plaintiff would send the furniture to the defendant at such place as the defendant specified, and, presumably, subject to considerations as to what was reasonable, at such time as the defendant specified. The importance of this part of the case is that the plaintiff agreed with the defendant that the plaintiff would deliver the furniture to the defendant.

After this agreement the plaintiff got a piece of his own notepaper, wrote on it, gave it to the defendant, and asked him to sign it. The defendant did so. The document so signed by the defendant is dated Jan. 20, 1948. The address of the plaintiff's house is printed at the head, but it is deleted and there is written, "11 Nether Close, Finchley, N.3," that being the defendant's address. The document is in this form :

I agree to purchase the following second-hand furniture and will forward a cheque for £150 in payment for same within three days.

The articles of furniture are enumerated. The plaintiff retained the document and a few days later he had it stamped. It will be seen that the name of the plaintiff is not contained in the document.

The next morning, Jan. 21, the defendant telephoned to the plaintiff saying that he no longer desired to take delivery of the furniture. The plaintiff consulted his solicitor, who wrote a letter on Jan. 21 in these terms :

We have been consulted by Mr. H. A. Walford of Lea Lodge, Norrice Lea, Finchley. We understand from our client that you purchased from him furniture for the sum of £150 last night and we have before us a memorandum of the bargain which you signed. Mr. Walford informs us that you telephoned him this morning to state that you no longer desired to take delivery of this furniture. Our client was most surprised and has instructed us to write to you accordingly. We must inform you, therefore, that the furniture stands at your risk, and that, unless we receive payment for the same by the 23rd instant, the date you promised in the memorandum, we shall issue a writ against you. Yours faithfully, Walford & Co.

The plaintiff's solicitor received the following reply, dated Jan. 22, from the defendant's solicitors :

Your letter of yesterday's date addressed to Mr. S. Narin has been handed to us with instructions to deal with same on his behalf. He informs us that he has no copy of the memorandum signed by him, and we shall, therefore, be obliged if you will favour us with a copy of same and give us an opportunity of inspecting the original. After we have seen them we will take our client's instructions and communicate with you again.

A number of authorities have been cited to me dealing with the authority that should be possessed by any agent who signs a memorandum for the purposes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4 (1). It does not seem to me that the citation of authority is necessary in regard to this part of the case. The words in the second paragraph of the letter are quite plain : "He informs us that he has no copy of the memorandum signed by him." There cannot be any doubt that the solicitors were there stating that they were informed by the defendant that he had no copy of a memorandum signed by him, and those words, in my judgment, carry the plain meaning that the solicitors, having been asked by the defendant to deal with the letter that he had received from the plaintiff's solicitor, wrote on the direct instruction of the defendant to say that the defendant had no copy of the memorandum signed by him. That is a clear statement by somebody told to write on behalf of the defendant that he is saying: "I did sign the memorandum to which you are referring, but I have not a copy of it."

A That letter is sufficient by itself to supply one deficiency in the original document, namely, that it does not contain the name of the plaintiff.

One or two further letters passed. The plaintiff's solicitor sent a copy of the memorandum that had been signed by the defendant and that was acknowledged on Jan. 30, 1948, in a letter in which the defendant's solicitors say:

We thank you for your letter of the 27th instant, enclosing copy of the document signed by our client which we will inspect.

B In a letter, written on Jan. 28, by the defendant to the plaintiff personally, the defendant said:

The capital with which I intended to purchase the furniture was a loan which was promised me by a close relative. Now, for some reasons best known to himself, he has withdrawn his promise which leaves me in an awful position, I must admit. Under the circumstances, I feel sure you will agree with me it would seem rather

C futile and hopeless to bind myself, when I am incapable of discharging my obligations. My reason for telephoning you on the following morning was the hope that you would be able to dispose of the furniture in question.

He then goes on to make a suggestion as to how he would be able to pay if the plaintiff still insisted that he should purchase the goods. Using that letter and citing Studds v. Watson (1), counsel for the plaintiff says that, if it were necessary for him further to rely on any matter, he would submit that that letter of Jan. 28 sufficiently refers to the agreement that was made between the defendant and the plaintiff so as to introduce the name of the plaintiff, and that he could rely on that document, together with the memorandum of Jan. 20, and say that together they constitute a sufficient note or memorandum in writing. As I have held that the letter of Jan. 22 is sufficient so far as the supplying of the name of the plaintiff as the seller and as the person to whom the cheque was to be given was necessary to constitute a memorandum, it is unnecessary

D for me to deal with this alternative contention.

E If the matter had rested there, I would be of opinion that the documents constituted a sufficient note or memorandum in writing. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4, provides:

(1) A contract for the sale of any goods of the value of £10 or upwards shall not be enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

F

There is no dispute between the parties that the contract is unenforceable unless there is a note or memorandum in writing of it, signed by the defendant.

Section 29 (1) of the Act, in dealing with the question of delivery, provides as follows:

G

Whether it is for the buyer to take possession of the goods or for the seller to send them to the buyer is a question depending in each case on the contract, express or implied, between the parties. Apart from any such contract, express or implied, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business, if he have one, and if not, his residence: Provided that, if the contract be for the sale of specific goods, which to the knowledge of the parties when the contract is made are in some other place, then that place is the place of delivery.

H

Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that on the evidence the proper conclusion is that nothing was arranged between the parties as to delivery, and that, therefore, the result is that, in accordance with s. 29 (1) delivery of these articles of furniture was to be at the residence of the plaintiff. I have already stated that the view of the evidence which I have accepted is that it was arranged between the plaintiff and the defendant as to how delivery was to take place, namely, that the plaintiff was to deliver to the defendant. That was a term of the contract that depended on the particular arrangement made between the parties. Counsel further argued that, even if there was an agreement that the plaintiff should deliver to the defendant, nevertheless such an agreement need not be incorporated in the note or memorandum in writing. In support of that contention he referred to LEAKE ON CONTRACTS (8th ed.), p. 191, where it is said :

But directions respecting the route by which the goods are to be delivered relate to the mode of performance, and not to the substance of the contract, and therefore need not be in writing.

The authority given to support those words was Wilkinson v. Evans (2), but it seems to me that that case is different from the present on its facts and on the principle raised in it. In that case some cheeses and candles had been sold and an invoice was sent to the buyer. The buyer returned the goods and the invoice with a note on the back of the latter complaining of the condition in which the goods had arrived. It was held (L.R. 1 C.P. 407) :

... that the contents of the invoice were sufficiently referred to by the note on the back of it, and that the two together constituted a sufficient memorandum in writing of the bargain to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

In a letter which was written by the defendant in that case it was said that, had the goods been sent by canal, as had been ordered, they would not have been damaged, and in argument to the court it was submitted that from the letter it would appear that it was a term of the contract that the goods should be sent by canal. In giving judgment, ERLE, L.J., said (ibid., 410) :

I think the direction to send them by the canal was not a part of the contract, but only an order given subsequently as to the mode of carrying it out.

It seems to me that a question whether the plaintiff is to deliver the goods to the defendant or whether the defendant is to collect them from the plaintiff is on quite a different footing from the matter referred to in Wilkinson v. Evans (2).

In Thirkell v. Cambi (3), in the Court of Appeal, SCRUTTON, L.J., in the course of his judgment, after referring to certain letters, says ([1919] 2 K.B. 598) :

But when all these documents are examined, which, it is said, contain the terms of the contract and prove that there was no other contract, it is found that one term, the mode of delivery of the goods against payment, is not mentioned in the written statements of the contract.

BANKES, L.J., referred to the question of delivery, using these words (ibid., 593, 594) :

Take for example the terms as to the mode of delivery and the conditions of payment ... for the purposes of this case I will assume that the letters do contain the terms of the bargain.

It seems to me that those passages indicate that a term as to delivery was regarded as a term that should have been set out in the note or memorandum in writing. Counsel for the plaintiff sought to distinguish the case on the ground that delivery and payment in that case were so closely related. In the present case, he says, the payment provided for by the contract is to be £150 payable by cheque within three days and that payment is irrespective of delivery. In my judgment, however, that is not a distinction which negatives the contention that a term as to delivery may be a term that ought to be in the note or memorandum in writing of the contract. I must decide this case only in reference to its own facts, but it seems to me that, as the parties came to an arrangement in regard to delivery which altered what would otherwise have been the legal position, that term should have been in the note or memorandum in writing. I, therefore, feel compelled to hold that there is no sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the contract, and that the claim of the plaintiff does not succeed.

Judgment for the defendant. No order as to costs.

Solicitors : Walford & Co. (for the plaintiff) ; Gerald Samuels & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BEAMAN v. A.R.T.S., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), April 19, 20, 21, May 12, 1948.]

Limitation of Actions—Postponement of limitation period—Conversion—“Action based on fraud”—“Right of action concealed by fraud”—Bailment of goods—Owner abroad during war—Instructions unobtainable—Storage charges accumulating—Goods given away as worthless—Action brought more than 6 years after date of conversion—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), ss. 3, 26 (a), (b).

In 1935, before going abroad, the owner of four packages deposited them with a company for storage. In August, 1940, the company gave up its own storage depot and, owing to difficulties connected with the war, wished to wind up outstanding matters so far as possible. Storage charges were already due on the packages and were accumulating, and, as communication with the owner was impossible at the time, the company examined the contents of the packages to see if their continued storage was justifiable. Deciding that they were worthless, the company gave them to the Salvation Army, paid certain warehouse charges, and cancelled its own charges. The company neither wrote to, nor heard from, the owner until 1946 when she returned to England and demanded delivery of the packages. In November, 1946, after making inquiries, necessitated by disorganisation due to the war, the company informed her of the position, whereupon, she started an action against the company for damages for conversion. The company pleaded the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 3, but it was contended by the owner under s. 26 of the Act that the period of limitation was postponed because the action was “based upon the fraud” of the company or “the right of action was concealed by [its] fraud,” within the meaning of s. 26 (a) and (b) respectively :—

HELD: the word “fraud” always imported some element of moral turpitude and an action for conversion was not “based upon the fraud of the defendant” within the meaning of s. 26 (a) of the Act of 1939 where the defendant honestly believed that the true owner was not available and that he was acting in the best interests of all concerned. Therefore, on the facts of the case, the action was not based on fraud and there had been no fraudulent concealment by the company of the owner's right of action, within the meaning of s. 26 (b), and, accordingly, the cause of action in respect of the conversion accrued on Aug. 16, 1940, and, under s. 3 of the Act of 1939, the action was barred on Aug. 16, 1946, when the owner's title to the goods became extinguished.

[FOR THE LIMITATION ACT, 1939, ss. 3 and 26, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, pp. 226 and 240.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Clayton v. Le Roy, [1911] 2 K.B. 1031; 81 L.J.K.B. 49; 105 L.T. 430; 75 J.P. 521; 43 Digest 493, 314.
- (2) United Australia, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1940] 4 All E.R. 20; [1941] A.C. 1; 109 L.J.K.B. 919; 164 L.T. 139; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Granger v. George, (1826), 5 B. & C. 149; 7 Dow & Ry. K.B. 729; 32 Digest 344, 264.
- (4) Beaumont v. Jeffery, [1925] Ch. 1; 93 L.J.Ch. 532; 132 L.T. 246; Digest Supp.
- (5) Betts v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver and Carter Paterson & Co., Ltd., [1932] 2 K.B. 595; 101 L.J.K.B. 588; 147 L.T. 336; 96 J.P. 327; Digest Supp.
- (6) Wilkinson v. Verity, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 206; 40 L.J.C.P. 141; sub nom., Williamson v. Verity, 24 L.T. 32; 32 Digest 327, 136.
- (7) Spackman v. Foster, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 99; 52 L.J.Q.B. 418; 48 L.T. 670; 47 J.P. 455; 32 Digest 344, 271.
- (8) Miller v. Dell, [1891] 1 Q.B. 468; 60 L.J.Q.B. 404; 63 L.T. 693; 32 Digest 344, 272.
- (9) Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 583; [1946] K.B. 374; 115 L.J.K.B. 215; 174 L.T. 214; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (10) Sachs v. Miklos, [1948] 1 All E.R. 67.
- (11) S.S. Celia v. S.S. Volturmo, [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 90 L.J.P. 385; 126 L.T. 1; 17 Digest 159, 602.
- (12) France v. Gaudet, (1871), L.R. 6 Q.B. 199; 40 L.J.Q.B. 121; 17 Digest 78, 6.
- (13) Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne, [1899] A.C. 351; 68 L.J.P.C. 49; 80 L.T. 430; 32 Digest 524, 1798.

- (14) Lynn v. Bamber, [1930] 2 K.B. 72; 99 L.J.K.B. 504; 143 L.T. 231; Digest Supp.
 (15) Ecclesiastical Comrs. for England v. North Eastern Ry. Co., (1877), 4 Ch.D. 845; 47 L.J.Ch. 20; 36 L.T. 174; 32 Digest 524, 1801.

ACTION for damages for conversion.

The action was brought more than 6 years after the date of the conversion and the defence was that the cause of action accrued at the date of conversion and, accordingly, the action was barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 3. The plaintiff claimed that the action was "based upon the fraud" of the defendants, or the right of action was concealed by their fraud, within the meaning of s. 26 (a) and (b) of the Act, so that the period of limitation did not run until she had discovered the fraud. DENNING, J., held that there was no fraud within the meaning of s. 26, and that the action was barred under s. 3. The facts appear in the judgment.

Patrick O'Connor for the plaintiff.

Arthian Davies, K.C., and Thesiger, K.C., for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. DENNING, J., read the following judgment. In November, 1935, the plaintiff, Mrs. Beaman, deposited with the defendants five packages which she desired them at a later date to send over land to Istanbul, but meanwhile they were to hold them in store. She went on ahead herself to Istanbul. In May, 1936, at her request they sent one of the packages to her at Istanbul. They were anxious to receive instructions for despatch of the remaining four packages, but the Turkish authorities had made regulations which prevented the plaintiff from getting them into Turkey, so she asked the defendants to hold them in store pending further instructions. Three years passed, but she had not given any delivery instructions and on Oct. 27, 1938, the defendants wrote to her, saying:

We cannot trace having received any instructions from you to insure the baggage whilst in store, and as same is held at your own risk, we should be pleased to learn whether you would like insurance effected.

They added that, if she insured, it would be necessary for her to declare the value and state if there were any very valuable articles in the packages. She did not insure them, nor did she declare any valuables. She said that she was hoping to come back to England, but she never came. The outbreak of war found her still in Turkey. Early in 1940 she asked the defendants if it were possible to send the packages to Athens. They said it was and sent her the necessary forms, but shortly afterwards there was fighting between Greece and Italy, so she did not fill in the forms or give instructions for despatch to Athens. Then, in June, 1940, Italy came into the war, France fell, the Mediterranean was closed, and, for all practical purposes, communication between the plaintiff and the defendants became impossible. At the end of 1940 the plaintiff went to India and remained there until the end of the war. In 1940 and 1941 she wrote one or two letters to the defendants, but they never received them. She thought the packages were probably destroyed in the bombing of London and made no further inquiry about them until she returned to England in 1946. In August, 1946, she visited the defendants and asked what had become of the packages. They were not forthcoming and on Oct. 10, 1946, her solicitors formally demanded delivery. On Nov. 20, 1946, they issued the writ in this action claiming damages for conversion.

What had happened to the packages? From November, 1935, to February, 1940, they were stored at a depot which the defendants rented at Bishopsgate station from the London and North Eastern Railway. It was a depot where goods were held awaiting transit or collection. In February, 1940, owing to the war, the defendants gave up the depot and deposited these packages with Thos. Cook and Son, Ltd., at their warehouse in Coweross Street. The events of June, 1940, altered the position greatly. The defendants were a company controlled by Italian nationals and their business became vested in the Custodian of Enemy Property. Most of the staff had gone to the war. Business was practically at an end. The managing clerk, a Mr. Ingram, was about to be called up for service and was concerned to wind up outstanding matters as far as he could. In August, 1940, therefore, the question arose

A in his mind what was to be done about these four packages of the plaintiff. There were storage charges outstanding, due to the defendants, amounting to £6. The defendants had already rendered themselves liable to Thos. Cook and Son for another £1 13s. 10d. and the charges would run on. There was a real and imminent danger of invasion and bombing. There was no prospect of getting into touch with the plaintiff then or for a long time. The war looked as if it might go on for years, as, in fact, it did. Mr. Ingram consulted his superior, Mr. Sawyer, and decided to examine the packages to see if their contents were so valuable as to justify their continued storage. On his examination, he discovered that they were, to his way of thinking, worthless and only fit to be given away. Therefore, on Aug. 14, 1940, he gave instructions to Thos. Cook and Son, Ltd., to deliver the four packages to Colonel Wotton of the Salvation Army, 124, Queen Victoria Street. As an afterthought, however, he thought that, if they were to be given away, he could do with a trunk himself, so he took the contents out of one of the trunks and bundled them into the others, and took the empty trunk for himself. On Aug. 15, 1940, that empty trunk was delivered by Thos. Cook and Son to Forest Gate for him. On Aug. 16 the other two hampers and a trunk and their contents were delivered by Thos. Cook to the Salvation Army in Queen Victoria Street, whence they would be, in the ordinary course, distributed to the poor and needy in the east end of London. On the same day, entries were made in the books of the defendants whereby the £1 13s. 10d. owing to Thos. Cook was paid, the storage charges debited to the plaintiff were cancelled, and the transaction was closed with the entry "goods worthless—given away." About six years later, the plaintiff called on the defendants in London and asked what had become of the goods. Meanwhile, they had heard nothing from her. Their staff had been at the war and were just beginning to trickle back, but Mr. Ingram was not back. Their papers had been destroyed in the bombing of London. Inquiries were at once put in hand, first at Bishopsgate station and then at Thos. Cook and Son. About Aug. 22, 1946, Thos. Cook told the defendants that they had delivered the packages to the Salvation Army about Aug. 15, 1940. The defendants passed this information on to the plaintiff. The Salvation Army could not say exactly what had happened to the packages, because their papers had been destroyed in the bombing of London. None of the goods has been traced except the trunk that Mr. Ingram took for himself. That was produced at the trial and was obviously of little value.

E The plaintiff now brings this action and claims that the packages and contents are worth £3,544 15s. She says that they contained a necklace and earrings worth £1,000 and other articles of great value, including gold and silver articles, jewellery, a watch, clocks, trinkets, paintings, plated articles, glass, china, silks, furs and lace. If that is true, I cannot understand why she never insured them and never told the defendants that they contained valuables, especially after their letter to her of Oct. 27, 1938. A great number of the articles are such as would fall under the Carriers Act, 1830, s. 1, and for the loss of or injury to them even a common carrier would not be liable unless the value was declared and an increased charge paid. Yet it is quite certain that the plaintiff never insured them and never declared any valuables. G She has no document to support her description of the contents and relies on her recollection only. In these circumstances, it is not surprising that the defendants rely on the Limitation Act, 1939, and no one can blame them for so doing.

H If this case had fallen to be decided before 1939 it is probable that a claim in detinue would not have been held to be statute barred, but the Limitation Act, 1939, has altered the law very materially, and, as this is the first case to come before the courts on the relevant provisions of that Act, I have considered the position in some detail. At the outset I desire to point out that the action is not brought for breach of contract, but for conversion. If it had been founded on breach of contract, i.e., a contract to store the goods and to re-deliver on demand, and then charged as the breach the failure in 1946 to deliver on demand, the period of limitation in respect of that breach would only begin to run from the date that the cause of action accrued, i.e., from the earliest date on which the defendants failed to deliver on demand, which was August, 1946. The defendants would not be allowed to set up their own conversion in 1940 as an answer to that cause of action and say that the time ran from the conversion, any more than they could set up a loss in 1940 due to their own negligence and say that the time ran from the loss. Even if the plaintiff had lost her title to the goods by reason of the lapse of six years since the original conversion, the cause of action in contract would still be good. The plaintiff has not, however, pursued that cause of action, no doubt for the very good reason that the conditions of the contract might make it difficult for her to maintain the claim. She has made her claim in conversion, alleging that the defendants themselves wrongfully disposed of her goods knowing them to belong to her. To a claim so put, the defendants, by their counsel, admitted that the conditions of the contract could not be a defence and did not invite me to consider them.

Once breach of contract is out of the way, it is necessary to consider s. 3 of the Limitation Act, 1939, which is an important new provision in regard to the effect of lapse of time. It introduces for the first time in our law a prescriptive title to chattels. The effect of s. 3 is that (subject to s. 26, with which I will deal hereafter) as soon as there has been a conversion or wrongful detention of the plaintiff's goods, time begins to run against him, and, if it continues for six years without his recovering possession, his cause of action is barred not only for that conversion or wrongful detention, but also for any subsequent conversions or wrongful detentions, and, moreover, his title to the goods is extinguished. I do not think that s. 3 affects a plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract, if he has one, which is not statute-barred. It does, however, vitally, affect his causes of action in tort and also his title to the goods. In order to ascertain the scope of the section, it is necessary to see what is meant by "conversion" and "wrongful detention." The modern causes of action for wrongful detention or for conversion are very different from the old forms of action for detinue or for trover, and must not be confused therewith. Detinue in its original form was a real action founded on a bailment which was extended later to cases against a finder. It had, however, many procedural disadvantages, and, in particular, the defendant could wage his law. On this account, it was superseded in the course of time by trover, which for over 150 years was in practice the common remedy in all cases of taking away or detention of chattels or of their misuse or destruction. In 1833 the defendant in detinue lost his right to wage his law. In 1852 the old forms of action were abolished. In 1854 the plaintiff gained the right to an order for specific delivery of the chattel detained. Since that time there have developed the new causes of action of conversion and wrongful detention, the names of which are derived from the old forms of action, but the substance of which is quite different. I attempt no precise definition, but, broadly speaking, the cause of action in conversion is based on an unequivocal act of ownership by the defendant over goods of the plaintiff without any authority or right in that behalf. The act must be an unequivocal act of ownership, i.e., an act such as acquiring, dealing with, or disposing of the goods, which is consistent only with the rights of an owner as distinct from the equivocal acts of one who is entrusted with the custody or handling or carriage of goods. A demand and refusal is not, therefore, itself a conversion, but it may be evidence of a prior conversion. The cause of action in wrongful detention is based on a wrongful withholding of the plaintiff's goods. It depends on the defendant being in possession of the plaintiff's goods. If such a defendant, without any right so to do, withholds the goods from the plaintiff after the plaintiff has demanded their return, he is, for such time as he so withholds them, guilty of wrongful detention: see Clayton v. Le Roy (1). This is the tort of which a bailee or finder is guilty who is in possession of the goods and fails to deliver them up within a reasonable time after demand, though it may also, in the case of a bailee, be a breach of contract. If the bailee or finder subsequently disposes of the goods, he is guilty of conversion, but the wrongful detention then comes to an end and is swallowed up in the conversion.

In all these cases, so far as the causes of action in tort and the title to the goods are concerned, time runs from the initial wrong and is not enlarged by subsequent wrongs. Nor can s. 3 of the Act of 1939 be evaded by a mere change in the form of remedy. An owner cannot escape the effect of the statute by assuming to waive the tort of conversion and sue for money had and received: see United Australia, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank, Ltd. (2) per LORD ATKIN ([1940] 4 All E.R. 20, 35-37)—for otherwise the wrongdoer who waited till after the six years and then sold the goods would be better off than one who sold within the six years. There is, however, nothing to prevent a plaintiff from relying on another distinct cause of action, if he has one, e.g., a breach of contract which is not statute-barred. The effect of s. 3 is, in effect, to leave untouched Granger v. George (3) (which was a case of trover) Beaumont v. Jeffery (4), and Betts v. Metropolitan Police District Receiver and Carter Paterson & Co., Ltd. (5). Its effect is not, in my opinion, to reverse Wilkinson v. Verity (6) because there the cause of action was treated in the judgment as being for breach of contract to restore the goods in question when required. The section does, however, reverse Spackman v. Foster (7) and Miller v. Dell (8).

When, however, does the cause of action accrue in such cases as the present? In my opinion, it accrues at the date of the original conversion or the initial withholding of the goods. A recent decision of the Court of Appeal holds that the damages in such cases are to be assessed at the date of the judgment or verdict in the plaintiff's favour: see Rosenthal v. Alderton & Son, Ltd. (9); but that does not mean that the cause of action accrues at that time. The observations of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Sachs v. Miklos (10) considerably limit the scope of Rosenthal v. Alderton (9), and, should prices hereafter fall, the courts will probably be faced with the task of reconciling Rosenthal v. Alderton (9) with the settled rule that damages, whether in contract or tort, are to be assessed as at the date of the accrual of the cause of action and that subsequent fluctuations upwards or downwards in rates of exchange or commodity prices, before or during legal proceedings, are irrelevant: see the decision of the House of Lords in S.S. Celia v. S.S. Volturno (11), particularly the speeches of LORD BUCKMASTER ([1921] 2 A.C. 544, 548), of LORD SUMNER (ibid., 556), and of LORD WRENBURY (ibid., 563), and the long line of cases of buyers who sue sellers for conversion of, or for failure to deliver, goods bargained and sold (such as France v. Gaudet (12)), where the damages are always assessed as at the date of the breach.

Turning now to s. 3, in the light of these observations it is plain that on Aug. 16, 1940, a cause of action accrued to the plaintiff in respect of the conversion of the packages by the defendants. Before she recovered possession of the packages, further conversions took place by the Salvation Army and by Mr. Ingram and by the other persons who received the goods. No wrongful detention took place, except possibly by Mr. Ingram after he knew that the plaintiff was requiring the trunk which he had. Howsoever that may be, it is clear that, unless the plaintiff can avail herself of the provisions of s. 26 of the Act, her causes of action on all grounds of tort became barred after Aug. 16, 1946, and her title to the goods then became extinguished. This was accepted by counsel for the plaintiff as well as by counsel for the defendants. The argument, therefore, turned to s. 26. The effect of s. 26, speaking broadly, is to prevent the period of limitation from running in the case of fraud, with the important exception, however, that it still runs in favour of an innocent purchaser for value, not merely from the time of his purchase, but from the date when the cause of action accrued for the initial conversion or wrongful detention. If there was fraud in this case, therefore, the plaintiff will be able to pursue her cause of action in conversion against the defendants in respect of all the goods, and her title to the trunk which Mr. Ingram took will not be extinguished, but, if the other articles at any time have come into the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, her title to them will have been extinguished. Section 26 has two sub-sections dealing with fraud, each of which is relied on here. Sub-section (a) affirms the view of the law expressed in Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne (13) and Lynn v. Bamber (14). It provides that, where the action is "based upon the fraud" of the defendant, the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the plaintiff has, or could have, discovered the fraud. Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the present action is based on the fraud of the defendants. He said that the word "fraud" is used in the section in a wide sense which does not necessarily involve moral turpitude. He went so far as to say that nearly every case of conversion by a bailee would be a "fraud" in this wide sense, because otherwise, having regard to s. 3, the bailor might be deprived of his goods without any fault on his part before he knew of his cause of action. I do not accept this view. Whatever else the word "fraud" involves, it always imports some element of moral turpitude, such as some deliberate untruth, or some dishonesty. This is shown by the passage in the judgment of the Privy Council ([1899] A.C. 351, 364) in Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne (13) where they disapproved the decision of MALINS, V.-C., in Ecclesiastical Comrs. for England v. North Eastern Ry. Co. (15). The consequences feared by counsel for the plaintiff for an innocent bailor do not follow, because he always has his cause of action for breach of contract, as I have been at pains to show earlier in this judgment. The word "fraud" is not, however, used in the narrow sense of fraudulent misrepresentation. An action of conversion is, in one sense, never "based upon the fraud" of the defendant, because fraud is not an ingredient of the cause of action. If the defendant has wrongfully converted the plaintiff's goods, then, apart from the Limitation Act, 1939, he is liable, whether he was fraudulent or not. When, however, the Limitation Act, 1939, is pleaded, the question whether or not it was a fraudulent conversion may be vital.

In my opinion, an action of conversion is "based upon the fraud" of the defendant if the wrongful act which constitutes the conversion is done by him with the knowledge that the goods do not belong to him, that he has no authority or right to do the act, and that the true owner is available and would not authorise the act if he knew of it, but it is not "based upon the fraud" of the defendant if the defendant honestly believed himself to be the owner, or to be authorised, or to have the right, to do the act, or if he honestly believed that the true owner was not available but would authorise the act if he knew of it, or if he honestly believed that the true owner was not available and that the action was in the best interests of all concerned. A railway company which sells unclaimed lost property is guilty of conversion, but it is not a fraudulent conversion. A finder of goods, who cannot trace the owner and uses or consumes the goods, is guilty of conversion, but it is not a fraudulent conversion. A housewife, who is storing goods for an absent friend and gives them away to a jumble sale because they are moth-eaten or are of little value and are encumbering the house, is guilty of conversion, but it is not fraudulent conversion. So, in this case, although the defendants were guilty of a conversion, I do not think it was a fraudulent conversion. It is necessary to recapture the atmosphere of 1940. Goods and chattels were then of small concern compared to the lives of men. I think the defendants quite honestly said to themselves: "It is useless keeping these things lying in store any longer, with storage charges running up, doing no good to anyone, and in danger of being destroyed by the enemy. The goods do not seem to be of any real value. They have been left here for years. The owner, when we last heard from her was in Turkey, but goodness knows what she is doing now or where we can get hold of her. The war looks like going on for years. The best thing to do is to give them away to the Salvation Army where they may be of some good to somebody." Such conduct is not, to my mind, dishonest. It does not involve any moral turpitude. An action for conversion in those circumstances is not "based upon fraud." The subsequent action of Mr. Ingram in taking an empty trunk for himself was not in the course of his employment and it is not, therefore, to be imputed to the defendants, but, again, I do not think he was fraudulent. I thought he was an honest and reliable witness. He, no doubt, said to himself: "If this stuff is being given away, I see no harm to anyone in having a trunk for myself." It was a conversion, but not a fraudulent conversion.

Section 26 (b) of the Act prevents the period of limitation from running when "the right of action is concealed by the fraud" of the defendant. This does not create new law. Here again "fraud" is not confined to fraudulent misrepresentation, but it does involve some dishonesty, some element of moral turpitude. Applied to cases of conversion by a bailee which was in its inception innocent and not fraudulent, it comprises such conduct as to send in accounts for storage charges knowing that the goods have gone, deliberately putting off the true owner, or keeping the owner in uncertainty while knowing all the time that the goods had gone, and, in some situations, the failure to notify the owner of the act of conversion might be a fraudulent concealment of the right of action. On the facts of this case, however, I find no fraud by the defendants or their agents. It is true that, although they had her address in Turkey, they did not notify her either before or after they gave the goods away. They ought, of course, to have done so, but I do not think there was anything fraudulent in their not doing so. The situation in August, 1940, which I have already described, amply accounts for the omission without imputing fraud or dishonesty. As to the later events, I find that they did not receive any letters from her and heard nothing more of her until the middle of August, 1946. Their failure to write to her in that period cannot be said to be fraud, especially as everyone who had any knowledge of the matter was away at the war. When she did make inquiries in August, 1946, I find that they acted with due diligence in their inquiries as to what happened to the goods, and told her as soon as they found out. So there was no fraud there. My conclusion, therefore, is that s. 26 does not apply in this case so as to prevent the period of limitation from running. The action is barred by the statute and must be dismissed.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

Solicitors: Murray Napier & Co. (for the plaintiff); Crawley & de Reya (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LLEWELLYN v. HINSON.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ. and Jenkins, J.), May 5, 6, June 3, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—"Separate dwelling"—Exclusive letting of room with user, in common with other tenants, of other rooms, including kitchen—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 16 (1).

Where the landlord grants to the tenant (a) exclusive possession of a room or rooms in a house with (b) the user, jointly with some one else—whether the landlord or another tenant—of another living room or rooms, the tenant is not the tenant of a "part of a house let as a separate dwelling" within the meaning of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 16 (1), and so is not protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts.

A tenant had been given, under his tenancy agreement, the exclusive possession of certain rooms plus the user, jointly with other tenants, of a bathroom, water closet, and kitchen.

HELD: the kitchen being a living room, the tenant had not been let "a part of a house let as a separate dwelling" within the meaning of s. 16 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933.

Neale v. Del Soto, ([1945] 1 All E.R. 191); Sharpe v. Nicholls ([1945] 2 All E.R. 55); Cole v. Harris ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146); Kenyon v. Walker ([1946] 2 All E.R. 595), applied.

EDITORIAL NOTE. The same reasoning as is applied in this case was applied by the Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division in Banks v. Cope-Brown (ante p. 76). In giving judgment in that case LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (p. 78): "It seems to me, and, indeed, counsel for the respondent (the prosecutor) has conceded, that he cannot draw any distinction in principle between the case where part of a house is let to a tenant who has the right to use the kitchen in common with the landlord and the case where the tenant is entitled to use the kitchen in common with another tenant."

AS TO "SEPARATE DWELLING," see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 312, para. 369; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, p. 557, Nos. 7044-7046.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Sharpe v. Nicholls, [1945] 2 All E.R. 55; [1945] K.B. 382; 114 L.J.K.B. 409; 172 L.T. 363; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Cole v. Harris, [1945] 2 All E.R. 146; [1945] K.B. 474; 114 L.J.K.B. 481; 173 L.T. 50; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Kenyon v. Walker, Stevenson v. Kenyon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 595; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE FORBES, made at Birmingham County Court, and dated Sept. 23, 1947, granting to the landlord possession of rooms let exclusively to the tenant together with the user in common with other tenants of other rooms, including a kitchen. The landlord did not himself reside in the house. The tenant, in the view of the learned judge, was not protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts. The appeal was dismissed.

Platts Mills and Claude Barry for the tenants.

Richard O'Sullivan, K.C., and Lionel Blundell for the landlord.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 3. ASQUITH, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. It may be convenient to state at the outset the point of law raised by this appeal. The question was whether the tenant was protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts, having regard to the following facts. Under his tenancy agreement, the tenant had been given the exclusive possession of certain rooms, plus the user, jointly with other tenants, of certain other accommodation, including the kitchen. In the line of cases initiated by Neale v. Del Soto (1), and followed up by Sharpe v. Nicholls (2) and Cole v. Harris (3), the Court of Appeal had to consider the legal implications of such a state of affairs. The protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts only attaches (once a valid notice to quit has been given, as it had been in the cases referred to and in the case under appeal now) to "dwelling-houses." A "dwelling-house" is defined, under the provisions applicable to the present cases, by s. 16 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, that definition not differing materially from that which applied in Neale v. Del Soto (1) and the authorities deriving from that case. Section 16 (1) defines a dwelling-house as follows :

"Dwelling-house" has the same meaning as in the principal Acts, that is to say, a house let as a separate dwelling or a part of a house being a part so let.

When, therefore, a part of a house is let it must (to qualify as a "dwelling-house" and to attract the protective operation of the Rent Restrictions Acts) be "let as a separate dwelling."

In the present case, a "part of a house" was let to the tenant in the sense that, under his tenancy agreement, he was granted exclusive possession of certain rooms, but in addition he was granted the joint use of certain other rooms, namely, a bathroom, a water closet, and a kitchen. The issue is whether on these facts, the tenant had let to him "a part of a house let as a separate dwelling." The learned county court judge held that he had not, and he based his decision on the authority of Neale v. Del Soto (1) and the Court of Appeal cases following and interpreting that decision. The question is whether he was right in so holding. We think he was.

This court cannot consider whether Neale v. Del Soto (1) and its satellite cases were properly decided. It can only inquire what they, in fact, decided, and about this there can, in our view, be little doubt. The gist of those decisions is that where what the landlord under the agreement of tenancy parts with to the tenant consists of two things (a) exclusive possession of a room or rooms, plus (b) user, jointly with some one else, of another living room or rooms, then the tenant cannot say that he is the tenant of a "house or part of a house, let as a separate dwelling." The ratio is that the "dwelling" of the tenant on the facts assumed consists of the totality constituted by (a) plus (b), and that part of the totality is not "separately" let to him because the possession or user of it is to be shared by him with others, a state of affairs which is inconsistent with the word "separately," and, indeed, with the word "let," for both of these terms connote exclusive possession or enjoyment. If this ratio were inexorably applied, it would exclude from the ambit and protection of the Acts all tenants who, being entitled to exclusive possession of one or more rooms, enjoyed under the terms of their tenancy joint user of any other accommodation or facilities whatever, for example of a water closet, a bathroom, a box-room, or a coal cellar. The decisions referred to, by which this court is bound, reject this consequence, and limit the operation of the rule to cases in which the room shared is a "living room."

Those decisions equally bind us to say that a "kitchen" is a living room, and that even in cases in which the sharing of the kitchen is limited to access to the kitchen for purposes of cooking: Kenyon v. Walker (4).

In our opinion, in Cole v. Harris (3) the Court of Appeal affirmed a principle which is fatal to the tenant in this appeal. The material passage from the judgment of MORTON, L.J. (propounding a test accepted by MACKINNON, L.J., in that case)—is as follows ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146, 152):

A I think that the true test, where the tenant has the exclusive use of some rooms and shares certain accommodation with others, is as follows: there is a letting of part of a house as a separate dwelling, within the meaning of the relevant Acts if, and only if, the accommodation which is shared with others does not comprise any of the rooms which may fairly be described as "living rooms," or "dwelling rooms." To my mind a kitchen is fairly described as a "living room."

B Counsel for the tenant, faced by this pronouncement (which was re-affirmed by the whole court in Kenyon v. Walker (4)), had no alternative but to contend that it was obiter. In so far as Cole v. Harris (3) decides that the sharing of a "living room" negatives the letting of a separate dwelling and that the sharing of a non-living room does not, the statement is clearly not obiter. This was the very point in issue in that case, but it is suggested by the tenant that, though that case decided that a "sharing" of a living room between landlord and tenant excluded the Acts, yet neither it nor any other case decided that a sharing of such a room as between one tenant and another had similar legal consequences. It is true to say that in Neale v. Del Soto (1) the "sharing" was between landlord and tenant, and that in substance that was also the position in Kenyon v. Walker (4), and in certain other cases.

C Nevertheless, Cole v. Harris (3) would seem to be the key decision and to lay down a wider principle. In that case the shared accommodation was to be shared between the landlord, the defendant tenant, and another tenant or tenants. The language used by MORTON, L.J. (and acquiesced in by MACKINNON, L.J.) draws no distinction at all between the "sharing" of accommodation between the tenant with the landlord and a similar sharing between the tenant and other tenants. This appears plainly in the passage quoted above, and as clearly in passages which follow. Speaking of the tenant in that case MORTON, L.J., says ([1945] 2 All E.R. 146, 153): "He does not share any living room with other people, though there are certain valuable conveniences which he shares with other people . . ." and he speaks of a "licence to the plaintiff to use the combined bathroom and w.c., and also the garden (for the purposes already mentioned) in common with the other occupiers," and, again: "In either case, the plaintiff does not share any living room with other people." Neither MACKINNON, L.J. (who expressly accepts MORTON, L.J.'s formula), nor LAWRENCE, L.J. (who dissented only on the nature of the accommodation the sharing of which will oust the operation of the Acts) says a word to suggest that the tenant must share the material accommodation with the landlord for that result to ensue.

D Apart altogether from the language, in fact, employed in this connection by the Lords Justices, there would seem to be no logical distinction between the two types of "sharing," judged by the touchstone of s. 16 (1) of the Act of 1933. When is a part of a house "let as a separate dwelling"? It is not "separately let" if part of the "dwelling" is shared with the landlord: Neale v. Del Soto (1); not because it is with the landlord that that part is shared, but simply because it is shared by the tenant with some one, and, therefore, is not separately let. It cannot matter logically with whom it is shared. This seems to be not merely an irresistible deduction from the language employed by MORTON, L.J. and MACKINNON, L.J., but one implied in the logic of their decision in Cole v. Harris (3). It was urged that such a construction as that which we favour would open to unscrupulous landlords a new loophole of escape from the intended operation of the Acts. A landlord has only to stipulate (as against a poor tenant who is in an inferior bargaining position) that the kitchen is to be shared, to rid himself of the shackles of the Acts. He can, as the law now stands, as easily throw off those shackles, by stipulating that he, the landlord, shall himself have joint user of the kitchen. In any case these consequences, be they grave or trivial, do not affect what alone a court of law can properly consider, namely, the true construction of the Acts as determined by their language and decisions binding on that court. The rest is for Parliament. The appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Stafford Clark & Co., agents for Faber & Co., Birmingham (for the tenant); T. D. Jones & Co., agents for W. D. Clark Brookes & Co., Smethwick (for the landlord).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Discussed. HOPES v. HOPES. [1948]
2 All E.R. 920.

THOMAS v. THOMAS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Sellers, JJ.), May 28, 1948.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Cessation of order—Resumption of cohabitation—Order obtained while wife living apart from husband—Wife's return to husband's house to live in separate rooms as tenant—Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), s. 2 (2).

B

A wife, who had obtained a separation order from her husband while living apart from him, returned to the husband's house with her child and was allowed by him to live in part of the house. There was no resumption of cohabitation, the husband and wife occupying separate parts of the house and an arrangement being made that the wife should pay 10s. a week rent by allowing the husband to deduct that amount from the maintenance due to her under the order. On appeal by the husband against a committal order made by justices on his default in making payments under the separation order:—

C

HELD: under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, s. 2 (2), where a wife had obtained a separation order while living apart from the husband, the order ceased to have effect only if the wife resumed cohabitation with the husband, and not if she merely resumed residence at the same address; on the facts of the case, the wife had not resumed cohabitation; and, accordingly, the order was enforceable.

D

Evans v. Evans ([1947] 2 All E.R. 656), distinguished.

[FOR THE SUMMARY JURISDICTION (SEPARATION AND MAINTENANCE) ACT, 1925, s. 2 (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 9, p. 415.]

E

Case referred to:

(1) Evans v. Evans [1947] 2 All E.R. 656; [1948] K.B. 175; [1948] L.J.R. 276; 112 J.P. 23.

CASE STATED by Glamorgan justices.

A complaint was preferred by the wife before a court of summary jurisdiction alleging that, by an order made on Feb. 20, 1946, under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5, the husband was adjudged guilty of having deserted her and was ordered to pay her the sum of £2 10s. a week for her maintenance and the maintenance of an infant child of the marriage while it was under 16 years of age, and that payment had not been made in accordance with the order. The husband claimed that, as the wife had returned to his house, the order had ceased to have effect, by reason of the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, s. 2 (2). The complaint was heard at Gowerton, Swansea, on Mar. 3, 1948, when the justices held that there was no resumption of cohabitation within the meaning of s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1925, and committed the husband to imprisonment for one month, suspending the committal so long as he paid the amount of the order (less 10s. per week rent while the wife lived in a part of his house) and 5s. a week of the arrears. The husband's appeal was now dismissed by the Divisional Court.

F

G

H

Wallis-Jones for the husband.

The wife did not appear and was not represented.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Special Case stated by justices for the county of Glamorgan before whom there came one of these troublesome cases which now arise under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, due to the existing housing shortage. The justices have found that a separation order was made at a time when the parties were living apart and that they continued to live apart after that order was made. Subsequently the parties came together again in the sense that the wife returned with her child to the husband's house, and was allowed by him to do so, but in no sense did she resume cohabitation with him because she did not resume her position as wife.

Cohabitation does not necessarily depend on whether there is sexual intercourse between husband and wife. "Cohabitation" means living together as husband and wife. As I endeavoured to point out in Evans v. Evans (1), cohabitation consists in the husband acting as a husband towards the wife and the wife acting as a wife towards the husband, the wife rendering housewifely duties to the husband and the husband cherishing and supporting his wife as a husband should. Sexual intercourse usually takes place between parties of moderate age if they are cohabiting, and, if there is sexual intercourse, it is very strong evidence—it may be conclusive evidence—that they are cohabiting, but it does not follow that because they do not have sexual intercourse they are not cohabiting. In the present case, the wife resumed residence in the husband's house under an arrangement with him by which she and her child occupied rooms in the house which were entirely separate from those occupied by him. Apparently, some alteration was made to the water supply of the house so that the two parties should be able to live entirely separate and get the necessary water without interfering with each other. Moreover, on Apr. 10, 1946, when the wife was endeavouring to enforce the order by proceedings before the court, the parties came to an agreement (which they communicated to the justices) under which it was arranged that, as the wife was living again in the husband's house, she should pay 10s. a week—or (what was the same thing) allow the husband to deduct 10s. a week from the maintenance—as representing the rent which she was to pay to the husband for the rooms she occupied, and the husband agreed to allow the wife to remain in the house so long as she paid the 10s. a week, or as long as he cared to let her. In fact, he has served her with a notice to quit. Therefore, whatever the parties might have done, technically, in law, it appears that they intended that the wife should be a tenant of part of the house.

When the proceedings, which are the subject-matter of this case, were taken by the wife to enforce the order, the husband sought to evade liability by saying that the same state of affairs existed here as existed in Evans v. Evans (1), a case under s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1925. The justices, who evidently gave great attention to this case, have decided (in my opinion, quite rightly) that the decision in Evans v. Evans (1) does not apply. They have stated why it does not apply, namely, because here the very state of affairs existed which we visualised might exist in Evans v. Evans (1), where we pointed out that different considerations would, or might, arise, if a case fell within s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1925. It is worth while remembering that, until the Act of 1925 was passed, a woman could not apply to justices for a separation order unless she had quitted her husband's house and lived away from him. As I pointed out in Evans v. Evans (1), that was thought to be a hardship on a wife, because it meant that, before she could obtain an order, she must leave her husband and live elsewhere and she might have no money with which to do so. Therefore, the legislature altered the law in 1925, to enable a wife to apply for and obtain an order from justices although she was still residing with her husband. Realising, however, that there might be all kinds of serious results if a woman who was living with her husband obtained a maintenance order against him, but continued to live in his house and insisted on receiving the maintenance while at the same time refusing to perform any wifely services for him, the legislature provided (by s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1925) that, if a wife obtained an order while living with her husband, it should have no effect while she resided with him and, if she continued to reside with him, it would become void after three months. Section 2 (2) contains a completely different provision :

Where a married woman with respect to whom an order has been made under the [Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895] resumes cohabitation with her husband after living apart from him, or where she has before the date of the commencement of this Act so resumed cohabitation, and is at that date cohabiting with him, the order shall cease to have effect on the resumption of such cohabitation or at the commencement of this Act, as the case may be.

In this case an order was made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5, when the parties were neither cohabiting nor residing with each other, but were living apart, and, therefore, the case falls exactly within the words of s. 2 (2), i.e., the wife was living apart from her husband at the time when the order was made. Consequently, the order will remain good unless she "resumes cohabitation"—not "residence," but "cohabitation."

We need not consider whether in 1925 Parliament could have visualised the state of affairs in housing matters which exists at this time, when it may be extraordinarily difficult for two spouses, if they separate, each to find separate accommodation. We merely have to construe the words of the Act, and the words of the Act seem to me clearly to show that, if the parties are living apart when the order is made, it is not residence, but cohabitation, that will put an end to the order. There is the contrast between "resides with" in s. 1 (4) and "resumes cohabitation with" in s. 2 (2). I think that, when the judgments in Evans v. Evans (1) are read carefully, it will be seen that the court visualised that there might arise the very case which has arisen here, and we pointed out the difference between the residence which was sufficient to prevent the order taking effect under s. 1 (4) and the resumption of cohabitation which was required to put an end to an order which had taken effect because the parties were living apart. In the present case it is clear that the justices were right in holding that there had been no resumption of cohabitation, the wife being treated as a mere tenant of part of her husband's house, and, therefore, the order was enforceable, since it had been made while the parties were living apart. The justices came to a right decision in point of law and this appeal fails.

BIRKETT, J. : I am of the same opinion. I think that the justices most admirably fulfilled their duty. First, they ascertained what was the law, and it is clear from the opinion which they attached to the Case that they had considered with great care the decision of this court in Evans v. Evans (1) and, in particular, the observations of my Lord in that case, pointing out the essential distinction between s. 1 (4) and s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1925. Having digested those observations and been quite clear in their minds what the legal position was, they then dealt with the facts, and, equally clearly, they kept, as I think, two different matters in mind. One was that s. 1 of the Act, which obviously amended the existing law to meet a very difficult situation, dealt with the case of an order which was made while the husband and wife were residing together and went on to state that, although, after the passing of the Act, such an order could be made, it would only remain in force for three months if the parties continued to reside together. When they came to s. 2, the justices considered the special fact that the order with which they had to deal was made, not while the parties were residing together, but while they were living apart, and dealing with that state of affairs, s. 2 (2) of the Act provides :

Where a married woman with respect to whom an order has been made under the principal Act resumes cohabitation with her husband after living apart from him, or where she has before the date of the commencement of this Act so resumed cohabitation, and is at that date cohabiting with him, the order shall cease to have effect on the resumption of such cohabitation . . .

The justices found as a fact that there was no cohabitation, though it appeared that some attempt was made before them to establish its existence. In those circumstances, they refused to apply the provisions of s. 2 (2), and I think that they were right.

SELLERS, J. : I agree. The justices have found, and, in my view, rightly, that there was no resumption of cohabitation. It would seem, on the facts, that there was, indeed, no residence together, although the justices have not expressly said so. The case, I think, is different from Evans v. Evans (1), and, on all the grounds which have been stated, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : John B. Purchase & Clark, agents for D. W. P. Williams, Swansea (for the husband).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re KENDRICK'S AGREEMENT, COLWILL v. BARRINGTON.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), May 25, 26, 1948.]

Agricultural Holding—Notice to quit—Consent of Minister—Consent during currency of notice—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927), reg. 62 (4A).

The Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), provides :
 "Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale made since Sept. 3, 1939, or has been sold in pursuance of a contract of sale made since that date, any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given to the tenant so as to expire at any time after the end of the year 1941 shall be null and void. Provided that this paragraph shall not apply to any notice if (whether before or after the giving thereof) the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consents in writing thereto."

By a written agreement dated Aug. 10, 1940, K. agreed to let certain agricultural land to the tenants' predecessor in title for a term of one year from Lady Day, 1940, and so on from year to year until the tenancy should be determined by either party giving one year's notice to quit in writing. In 1946 the reversion expectant on the tenants' term became vested in B. pursuant to a contract of sale made after Sep. 3, 1939. On Mar. 13, 1947, B. served on the tenants notice to quit on Lady Day, 1948, and by a document dated Oct. 25, 1947, the Minister, in exercise of his powers under para. 4A, consented thereto.

HELD : on the construction of para. 4A, the subsequent consent of the Minister to a notice to quit, thus validating the notice, could be given at any time before the expiration of the notice and need not be given during the interval (if there were one) between the date of the giving of the notice and that on which it began to run, and, therefore, the notice of Mar. 13, 1947, was good.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 62 (4A), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, p. 1034.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Phipps (P.) & Co. (Northampton & Towcester Breweries), Ltd. v. Rogers, [1925] 1 K.B. 14; 93 L.J.K.B. 1009; 132 L.T. 240; 89 J.P. 1; 69 Sol. Jo. 50, C.A.; 31 Digest 448, 5947.
- (2) Re Bebington's Tenancy, Bebington v. Wildman, [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 90 L.J.Ch. 269; 124 L.T. 661; 65 Sol. Jo. 343; 31 Digest 451, 5979.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS for a declaration that a notice to quit an agricultural holding was void and of no effect as not being in compliance with the tenancy agreement, under which 12 months' notice was required, or as being in contravention of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 25. The tenants relied on the fact that, as the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries did not consent to (and thereby validate) the notice under the Defence (General) Regulations 1939, reg. 62 (4A) until 5 months before the notice was due to expire, they did not in law receive 12 months' notice. HARMAN, J., held the notice to be good. The facts appear in the judgment.

G. L. Dawson for the plaintiffs (the tenants).

F. B. Alcock for the defendant (the landlord).

HARMAN, J. : At all relevant times the plaintiffs in this summons were the tenants of two holdings, being parts of lands called Warford Park and Deer Park, Great Witley, in the county of Worcester, on the terms of a written tenancy agreement made on Aug. 10, 1940, between the predecessor in title of the defendant and the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs. By that agreement the landlord agreed to let and the tenant to take the parcels of land in question for a term of one year from Lady Day, 1940, and so on from year to year until (cl. 3) the tenancy should be determined at the end of any subsequent year by either party giving to the other one year's notice to quit in writing, at a rent and subject to covenants with which I need not concern myself. In 1946 the reversion expectant on the term then current under that agreement became vested in the defendant pursuant to a contract which, for the purposes of this proceeding, was admitted by his counsel to have been made after 1939. On

Mar. 13, 1947, the defendant, having thus become the plaintiffs' landlord, served on the plaintiffs what purported to be a notice to quit their holding at Lady Day, 1948. There is nothing particular in the form of the notice and I think it is not disputed that but for certain statutory provisions, with which I will deal, it would have been a good notice. It is a notice for over a year, it expired on the correct day, that is to say Lady Day, the terminating day of the year of the tenancy, it is not equivocal, and it was properly served. The summons asks for a declaration that the notice was bad on the footing that it is void and of no effect as not being in compliance with cl. 3 of the agreement I have mentioned or as being in contravention of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 25. As I understand it, both these grounds come to this. It is said that in the upshot the tenants did not have 12 months' notice to quit, but that under both s. 25 of the Act of 1923 and the express terms of cl. 3 of the tenancy agreement they were entitled to such a notice. A

In 1941 there was promulgated under the powers of the Crown conferred by the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 1, an addition to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, numbered 4A in reg. 62. Regulation 62 is headed: "Control of cultivation, and termination of agricultural tenancies." After dealing in its first three paragraphs with the control of cultivation reg. 62 provides: B

4A. Where the whole or any part of an agricultural holding is subject to a contract of sale made since Sept. 3, 1939, or has been sold in pursuance of a contract of sale made since that date, any notice to quit that holding or any part thereof given to the tenant so as to expire at any time after the end of the year 1941 shall be null and void, unless, before the giving of the notice, or before the end of the said year, whichever is the later, the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consents in writing thereto. C

That Order was made on Nov. 11, 1941. It will be observed that notices to quit of the relevant kind—and this is one, the contract of sale here being admittedly after Sept. 3, 1939—were made null and void except in a certain event, namely, a consent of the Minister of Agriculture which might be given either before the notice to quit was served or before the end of the year 1941. If that had been allowed to continue as the law in 1942 and thereafter, there could have been no consent by the Minister subsequent to any notice, so that any notice to quit in order to be good would have required the previous consent of the Minister. Whether for that reason or not I do not know, but that state of affairs was never allowed to come to fruition, because on Dec. 18, 1941, the condition beginning with the word "unless" was struck out and the following proviso was substituted for it: D

Provided that this paragraph shall not apply to any notice if (whether before or after the giving thereof) the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consents in writing thereto. It is clear enough that the notice given on Mar. 13, 1947, by the landlord in this case was null and void when given and so remained and has been null and void ever since unless cured by a document dated Oct. 25, 1947, whereby the Minister, purporting to act in exercise of his powers under reg. 62 (4A), "hereby consents to the notice to quit given on Mar. 13, 1947" to the tenants in respect of the land. That is a notice under the seal of the Minister and has at the end of it a note in these terms: E

This consent does not make valid any notice to quit which may otherwise be defective for want of proper form or any other reason, neither shall this consent be taken as endorsing the grounds, if any, on which the notice to quit purports to be given. G

In my judgment, this note must be ignored for present purposes. It is said on behalf of the landlord that the consent cured the vice in the notice because, having regard to the terms of the proviso, para. 4A of reg. 62 must not be read in connection with this notice to quit and so the notice to quit is effective just as if no such regulation existed. On the other hand, it is said by the tenants with a great deal of force that, if this consent by the Minister makes good that which until it was given was null and void, the effect is that the tenant got, not 12 months', but 5 months' notice to quit, that that is a breach of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, s. 25, and also of the express terms of the tenancy agreement, and, that, therefore, the notice to quit is bad. H

The difficulty with which the tenants have to contend is the words in the proviso, "whether before or after the giving" of a notice to quit. It is clear that in some circumstances a consent after the date of the notice may make the notice good. Counsel for the tenants argued that "or after" may be given an adequate meaning if it is applied to an interval of time which may exist between the date of the giving of the notice and that when the period of 12 months begins to run. In the present case, for instance, the notice was given on Mar. 13 and the 12 months would not begin to run until the following Lady Day. There were, therefore, 12 days during which the consent of the Minister would have made the notice good, but, counsel argues, after the 12 months had begun to run no consent could validate it. On the other hand, the landlord says that there is nothing in the regulation so to cut down the words "or after," but that consent can be given up to the eleventh hour of the thirty-first day of the eleventh month of the currency of the notice. The tenants say that that would be monstrous and most inconvenient, and so it would—no less inconvenient to the one party than to the other—but I do not think that there is much room here for application of the maxim ab inconvenienti. Counsel for the tenants relied on the cases which show that a notice to quit must be unambiguous and must not involve the tenant in questions of law and difficulties which might need the aid of a lawyer to unravel for him. He cites in particular Phipps v. Rogers (1) for that proposition. With that I see no reason to quarrel, but it seems to me that the answer is that given by counsel for the landlord, namely, that the difficult questions of law which arise here do not arise out of the notice which is in itself plain and unambiguous. It arises out of the regulation for which neither party can be held responsible. This, in my view, is a question purely of construing the regulation. It is true, as the tenants say, that it is for the landlord to show that his notice is good. It is not for the tenant to have to find out what the notice means. It is true also that the effect of the landlord's construction is to make the notice uncertain because, as is pointed out, one never can tell during the 12 months whether the Minister by a stroke of the pen may not make good that which before was bad. I see all the force of that, but, in my judgment, it cannot prevail over the language of the regulation. The language is perfectly general. It says that where a consent by the Minister is given the regulation shall not apply. Consequently, this notice stands as a good 12 months' notice.

I must administer the law as it stands, and, in my view, it is mandatory on me to shut my eyes to the existence of para. 4 (A) altogether and treat it as not applying to this notice. If I do that, the answer is plain—the notice is good. I do not think that the common law rule that a notice must be a good notice from the moment it is given can prevail having regard to the form of this statutory regulation. In Re Bebington's Tenancy (2) ([1921] 1 Ch. 563) PETERSON, J., reviews the cases on the subject and shows clearly that at common law the tenant is entitled to have a notice on which he can act with certainty from the moment when it is given. That right, I am afraid, he has lost under this regulation. It is pointed out to me that under the new Agriculture Act, 1947, s. 31 (which has no bearing on the present case) the same system is continued and is made a permanent part of the law of the land. The statutes, therefore, have overridden the common law and tenants are now at the mercy of the Minister rather than under the rule of the law as they used to be. Whether that is better or worse for them it is not for me to say, but it is now the Minister who holds in his hand the key whether a tenant shall go or stay and it is to him that parties to an agricultural holding must look and not to the protection of the common law to ascertain their rights and their duties. Accordingly, I hold that the notice to quit was a valid and effectual notice, and I order the tenants to pay the landlord's costs as between party and party.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Geare & Son, agents for Marcy, Hemmingway & Sons, Bewdley (for the tenants); Tuck & Mann, agents for Wallace Robinson & Morgan, Birmingham (for the landlord).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JERRED AND OTHERS v. T. RODDAM DENT & SON, LTD.
(GLEN LINE, LTD. Third Party).

[LEEDS ASSIZES (Atkinson, J.), April 22, 23, 24, 29, 1948.]

Negligence—Duty to invitees—Duty of shipowners to stevedores—Beam left insecure by shipowners—Effect of failure to examine beam by stevedores or their employers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 60—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), Duties, para. (d); reg. 42.

Under the heading "Duties" in the Docks Regulations, 1934, para. (d) provides: "It shall be the duty of every person who by himself, his agents, or workmen carries on the processes, and of all agents, workmen, and persons employed by him in the processes, to comply with Part IV of these regulations." In Part IV, reg. 42 states: "The beams of any hatch in use for the processes shall, if not removed, be adequately secured to prevent their displacement."

The plaintiffs were stevedores employed by the defendants to load cargo into the hold of a ship owned by the third parties. In accordance with the practice of the port, the crew of the ship had removed the necessary beams and hatch covers prior to the loading, but they failed to secure adequately, so as to prevent its displacement, one of the beams which had not been removed. Neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants' foreman examined this beam to see whether it had been secured, but relied on the assurance of the ship's officer in charge. While the cargo was being loaded the beam fell into the hold injuring the plaintiffs.

Held: (i) the regulations did not impose on every employee a duty to examine personally every beam if he was assured by the foreman that all was in order; even if the plaintiffs were technically in breach of the regulations, no duty under the regulations was imposed on them towards the defendants; and, therefore, there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs.

(ii) even if there were a duty, as the employers had accepted the responsibility of directing the men when it was safe to begin work, the employers could not rely on a breach of the regulations by the plaintiffs.

(iii) the third parties had undertaken the duty of securing the beam and they owed a duty to the plaintiffs as invitees on board the ship to see that that duty was properly discharged; the regulations did not create a duty towards the third party by the plaintiffs or by the defendants to make sure that the beam was secure; and the third parties' responsibility for the accident and the negligence of the third parties was the effective cause of the plaintiffs' accident.

Heaven v. Pender (1883) (11 Q.B.D. 503), applied.

Hillen & Pettigrew v. I.C.I. (Alkali), Ltd. ([1934] 1 K.B. 455; [1936] A.C. 65), M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson ([1932] A.C. 562) and Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd. ([1941] 3 All E.R. 156), distinguished.

[As to DUTY TO INVITEES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 600-609, paras. 851-858; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 35-45, Nos. 208-281.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Compania Mexicana de Petroleo El Aguila v. Essex Transport and Trading Co., Ltd., (1929), 141 L.T. 106; Digest Supp.

(2) Heaven v. Pender, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 503; 52 L.J.Q.B. 702; 49 L.T. 357; 47 J.P. 709; 36 Digest 8, 9.

(3) Hillen & Pettigrew v. I.C.I. (Alkali), Ltd., [1936] A.C. 65; 104 L.J.K.B. 473; 153 L.T. 403; Digest Supp.

(4) M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.

(5) Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 2nd Digest Supp.

(6) Lees v. Dunkerley Brothers, [1911] A.C. 5; 80 L.J.K.B. 135; 103 L.T. 467; 4 B.W.C.C. 115; 34 Digest 496, 4096.

(7) Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. M'Mullan, [1934] A.C. 1; 102 L.J.P.C. 123; 149 L.T. 526; 26 B.W.C.C. 463; Digest Supp.

(8) Hanton v. Port of Liverpool Stevedoring Co., Ltd., [1937] 4 All E.R. 39; Digest Supp.

- (9) Grayson (H. & C.) v. Ellerman Line, Ltd., [1920] A.C. 466; 89 L.J.K.B. 924; 123 L.T. 65; 36 Digest 116, 780.
- (10) Weaver v. Commercial Process Co., Ltd., [1947] 63 T.L.R. 466.
- (11) Buckner v. Ashby & Horner, Ltd., [1941] 1 K.B. 321, 337; 110 L.J.K.B. 460; 105 J.P. 220; 85 Sol. Jo. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Taylor v. Cairn Line, 32 Ll.L.R. 118.
- (13) Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (14) Whitby v. Burt Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556.
- (15) Peck v. Hull & East Coast Stevedoring Co., Ltd., (1938), 82 Sol. Jo. 153; 60 Ll.L.R. 39; Digest Supp.

ACTION tried by ATKINSON, J., without a jury.

The plaintiffs claimed damages against the defendants for breach of statutory duty or negligence and an unsafe system of working. The defendants claimed indemnity or contribution from the third party on the grounds that the injuries and loss were wholly or partly caused by the negligence and breach of statutory duty of the third party. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs against the defendants, and for the defendants against the third party for nine-tenths of the damages and costs. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. Charlesworth for the plaintiffs.

Hylton-Foster, K.C., and Rawden Smith for the defendants.

Nelson, K.C., and Veale for the third party.

Cur. adv. vult.

Apr. 29. ATKINSON, J., read the following judgment. This is an action brought by five stevedores against the defendants, their employers, for damages for personal injuries sustained by them while they were at work on July 11, 1946, loading bags of sulphate of ammonia into the steamship "Glenartney" at the defendants' wharf, Dent's Wharf, Middlesbrough. The defendants admitted their liability, but put the plaintiffs to proof of the injuries alleged. They then, by third party notice, brought in Glen Line, Ltd., the owners of the ship, alleging that they were wholly, or, at any rate, mainly, responsible for the accident which caused the injuries complained of, and they claimed indemnity or contribution. The third party denies responsibility, and, further, says that the defendants had a perfectly good defence to the claim in whole or in part.

It is common ground that the defendants had been engaged by the third party (whom for simplicity's sake I will call "the ship") to load into the ship a large number of bags of ammonium sulphate. The ship arrived in Middlesbrough on July 11, 1946, and Hill, the defendants' foreman, who was to conduct the loading, came on board the ship, saw Capt. Todd, the cargo superintendent, and inquired where the bags were to be stowed. He was told that they were to go into No. 2 hold, that the orlop deck hatch was to be used, and that the bags must all be stowed aft of the hatch and must not come out forward of a line one hatch length forward of the upper deck coamings, that is 3 ft. Between the upper or main deck and the bottom of the hold there were two decks, the second deck and the orlop deck. Then there was the bottom deck. Capt. Todd, or somebody in the employ of the ship, had drawn a line across the bottom of the hatch, which line was supposed to be 3 ft. forward of the upper deck coamings. In all probability that line was less than 3 ft. forward of the coamings. Before anything could be done it was necessary for sufficient beams and hatches to be removed on the upper deck, the second deck and the orlop deck, to provide a way for the bags. The bags were to be lowered into the hold by a crane operated by the defendants. It has been and is the practice in Middlesbrough for the ship to remove the necessary beams and hatch covers and to secure the working beams which are not removed. Before the ship got to Middlesbrough the second officer was told by the chief officer that the crew were to remove the necessary beams and hatches, and at about three o'clock he ordered the crew to strip the necessary beams and hatches from No. 2 hatch and also from Nos. 1 and 4. They did this. A little later Hill came along to the second officer and asked that some more should be taken out to give extra light and air, and the second officer then ordered the crew to take off three more beams in this hatchway, one on the upper deck, one on the 'tween deck and one on the orlop deck. That left a 16-foot way. The second officer had instructions, which he said applied generally, to the effect that all working beams must be adequately secured, or, if not, removed. He, therefore, told the carpenter to go round and follow the crew and bolt up all working beams, meaning all beams next to the way down which cargo would go. In the orlop deck that meant two beams. After the second officer had given these instructions to the carpenter, Hill came along and asked the second officer to see that all beams were secure, and the second officer said that he would. He had, as I have said, according to his evidence, already given the order for that to be done. A little later the second officer, conceiving it to be his duty so to do, went round each hatch to see that all was right, and he says that everything appeared satisfactory, but he did not, in fact, check the all-important after beam in the orlop deck. That beam was set back some 3 ft. further aft than the deck above was, and, in fact, it had cargo stowed on the top of it, which cargo had been picked up at Rotterdam. That cargo was heavy machinery. He said that he was fairly new to the ship, and he thought it was the coaming. He then reported to the chief officer that all beams were bolted and everything was satisfactory. Hill says that he saw the second officer again and asked if the beams were "O.K.", and that the second officer said: "Yes." The second officer does not remember this. In fact he said: "If he had asked me that, I should probably have told him to mind his own business," adding that he was annoyed that Hill had ever asked him to see that the beams were safe, and that it was like telling him to do his job. I accept Hill's evidence as to this. Not that I think that the second officer was saying anything which he does not believe to be true, but Hill was very certain of it, and I think the second officer had merely forgotten. The second officer's evidence is of considerable consequence when one comes later to consider the case put forward as to its being the duty of the stevedores to accept responsibility for the safety of the hatch.

It is common ground, so far as the evidence is concerned, that in the port of Middlesbrough the ship has always handled and secured beams. The stevedore members of the branch of the men's union are not allowed to remove or replace beams or hatches without special arrangement. During the war for a time there was a special arrangement whereby stevedores could handle beams and hatches, but, of course, at the expense of the ship. After the war the old practice was resorted to. It saved the ship the expense of paying the stevedores to do the work. The ship's officers were familiar with the practice. The second officer certainly knew all about it, and he and the chief officer acted accordingly.

Unfortunately, the carpenter had not secured the most important beam in the hatchway, the aft working beam on the orlop deck. A beam is 20 ft. long, it is made of iron, and it is half an inch thick and 13 inches high. Each end rests in a socket deep enough to take the full height of the beam. Two or three inches from the top there runs for the full length a T-shaped flange—I think it would technically be called an angle-iron—making a shelf four inches wide, and on this shelf the hatches rest. Along and flush with the bottom of the beam there is another similar angle-iron, forming again a flange or shelf. What the purpose of that flange is did not appear. The socket bulges out from the side of the deck, and through both sides of the socket, and, of course, through the beam resting in the socket, there is a round hole. Through this hole there should be a bolt with the head at one end and a thread at the other end, on which should be screwed a nut. If this is done, the bolt cannot come loose and the beam cannot be lifted out of the socket. It is then secure, and "securing" means putting in the bolt with a proper nut screwed on to it. The carpenter slipped two bolts through the holes, but neglected to put in nuts at the other end of the bolts. At one end of the beam the diameter of the hole was seven-eighths of an inch; at the other end of the beam the hole was two and a quarter inches. The diameter of the two bolts which he put in was only half an inch, and, therefore, it is quite clear that these bolts would merely lie loosely in the holes with no nuts to secure them, and I have not the slightest doubt that the heads were on the hatch side, so that the beam would look all right to anyone examining the beam. It would be awkward to get at the thread, because the cargo was on the hatch cover, and the only way of getting at it would, I suppose, be by kneeling on the deck alongside and getting your hand up the other side of the beam. At any rate, the beam was thus not secure. It was left in a very dangerous state. The bolts could slip out and could fall out if they were subjected to any vibration. It was gross negligence to leave them in that condition. Further, it constituted a trap, because it would look all right from the deck or from the hatch.

The proper securing of beams is a matter of grave importance. Experience has shown that, when cranes, having lowered cargo down a hatch, are being wound up, the fall (that is the wire rope and anything attached to the fall-balls, chains, and, above all, hooks) may very easily swing out of position and catch the bottom of a beam and unseat it if it is not properly bolted and secured, and thereby cause it to fall on men who are at work below. Doubtless for that reason, among the Docks Regulations, 1934, made by the Secretary of State under s. 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, there is reg. 42, which is to this effect :

The beams of any hatch in use for the processes shall, if not removed, be adequately secured to prevent their displacement.

That comes in pt. IV, and it is preceded by a regulation (sub-para. (d) of the heading "Duties") to this effect :

It shall be the duty of every person who by himself, his agents, or workmen carries on the processes, and of all agents, workmen, and persons employed by him in the processes, to comply with Part IV of these regulations.

It is not easy to apply that general provision to reg. 42. It certainly means that employers and men must not knowingly work in a hatch in which the beams are not secured. It means, I imagine, that the men must believe the beams to be secure. It may go further and mean that they must believe it on reasonable grounds. As to the employer, there is certainly a duty imposed on him to look for himself or by his agent, and, if he delegates the duty of making sure, he still remains answerable for the failure to make sure. I cannot think it means that every man must personally look at and examine every bolt even if he is assured by his foreman that all is in order. I am satisfied in this case that Hill and all the men concerned believed that the beams were secured by bolts, and, as to the five plaintiffs, that they so believed on reasonable grounds. They, or some of them, had heard Hill's request to the second officer, and they relied on Hill, their foreman, making sure before he ordered them to work. I think the regulations imposed a duty on the employer towards the men to see that the regulation was complied with. It was obviously a regulation for the protection of the men. I do not mean by that that it necessarily follows that it was not also for the protection of the ship, but at any rate I am satisfied that one purpose of the regulation was for the protection of the men. Hill did not see that the regulations were complied with, and, therefore, I think that the defendants were guilty of a breach of the regulation. It is unnecessary to decide to what extent the regulation imposes a duty on the men towards the ship. Whatever the measure of the duty imposed on the men, I am satisfied that, if the ship undertakes the duty of making secure and if the men reasonably believe that that duty has been properly performed, the ship cannot rely on any innocent breach of the regulation by the men. The making of this regulation in no way affected the practice at Middlesbrough. There was no reason why it should. There was nothing in it relating to the actual work of securing, and before and since the regulations were made that practice, to which I have referred, was carried out, except for a short period during the war.

The men began to work in the late afternoon. They worked until 6.30, and they resumed at 7, and the accident was about half an hour after that. Their first duty was to place dunnage boards over the hold, on which they were going to place the bags. They then built a platform on which to receive the bags. This platform was brought up to the line, so that the forward side of the platform was up to that line which was supposed to be 3 ft. forward of the coaming on the main deck. The bags, as I have said, were going to be lowered by a crane. The way in which that was done was this. The crane was first placed so that the sling containing a number of bags made an easy entry into the hatch, and then it was swung aft so that the fall came right up against the coaming on the top deck. The platform was 7 ft. high, and boards were placed on top of it. In both plans which have been put in, the distance from the aft to the forward side of this pile scales something of the order of 8 or 9 feet. [HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the evidence regarding the position of the platform and the line and continued :—] The evidence of the men is this. They had been receiving slings of bags on to the platform. About 7.30 a sling came down into a not very convenient position on the platform. Therefore, they called out, I suppose to the hatchwayman, who was at the top of the hatch and he handed on the signal to the man in charge of the crane to take the weight, which meant raise the weight a little. The crane-man got this message and he lifted the load. The next thing was that when the load was hanging something like 3 to 6 inches above the platform there was a noise and a warning cry, and the beam and the hatches, and some of the cargo, came crashing down on to the platform. There were four men on the platform and there were four men carrying bags. Three men on the platform were injured and two of the men who were carrying and who were close to the platform. The beam fell diagonally across the platform, though it may have ended up a little aft of it. Whether it had been intentionally removed or whether it fell on the platform or aft of the platform is not quite clear, but it is, at any rate, clear from the evidence that it fell on to the platform and hurt three of the men who were there. A B C

The first issue of fact that is raised between the defendants and the ship is this. The ship says that this accident was caused by the men swinging the sling as far as they could aft, under the orlop deck, bringing a hook or ball up to and under the beam. It stuck there, and when the load was released and the crane pulled up, the hook or the ball got tightened up against the beam and in that way the beam was pulled out. That is their theory. It is said that, if that is the fact, it is plain that this accident was due to the men's negligence. The men all agree that, if they were doing that and if that was the way in which the accident was caused, they would have been doing something which was dangerous, and, therefore, negligent, but seven men denied it. There are the five plaintiffs, a man named Myers and the crane driver. I accept their denials, and it is sufficient if I say that I accept them as far as they relate to the relevant time, that is, the time when this accident happened. I am quite satisfied that the case alleged by the ship is not well founded. D E

I believe, and I find as a fact, that the accident happened in this way. As I have said, I see no reason why I should not accept Jerred's and Pattison's evidence that, in fact, that white line had been drawn further aft than was thought. It is a very easy mistake to make, but, at any rate, I accept their evidence that that staging was further aft than is shown in either plan. Even if the platform was in the exact position shown on the plan, a load coming straight down would be forward of the centre of the platform. If the platform was, as I am pretty sure it was, further aft, that means that to get a sling even into the centre of the platform there would have to be some pushing or swinging to get it there, because obviously a straight drop would merely have put it forward of the platform or just on the fore-part of the platform. The most convenient side of the platform on which to place the bags would be as far aft as one could get it. As the sling came down it was swung or pushed aft so that the load could rest as near to that side as it could safely be put. While that was being done the hook caught on the edge of the beam. As the sling reached the platform and the signal was given to lift, the hook, being lifted, got a good grip of the bottom of the beam and proceeded to pull up the beam. It would be pulled a few inches without moving the bags while it was taking up the slack, and then a few more inches, estimated by one very good witness as not less than three or more than six, and a few more inches would be just enough to pull the beam out of the socket. I am satisfied that there was at the material time no swinging clear of the stage. I believe the men. Some pushing and swinging of the load would be necessary to get it even into the middle of the platform, and still more to get it further aft, and the more the stage was under the beams the more pushing would be wanted. It is sufficient to say that enough swinging or F G H pushing would be wanted to bring the fall up against the beam. In my opinion, it is plain that the beam was lifted up. It is plain that the hook was the only thing that could do it and it could not have done it unless it was up against it and had caught against it while this operation was being performed. To put part of the platform under the beam some pushing or swinging would be inevitable in order to put the bags into a convenient position, and the hook could quite easily catch or grip that beam.

A On those facts what is in law the result? The defendants had failed to see that all was secure. There was no contributory negligence on the part of the men, and, in my judgment, the defendants had no answer to the claim. Even if, contrary to my view, the plaintiffs were technically themselves at fault with regard to the regulation, I am satisfied that no duty was imposed on them towards their employers, but, even if there were, where the employers accept the responsibility of directing the men as to when it is safe to begin work, I am quite satisfied that the defendants could not have in any way relied on a breach of this regulation by the men, even if there had been one.

B If the defendants have no answer to the claim the question arises: Have they a right to contribution or indemnity against the ship? They are entitled to that if they can make out a case, but it is an essential part of their case that the ship could have been sued by the men. The shipowners were clearly inviters and the men were clearly invitees. They were there at the request of the ship and on the ship's business. The men, using reasonable care for their own safety, were entitled to expect that the occupier would use reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger of which he knew or ought to have known. As to traps, which, by using reasonable care, the invitees would not be aware of, the inviters are under a duty not to create them, or, if they have created them, to warn. That is to be found in the judgment of C SCRUTTON, L.J., in Compania Mexicana de Petroleo El Aguila v. Essex Transport and Trading Co. (1) (141 L.T. 106, 110). Here the ship, by its carpenter, negligently performed the work of securing the beams. Further, they created a trap which no reasonable examination would have detected. The second officer made an examination and gave an assurance that everything was secure when it was not. The ship chose the place for the stowage, which place was one which involved the fall coming, at best, close to the beam. D The ship knew the importance of securing the beams and it knew of the danger to the stevedores if the beams were not properly secured. There may be no regulation imposing a duty on the ship to do this work, but if the ship, even voluntarily, takes on the duty and performs it and gives an assurance that the duty has been performed, it seems to me that, if there had been no regulation, one would have as perfect a Heaven v. Pender (2) case as one could get.

E Can the regulation make any difference? The third party contends that it does, and puts it in three ways. The third party says first: as against you we can rely on the breach of the duty by the men in not making sure that this beam was all right. Secondly, they rely on the negligence with which I have dealt, the negligence alleged of swinging the sling in a dangerous way. F The third way in which they put the case is this. Seeing that there is this duty imposed by the regulation, at any rate on the employer, they have a right to assume that that duty would be performed, and the probability of G the performance of that duty breaks the necessary nexus between them and the men, so that any duty owing to the men would cease to exist.

If the plaintiffs had known that the beam was not secure they might have been in a difficulty. They might have been within the decision of Hillen and Pettigrew v. I.C.I. (Alkali), Ltd. (3), but that decision rested on the fact that H the injured plaintiffs knew that they were breaking a regulation and knew that the operation on which they were engaged was an illegal one.

I do not think that the regulation created a duty towards the ship in the circumstances of this case. I refrain from saying that there would be no circumstances in which a duty would be owed to the ship, because, if the stevedores were being paid to do this work, there is no doubt that there would be a duty owing to the ship. It is impossible to contend that the ship could create a dangerous and concealed trap and escape liability by saying to each man: "You ought to have examined everything for yourself. You owed us, the ship, that duty and you failed to perform it." In this case the officers of the ship knew the practice of the port, the officer in charge knew the practice and knew that the foreman was relying on the ship and on his assurance. The duty imposed by the regulation does not, in my opinion, affect the liability of those who may elect to do the work of securing beams for damage which results from that work being done negligently. It does not lie in the ship's mouth to say to each man: "You ought to have examined and discovered our negligence." It may be said that a ship is under no obligation to do this work, but, if they do it and accept the responsibility, in doing it they have to do it properly.

Lastly, there is the point about the interposition of the employers' duty. The third party seeks to apply what they call the principle of Donoghue v. Stevenson (4) and Haseldine v. Daw (5). The contention is that the nexus between invitor and invitee is broken by the intervening obligation, resting on the employer, to make sure that the beams are safe and secure. It seems to me that this principle cannot be invoked here. Those two cases were cases dealing, not with the relationship between invitor and invitee, but with the relationship in law between a manufacturer and a purchaser of goods, not from the manufacturer, but from somebody else to whom the manufacturer has sold, and a relationship between a repairer of property and someone other than the person for whom the work of repair was done who suffered damage from negligent work. It is said that the principle laid down was that there is no legal nexus, that is to say, there is no duty owed in such a case unless the manufacturer or repairer knew that in all probability there would be no examination of the article sold or work done before use, but the probability of examination prevented the necessary privity or relationship. Prima facie, in those circumstances there is no relationship—it was the absence of an intermediate examination which was held in those cases to create the relationship—but here the legal relationship is created by the invitation and then by the plaintiffs doing work for the invitor under conditions created by the invitor. The third party contends that there ought to have been an examination of their work by the foreman and that the failure to make that examination was the proximate cause of the damage done, or that it, at any rate, destroys any privity between the third party and the stevedores. I do not agree. In the circumstances of this case the foreman owed no duty to the third party to examine the work. The third party knew that there would be no examination. The third party knew that the foreman and the plaintiffs would rely and were relying on the third party and the assurance of the third party's officer in charge. The second officer clearly expected no examination. He said how he had answered even the request made to him by Hill. He had never heard of the regulation, any more than the plaintiffs had heard of it. In my judgment, the existence of the regulation does not, in this case, affect the third party's responsibility for the accident. Their negligence was the effective cause of this accident. Strictly, the defendants and the third party were joint tortfeasors. The foreman, Hill, I suppose strictly made a mistake in trusting to the third party, as the latter well knew, but I am not sure that that gives a right to complete indemnity. I am fairly certain that if Hill had looked he would not have discovered the absence of the nuts, any more than the second officer did, but he did not look.

The conclusion to which I come is this. I give judgment for the plaintiffs against the defendants. I give judgment for the defendants against the third party for nine-tenths of the damages paid and for nine-tenths of the plaintiffs' costs which the defendants have to pay, and all of their costs of the third party proceedings.

Solicitors: J. W. R. Punch & Robson, Middlesbrough (for the plaintiffs); Cohen, Jackson & Scott, Stockton-on-Tees (for the defendants); Jacksons, Monk & Rowe, Middlesbrough, agents for Alsop, Stevens & Collins Robinson, Liverpool (for the third party).

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ALEXANDER'S WILL TRUST.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), May 26, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Latent ambiguity—One article available to answer two bequests—Article divisible—Moiety to each beneficiary.

A By a clause of her will the testatrix bequeathed "my five row diamond bracelet" to a beneficiary and by a subsequent clause she bequeathed "my diamond chain bracelet" to another beneficiary. The first of these clauses had been amended in the will as originally drawn and the amendment had been initialled by the testatrix, so it was clear that the testatrix's mind was specifically directed at the execution of her will to that disposition. The testatrix, at the date of her will and at that of her death, as for many years previously, possessed only one diamond bracelet containing eight rows of diamonds, which, according to extrinsic evidence, she generally referred to as "my five row bracelet," sometimes as "my chain bracelet" and sometimes as "my diamond bracelet."

B HELD: (i) the existence of only one article available to answer two bequests framed in different language was a latent ambiguity, so that extrinsic evidence was admissible.

C (ii) as there was good ground for concluding that the testatrix had directed her mind to the earlier gift at the date of execution of the will, the rule that a later disposition prevails over an earlier had no application, and, the article being divisible, each beneficiary was entitled to a moiety.

Dictum of LORD BROUGHAM and VAUX, L.-C., in Sherratt v. Bentley (1834) (2 My. & K. 149, 165), applied.

D [AS TO INCONSISTENT DISPOSITIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 218, para. 273; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 606-609, Nos. 4335-4365.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Sherratt v. Bentley, (1834), 2 My. & K. 149; 44 Digest 601, 4273.
- (2) Ulrich v. Litchfield, (1742), 2 Atk. 372; sub nom., Francis v. Dichfield, 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 531; 44 Digest 632, 4642.

E ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the disposition of a specific article given by a will to two different beneficiaries. The learned judge held that each was entitled to a moiety. The facts appear in the judgment.

Beswick (Charles Russell with him) for the executors.

D. B. Buckley for the first beneficiary.

P. J. Sykes for the second beneficiary.

F ROXBURGH, J.: This is a difficult case. By cl. 3 of her will, dated Sept. 26, 1941, Lady Florence Alexander, who died on Oct. 19, 1946, made a number of bequests including specific bequests of jewellery. All the bequests in this clause are numbered, and No. 19 is in the following terms:

To Mrs. Arthur Tilney of Sutton Bonnington Loughborough my long pearl earrings—my best presentation bag—and my dressing case with its fittings—my five row diamond bracelet and my black coat with lamb fur collar.

G It may be of importance to note that as this sub-clause in the will was originally typed it ran as follows:

To Mrs. Arthur Tilney of Sutton Bonnington Loughborough my long pearl earrings—my best presentation bag—dressing case five row diamond bracelet and fittings and my black coat with lamb fur collar.

H An alteration in ink has been made inserting the words "and my" before "dressing case" and the words "with its fittings" before "five row diamond bracelet" and striking out the words "and fittings" which originally followed "five row diamond bracelet." That alteration is initialled by the testatrix. I mention this because it is clear that the testatrix's mind was specifically directed at the time of the execution of her will to this disposition. By No. 31 of this list of specific gifts she gave: "To Lady Graham Little of 40 Wimpole Street W.1 my diamond chain bracelet." The testatrix possessed only one article of jewellery which could answer either of those two bequests. It was a diamond bracelet accurately described as a chain bracelet, but containing eight and not five rows of diamonds.

The first question which I have to determine, probably the most difficult and crucial question in this case, is whether that state of affairs produces a latent ambiguity. If it is an ambiguity at all, it is plainly latent because on the face of the will there is no difficulty. One would expect to find two different diamond bracelets, each one available to answer one of the two bequests. The difficulty arises when it is discovered that there is only one bracelet available for that purpose. Is this an ambiguity within the meaning of the authorities? On the whole I think it is.

This question is important because on its determination depends the admissibility of some important evidence. In my judgment, there is a latent ambiguity, and, accordingly, all the evidence which I am about to read is admissible. Miss Atkinson, who was for 14 years before the death of the testatrix on Oct. 19, 1946, in her service as her personal maid, has sworn that she was throughout fully familiar with all the personal jewellery owned by the testatrix during that period. She says: "I have seen and am familiar with the eight row diamond bracelet" which is in question in this case, and she continues: "The testatrix owned and used the diamond bracelet in its present form ever since I first joined her service." So far no objection is taken to Miss Atkinson's evidence, but from now until a point which I will mention later objection was taken. The question was fully argued, and I now hold that the following paragraphs are admissible:

The testatrix . . . referred to [the diamond bracelet] in conversation with me generally as "my five row bracelet" sometimes as "my chain bracelet" and sometimes as "my diamond bracelet." I never knew why she called it "my five row bracelet" though it had eight rows. Whenever, however, the testatrix instructed me to inform her insurance brokers that she was about to take it from the bank where it was deposited she always referred to it as "my five row diamond bracelet."

That ends the paragraphs to which objection was taken as to admissibility. The affidavit continues:

To my knowledge the testatrix, during the time that I knew her, never had any other diamond bracelet.

If I admit that evidence it appears to me to be conclusively established, first, that the testatrix was making no mistake in using the phrase "my five row diamond bracelet," and this disposition must be read as though those words were in inverted commas. For some unknown reason the testatrix liked to call that which was, in fact, an eight row diamond bracelet her "five row diamond bracelet." There is no method of ascertaining on the evidence before me why she adopted that curious appellation for this article of jewellery, but that was her method of referring to it. When she was correcting in ink the disposition in sub-cl. 19 she knew that she had used the words "five row diamond bracelet," she meant to use those words, and intended to describe this particular article, although the word "five" was not right. It is also clearly established that the testatrix sometimes called this her chain bracelet. It, therefore, seems to me plainly proved by this affidavit that when she referred to "my diamond chain bracelet" in cl. 31 she was referring to precisely the same article of jewellery.

What ought I to do in these circumstances? The case is, apparently, without precedent. There seems to have been, so far as the researches of counsel have been able to discover, no case in the reports hitherto on all fours with it. There are cases which bear some resemblance to it, but the resemblance is not very close. There is a well established doctrine that if one finds two repugnant provisions in a will—e.g., as one finds here, the same thing given to two different people—the later disposition prevails. I have to recognise the force of that doctrine which is well established and of long standing. I have also to recognise its unsatisfactory practical operation in a case such as the present when it seems to me to be a reasonable supposition that though sub-cl. 31 stands later in this will the testatrix may have reconsidered cl. 19 at a later stage. I do not hold as a fact that she did. I merely indicate that that possibility makes the doctrine singularly unsuitable for application in a case of this nature.

On the whole I think I am entitled—for nobody has ever questioned the validity of the dictum which I am about to read, though equally nobody seems ever to have applied it—to support the judgment which I am prepared to give by reference to a dictum of LORD BROUGHAM AND VAUX, L.C., sitting in appeal in Sherratt v. Bentley (1) (2 My. & K. 149, 165) :

It must then be admitted that the great weight of authority, both of LORD COKE and of the modern decisions, is in favour of regarding a subsequent gift in a will as revoking a prior one to which it is repugnant, and not rendering it all void for uncertainty. How far that repugnancy could be got rid of by presuming an intention to give each legatee an equal moiety, where the very same thing is given first to one and then to another, there being no expressions excluding such intention, might be a different question. The repugnancy, which existed in those other cases, may be said not to arise here. If in one part of a will an estate is given to A, and afterwards the testator gives the same estate to B, adding words of exclusion, as "not to A," the repugnance would be complete, and the rule would apply. But if the same thing be given first to A and then to B, unless it be some indivisible chattel, as in the case which LORD HARDWICKE puts in Ulrich v. Litchfield (2), the two legatees may take together without any violence to the construction. It seems, therefore, by no means inconsistent with the rule as laid down by LORD COKE, and recognized by the authorities, that a subsequent gift, entirely and irreconcilably repugnant to a former gift of the same thing, shall abrogate and revoke it, if it be also held that, where the same thing is given to two different persons in different parts of the same instrument, each may take a moiety ; though, had the second gift been in a subsequent will, it would, I apprehend, work a revocation.

This bracelet is certainly not an indivisible chattel because it is easy to divide it in a way which will not impair the value of each moiety. I think, therefore, I am entitled to rely on that dictum as justifying me in saying that, if in this case I hold that, as the same thing is given to two different persons in different parts of the same instrument, each may take a moiety, I shall not be doing anything "inconsistent with the rule as laid down by LORD COKE, and recognised by the authorities, that a subsequent gift, entirely and irreconcilably repugnant to a former gift of the same thing, shall abrogate and revoke it." Counsel have agreed that, if that is my conclusion, it is not necessary for me to pursue the question to the extent of defining the moieties in which they are to take. I, therefore, do not propose to do so.

Order accordingly. Costs as between solicitor and client out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors : Charles Russell & Co. (for the executors) ; Monier-Williams & Milroy, agents for Smith, Son & Barker, Andover (for the first beneficiary) ; Lawrance, Messer & Co. (for the second beneficiary).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Followed. IRELAND v. TAYLOR.
[1948] 2 All E.R. 450.

CLIFT v. TAYLOR.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott, Bucknill and Asquith, L.JJ.), April 23, 26, 27, 28, June 1, 1948.]

Landlord and Tenant—Goodwill—Claim for new lease—Reasonableness—Premises required by landlord for occupation by his firm—Absence of adherent goodwill—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), ss. 4 (1), 5 (1), (3) (b) (i), (iv).

In 1934, by a lease expiring on Dec. 25, 1947, the landlord let the ground floor of certain premises to the tenant for use as a tea-shop. The landlord, partner in a firm of estate agents, carried on his own business in the remainder of the building, his firm as a whole having a tenancy from him as landlord. On Dec. 20, 1946, the tenant served on the landlord a notice requiring a new lease, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5 (1), and, in an application to the tribunal for that purpose under s. 5 (2), she alleged a right to compensation, under s. 4, for loss of goodwill of £1,500. The landlord's own business had, in the meanwhile, extended to such an extent that he was unwilling to grant a new lease to the tenant on the ground that he required the premises for the occupation of his own firm and that the grant of the lease would not be consistent with good estate management. By s. 5 (1) and (3) (a) of the Act, a tenant is entitled to a new lease only if he is entitled to compensation under s. 4, but the sum which would be awarded him under that section would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill which he would suffer if he removed to other premises. By s. 5 (3), "the grant of a new lease . . . shall not be deemed to be reasonable . . . (b) if the landlord proves—(i) that the premises are required for occupation by himself . . . or (iv) that . . . the grant of such a lease . . . would not be consistent with good estate management . . ."

HELD: (i) occupation by the landlord and his partners was occupation by the landlord within the meaning of s. 5 (3) (b) (i), and, therefore, the landlord had proved, in accordance with the requirements of s. 5 (3) (b) (i), that the grant of a new lease would not be reasonable. A

(ii) alternatively, since the only part of the tenant's goodwill which could be the subject of compensation was the net rental value of what adhered to the premises in the sense of enuring to the benefit of the landlord in the form of increased rental value after the premises had returned into his possession, the tenant had failed to prove her right to compensation under s. 4, and, accordingly, she was not entitled to a new lease under s. 5. B

Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin ([1934] 2 K.B. 35), applied.

[AS TO COMPENSATION FOR GOODWILL AND GRANT OF NEW LEASE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 294-301, paras. 333-345; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin, [1934] 2 K.B. 35; 103 L.J.K.B. 328; 150 L.T. 354; Digest Supp. C
- (2) Charrington & Co., Ltd. v. Simpson, [1935] A.C. 325; 104 L.J.K.B. 226; 152 L.T. 469; Digest Supp.
- (3) Butling, Ltd. v. Fytche, [1948] 1 All E.R. 737.
- (4) Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 K.B. 314; 101 L.J.K.B. 110; 146 L.T. 133; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order made by His Honour JUDGE A. H. ARMSTRONG, sitting at Yeovil County Court, on July 10, 1947, whereby he ordered the landlord to grant a new lease to the tenant, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5. The landlord appealed and the Court of Appeal now allowed his appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by SCOTT, L.J. D

Holroyd Pearce, K.C., and Dare for the landlord.
G. R. F. Morris and E. B. McLellan for the tenant. E

Cur. adv. vult.

June 1. SCOTT, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal by the landlord against an order made by the county court judge on him to grant a new lease under s. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. The procedure in cases under that section is to be found in s. 21, which provides, by sub-s. (1), that the tribunal shall be the county court, and, by sub-s. (2), that the matter shall first be referred to a referee, as there directed, for inquiry and report back to the county court, in accordance with rules to be made under sub-s. (5). That procedure was followed in the present case. F

The facts of the case are in a small compass. Mr. Taylor, the landlord, is owner in fee of a building suitable for use as business premises, known as 16, Princes Street, in Yeovil, acquired by him in about 1914. It contains three floors. The street is a good street for business offices or for a tea-shop, being in the business centre of the town. The landlord is by profession a land agent. In 1934 he gave Mrs. Clift, the tenant, (and a partner who subsequently died) a lease for 14 years, expiring on Christmas Day, 1947, as, although he was even then employing a staff of 19 or 20, "business was not brisk," as he said in evidence. The lease was of most of the ground floor of the building and of the cellar, with use jointly with the landlord of the yard at the back. The use of the premises was restricted to that of restaurant proprietors, confectioners and caterers. In short, it was to be, and, in fact, was, used throughout the period as a tea-shop. Notice requiring a new lease was served under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 5, on Dec. 20, 1946, by the tenant on the landlord, followed, on Mar. 17, 1947, by an originating application under the Act. Under the latter she alleged a right to compensation (i.e., under s. 4) for loss of goodwill of £1,500. G
H

A During the currency of the lease the landlord carried on and greatly extended his business in the remainder of the building, with the result that, by the time the tenant served her notice, he had five partners and a staff of 41, and the business extended into various allied fields of work, with offices either of the firm or his own in other towns and portions of the staff working in Yeovil in other quarters. The firm and he himself, as its senior partner, had great need for less cramped head office premises, and, in particular, for the free and full use of the ground floor on street level as essential to convenience of office work, for clients, and for display of notices, etc., and, indeed, it was necessary for the prosperity of the greatly enlarged and still growing business, with its ramifications into many allied or compatible departments or activities. The landlord gave evidence before the referee:

B These cafe premises would be highly suitable for the estate agency department. We could accommodate them on the ground floor with partners, who deal with that side, there, and the clerks at the back of the premises. They would be all together, where now they are on different floors and at different places. It is most essential that one should have display for all property for sale in one's window, and auction bills are usually displayed in windows, both for residences, farming and furniture sales and that sort. These cafe premises are highly suitable to us.

C We see no reason for doubting the truth of that evidence. It was uncontradicted. One other feature of the case must be mentioned. During her tenancy the tenant had the advantage for the tea-shop of a private bakery nearby which she rented from some other landlord. It enabled her to build up a trade in the sale of cakes and similar articles baked there, which, no doubt, entered materially into the personal goodwill which she had been able during her lease to build up as an important element in the total goodwill of her business, for which a person carrying on the same trade would be willing to pay substantially if he had the continuing advantage of the site both of the tea-shop and bakery. But the bakery goodwill could not enter into the tea-shop goodwill—at any rate, not that part of the goodwill which would enure to the benefit of the landlord and give rise to a claim for compensation under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927.

D The lease in question, being for 14 years from Dec. 25, 1933, was due to expire on Dec. 25, 1947. Section 5 (1) of the Act of 1927 requires notice of a claim for a new lease to be served on the landlord within the period allowed for a claim for compensation under s. 4, and s. 4 (1) (ii) defines that period as not more than 36 months and not less than 12 months before the end of the lease, i.e., in the case before us, ending at Christmas 1946. The notice was, in fact, served on Dec. 20, 1946. Section 5 (2) requires the application to the court to be made not less than nine months before the end of the tenancy (which is three months after the time for serving notice requiring a new lease as required by sub-s. (1)). The claim was filed on Mar. 17, 1947, and was, therefore, in time. We were given to understand that an extension of time for the completion of the proceedings was ordered under s. 5 (13). At any rate, no question of want of jurisdiction was raised before us. The appeal turns almost entirely on the correct interpretation of the Act. In our view, both the referee and the judge misinterpreted and misapplied it, in spite of clear guidance from reported cases. Of these the most illuminating is that of Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin (1), in which the relevant provisions of the Act were analysed by SCRUTTON, L.J., and MAUGHAM, L.J., sitting as a Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division. Those learned judges made it quite clear that the only part of the tenant's goodwill which is the subject of compensation is the net rental value of what "adheres" to the premises in the sense of enuring to the benefit of the landlord in the form of increased rental value after the premises have returned into his possession. That proposition was quite definitely approved in the House of Lords in Charrington & Co., Ltd. v. Simpson (2), by LORD TOMLIN ([1935] A.C. 325, 335, 336):

H It may indeed be doubted whether the term goodwill in its strict sense is appropriate to be introduced into a case where some improvement of rental value has resulted to the landlord from the carrying on of a business on the premises by a previous tenant. It is unfortunate that the section has not been framed with a clearer exposition of its general purpose and with more precision in the use of terms. The section, however, seems to contemplate that in certain cases something in the form of increased value will, after the termination of the tenancy and as the result of the tenant's business activities during his tenancy, adhere to the premises in the landlord's hands, but that the measure of any compensation to the tenant in respect of it is not what he loses but what the landlord gains.

That view is repeated in different words by LORD MACMILLAN (ibid., 344, 345) :

An incoming tenant may well make payment to an outgoing tenant in respect of the goodwill as he finds it, however arising, but the landlord is not under the Act a purchaser of the goodwill as it stands ; he has to pay statutory compensation to the outgoing tenant in respect of something which the tenant has himself directly created and which he leaves behind in the shape of an added letting value in the premises. The task of discrimination among the elements contributing to added value may be difficult, but the statute has imposed it.

Both referee and learned judge in the present case mis-conceived altogether the nature and limitations of the "adherent" goodwill—the only subject of compensation under s. 4. They both held such erroneous views about the Act that in order to prevent misunderstanding in the future we think it may be useful to call attention to certain features and aspects of the legislation not expressly emphasised in Whiteman's case (1). (i) The Act interferes with freedom of contract and thus modifies an important right of the individual. Any real ambiguity of language in any particular provision, still apparent even when construed in the light of the whole Act, ought to be resolved in favour of maintaining common law rights. (ii) For the same reason, its plain meaning should not be strained in favour of any presupposed intention to enlarge the tenant's or to cut down the landlord's contractual rights. (iii) For this purpose the long title of the Act is significant. It limits the scope of the Act to premises "used for business purposes," and treats "improvements" and "goodwill" as strictly parallel subjects for compensation. (iv) That parallelism is worked out in the two sections which create the right to compensation. First, s. 1 deals with improvements, and s. 4 with goodwill, and in each section the operative words of sub-s. (1) down to the word "compensation" are identical. Secondly, the restriction of compensation by s. 1, proviso (a), to "the net addition to the value of the holding . . . which may be determined to be the direct result of the improvement" finds its counterpart in s. 4 (1) in the limitation of compensation to the added rental value of the premises in the hands of the landlord as a result of business previously carried on there by the tenant, coupled with its proviso (a) that the addition must be proved to be "the direct result of the carrying on of the trade or business" by the tenant. Thirdly, the condition imposed by s. 1 (2), that, in determining the amount of net rental value added by the improvements, regard shall be had to a change of user of the premises intended by the landlord, finds its counterpart in proviso (a) to s. 4 (1), that the tribunal shall have regard, in assessing the net added goodwill, to a proved intention to use the premises "for a different and more profitable purpose" —the "more profitable purpose" being defined in s. 4 (2) as measured by increase in rental value. The further condition imposed by s. 4 (1), proviso (d) (ii), that any part of such added value "attributable exclusively to the situation of the premises" shall be disregarded, obviously can have no prototype in the provision about improvements, but reinforces the principle, which governs both sections, that the landlord shall not be called on to pay for any value in his hands, when possession passes to him, which is not solely and directly attributable to the efforts of the tenant. Finally, the same procedure is adopted for the assessment of both heads of compensation : see s. 21 and ss. 1 (3) and 4 (4). Close and detailed consideration of the conditions imposed on the right to compensation under s. 4 is essential, because the right, conferred on the tenant by s. 5, to claim a new lease, is itself thereby made expressly conditional on an "allegation" by him, first, that he is entitled to compensation under s. 4, and, secondly, that that measure of compensation will not compensate him for the loss of his goodwill—meaning, of course, the whole of the tenant's goodwill, not merely that part of it for which s. 4 confers compensation. The whole of the rights conferred on the tenant by s. 5 to apply for a new lease and of the corresponding duty imposed on the landlord to grant it are expressed in studiously cautious and limited language. Section 5 (1) runs as follows :

Where the tenant alleges that, though he would be entitled to compensation under the last foregoing section, the sum which could be awarded to him under that section would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill he will suffer if he removes to and carries on his trade or business in other premises, he may in lieu of claiming such compensation, at any time within the period allowed for making a claim under the said section, serve on the landlord notice requiring a new lease of the premises at which the trade or business is carried on to be granted to him.

A It follows from what we have already said that the first ground for allowing the appeal is that there was no evidence before the referee or judge of compliance with the primary condition of the right under s. 4 to compensation for adherent goodwill as defined in the decisions we have quoted. There are, however, three or four other grounds also which are equally cogent. The jurisdiction to order a new lease under s. 5 (2) is discretionary, but the exercise of that power is conditional on the tribunal considering that "in all the circumstances" the grant is "reasonable," and, in our opinion, there was no evidence to justify the tribunal in taking any such view. Section 5 (3) enacts that such a grant shall not be deemed to be reasonable (a) unless the tenant proves three facts, or (b) if the landlord proves any one of four other facts. Under sub-s. (3) (a) there was thus an onus of positive proof on the tenant, and, as we have already said, he must prove the central fact, namely, his right to compensation. Under sub-s. (3) (b) the landlord proved two of his four conditions of exemption, namely, (i) that he "required the premises for his own occupation," and (ii) under para. (iv), that "the grant of such a lease of the premises would not be consistent with good estate management." The facts proved by him as regards exemption (i) are these. The existing arrangement with his partners as to the firm's occupation of the building (excluding the tea-shop) was that the firm as a whole had a tenancy from him as landlord and he assumed that a similar arrangement would be made in regard to the premises previously let for a tea-shop. On this, counsel for the tenant contended that such a lease would not constitute "occupation by the landlord" within the meaning of condition (i) to be proved by the landlord. The answer of counsel for the landlord was that it was open to the landlord to give a mere licence to the firm to use the new premises, which would dispose of that objection. We agree, but we go further. On the reasonable interpretation of the Act it would be ridiculous to suppose that Parliament had intended to complicate the simple business conception of occupation by the landlord by pursuing the irrelevant further inquiry whether he had a partner or partners or whether he let the premises in question to the firm or gave them a licence, but, even if so artificial and technical a construction of the Act as that urged by counsel for the tenant was proper, counsel for the landlord pointed out that, on the basis of the position now obtaining both in equity and at law, as explained with authorities in CHESHIRE'S MODERN REAL PROPERTY, 5th ed., pp. 550, 554, land or any interest in land owned by a partnership and in its possession is occupied by all the partners and by each of them, because they are tenants in common. In addition, counsel for the landlord argued that, had Parliament intended to limit the word "occupation" to the sole occupation of the landlord and to exclude occupation by him as a partner, it could have inserted the word "solely," as was done in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, s. 13 (1). There remains the landlord's answer under s. 5 (3) (b) (iv) to the claim for a lease, namely, that it "would not be consistent with good estate management." On this there was overwhelming evidence that the firm needed the tea-shop premises for the proper expansion of their headquarters premises and for display of posters, etc., and we cannot imagine a clearer case of bad estate management than a decision by the senior partner to throw away the opportunity given him by the expiration of the tea-shop lease to bring that part of the premises within the firm's business occupation.

I It will be observed that, under s. 5 (1), the notice of a claim for a new lease has to be served within the same limits of time as the notice of a claim under s. 4, namely, not earlier than three years but not later than one year before the date of expiry of the lease, that the right is conferred as an alternative to the right to compensation, and that the tenant is only called on to allege a right to compensation. By s. 5 (2), however, the tenant is given a further period of three months' grace after the expiration of his time for serving notice of claim for compensation, within which he may still serve on the landlord notice of claim for a new lease, and by the same sub-section the tenant is given the right, in the event of his failing to get a new lease by reason of the limitations on the jurisdiction to order a new lease imposed by sub-s. (3), to ask the tribunal to give him compensation under s. 4. There is in s. 5 (2) another echo of s. 4. In the case of the right to a new lease being excluded by reason of one or other of the provisions of s. 5 (3) (b) (grounds to be proved by the landlord for refusing a lease), compensation is authorised by s. 5 (2), but from its quantum must be deducted any element of site goodwill, thus repeating s. 4 (1), proviso (d) (ii). Sections 4 and 5 would seem, in the light of the preceding analysis of certain aspects of them, to provide for the determination by the tribunal of claims under both sections before the termination of the relationship of landlord and tenant, with the intention that the claim for compensation under s. 4, the claim for a new lease under s. 5, and the alternative claim for compensation under s. 5 should all be thrashed out on a prophetic basis. We only call attention to this doubtful point of interpretation because this court in Butlins, Ltd. v. Fyche (3) discussed a closely allied doubt, although it was not necessary to decide the point, and we recognise there is much to be said for the exposition by TALBOT, J., in Smith v. Metropolitan Properties Co., Ltd. (4), which treats the meaning of s. 4 as not open to doubt.

The chief mistake made by both the referee and the judge in their consideration of the net adherent goodwill was their total failure to realise the difference between the global goodwill which the landlord, if able to give vacant possession with long enough tenure, could have sold in the open market to any purchaser in the same trade or business who wanted the site and the very limited adherent goodwill which might have been of value to the landlord and alone is within s. 4. Nor was there any attempt made in the evidence given on behalf of the tenant to eliminate any one of those elements of goodwill which were capable of enuring to the benefit of a purchaser in the same line of business as the tenant, but incapable of enuring to the landlord's benefit. Neither site value, nor the "personal" goodwill attaching to the way in which, and the type of staff with which, the tenant had managed the tea-shop, nor the goodwill value of her separate bakery rented from another landlord was deducted, although they were all possible (though by no means certain) items of value in the tenant's goodwill which could not have enured to the benefit of the landlord. In addition, both referee and judge confused profits with goodwill, wholly ignoring the clear warning given by MAUGHAM, L.J. ([1934] 2 K.B. 36, 50, 51) in Whiteman Smith Motor Co., Ltd. v. Chaplin (1). There is one final point we would add, namely, that, if it was obviously so much to the interest of the firm's business to use the ground floor for its own purposes, there cannot be any doubt about that floor carrying a rental value for that purpose which ought to be treated by the court as satisfying the criterion of the phrase, "used for a different and more profitable purpose," in proviso (a) to s. 4 (1) as further defined by s. 4 (2), for we are satisfied that the economic rent which the landlord, if he is to be regarded as separate from his firm, could obtain for the ground floor for the purpose of his firm's business would be far more than the rent which could be obtained for the premises if used for the purpose of a tea-shop.

In the result, we are satisfied that there is no adherent goodwill in the present case and that the report and judgment below must both be set aside and the application alike for a new lease or, alternatively, for compensation refused. The landlord will have the costs here and below.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Reed & Reed, agents for Clarke, Willmott & Clarke, Taunton (for the landlord); Markham Thorp & Co., agents for Farnfield & Nicholls, Gillingham, Dorset (for the tenant).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SWINDON CORPORATION v. PEARCE AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Birkett and Sellers, JJ.),
May 27, June 4, 1948.]

Town and Country Planning—Interim development—Enforcement of interim development control—Proposed prohibition of use of land—Appeal by occupier—Powers of court of summary jurisdiction—Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943 (c. 29), s. 5 (2), sched. I, para. 3.

The Town and Country Planning Act, 1943, s. 5 (1), provides: "If while a resolution to prepare or adopt a scheme under the principal Act is in force with respect to any area, any development of land within that area is carried out after the commencement of this Act otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the interim development order or of permission granted under that order, then, . . . the interim development authority may, if they are satisfied that it is necessary or expedient so to do having regard to the provisions then proposed to be included in the scheme . . . (b) where the development consists of any use of the land or any building thereon, by order prohibit that use, and, where necessary, reinstate the land." By s. 5 (2) and sched. I, para. 3, on an appeal in respect of a notice of such proposed order, a court of summary jurisdiction, if "satisfied that the interim development authority are entitled to take the proposed action on the grounds specified in the notice . . . shall dismiss the appeal . . . but, if they are not so satisfied, they shall allow the appeal."

An interim development authority gave notice to the occupier of certain land and buildings of their intention to prohibit the use of the premises for the purposes of a second-hand motor vehicle business on the ground that the use was "not in accordance with provisions now proposed to be included in the scheme under which the said use of the land and buildings requires the consent of the interim development authority, which consent has been refused on the ground that such use is injurious to the amenities of the neighbourhood which is mainly residential in character." In allowing an appeal by the occupier, the court of summary jurisdiction had regard to the reasons which had led the authority to serve the notice, and, particularly, to whether the use of the land was injurious to the amenities of the neighbourhood. On appeal, quarter sessions upheld this decision.

HELD: the justices were not entitled to consider the reasons which led the authority to come to the conclusion that it was necessary or expedient to prohibit the development, but could only decide whether the conditions precedent to their giving the notice had been complied with.

Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Taylor v. Brighton Corporation ([1947] 1 All E.R. 864, 866), applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] The Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 5, sched. I, para. 3, ceases to have effect when the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, comes into force on July 1, 1948. In the Act of 1947 the section corresponding to s. 5 (2) of, and sched. I, para. 3, to, the Act of 1943 is s. 23 (4).

AS TO CONTROL OF INTERIM DEVELOPMENT UNDER THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACTS, see HALSBURY, Vol. 32, pp. 266-9, paras. 424-426, and Supplement para. 426A; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Taylor v. Brighton Corporation, [1947] 1 All E.R. 864; [1947] K.B. 736; [1947] L.J.R. 1103; 177 L.T. 153; 111 J.P. 343; C.A.
- (2) Dormer v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation, [1940] 2 All E.R. 521; [1940] 2 K.B. 204; 109 L.J.K.B. 708; 163 L.T. 266; 104 J.P. 316; 84 Sol. Jo. 500; C.A.; Digest Supp.

CASE STATED by Wiltshire Quarter Sessions.

The appellants, Swindon Corporation, were the interim development authority for the borough of Swindon for the purposes of the Town and Country Planning Acts. A resolution to prepare a scheme under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, was at all material times in force in respect of the borough of Swindon, and on Apr. 3, 1945, the appellants adopted a report under which all uses except for residential purposes of land or buildings included in an area in which Crombey Street was situated were prohibited without the express consent of the appellants who proposed to include this zoning of the area in the scheme. The respondents were the occupiers of premises at 71, Crombey Street, which they began to use for the purposes of a second-hand motor vehicle business in July, 1946. On Sept. 3, 1946, the appellants refused an application by the respondents for permission to use the premises for this purpose, but the user continued without such permission. On June 3, 1947, the appellants, being satisfied that it was necessary and expedient to do so, resolved to prohibit such use by order and served a notice on the respondents under the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, s. 5 (1), stating that they proposed to make the order in 28 days. The respondents appealed to a court of summary jurisdiction, contending that their right of appeal extended to all matters referred to in the appellants' notice and that they could raise the questions whether the use of the land was injurious to the amenities of the neighbourhood and of the merits and justification on town planning grounds of the appellants' refusal of permission and proposed action. The appellants contended that their decision as to the necessity for or expediency of making the proposed order was conclusive, and that, on proof of the facts, the justices must dismiss the appeal. On Sept. 15, 1947, the justices allowed the appeal and on Nov. 5, 1947, quarter sessions dismissed the appellants' appeal therefrom. The Divisional Court now allowed the appellants' appeal from the decision of quarter sessions. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

H. B. Williams, K.C., and J. T. Molony for the appellants.
Skelhorn for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 4. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment of the court. On June 17, 1947, the appellant corporation, as the interim development authority under the Town and Country Planning (Interim Development) Act, 1943, served on the respondents a notice of their intention to prohibit the use of certain land for the purposes of a second-hand motor vehicle business. The notice recited that a resolution to prepare or adopt a scheme under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, was in force with respect to an area comprising the land in question and that development of that land consisting of the use of that land and buildings thereon for the purpose of a second-hand motor vehicle business was being carried on after the commencement of the Act of 1943 otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the Town and Country Planning (General Interim Development) Order, 1946. The notice then stated that the authority was satisfied that it was necessary or expedient to prohibit that use having regard to the provisions which it was proposed to include in the new scheme, and it, accordingly, notified the respondents that the authority proposed, after the expiration of 28 days from the date of the service of the notice, to make an order prohibiting the aforementioned use of the land and buildings. The notice then set out that:

... the grounds for such action are that the said use of the land is not in accordance with provisions now proposed to be included in the scheme under which the said use of the land and buildings requires the consent of the interim development authority, which consent has been refused on the ground that such use is injurious to the amenities of the neighbourhood which is mainly residential in character.

The respondents entered an appeal to the court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Swindon against the action proposed to be taken by the authority in pursuance of the right of appeal given by s. 5 of the Act of 1943 and sched. I thereto. The justices allowed the appeal and the interim authority appealed to quarter sessions. The appeals committee dismissed the appeal, subject to a Case stated for the opinion of the court.

None of the facts is in dispute with regard to the necessary steps taken by the interim authority, nor was it disputed that the land and buildings were within an area in respect of which a resolution to prepare a scheme was in force. The question at issue is whether, on the hearing of the appeal, the justices were entitled to inquire into the reasons which moved the interim authority to serve the notice which they did, and, in particular, whether it was open to the justices to consider whether the use of the ground would be injurious to the amenities of the neighbourhood, and it would seem to follow, if the contentions of the respondents are correct, that they would also be entitled to invite the justices to consider whether or not the neighbourhood was mainly residential in character. By s. 5 (1) of the Act of 1943 it is provided :

If while a resolution to prepare or adopt a scheme under the principal Act is in force with respect to any area, any development of land within that area is carried out after the commencement of this Act otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the interim development order or of permission granted under that order, then, subject to the provisions of this section, the interim development authority may, if they are satisfied that it is necessary or expedient so to do having regard to the provisions then proposed to be included in the scheme . . . (b) where the development consists of any use of the land or any building thereon, by order prohibit that use, and, where necessary, reinstate the land.

The development in question in this case was begun after the Act of 1943 came into force and after a resolution to prepare a scheme under the Act of 1932 was in force. Section 5 (2) of the Act of 1943 gives the same right of appeal as did s. 13 (2) to (5) of the Act of 1932, with the modifications contained in sched. I to the Act of 1943 which provides :

3. If on any such appeal the court of summary jurisdiction are satisfied that the interim development authority are entitled to take the proposed action on the grounds specified in the notice, they shall dismiss the appeal and shall by their order empower the authority after the expiration of the said period of 28 days, to remove or pull down the building or work, or to execute the required alterations or works or, as the case may be, shall by their order prohibit the building or land from being used after the period aforesaid without the permission of the authority or in contravention of any conditions subject to which that permission was granted, but, if they are not so satisfied, they shall allow the appeal.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that, on the plain construction of the provisions of the schedule, the appeal is limited to the question whether the development authority are entitled to take the action proposed in the notice, and that that must mean whether the conditions precedent to their giving the notice have been carried out and whether the land is land to which the scheme applies. They concede that the court could also inquire whether what had been done amounted to "development" within s. 53 of the Act of 1932, whether it took place after the Act of 1943 came into force, and whether it was otherwise than in accordance with the development order. The respondents, on the other hand, contend that the justices are entitled to consider whether, in their opinion, the reasons given by the authority for coming to their decision were justified or not.

The first thing to observe in this connection is that it is unnecessary for the notice to give any reasons why the authority has refused to consent to the use to which it is proposed to put the land. The notice must, no doubt, state that the authority are satisfied that it is necessary or expedient to prohibit the use and that they have refused to give their consent to its use, but they are not required to set out in the notice the reasons that moved them to refuse their consent. It would, indeed, be strange if, because they do so, the person aggrieved can ask the justices to take a different view and to say that the authority were wrong in refusing their consent. Counsel for the appellants called our attention to s. 10 of the Act of 1932. Under that Act, where the Minister has made a general order in respect of interim development, an application for permission to develop the land may be made to a specified authority who may grant the application unconditionally or subject to conditions or may refuse the application. Thereupon, the applicant may appeal to the Minister, whose decision is to be final. Suppose then the applicant, in defiance of that decision, proceeds to develop the land and the authority serve a notice on him under s. 5 of the Act of 1943 of their intention to make an order prohibiting that use and directing him to reinstate the land. If an appeal can be brought against that order and the justices be asked to reconsider the matter, it would be asking them in effect to overrule not only the authority but also the Minister.

In our opinion, it is clear that the justices on this appeal can only decide whether the authority have acted within their jurisdiction, by which we mean in respect of land that is comprised within the order, and whether there has been development contrary to the order, and whether the necessary steps requisite to be taken before a notice is given have been taken. There may be some other matters which the court can consider. We are not intending to give an exhaustive category, but, in our opinion, it is clear that the court cannot consider the reasons which have led the authority to come to the conclusion whether it is necessary or expedient to prohibit the intent to develop.

In Taylor v. Brighton Corpn. (1), a case arising under the same Act, LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 866): "The test which is set up by those words 'necessary or expedient,' in my opinion, is not an objective test in the sense that it is for the court to say whether a provision is necessary or expedient." It is true that he was there referring to provisions which it was proposed should be inserted in a scheme, but it seems to us that that observation applies with equal force to the matter which we are now considering. It is, we think, evident that Parliament meant these matters to be left to the decision of the elected local authority. It is for them to consider, and not for a court, what it is desirable should be done or not done in relation to these schemes, and, provided they are acting intra vires, their action cannot be controlled by the courts. It would have been very easy, if Parliament had intended that the decisions of the local authority on such matters should be open to contest before a court, to have used appropriate words giving that right.

Counsel for the respondents called our attention to ss. 12 and 47 of the Act of 1932, which do expressly give a right to a court to override the decision of the authority in respect of the matters there mentioned, but we do not find any words which give this right in respect of matters relating to s. 5. Where matters are left by Parliament to the discretion and judgment of a local authority, the courts ought not, and, indeed, cannot, interfere to overrule or vary what they see fit to do. I may, perhaps, in this respect mention a case in the Court of Appeal, Dormer and Others v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corpn. (2). That case dealt with an entirely different Act, a private Act conferring powers on the corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The plaintiffs objected to the way the corporation had exercised the powers given them by the Act in relation to putting railings on the footway for the purpose of protecting foot passengers. In my judgment in that case I said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 527):

The corporation, in the exercise of their discretion, came to the conclusion that it was necessary for the protection of the public in Newcastle that it should. I do not think that this court, or any other court, has any right to canvass the decision of a local authority on a matter of that sort, which Parliament has placed in their hands for decision. It is not a question of whether the Ministry of Transport or the police or the watch committee or anybody else took this view or that view. It is entirely a question for the corporation as a corporation to decide, and their decision on the length or extent of this fence cannot be reviewed by this or any other court.

Exactly the same principles apply, we think, to this case. The justices, therefore, had no power to allow the appeal, and it follows that the order of the appeals committee in dismissing the authority's appeal was wrong. The case will be remitted to the appeals committee answering the question submitted in the negative, with an intimation that the order suggested in para. 8 of the Case should be made. The appellants will have the costs of the Case and the argument in this court.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for D. Murray John, town clerk, Swindon (for the appellants); Pennington & Son, agents for Lemon, Humphreys & Parker, Swindon (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILMOT v. WILMOT AND MARTIN (DAY INTERVENING).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), April 29, 30, May 3, 4, 1948.]

Divorce—Condonation—Husband and guilty wife living together in same house, but with no marital intercourse—Husband desirous of reconciliation, but wife's refusal—Parties continuing to live together as before—Revival of husband's condoned adultery by subsequent act of adultery disclosed in discretion statement—Discretion of court—Exercise in wife's favour.

A husband and wife, who were married in 1931, had become estranged by 1939 and, although they continued to live together in the same house and the wife did the housekeeping, they had no marital intercourse, hardly spoke to each other, and had their meals separately. In 1942 the husband went to the Far East in the Royal Air Force and was taken prisoner by the Japanese. On his return to England in 1945, the parties resumed the same kind of relationship as had existed before the husband went away. In November, 1945, the husband discovered a letter to the wife from the co-respondent and suspected that she had been guilty of adultery. On Dec. 9, while away from home, the husband wrote a letter to the wife asking her to make it up with him and to give up the co-respondent. When the husband returned home on Dec. 11, the wife confessed that she had committed adultery with the co-respondent while the husband was a prisoner, and she said that she still loved the co-respondent and refused the husband's attempt at reconciliation. On learning this, the husband took no action of any kind and the husband and wife continued to live together, in the same way as they had been doing hitherto, until July, 1946, when the husband left the wife. The husband then brought a petition for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery, but the wife contended that he had condoned her adultery and there had been a complete reinstatement of the wife by the husband. The husband claimed (a) that, as there had been no displacement by him of the wife, there could be no replacement, and (b) that, on the facts of the case, there was no condonation, since both husband and wife must be parties to a condonation. In 1936, the husband had committed adultery which had been condoned by the wife. In 1938, he again committed adultery, but this fact was not disclosed until the discretion statement was filed in his petition.

HELD : (i) where a husband and wife were together when the confession or discovery of adultery was made, there could be a merely notional displacement which might be immediately made good by condonation or reinstatement.

Fearn v. Fearn ([1948] 1 All E.R. 459), distinguished.

(ii) there was no authority for the proposition that there could be no condonation unless the guilty party consented to being condoned, and, on the facts, the husband had reinstated the wife in her position in the household and in the state of conjugal cohabitation after he became fully aware of her adultery and had condoned it.

(iii) the fact that the wife's adultery had been condoned did not affect the exercise by the court of its discretion in her favour, and, although she could not rely on the husband's adultery in 1938 as a ground for divorce, it was sufficient to revive the previous condoned adultery, and she was, accordingly, entitled to a divorce.

[AS TO CONDONATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 679-682, paras. 1004-1009; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 336-341, Nos. 3161-3213.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 28 L.J.P. & M. 57; 32 L.T.O.S. 321; 27 Digest 336, 3166.
- (2) Fearn v. Fearn, [1948] 1 All E.R. 459.

PETITION by the husband for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery. CROSS-PETITION by the wife for divorce on the ground of the husband's adultery.

The parties were married in 1931, and by 1933 differences had arisen between them because the husband desired to have children, but the wife did not. In or about 1935, the husband committed adultery with a prostitute, and, as a result, he contracted a venereal disease of which he was in due course cured.

He admitted to the wife the adultery and the fact that he had contracted a venereal disease, but she condoned the adultery and marital intercourse between the husband and wife continued to take place, although infrequently. In 1937 the wife became attracted by another man, and, although no adultery took place, the relations between the husband and the wife became worse. In 1938 the husband again committed adultery with a prostitute, but he did not disclose that fact until the discretion statement was filed in his petition. By 1939 marital intercourse between the parties had completely ceased, and, although they continued to live in the same house they were barely on speaking terms, and had put their matrimonial affairs into the hands of solicitors. In 1942 the husband joined the Royal Air Force and was posted to the Far East where he was taken prisoner by the Japanese. On his return to England in 1945 the parties lived together in the same house and the wife continued to do the housekeeping, but there was no marital intercourse, they spoke very little to each other, they seldom had meals together, and they did not go about together. In November, 1945, the husband discovered a letter to the wife from the co-respondent which indicated that the wife had committed adultery with him while the husband was abroad. On Dec. 9, 1945, while away from home, the husband wrote a letter to the wife, entreating her to make it up with him and give up the co-respondent. On Dec. 11, the husband returned home and had an interview with the wife, and she admitted the adultery and stated that she loved the co-respondent and would go to him if it were possible. On learning this, the husband took no action of any kind, and matters continued between them as they had been previously. At Christmas, the husband and wife went away together to stay with the wife's sister. About the end of January, 1946, the husband consulted solicitors and asked the wife to leave the house, but she refused to do so and the parties continued to live together in the matrimonial home until July, 1946. Early in 1946 the husband met the intervener with whom he became friendly, and in the summer of that year he promised to marry her if it ever became legally possible for him to marry again. The husband now petitioned for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery, but the wife contended that her adultery had been condoned and brought a cross-claim for divorce against the husband on the ground of his adultery in 1936 and with the intervener. Both parties asked for the discretion of the court in regard to their own adultery. The intervener was dismissed from the suit during the proceedings, on the ground that adultery between her and the husband had not been proved. WILLMER, J., held that the husband had condoned the wife's adultery and dismissed his petition, and granted a decree nisi to the wife on the ground of the husband's adultery in 1936 which was condoned by the wife but revived by the act of adultery in 1938.

Karminski, K.C., and R. J. A. Temple for the husband.

Beufus, K.C., and Stephen Terrell for the wife.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Hollins for the intervener.

The co-respondent did not appear and was not represented.

WILLMER, J. [after stating the facts]: On the part of the husband there was adultery in 1936, which was, admittedly, condoned by his wife, but it was revived by the husband's adultery in 1938, an act which has never been condoned, for the simple reason that, until the discretion statement was filed, it was not, in fact, known to the wife. The wife cannot rely as ground for dissolution on the act of adultery in 1938, but it is sufficient to revive the previous condoned adultery. Therefore, the wife has proved to the satisfaction of the court that the husband has been guilty of adultery which, although condoned, has been revived, and the husband has proved to the satisfaction of the court that, during his absence overseas, the wife was guilty of adultery with the co-respondent. It is common ground that there was no question of sexual intercourse having taken place after the husband's discovery of the wife's adultery, but counsel for the wife contends that the continuation of this strange living together under the same roof amounts, in fact, to a complete reinstatement of the wife in her position as wife, and, therefore, amounts in law to complete condonation by the husband in respect of the wife's adultery. I have avoided the use of the word "cohabitation" because it is objected that this was not a state of cohabitation at all. Counsel for the husband contends that the parties were not cohabiting, but were merely living together in the same house in circumstances which, had the question been before the court, would have justified the court in arriving at a finding of desertion. Although I have not to decide that point, it is not one which impresses me very favourably. I find some difficulty in seeing how the husband can say that he has been deserted by the wife when he has been living with her in circumstances in which he entrusts her with the management of the household, takes her about to social functions as his wife, makes her a wifely allowance for housekeeping, and takes her away to stay with friends as his wife. Apart from the question of cohabitation, counsel for the husband contends, first, that there has been no reinstatement in this case because there was never any displacement of the wife from the position which she previously occupied, and, secondly—and this, I think, is the more formidable of the two points—that there cannot be any question of condonation, because it takes two to make condonation in the same way as it takes two to make a quarrel. It is urged that, although the husband did, undoubtedly, in the early stages of his discovery wish for a reconciliation, the wife would never have one, and it was she who resisted the overtures of the husband and refused to have her adultery condoned.

I was referred to most of the well-known cases on the subject of condonation, beginning with the classic case of Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1), which, I am told, was the first case in which a contested question of condonation came before the Divorce Court when it was first established, and ending with Fearn v. Fearn (2) which, so far as I know, is the most recent pronouncement of the Court of Appeal on the subject of condonation. It is not necessary to refer to the earlier cases, because they are, I think, quoted and summed up in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., in Fearn v. Fearn (2). In that case the question was whether mere words of forgiveness, unaccompanied by any acts, amounted to condonation, i.e., the issue which was before the court in that case was quite different from the issue in this case, but one of the grounds for the decision was that there could be no question of reinstatement because there had been no displacement of the guilty wife from the position which she had previously occupied. In Fearn v. Fearn (2) the husband became aware of his wife's adultery while he was serving overseas in the Central Mediterranean Forces. There was obviously nothing he could do about it in the physical sense except to write, and he did write—a letter of forgiveness—and he refrained from doing what he might have done, namely, stop the wife's allowance then and there. Later, in consequence of further information, he changed his mind and decided to petition for divorce, and he was met with the plea that his letter of forgiveness, coupled with his earlier failure to stop his wife's allowance, amounted to condonation. The Court of Appeal decided that there could be no question of reinstatement because the wife had never been displaced, and it is said that the same argument applies to this case. In my judgment, that argument cannot be sustained. In the ordinary case, where the parties are face to face when the confession or discovery of adultery is made, prima facie the guilty wife does not have to be displaced from her position. The husband may take time to think it over, but he may, if he is of a forgiving nature, respond immediately by saying: "I forgive you all you have done and I propose that we go straight on together." In other words, his action may result in there being, in fact, no break whatever in the continuation of the association of husband and wife. It seems to me that it is a straining of language to say that there is no reinstatement because there has been no displacement. The displacement, in other words, may be merely a notional displacement, and it may be immediately made good by condonation or reinstatement on the part of the husband. The proposition that it takes two to bring about condonation, in the same way as it takes two to make a quarrel, is one of such simplicity that, if it were sound in law, I should have expected it to be well-founded in authority, but, although I have asked for authority for the proposition, I have had none. No case has been cited to me which lays down, as a matter of law, that condonation, before it can be operative, must be something joint between the two parties, or that there can be no condonation unless the guilty party consents to being condoned.

It seems to me, in those circumstances, that, on this question of condonation, I have to ask myself a simple question on the facts, bearing in mind the strange relationship which existed between these parties before the discovery. That question is: "Did the subsequent behaviour of the husband and subsequent treatment of his wife by the husband amount to a reinstatement of the wife or condonation?" [His LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence on this matter, and continued:] I can find, in fact, no change in the relationship between the parties after Dec. 11, as compared with what it was before Dec. 11, and I can find no change for a period of some months after that date. About Jan. 27, 1946, the wife went away for a short holiday without informing the husband. The husband was a little annoyed about this and took the opportunity of altering the arrangement with relation to the housekeeping money which he had previously credited to a joint bank account. From then onwards he paid cash weekly, and, with the first payment of weekly cash, he wrote a message on the back of the envelope in which the money was left, saying:

Enclosed housekeeping money Feb. 1 to Feb. 7 included. You left this house four days ago without telling me you were going or what your intentions were . . .

He then went on to explain that he was, on that account, varying the arrangements as to the method of paying the housekeeping money. The fact that, as late as January or February, 1946, the husband complained because his wife went away without telling him where she was going, thereby to some extent interfering with the even flow of domestic affairs and of management of the domestic household, seems to me to be most informative with regard to the husband's attitude, and, indeed, to the attitude of both parties. I say both parties, because, although it may be said that the wife did not want to have her adultery condoned, she did continue to live in the husband's house and behave in the same way towards the husband as she had behaved previously. She continued to run the household as a housewife and to perform such wifely duties as she had done for a good many years. It seems to me in those circumstances, and I so find, that after Dec. 11 the parties continued in exactly the same way, with exactly the same relationship, as they had for a very long time before, and, although that relationship was a somewhat strange one, it was, nevertheless, a relationship which, in my judgment, can only be described as one of conjugal cohabitation. It seems to me, therefore, that I should be doing violence to the facts in this case if I came to any other conclusion than that the husband reinstated his wife in her position in the household and in the state of conjugal cohabitation after he became fully aware of her adultery. In other words, I am satisfied that the husband did duly and freely condone the wife's adultery with the co-respondent with full knowledge of all the facts.

That finding makes it impossible for the husband's petition to succeed. Does the fact that I have found the wife's adultery was condoned affect the exercise of my discretion in her favour? It seems to me not. If I were prepared otherwise to exercise my discretion in her favour, the fact that I am dismissing the husband's petition on the ground of condonation does not seem to me to make any difference. As matters stand, the husband is guilty of an act of adultery in 1936 which is relied on by the wife—condoned, it is true, but revived by a subsequent act of adultery in 1938—and I have to ask myself the question: "Do I withhold relief or do I grant relief at my discretion, having regard to the wife's subsequent adultery with the co-respondent in 1944 or 1945?" I think that a not immaterial consideration is the fact that the first act of adultery perpetrated by the husband resulted in his contracting a venereal disease, a fact which was, no doubt, a cause of the deterioration in the relationship between these parties. Although that fact does not by any means excuse the wife's adultery during the husband's absence abroad, it goes some way to diminish the extent of her blameworthiness. In all the circumstances I think it is a proper case in which I can exercise my discretion in the wife's favour and pronounce a decree nisi of dissolution on the wife's cross-charge.

Husband's petition dismissed. Decree nisi granted to the wife. Wife to pay the costs of the intervener.

Solicitors: Rowe & Maw (for the husband and the intervener); Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WEBSTER v. HIGGIN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Evershed, L.JJ.),
June 2, 3, 1948.]

Hire Purchase—Collateral agreement—Abrogation—Parol warranty during negotiations of "roadworthiness" of motor car—Subsequent formal document excluding warranties.

In the course of negotiations for the purchase of a second-hand motor car on hire purchase terms the vendor's agent told the purchaser that, if he bought the car, the vendor would guarantee that it was in good condition and that he would have no trouble with it. The purchaser signed a hire purchase agreement which contained inter alia the following clause: "The hirer is deemed to have examined (or caused to be examined) the vehicle prior to this agreement and satisfied himself as to its condition, and no warranty, condition, description or representation on the part of the owner as to the state or quality of the vehicle is given or implied . . . any statutory or other warranty, condition, description or representation whether express or implied as to the state, quality, fitness or roadworthiness being hereby expressly excluded."

HELD: the wording of the clause in the hire purchase agreement was not sufficiently clear to abrogate the separate collateral agreement constituted by an offer of a guarantee and the signing of the hire purchase agreement by the purchaser.

[AS TO CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT OF CONDITIONS AND WARRANTIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 52-56, paras. 64-68; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 414-422, Nos. 480-546.]

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of His Honour JUDGE STEWART, made at Leeds County Court, and dated Oct. 22, 1947, whereby, in an action for the return of a motor car bought on hire purchase terms and for the balance of instalments due, the learned judge rescinded the agreement and ordered repayment of the deposit and instalments paid, on the ground that a representation of "roadworthiness" which induced the defendant to purchase the car amounted to a condition precedent and it had not been fulfilled. The appeal was allowed, but on the ground that what was offered was a collateral guarantee, and, on the undertaking of the defendant to return the car and of the plaintiff that he would no longer regard the hire purchase agreement as being on foot for any purpose, the order for repayment of deposit and instalments was affirmed. The facts appear in the judgment.

Stanley-Price for the plaintiff.

Hurwitz for the defendant.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: The plaintiff is a garage proprietor and part of his business consists in dealing in second-hand cars, among other ways, by means of contracts of hire purchase. The defendant, having been attracted by one of the plaintiff's advertisements, discussed with the plaintiff's foreman the purchase of a car described as a 1933 Hillman 10 horse power car. They discussed it on a hire purchase basis, but at that stage no terms of any hire purchase agreement were gone into, much less agreed. In the result, the defendant, who was not acquainted with motor cars beyond being able to drive them, without examining the car in question and without even having the engine started up, signed a document on the invitation of the plaintiff's foreman. That document is called an order form. It is a printed form with the plaintiff's name printed on it as a heading. It purports to be addressed to him, and by it a proposing purchaser says: "I hereby accept your offer to sell and order from you on the terms and conditions following and overleaf." There are a number of headings dealing with various things. The car, with its colour and upholstery, is described, the price, such matters as the licence and insurance which are to be paid for, and the date for delivery are specified. The document ends by having written in, apparently by the plaintiff, "H.P. Form"—i.e., hire purchase form—"to be signed May 14." It is clear that the only form of purchase which the parties at this stage were contemplating was one by way of hire purchase. The hire purchase form referred to in this "order form" is not in any way identified, and it is not suggested that the words ought to be construed as referring to some particular kind of form. The position, therefore, was that no contract came into existence by the signature on this order form by the defendant for the simple reason that it was a document which contemplated the execution of a definite contractual document, namely, a hire purchase agreement, the terms of which had never been agreed, save in so far as certain matters are referred to, such as the amount of the deposit, the period and the instalment. That, of course, is insufficient to constitute a contract because hire purchase agreements contain a large number of clauses which are not in any sense uniform. Variations are to be found, and the forms which are commonly adopted have varied from time to time. It seems to me, therefore, that this document was in no sense a contractual document.

The importance of it lies in this. On the back of it are set out what are called "Terms and Conditions." The relevant condition is condition 4:

The purchaser acknowledges that he has not been induced to enter into this purchase by any representation as to quality, fitness for any purpose, performance or otherwise of the goods other than the representation contained . . . if the goods be not new, in the written description entered on this order form.

If that had been a contractual document, I could have understood the argument that the purchaser was binding himself in the terms of condition 4, whatever those words may mean, and that he would have so bound himself even if he had not read it, but it was not a contractual document, and before it was signed something had happened which is, to my mind, of crucial importance and was obviously so regarded by the learned county court judge. In the course of a conversation which the defendant had with the plaintiff's foreman, whose authority is not in any way in dispute, the foreman said: "If you buy the Hillman 10 we will guarantee that it is in good condition and that you will have no trouble with it." Those words in the context are obviously an offer of a collateral guarantee. It is a guarantee to the defendant that, if he will enter into a contract of purchase, the guarantee will be given to him. I may say at once that that guarantee was broken as completely and thoroughly as any guarantee can possibly be broken. The evidence relating to the inside of that motor car, given by an expert whose testimony was accepted by the county court judge, amounted to a most deplorable description of what in effect was nothing but a mass of second-hand and dilapidated ironmongery.

If the order form, to which I have just referred, was not contractual, what was it? Reliance is placed on the fact that the defendant signed it. The evidence was that, although he had it in his hand, he did not read it, and that was accepted by the judge. The position at that moment, if correctly analysed, appears to me to have been this. The foreman offers a guarantee. He obtains the signature of the purchaser to a document which I cannot help thinking both parties thought, but, in my view, wrongly thought, was contractual. That document contained a condition which is said to amount to a statement that no guarantee is given. If the document was not contractual, it was nothing more than what I may call a warning. Putting the warning into words it would be this: "I, the foreman, offer you a guarantee, but I warn you that that guarantee has no effect whatsoever." That is what is said to be the construction of condition 4 of that document. If it was a warning, it could only be effective if it was brought clearly to the attention of the person to be warned. He should have been warned that he could place no reliance whatsoever on the clear guarantee offered by the foreman, and merely because he signed at the foot of that document without ever reading that part, or having his attention called to it, does not, to my mind, make it possible to suggest that there is anything in that document which precludes him from relying on the clear guarantee on the faith of which he was negotiating. At a subsequent date the hire purchase agreement was signed, and, in my view, the signature on that hire purchase agreement was the act by which the defendant accepted the offer of a guarantee. The guarantee was: "If you buy this car, I will guarantee it." He bought the car when he put his signature to the hire purchase agreement, for I do not think he bought it before that date in the sense of being contractually bound to take it. It is said, however, that when the defendant signed the hire purchase agreement, the collateral offer of a guarantee which he accepted by signing that agreement was entirely abrogated and nullified by a term in the agreement itself.

A We, therefore, have this curious position, analysing the words again: "If you, the purchaser, will sign this contract which contains an exclusion of every guarantee, I will guarantee the car." Of course, that is nonsense, but parties often make nonsensical arrangements. If the contract meant that, we should be bound to give it that meaning, but, whether or not it has that effect must, in my opinion, be a pure question of construction of the contract. The relevant clause in the contract, cl. 5, was in these words:

The hirer is deemed to have examined (or caused to be examined) the vehicle prior to this agreement and satisfied himself as to its condition, and no warranty, condition, description or representation on the part of the owner as to the state or quality of the vehicle is given or implied . . .

B I pause there for a moment. To succeed the plaintiff must satisfy us that those words not merely exclude the giving of any warranty, in the contract of sale itself, but that they are sufficient to exclude the operation of a warranty which was given in consideration of the purchaser entering into the contract. In my opinion, that is not the true construction of those words. It is to be noted that the words are "no warranty . . . is given or implied." What is the meaning of the present tense there? Is it to be read not only as incorporating something that is given or implied by or in this agreement, but also as extending to something which was given may be weeks, and, indeed, on the evidence some fortnight, before the agreement was signed? According to the plaintiff the present tense—"is given or implied"—has a meaning which it will not bear in the context. If the words had been, not merely "no warranty is given or implied," but "any warranty given collateral to this agreement is hereby extinguished," the position, no doubt, would have been different. If words to that effect had been given, the result would, as I have said, been farcical because the guarantee would then be offered in consideration of the purchaser signing a document by which he agreed that the guarantee should be of no value whatsoever. It seems to me that to produce such a result very clear words are wanted, and I do not find them in what I have read. The agreement continues:

E . . . any statutory or other warranty, condition, description or representation whether express or implied as to the state, quality, fitness or roadworthiness being hereby expressly excluded . . .

Again, I read those words as meaning a representation expressed in the document or implied from something in the document. The word "being" is, I think, important because it is the common way and the proper way of giving a definition or an elaboration of something that has already been said. If it was intended to carry the matter further, it would have been in the form of a separate sentence and not in the form of a present participle. If that be right, those words do not add anything to the exclusion by the earlier part of the clause of any representation which is given or implied in the document. The words of the clause are not sufficiently clear to abrogate a separate collateral agreement constituted by an offer of a guarantee and its acceptance by the signing of this document by the purchaser. It appears to me that on the evidence the proper and, indeed, the only conclusion to which the county court judge ought to have come was that there was a collateral guarantee which was broken and that there was nothing in the hire purchase agreement or in the order form to exclude or abrogate that guarantee. That is a question of law with which this court is competent to deal. There are no matters of fact in the judgment of the learned judge which are contrary to the conclusions which I have indicated. The question turns, in my opinion, on the proper conclusion of law to be drawn from the facts found by the county court judge and the true construction of the relevant documents read in the light of such circumstances as are relevant on a question of construction. On that basis, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed.

H WROTTESELEY, L.J.: I agree. In the course of the arguments I am bound to say I felt some doubt, not about any matter relating to the order form, as to which it is enough for me to say that I agree entirely with what has fallen from the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, but as to the collateral warranty found by the judge and by him described as a condition precedent. This warranty was, in effect, that the car was roadworthy, that being the basis of any possible future contract, whereas when I go to cl. 5 of the ultimate written agreement entered into by the parties, I find the clause reading as follows :

The hirer is deemed to have examined (or caused to be examined) the vehicle prior to this agreement and satisfied himself as to its condition, and no warranty, condition, description or representation on the part of the owner as to the state or quality of the vehicle is given or implied, or as to the fitness of the vehicle for any purpose, any statutory or other warranty, condition, description or representation whether express or implied as to the state, quality, fitness or roadworthiness being hereby expressly excluded, both during the hiring and in the event of sale under cl. 7.

By this clause the defendant is clearly bound, even though, as he says, he never read it. I think it is impossible to reconcile these two matters—on the one hand, the collateral warranty, and, on the other hand, cl. 5 of the hire purchase agreement. One has to bear in mind that fraud is not found by the learned county court judge. Still, I agree with counsel for the defendant when he submits that to see whether a clause like cl. 5 in a subsequent written agreement excludes a previous agreement or a representation or condition clearly made and entered into, as this one was, the subsequent clause must be strictly and literally construed, and against the person who desires to rely on it. From that point of view, I have come to the conclusion that the words of cl. 5 are not so clear as to invalidate the original promise, warranty, or condition, which was the basis of the whole of the negotiations, including the subsequent written contract. For that reason, I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

EVERSHED, L.J. : I also agree. Out of respect for the argument of counsel for the plaintiff I add a few observations of my own on the crucial point, namely, the interpretation of cl. 5 of the hire purchase agreement. In view of the findings of the learned judge it is, as it seems to me, plain that, apart from any effect which the hire purchase agreement may have had, what was said by the foreman on May 8—"If you buy the Hillman," etc.—must prima facie have given rise to an independent contract of warranty, the offer of that warranty being accepted by the defendant when he signed the hire purchase contract. The real question is whether the language of the hire purchase contract, particularly cl. 5, is such that it must be taken to have had the effect of negating or immediately rendering nugatory any independent contract of warranty. As the MASTER OF THE ROLLS has pointed out, to produce such a result clear language must be used. Is there to be found such clear language in cl. 5? Clause 5, it may be said, contains three parts:—(i) "the hirer" (i.e., the defendant), "is deemed to have examined (or caused to be examined) the vehicle . . . and to have satisfied himself as to its condition"; (ii) "no warranty on the part of the owner as to various matters is given"; and, (iii) "any statutory or other warranty being expressly excluded." For the reasons given by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, the third part must, on a proper construction, be explanatory and adds nothing to the essential middle part. As to the first part, it is a fact that the defendant had satisfied himself as to the condition of the car, because he believed what the foreman, who had examined the car, had told him. As to the middle part, the vital word is the present tense "is," in contrast with the perfect in the first part "have examined" and "have satisfied." In those circumstances, it would seem impossible to say that cl. 5 clearly has the effect of abrogating the collateral contract of warranty which was brought into being by the execution of, but otherwise wholly independent of, the hire purchase agreement. For those reasons, as well as those stated, I agree that this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Taylor, Jelf & Co., agents for Denison, Thackray & Fraser, Leeds (for the plaintiff); I. Goldman & Son, agents for Saffman, Fielding & Co., Leeds (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re JEFFREY (deceased), WELCH AND ANOTHER v. JEFFREY AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), June 1, 2, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Division per capita or per stirpes—Gift of residue “to my brothers A. and B. also C. and D.—equally”—C. and D. children of a deceased brother of testatrix.

By her will the testatrix disposed of her residuary estate, after the death of the life tenant, in the following words: “To my brothers R. and A. S.-J. also G. and E. S.-J.—equally.” The will of the testatrix was handwritten. It was probable that there was a full stop or an indication of a pause by the dropping of the pen on the paper before the word “also,” but it was impossible to say whether or not “also” began with a capital letter. G. and E. were the children of a deceased brother of the testatrix. The question was whether the division of the residuary estate was to be per capita, entitling each beneficiary to one-quarter, or per stirpes, entitling the two brothers to one-third each and the two children of the deceased brother to one-third between them.

HELD: there was nothing in the context to displace the prima facie rule that division should be per capita, particularly as each beneficiary was named, and, accordingly, each was entitled to one quarter of the residuary estate.

[AS TO DISTRIBUTION per Capita AND per Stirpes, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 356-359, paras. 402-405; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 991-1003, Nos. 8490-8605.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Hall, Parker v. Knight, (1948), 64 T.L.R. 243.
- (2) Re Dale, Mayer v. Wood, [1931] 1 Ch. 357; 100 L.J.Ch. 237; 145 L.T. 632; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine questions arising under the will of the testatrix. The report deals with the question whether, on the death of the tenant for life, the residuary estate should be divided between the four named beneficiaries per capita or per stirpes. ROXBURGH, J., held that, on the true construction of the will, the division was to be per capita. The facts and the relevant provision of the will appear in the judgment.

Michael Albery for the executors.

G. T. Hesketh for the tenant for life.

Danckwerts for Reginald Salisbury-Jones.

W. F. Waite for Alfred Salisbury-Jones.

Milner Holland, K.C., for Arthur Guy Salisbury-Jones.

John Bradburn for Ellaline Salisbury-Jones.

ROXBURGH, J.: The question which I have to determine is whether, at the death of Robert Henry Jeffrey (the tenant for life), the defendants, Reginald Salisbury-Jones, Alfred Salisbury-Jones, Arthur Guy Salisbury-Jones and Ellaline Salisbury-Jones, are each entitled to a quarter share of the residuary estate, or whether the defendants, Reginald and Alfred Salisbury-Jones, are each entitled to a one-third share thereof, and the defendants, Arthur Guy and Ellaline Salisbury-Jones, are each entitled to a one-sixth share thereof. The words which I have to construe are:

At his death to my brothers Reginald and Alfred Salisbury-Jones also Guy and Ellaline Salisbury-Jones—equally—.

First, there is a question whether there is, or is not, in the original will, a full stop after the words “Alfred Salisbury-Jones,” and a corresponding question whether the word “also” is introduced with a capital letter or a small letter. Curiously enough, both those are difficult questions. I have looked carefully at the original will. On the whole, I think that, if there is not a full stop, there is a dot, an indication of pause by the dropping of the pen on to the paper, after the words “Alfred Salisbury-Jones.” As regards the letter “a” of “also,” it might be either a capital letter or a small letter. It is impossible to be certain which it is.

In that state of affairs I must consider, first, the state of the law, and my task up to this point is extremely easy, because HARMAN, J., has considered the matter recently in Re Hall, Parker v. Knight (1). Before I read his judgment, I think it desirable to say that there is a passage in the headnote which seems to me not to be justified by the judgment. That passage is as follows:

... where the division is between members of the same family not all of the same generation the presumption is that a stirpital distribution is intended.

I do not think that my brother so held, and I much prefer to read the passages from the judgment with which, with respect, I entirely concur, and which are of assistance to me today. The will he had to consider was in the following terms:

I leave to my sister Maud Beatrice Parker half of my estate—£100 to Elsie Parrott, the remainder to be divided equally between my youngest sister May, and my niece Irene and her children.

HARMAN, J., said (64 T.L.R. 243, 244):

Having regard to the cases, I agree with the submission that there is a prima facie rule that division should be per capita. This is, however, only a prima facie rule and it is one which may quite easily be displaced by the context: see Re Dale (2), per LUXMOORE, J. ([1931] 1 Ch. 357, 367). In my opinion the circumstances of the present case are sufficient, together with the existence of the comma, to displace the rule, which is only meant to form a guide when there is no other context. Through the cases there runs this reconciling provision—that cases of [per capita] distribution are not generally cases of family distribution, but that cases of stirpital distribution are cases of family division.

There is no doubt that I must approach this will having in mind the prima facie rule that the division should be per capita, but also that the rule may quite easily be displaced by the context. Is there any context here which tends to displace the rule? This is a gift to four persons nominatim, and I understand that none of the cases in which there has hitherto been a stirpital distribution has been a case where there was a gift to four persons nominatim. The only possible context here is either in the word "brothers," or in the word "also," or in both those words. As regards the word "brothers," the testatrix groups the brothers together in one group—Reginald and Alfred Salisbury-Jones. She does not say "to my brothers Reginald Salisbury-Jones and Alfred Salisbury-Jones." In exactly the same way, she groups together Guy and Ellaline Salisbury-Jones. She does not describe them as, but, in fact, they are, children of a deceased brother. Counsel for Reginald and Alfred Salisbury-Jones asked me to attach importance to the word "also," but the testatrix could not have said "and," because neither Guy nor Ellaline was a brother or sister. Accordingly, she had to change the word to some extent, and, to my mind, the word "also" was used merely to differentiate Guy and Ellaline from persons whom she had described as brothers. My own belief as to the mental process by which this sentence was evolved is that the testatrix was, first, thinking of the identity of her beneficiaries. She thought at once of her brothers, Reginald and Alfred Salisbury-Jones, and she then dropped her pen. Then she remembered her nephew and niece, whom she introduced with the word "also." She then made a dash, and after that she thought: "In what shares and proportions are those persons entitled?", and she determined—a natural determination when one is naming people individually—that she would like them each to take the same amount though they stood in different generations. I must confess I find it impossible to discover any context here to displace the prima facie rule. Accordingly, the four beneficiaries take in fourths.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Edwin Coe & Calder Woods (for the executors and some of the beneficiaries); Lazarus & Son (for a beneficiary); Haslewood, Hare & Co. (for a beneficiary).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BANNISTER v. BANNISTER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Scott and Asquith, L.JJ., and Jenkins, J.), May 5, June 8, 1948.]

Trust—Constructive trust—Sale of cottage—Oral undertaking by purchaser to permit vendor to occupy cottage rent free.

On the plaintiff's oral undertaking that the defendant would be allowed to live in a cottage rent free for as long as she desired, the defendant agreed to sell to him that and an adjacent cottage. The plaintiff's undertaking was not included in the formal conveyance. Subsequently, with the defendant's consent, the plaintiff occupied the whole of the first-named cottage with the exception of one room, which the defendant continued to occupy. In an action for the recovery of possession of that room the plaintiff claimed that the defendant had been occupying it as a tenant at will and that her tenancy at will had been duly determined by notice to quit. The defendant counterclaimed for a declaration that the plaintiff held the cottage in trust for her for her life:—

HELD: (i) the oral undertaking given by the plaintiff created a life interest in the cottage in favour of the defendant, determinable on the defendant ceasing to live in it.

Buck v. Howarth ([1947] 1 All E.R. 342), distinguished.

(ii) the equitable principle on which a constructive trust is raised against a person who insists on the absolute character of a conveyance to himself for the purpose of defeating a beneficial interest, which, according to the true bargain, was to belong to another, is not confined to cases in which the conveyance itself was fraudulently obtained. The fraud which brings the principle into play arises so soon as the absolute character of the conveyance is set up for the purpose of defeating the beneficial interest, and that is the fraud to cover which the Statute of Frauds or the corresponding provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, cannot be called in aid in cases in which no written evidence of the real bargain is available. Nor is it necessary that the bargain on which the absolute conveyance is made should include any express stipulation that the grantee is in so many words to hold as trustee. It is enough that the bargain should have included a stipulation under which some sufficiently defined beneficial interest in the property was to be taken by another.

(iii) the defendant was, therefore, entitled to a declaration that the plaintiff held the house on trust during her life to permit her to occupy the same for as long as she desired, and subject thereto in trust for himself, and the plaintiff was not entitled to an order for possession.

[AS TO CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 138-141, paras. 235-238; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 631-642, Nos. 700-784.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Buck v. Howarth, [1947] 1 All E.R. 342; 176 L.T. 320.
- (2) Re Carne's Settled Estates, [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 68 L.J.Ch. 120; sub nom., Re St. Donats Settled Estates, 79 L.T. 542; 40 Digest 735, 2647.
- (3) Re Boyer's Settled Estates, [1916] 2 Ch. 404; 85 L.J.Ch. 787; 115 L.T. 473; 40 Digest 731, 2619.
- (4) Booth v. Turle, (1873), L.R. 16 Eq. 182; 37 J.P. 710; 43 Digest 556, 75.
- (5) Chattock v. Muller, (1878), 8 Ch. Div. 177; 42 Digest 459, 286.
- (6) Re Marlborough (Duke), Davis v. Whitehead, [1894] 2 Ch. 133; 63 L.J.Ch. 471; 70 L.T. 314; 43 Digest 555, 62.
- (7) Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, [1897] 1 Ch. 196; 66 L.J.Ch. 74; 75 L.T. 502; 43 Digest 558, 87.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of His Honour JUDGE PRATT, made at Brentwood County Court, and dated Sept. 19, 1947, dismissing his claim for possession of a room in a cottage and allowing a counterclaim by the defendant for a declaration that the plaintiff held the cottage in trust for her for her life. The appeal was dismissed and the learned judge's order affirmed subject to a variation by substituting a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff held the cottage in trust during the life of the defendant to permit her to occupy the cottage for so long as she desired and subject thereto in trust for the plaintiff. The facts appear in the judgment of the court read by SCOTT, L.J.

Rowntree for the plaintiff.

Dennis Smith for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 8. SCOTT, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal from an order of the Brentwood County Court dated Sept. 19, 1947, dismissing a claim by the plaintiff against the defendant for possession of the downstairs front room of a cottage known as No. 30, Maryland Cottages, Mountnessing, Essex, and allowing a counterclaim by the defendant for a declaration that the plaintiff held No. 30, Maryland Cottages in trust for the defendant for her life.

No. 30, Maryland Cottages and the adjoining cottage, No. 31, had belonged to the defendant's husband who died intestate in 1939. Under his intestacy the defendant, as his widow, became entitled to his residuary estate (including the two cottages) for life with remainder to his brothers and sisters. It appears, however, that by a family arrangement the brothers and sisters gave up their respective reversionary interests in the two cottages for the defendant's benefit and that at the date of the agreement mentioned below they were her absolute property. Towards the end of 1942 there were negotiations between the defendant and the plaintiff (who is her brother-in-law) for the sale of the two cottages by the defendant to the plaintiff and these negotiations resulted in an oral agreement between them. There was a conflict of evidence as to the terms of this oral agreement, but the learned county court judge accepted the defendant's evidence about it. According to the defendant's evidence the plaintiff said he would let her have the price her husband paid for the cottages, namely, £250. The defendant replied that she would let the plaintiff have the cottages at that price if he would let her rent the one, by which she clearly meant No. 30, in which she was living at the time. The plaintiff then said: "I do not want to take any rent, but will let you stay as long as you like rent free." He further said he was going next door, i.e., to No. 31. The defendant thereupon agreed to sell the two cottages to the plaintiff on these terms. She would not have sold the two cottages to the plaintiff "if this had not been agreed," by which she meant if the plaintiff had not agreed to let her stay in No. 30 as long as she liked rent free.

The sale thus orally agreed on was completed by a conveyance dated Jan. 7, 1943, which was a plain conveyance on sale of the two cottages by the defendant to the plaintiff at the price of £250, containing no reference at all to the stipulation to the effect that the defendant was to be allowed to stay in No. 30 as long as she liked rent free. According to the uncontradicted evidence of a local auctioneer and valuer (which was accepted by the learned county court judge), the value in 1943 of the two cottages, with rent restricted tenants in occupation of each, would have been £400, to which £100 should be added on the assumption of a sale with vacant possession. The price of £250 paid by the plaintiff must, therefore, be taken to have been at least £150 below the contemporary value of the two cottages and to have amounted to not more than five-eighths of such value.

After the sale the defendant seems to have remained in occupation of the whole of No. 30 until the autumn of 1945, when the plaintiff and his wife had to give up the house they had been living in, and, with the defendant's consent, moved into No. 30, the defendant making room for them by letting them have all except the downstairs front room, into which she appears to have taken as much of her furniture as she conveniently could, leaving the rest in other parts of the cottage. Early in 1947 a Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, who had, apparently, been the plaintiff's tenants at No. 31, moved into the rooms in which the plaintiff and his wife had been living at No. 30 and the plaintiff and his wife moved into No. 31. The defendant had previously revoked her permission for the occupation of these rooms by the plaintiff and his wife, and the plaintiff let the Freemans into occupation of them without the defendant's consent. Since the sale of the two cottages to the plaintiff he has paid the sched. A tax, and, apparently, also the rates, on both of them, and has also paid for repairs. The Freemans have been treated by the plaintiff as occupying the rooms in No. 30 taken over from him as his tenants and they have been paying rent to him. On the other hand, the defendant has ever since the sale been living in No. 30, or latterly in the downstairs front room of No. 30, rent free.

The plaintiff, having given the defendant notice to quit the downstairs front room of No. 30, with which she refused to comply, commenced the present action, claiming by his particulars of claim dated Oct. 2, 1947, possession of the room in question on the footing that the defendant had been occupying it as a tenant at will at no rent and that her tenancy at will had been duly determined by notice to quit. The defendant counterclaimed in the action for a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff held No. 30 in trust for the defendant for life, with an alternative claim for specific performance which was not pursued, and ancillary claims for possession of No. 30 other than the downstairs front room (which also was not pursued), and damages for trespass. In the result, the learned county court judge, by his order dated Sept. 19, 1947, dismissed the plaintiff's claim with costs, and on the defendant's counterclaim awarded her £10 damages with costs and made a declaration to the effect claimed by her. In view of the learned county court judge's acceptance of the defendant's evidence he necessarily found as a fact that the oral agreement as a result of which the defendant conveyed Nos. 30 and 31 to the plaintiff for £250 included an undertaking by the plaintiff to permit the defendant to stay in No. 30 for as long as she liked rent free, and that, but for this undertaking, the defendant would not have sold the two cottages to the plaintiff at what, on the uncontradicted evidence of value, he rightly described as "a bargain price." He further found as a fact that there was no fraud in the case. On these findings of fact he held that on well-known equitable principles there was (as he put it) an implied or inferential trust, or, in other words, a constructive trust, of No. 30 under which the plaintiff held that property in trust for the defendant for life.

The conclusion thus reached by the learned county court judge was attacked in this court on substantially the following three grounds:—First, it was said that the oral undertaking found by the learned county court judge to have formed part of the agreement—namely, that the plaintiff would let the defendant stay in No. 30 as long as she liked rent free—did not, as a matter of construction of the language used, amount to a promise that the defendant should retain a life interest in No. 30, but amounted merely to a promise that the plaintiff would allow the defendant to remain in No. 30 rent free as his tenant at will. Secondly, it was said that, even if the terms of the oral undertaking were such as to amount to a promise that the defendant should retain a life interest in No. 30, a tenancy at will free of rent was, nevertheless, the greatest interest she could claim in view of the absence of writing and the provisions of ss. 53 and 54 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. Thirdly, it was said that a constructive trust in favour of the defendant (which the absence of writing admittedly would not defeat) could only be raised by findings to the effect that there was actual fraud on the part of the plaintiff and that the property was sold and conveyed to him on the faith of an express oral declaration of trust which it would be fraudulent in him to deny. It was, accordingly, submitted that the learned county court judge's conclusion that there was a constructive trust could not stand since it was negated by his finding that there was no fraud in the case and by the absence of any evidence of anything amounting to an express oral declaration of trust.

In support of the first of these three objections reliance was placed on Buck v. Howarth (1), in which a King's Bench Divisional Court held that the occupant of a house who had been told by a predecessor in title of the freeholder "that he could live in the house until he died" (an oral and, it would seem, a purely voluntary promise) was given an uncertain interest in the premises and that the law would presume a tenancy at will, with the result that proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, could be taken. That was, obviously, a very different case from the present one and we find ourselves unable to derive any assistance from it. The promise was a purely voluntary one, and any court would naturally have been slow to construe it as intended to confer a life interest, even if it was literally capable of that construction. Moreover, whatever the words may have meant, the case clearly fell within s. 54 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, under which interests in land created by parol have the force and effect of interests at will only. (There was, of course, no question of a resulting trust as there might have been if the occupant of the house had been a former owner who had sold the freehold on the faith of a similar promise.) In the present case the defendant did, on the facts found, sell and convey the property on the faith of the oral undertaking and would not otherwise have done so, and the undertaking must be assumed to have been regarded as reserving to her a benefit worth at least £150, or three-eighths of the contemporary market value of the property without vacant possession. We, therefore, see no reason why the words of the undertaking should not be given the most favourable construction, from the defendant's point of view, of which they are properly capable. Similar words in deeds and wills have frequently been held to create a life interest determinable (apart from the special considerations introduced by the Settled Land Act, 1925) on the beneficiary ceasing to occupy the premises: see, e.g., Re Carne's Settled Estates (2), and Re Boyer's Settled Estates (3). In our view, that is the meaning which should, in the circumstances of the present case, be placed on the words of the oral undertaking found by the learned county court judge to have been given by the plaintiff. X We are, accordingly, of opinion that the first objection fails, though the interest promised to the defendant by the plaintiff must, we think, be taken to have been a life interest determinable on her ceasing to occupy No. 30 and not a life interest simpliciter as held by the learned county court judge. X

As will be seen from what is said below, the second objection (based on want of writing) in effect stands or falls with the third, and it will, therefore, be convenient to deal with that next. X It is, we think, clearly a mistake to suppose that the equitable principle on which a constructive trust is raised against a person who insists on the absolute character of a conveyance to himself for the purpose of defeating a beneficial interest, which, according to the true bargain, was to belong to another, is confined to cases in which the conveyance itself was fraudulently obtained. The fraud which brings the principle into play arises as soon as the absolute character of the conveyance is set up for the purpose of defeating the beneficial interest, and that is the fraud to cover which the Statute of Frauds or the corresponding provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, cannot be called in aid in cases in which no written evidence of the real bargain is available. X Nor is it, in our opinion, necessary that the bargain on which the absolute conveyance is made should include any express stipulation that the grantee is in so many words to hold as trustee. It is enough that the bargain should have included a stipulation under which some sufficiently defined beneficial interest in the property was to be taken by another. The above propositions are, we think, clearly borne out by the cases to which we were referred of Booth v. Turlle (4), Chattock v. Muller (5), Re Duke of Marlborough (6), and Rochefoucauld v. Boustead (7). We see no distinction in principle between a case in which property is conveyed to a purchaser on terms that the entire beneficial interest in some part of it is to be retained by the vendor (as in Booth v. Turlle (4)) and a case, like the present, in which property is conveyed to a purchaser on terms that a limited beneficial interest in some part of it is to be retained by the vendor. We are, accordingly, of opinion that the third ground of objection to the learned county court judge's conclusion also fails. His finding that there was no fraud in the case cannot be taken as meaning that it was not fraudulent in the plaintiff to insist on the absolute character of the conveyance for the purpose of defeating the beneficial interest which he had agreed the defendant should retain. The conclusion that the plaintiff was fraudulent, in this sense, necessarily follows from the facts found, and, as indicated above, the fact that he may have been innocent of any fraudulent intent in taking the conveyance in absolute form is for this purpose immaterial. The failure of the third ground of objection necessarily also destroys the second objection based on want of writing and the provisions of ss. 53 and 54 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Some point was made of the payment by the plaintiff of the sched. A tax and other outgoings in respect of both cottages as a circumstance inconsistent with the interest in No. 30 to which the learned county court judge has held the defendant entitled. In our view, this circumstance was clearly a matter to be taken into account in determining whether the defendant's evidence as to the terms of her bargain with the plaintiff was to be accepted, and we have no reason to suppose that the learned county court judge did not take it into account. He held, nevertheless, that the defendant's version of the transaction was the true one, and we certainly cannot regard that finding of fact.

turning as it did essentially on the credibility of the witnesses, as open to review on this ground. We think it is clear on the facts that there has been nothing amounting to a cesser or renunciation of occupation by the defendant so as to bring her determinable life interest in No. 30 to an end. She has throughout been in personal occupation either of the whole of No. 30 or, latterly, of the downstairs front room. The learned county court judge has held that the plaintiff and his wife came to live in the other rooms by her permission, that is to say, as her licensees or tenants at will. Nor, in our view, can the plaintiff claim that the defendant's interest was affected by his letting the Freemans into occupation of these rooms after such permission was revoked. The learned county court judge has, indeed, held that since such revocation the plaintiff has been a mere trespasser.

In the result, we hold that the appeal fails and the order of the learned county court judge should be affirmed, but in the interests of accuracy we think his order should be varied by substituting a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff holds No. 30 in trust during the life of the defendant to permit the defendant to occupy the same for so long as she may desire to do so and subject thereto in trust for the plaintiff. A trust in this form has the effect of making the beneficiary a tenant for life within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and, consequently, there is a very little practical difference between such a trust and a trust for life simpliciter. The appeal will be dismissed with that variation in the form of the order. The plaintiff must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Kenneth Duthie & Co. (for the plaintiff); Landons (for the defendant).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

DUKE'S COURT ESTATES, LTD. v. ASSOCIATED BRITISH ENGINEERING, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), June 1, 1948.]

Practice—Particulars—Defence—Forfeiture of lease—Onus on plaintiff to prove case—Defendant's denial involving double negative.

Lease—Forfeiture—Breach of covenant alleged—Onus of proof.

The plaintiffs let certain premises to the defendants for a term of years from Oct. 25, 1945, the defendants covenanting that they would use the demised premises only as offices in connection with their business of engineers and with other businesses in which they or their subsidiary or associated companies might be interested. The lease provided that the user of part of the premises as offices by the defendants' subsidiary or associated companies should not be deemed an underletting or parting with possession within cl. 2 (17) of the lease, which contained the usual lessee's covenant against underletting or parting with possession without consent. The plaintiffs brought an action for forfeiture of the lease, alleging, by para. 5 of the statement of claim, that the defendants had used the premises or permitted them to be used for the purpose of their businesses by certain companies and persons, or, alternatively, that the defendants had underlet or parted with possession to the same persons. By para. 7, the plaintiffs alleged that the companies and persons mentioned in para. 5 "are not subsidiary or associated companies of the defendants and the businesses carried on by such companies and persons are not businesses in which the defendants and their subsidiary or associated companies are interested." The defendants in their defence in substance admitted that the companies mentioned in para. 5 of the statement of claim had used part of the demised premises as offices by their (the defendants') permission, but they denied underletting or parting with possession. Paragraph 4 of the defence stated: "The defendants deny each and every allegation in para. 7 of the statement of claim." The plaintiffs applied for particulars of the implied positive allegation in para. 4 of the defence.

HELD : (i) prima facie the burden was laid particularly on the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants had permitted user by persons not associated in business with the defendants, and the burden remained on the plaintiffs in spite of the admission in the defence.

Doe d. Bridger v. Whitehead, (1838) (8 Ad. & El. 571) and Toleman v. Portbury, (1870) (L.R. 5 Q.B. 288), applied.

(ii) although the defendants' denial in para. 4 involved a double negative, it did not necessarily involve an affirmative allegation. The area of controversy was clear, and, especially having regard to the fact that this was a forfeiture action, it was for the plaintiffs to prove their case, without assistance, and particulars would not be ordered.

Pinson v. Lloyds and National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd. ([1941] 2 All E.R. 636), distinguished.

[AS TO PARTICULARS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 275-282, paras. 465-467; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 193, 194, 197-205, Nos. 1634-1638, 1660-1710.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Doe d. Bridger v. Whitehead, (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 571; 3 Nev. & P.K.B. 557; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 521; 7 L.J.Q.B. 250; 2 Jur. 493; 112 E.R. 955; 31 Digest 364, 5096.
- (2) Toleman v. Portbury, (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 288; 39 L.J.Q.B. 136; 22 L.T. 33; 18 W.R. 579 Ex. Ch.; 31 Digest 467, 6137.
- (3) Pinson v. Lloyds & National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 636; [1941] 2 K.B. 72; 110 L.J.K.B. 657; 165 L.T. 360; 2nd Digest Supp.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS by the plaintiffs for particulars of the defence to an action for the forfeiture of the lease of certain premises for breach of a covenant as to the user of those premises. HARMAN, J., refused the application. The facts appear in the judgment.

Gerald Upjohn, K.C., and George Pollock for the plaintiffs.

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., and R. O. Wilberforce for the defendants.

HARMAN, J. : The plaintiffs are seeking against the defendants forfeiture of an underlease of property in Jermyn Street and Duke Street, St. James's and granted from Mar. 25, 1945, having a long term of years to run. The material clause is rather curious. It is a covenant by the defendants that the defendants :

... will use the demised premises only as offices in connection with the defendants' business of engineers and/or other businesses in which the defendants and their subsidiary or associated companies may be interested.

So far, therefore, they may only use the premises as offices in connection with either their own business or other businesses in which, though not their own, they may be interested or in which their subsidiaries or their associates have an interest. There is a proviso that the user of part of the demised premises as offices by the defendants' subsidiary or associated companies shall not be deemed an underletting or parting with possession within the meaning of cl. 2 (17) of the underlease which is the ordinary lessee's covenant not to underlet or part with possession of the premises without consent; there is the usual proviso for re-entry.

Paragraph 5 of the statement of claim alleges that the defendants have used the premises or permitted them to be used for the purpose of their businesses by certain companies and persons set out. Alternatively, it is alleged that the defendants have underlet or parted with possession to the same persons. Paragraph 7 alleges that the several companies and persons mentioned in para. 5 :

... are not subsidiary or associated companies of the defendants and the businesses carried on by such companies and persons are not businesses in which the defendants and their subsidiary or associated companies are interested.

In other words, the pleader recognises that for the plaintiffs to succeed it is necessary that he should prove that the persons to whom permission to use part of the offices has been given are not within the privileged class. There is an allegation of breach of the clause regarding the use of the premises and also of that relating to assigning or underletting, an allegation that there has been the usual notice and failure to remedy, and a claim for forfeiture. By their defence the defendants admit that the companies mentioned in para. 5 of the statement of claim have used parts of the demised premises as offices by their permission. On the other hand, the defendants deny that they have ever underlet or parted with possession of the demised premises or any part thereof. That may mean, as I read it, that there has been no underletting or parting with possession in the sense of the proviso to which I have referred. Paragraph 4, which is the subject-matter of controversy, states: "The defendants deny each and every allegation in para. 7 of the statement of claim," that is to say, the defendants deny that the several persons and companies in question are not subsidiary or associated companies. That being a double negative, it must involve the assertion by the defendants that those companies and persons are companies subsidiary to or associated with themselves.

The question is whether they must give particulars of that implied allegation. There are two things to be said. The first is that this is an action of forfeiture and in the wisdom of our ancestors an action of forfeiture was always regarded with a good deal of strictness, because it was an action to destroy an estate created by a plaintiff and, therefore, no assistance was given to him in the way of discovery of documents, or of that other form of discovery—interrogatories, to help him to prove his case. Therefore, I think that this action is one in which the plaintiffs must prove their case with strictness. Secondly, it seems to me that the question of onus is very relevant here. It is clear that, if it is for the defendants to prove their implied affirmative—that is to say, if it is for them to prove that the persons or companies in question are their associates or subsidiaries—they must give particulars of that allegation, but, if it is not and the case stands in such a way that, if the plaintiffs prove nothing about the matter one way or the other, they fail, the matter needs looking into again.

It seems to me that prima facie—although I am only deciding this so far as it is necessary for the purpose of my decision—the burden in a forfeiture action (as is shown by the two cases cited to me by counsel for the defendants, Doe d. Bridger v. Whitehead (1) and Toleman v. Portbury (2)), is particularly laid on the plaintiff, and here the plaintiffs, in order to deprive the defendants of the estate which the plaintiffs have granted to them, must show that the defendants have permitted user by persons who are not associated with them in the various aspects of their business. It does not seem to me enough for them to come to the court and say: "The defendants admit that they have permitted these people to occupy part of the premises and, therefore, it is for them to prove that they are within the privileged class." The boot is on the other foot. If the action depended on the covenant not to assign or underlet, the matter might be quite different. If the defendants then wished to confess and avoid by alleging that they had assigned or underlet, but had been permitted to do so, the burden would clearly be on them.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the burden remains on the plaintiffs in spite of the admissions made in the defence, and the question then arises whether, as counsel for the plaintiffs submits to me, non obstante the question of burden, he is entitled to know what case it is, as he says, that he has to meet. I do not think that is the right approach. The duty of the plaintiffs in a case like this is to prove their case. It is true that the defence involves an implied affirmative, but it is not every double negative or implied affirmative that requires particulars to be given. In the latest case on the subject, Pinson v. Lloyds and National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd. (3), GODDARD, L.J., said ([1941] 2 All E.R. 642):

In the present case, the plaintiff's advisers would not know from this defence whether they had to be prepared to meet a case that the defendants carried out some of the purchases or sales referred to in the particulars of the statement of claim under a general authority and others under a special authority, and, if the latter, whether from the plaintiff or from an agent alleged to be authorised by her, nor whether all or any of the authorisations were express or implied. If the pleading is not such as will fairly enable the opposite party to know the case he has to meet, further particulars ought to be ordered.

I, of course, accept that, but, in my judgment, it does not apply to the present case. It is not a question of what case the plaintiffs have to meet. The plaintiffs have to make their case in the face of the defendants' denial. In Pinson's case (3), counsel for the defendants had admitted before the court that he intended under a mere traverse to set up what he called an affirmative case, that is to say, to prove under a general denial that such transactions as he had taken part in had, in fact, been authorised. That, of course, was a position which was concealed in a traverse and required particulars. As GODDARD, L.J., said (ibid., 641):

A bare traverse is a perfectly good plea, provided that all that is thereby intended is to put the plaintiff to proof of his case. It may be, however, that concealed in a traverse there is an affirmative case, and this may well be so when the traverse is of a negative averment. If it is clear to the court, either from the nature of the case or from the admission of counsel or otherwise, that it is intended to set up an affirmative case, so that the traverse is what has been described as a pregnant negative, then it seems to me that particulars of the affirmative case ought to be delivered. Otherwise, both the opposite party and the court will be in doubt as to what issues are to be determined at the trial.

I cannot see that there is any doubt here what is the issue to be determined at the trial. It is whether the persons who were permitted to occupy portions of these premises were within the permitted relationship with the defendants. It is for the plaintiffs to prove they were not, and not for the defendants to prove that they were. There is no difficulty in seeing what will be the area of the controversy at the trial. STABLE, J., in his judgment in Pinson's case (3) said (ibid., 644):

A traverse involving a double negative may fall under one of three heads. First, it may be a mere traverse involving no affirmative allegation. Secondly, it may be a negative pregnant, which contains within the double negative an affirmative allegation. Thirdly, its true nature may be left in doubt. In my judgment, the defendant at the trial of the action can do no more than put the plaintiff to the proof of the negative alleged. He can seek to shake or destroy by cross-examination any evidence which the plaintiff may bring on the point, but, once the plaintiff has established a prima facie case, the defendant on such a pleading cannot, in my judgment, set up an affirmative case in answer, because, ex hypothesi, that would be to set up a case which he has not pleaded, which is what the rules expressly preclude him from doing. If it falls under the second head, the double negative extends beyond a mere traverse, and amounts, as in the present case, to this: "If you establish a prima facie case that I sold or purchased shares for you, and that, in so doing, I acted without authority, then I intend to call evidence to establish that on each or some of the occasions there was an express authority to act as I did or an implied authority to be derived from certain facts." That, in my judgment, is to set up an affirmative case of which particulars ought to be given, and none the less so because the affirmative case is concealed, albeit imperfectly, in a negative shell.

Counsel for the defendants alleges that this is a mere traverse. In other words, it involves, he says, no affirmative allegation, although on the face of it a double negative in a sense involves an affirmative. On that footing, the burden being, as I think, on the plaintiffs, it would not be right to order particulars. There may be, of course, consequences arising from that which may prove to be very difficult for the defendants at the trial, for, if the plaintiffs should succeed in establishing a prima facie case in respect of one of these companies, it may well be that with the pleadings in their present state the defendants will be precluded from producing evidence to show that, though prima facie a company is outside the permitted ranks, yet for some reason or another which has not been disclosed it is within them. As to that I say nothing. All I say is that at this stage I do not propose to order any particulars of these allegations, particularly having regard to the fact that this is a forfeiture action. To order these particulars would go far towards making the defendants—who as I assume for the present purpose but without intending finally to decide the point, are not bound to give any discovery—disclose their hand and provide the plaintiffs with material for proving their case, the onus being on the plaintiffs in an action of this sort to prove their case without any such assistance. On those grounds I refuse this application. The costs will be the defendants' costs in any event.

Application refused. Costs to be the defendants' in any event.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker (for the plaintiffs); Ashurst, Morris Crisp & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DENMAN v. BRISE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), June 4, 1948.]

Rent restriction—Possession—House destroyed by enemy action—Contractual tenancy not determined—House rebuilt—Tenant refused possession by landlord—Notice to tenant to quit—Claim by tenant for possession.
Lease—Impossibility of performance—Frustration.

A A dwelling-house, subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts, and let on a monthly tenancy, was destroyed by enemy action in 1940. The landlord erected a new house on the site of the old one, and on Feb. 17, 1948, when the house was fit for occupation, the tenant attempted unsuccessfully to get the keys from the landlord, who denied him possession of the premises. On Mar. 9, 1948, the landlord served on the tenant a notice to quit, determining the contractual tenancy on Apr. 30, 1948. The tenant claimed possession.

B HELD : (i) on the facts, there had never been an abandonment or surrender of the contractual tenancy by the tenant, who was, therefore, entitled on Feb. 17, 1948, to possession, and the court would not permit the landlord to exclude the tenant from the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts by taking advantage of his own wrongful act in refusing the tenant physical occupation, but would order that the tenant be put into possession.

C (ii) the contract of tenancy was not terminated under the doctrine of frustration which had no application to a demise of real property.

Leightons Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust, Ltd. ([1943] 2 All E.R. 97), considered.

D [AS TO RESTRICTIONS ON THE LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO POSSESSION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 329-334, paras. 392-399; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 575-581, Nos. 7226-7297.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Leightons Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 580; [1943] K.B. 493; 112 L.J.K.B. 83; 167 L.T. 348; C.A., [1943] 2 All E.R. 97; [1943] K.B. 493 at p. 496; 112 L.J.K.B. 438; 169 L.T. 116; H.L., [1945] 1 All E.R. 252; [1945] A.C. 221; 114 L.J.K.B. 110; 172 L.T. 140; 2nd Digest Supp.
- E (2) Matthey v. Curling, [1922] 2 A.C. 180; 91 L.J.K.B. 593; 127 L.T. 247; 31 Digest 342, 4857.
- (3) London and Northern Estates Co. v. Schlesinger, [1916] 1 K.B. 20; 85 L.J.K.B. 369; 114 L.T. 74; 30 Digest 343, 14.
- (4) Whitehall Court, Ltd. v. Etlinger, [1920] 1 K.B. 680; 89 L.J.K.B. 126; 122 L.T. 540; 30 Digest 467, 1296.
- (5) Swift v. MacBean, [1942] 1 All E.R. 126; [1942] 1 K.B. 375; 111 L.J.K.B. 185; 166 L.T. 87; 2nd Digest Supp.
- F (6) Taylor v. Caldwell, (1863), 3 B. & S. 826; 2 New Rep. 198; 32 L.J.Q.B. 164; 8 L.T. 356; 12 Digest 371, 3093.
- (7) Ellis and Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman, [1948] 1 All E.R. 44.
- (8) Simper v. Coombs, [1948] 1 All E.R. 306.

G APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE DAYNES, K.C., at Bromley County Court, dated May 11, 1948, granting possession of a dwelling-house to the tenant. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

F. D. L. McIntyre for the landlord.

Werninck for the tenant.

H TUCKER, L.J. : In 1940 certain premises situate at No. 18, St. Francis Close, Orpington, had been let by the landlord to the tenant at a rent of £4 6s. 8d. per month. Those premises were destroyed completely by enemy action on Dec. 17, 1940, and, consequently, the tenant no longer occupied them. In due course the landlord erected a new house on the site of the old house. Those are the facts as found by the learned county court judge. He says, after referring to the destruction on Dec. 17, 1940 :

On that day the house was destroyed by an enemy bomb, but the tenant's contractual tenancy continued until it was determined by the notice to quit, which was dated Mar. 9, 1948, and was served within two or three days, determining the tenancy on Apr. 30. In the meantime the house had been rebuilt. It was fit for occupation on Feb. 17, 1948. On that very day the tenant attempted unsuccessfully to get the keys from the landlord. The first question arises in this way. It is said that on Feb. 17, 1948, the tenant was no longer a tenant of the property and, therefore, no longer had possession, which the tenant by law enjoys. In my view, the tenant was a tenant on Feb. 17, and he had possession in the sense that he had the right to occupy. He had no possession in the sense that he had the actual occupation. I find as a fact that the tenant had done nothing to abandon the tenancy . . . The landlord was completely wrong in doing this [sic] as long as the contractual tenancy continued. But the result of that was that when the contractual tenancy expired the tenant, although having the right of possession, was not in actual occupation. In my view, it is sufficient for a person complying with a notice to quit to have the right to occupy and the will to occupy, even if the will is frustrated by the landlord, in order to become a statutory tenant, and I come to the conclusion that the tenant became a statutory tenant.

First, I think that there was ample evidence on which the learned judge could arrive at all his findings of fact. Correspondence which has been read to us shows that, although there was complete silence during the period from 1940 until the house was nearing completion, as soon as the tenant became aware that the house was being built and was nearing completion he took steps to claim his right to occupy it. Thereafter there were negotiations for the purchase of the house, but I can find no trace of any act on the part of the tenant which amounted to an abandonment of the premises, much less any facts from which the court could infer that there had been a surrender of the tenancy. Subject to a point to which I shall proceed in a moment—namely, the last point argued by counsel for the landlord, that, as at the date of the hearing before the county court or as at the date of the expiration of the notice to quit, the tenant was not physically in actual occupation of the premises, therefore, he cannot claim the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts—I should have thought that this was a clear case where the contractual tenancy has subsisted throughout. There was no evidence of any abandonment, no evidence of any surrender, with the necessary result that on Feb. 17, 1948, when there was on the site a completed house fit for occupation, the tenant was the tenant of that house and entitled to occupy it. He was at that date ready and willing and anxious to occupy, but the landlord would not give him the key of the premises. Accordingly, he was unable to obtain occupation. If he had obtained occupation, then at the date of the expiration of the notice to quit he would have been a tenant in physical occupation of the premises within the Rent Restrictions Acts and, therefore, entitled to rely on the protection of those Acts.

The question arises whether the landlord can be heard to say: "You must be excluded from the benefits of the Acts because I wrongfully prevented you getting into the house and putting yourself into a position in which you would be able to claim the protection of the Acts." I do not think that a county court can be put into the position of being precluded from seeing that that is, in fact, done which should have been done. I think it is clear, from all the authorities to which counsel for the landlord has referred, that broadly speaking the proposition has long been recognised that only an occupying tenant can claim the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts, but, in my view, the tenant here is not primarily claiming protection under the Acts. He is claiming to be put into possession of premises of which, at the material date, Feb. 17, he was the contractual tenant. It is the landlord who is really seeking to make use of the Rent Restrictions Acts by saying: "Because at a date subsequent to Feb. 17 I gave you a notice to quit and you are, through my own act, not the occupying tenant, I am entitled to claim the benefit of that notice to quit and you on your part are not entitled to claim the benefit of your tenancy." I think that that would be a position which would be contrary to one's ideas of justice and equity and that any court must have power in circumstances such as the present to order that the landlord shall put the tenant back into the position in which he should have been on Feb. 17. He having been put into that position, the subsequent rights of the parties can, no doubt, be worked out in the appropriate proceedings to ascertain how they stand under the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts. That is my view with regard to the first two points put forward by counsel for the landlord, namely, that on the facts of this case the only proper inference as a matter of law was that there had been an abandonment or a surrender and that in any event the tenant, not having been in actual physical occupation, could not claim the right of possession.

There was one further point which was that, in any event, the contract of tenancy had been frustrated. In regard to that, I do not think that point is really open to him. In Leighton's Investment Trust, Ltd. v. Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust, Ltd. (1), that very point was dealt with in this court. ASQUITH, J., had dealt with the case as a judge of first instance and he had said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 581):

A It is not disputed that the doctrine of frustration has no application to an ordinary lease: Matthey v. Curling (2); London and Northern Estates Co. v. Schlesinger (3), and Whitehall Court, Ltd. v. Ettlinger (4), nor has it any application to a furnished lease, which was decided recently by BIRKETT, J., in Swift v. MacBean (5).

In this court that judgment was upheld in a short judgment of the court delivered by MACKINNON, L.J., in which, after stating the facts, he said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 98):

B In our opinion the plaintiffs are clearly right. The doctrine of frustration, which was first clearly enunciated in 1863 in Taylor v. Caldwell (6), has been applied to a variety of contracts; but it has never been applied to a demise of real property. Indeed there is clear authority that it cannot. This is to be found in London and Northern Estates Co. v. Schlesinger (3), in Whitehall Court v. Ettlinger (4), and in Matthey v. Curling (2). All these cases, and many others, have recently been reviewed by BIRKETT, J., in Swift v. MacBean (5), in a careful judgment. We do not think it is necessary to examine the question further. It is impossible for the defendants to rely upon the doctrine of frustration to relieve them from their obligation as tenants under a demise of land for 99 years.

C It is true that when the case reached the House of Lords the House decided the appeal on a different point, and it was held ([1945] A.C. 221):

D . . . even if the doctrine of frustration could apply to a lease, the circumstances did not justify such application; the lease had not been determined by frustration, and the liability for rent continued.

LORD SIMON, in his speech said (ibid., 227):

E Two questions are raised by the appeal: first, can the doctrine of frustration apply to determine a lease? and, secondly, even if it can, are the circumstances in the present case such as to produce the result that the lease has been determined by frustration? If, my Lords, we all agree (as I understand we do) that the answer to the second question is in the negative, it is not essential in the present case to reach a conclusion on the first question (as to which I gather that our opinions are divided). Nevertheless, I propose to express my opinion with regard to both questions, since the more general issue has been much discussed and was pronounced on in the courts below, where it was regarded as concluded by authority, including the authority of this House, in Matthey v. Curling (2).

F It is perfectly true that LORD SIMON and LORD WRIGHT went on to express their views, which were that the doctrine of frustration could be applied to a lease and that, at any rate, Matthey v. Curling (2) was no authority to the contrary, but LORD PORTER expressed no view on the point and LORD RUSSELL and LORD GODDARD both took the contrary view. In that state of authority I think the decision of this court binds us and that it must be for the House of Lords at the appropriate time to resolve this problem. Therefore, I do not think counsel for the landlord can succeed on that branch of his argument.

G There is no note of the learned county court judge that that point was argued before him, but counsel tells us the point was taken and I accept what he says.

H I do not think it really necessary to refer to the authorities which have been cited by counsel for the landlord. Ellis and Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman (7) was referred to, to which decision COHEN, L.J., and myself were both parties. I do not think there is any assistance to be obtained from that case in the present appeal. Both of us adumbrated the possibility of this point arising. I do not think there is anything in either of our judgments which really throws any light on the problem which we have now to decide. We have been referred to a decision of DENNING, J., in Simper v. Coombs (8), which shows that, unless there has been any abandonment, or surrender, or something of that kind, prima facie the lease will continue in circumstances such as the present. In that case, there had been no notice to quit and the point now involved did not arise. It comes before us as a fresh point. I think in these cases it must always be a question of fact whether or not the tenant who has been absent from the bombed premises has acted in such a way that the court will infer that there has been an abandonment or surrender. In the present circumstances, there was ample evidence to support the view that the learned county court judge took, namely, that there had been no abandonment, that the tenancy subsisted, and that the landlord could not now rely on the notice to quit which had been given by him at a subsequent date to the date on which he should have admitted the tenant to occupation of these premises. I think this appeal fails.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree and I desire to add nothing on the issue as to frustration or as to abandonment as I agree with everything which TUCKER, L.J., has said on those points. On the third point I only desire to add a few sentences. On the basis that there was no abandonment or surrender the tenant was entitled to possession of this dwelling-house on Feb. 17 when it became habitable. He was prevented from exercising that right by the landlord. If the landlord had not prevented him he would have been in actual occupation at the time the subsequent notice to quit had expired and could clearly have claimed his rights under the Rent Restrictions Acts. The third point, therefore, as it seems to me, can be stated in this way : Are the rights to be determined as if the tenant had been allowed to exercise his right which the landlord prevented him from exercising, or must the position be treated on the basis that the landlord can take advantage of his own wrong and say : "He was never in possession or occupation and, therefore, cannot claim the protection of the Acts ?" To that question, it seems to me, there is one very clear answer. The rights of the parties must be determined on the basis that the tenant had been allowed to exercise the right which he plainly had and which the landlord prevented him from exercising. For the reasons given by the learned county court judge and by my brother I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : William Sturges & Co. (for the landlord) ; Sandom, Kersey & Tilleards (for the tenant).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Reversed. C.A. [1948] 2 All E.R. 482.

ALEXANDER MOUNTAIN & CO. v. RUMERE, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), June 8, 1948.]

Practice—Parties—Substitution of plaintiff—Claim of executrix to be substituted as plaintiff—Writ issued in trading name of deceased person—Deceased trading as a firm, but without partners—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2.

A.M. was the sole proprietor of a business which he carried on under the name of "A.M. & Co." After his death his executrix, who continued to carry on the business under the same trading name, brought an action in the name of "A.M. & Co. (trading as a firm)" the action being on a contract made by A.M. during his lifetime. On an application to amend the writ by substituting the executrix as plaintiff :—

HELD : there was no power under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2, to amend the writ by substituting the executrix as plaintiff.

Tetlow v. Orela, Ltd. ([1920] 2 Ch. 24), followed.

Hill & Son v. Tannerhill ([1944] K.B. 472), distinguished.

[AS TO SUBSTITUTION OF A PLAINTIFF, see HALSBURY, Vol. 26, pp. 20, 21, para. 17 ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 404, 405, Nos. 1051-1057.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Hill & Son v. Tannerhill, [1944] K.B. 472 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 456 ; 170 L.T. 404 ; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Tetlow v. Orela, Ltd., [1920] 2 Ch. 24 ; 89 L.J.Ch. 465 ; 123 L.T. 388 ; Digest, Practice, 267, 50.
- (3) Clay v. Oxford, (1866), L.R. 2 Exch. 54 ; 4 H. & C. 690 ; 36 L.J.Ex. 15 ; 15 L.T. 286 ; Digest, Practice, 267, 49.

SUMMONS for leave to amend the writ and pleadings in an action by substituting a plaintiff.

The action was brought by the executrix of Alexander Mountain in the name of "Alexander Mountain & Co. (trading as a firm)." The deceased had carried on business as "Alexander Mountain & Co.," although he had no partners, and after his death the executrix continued to carry on the business under the same name. The action was on a contract made by the deceased during his lifetime. At the hearing of the action, leave was sought to amend the writ and pleadings by substituting the executrix as plaintiff, as the personal representative of Alexander Mountain, but LORD GODDARD, C.J., held that he had no power, under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2, to make the amendment. The facts appear in the judgment.

C. H. Duveen for the executrix.

Gardiner, K.C., and W. Gumbel for the defendants.

LORD GODDARD, C.J. : When this case was called on, counsel for the executrix of Alexander Mountain called my attention to the fact that an unfortunate mistake had been made. The action had been brought in the name of "Alexander Mountain & Co. (suing as a firm)," and he admitted that the late Mr. Alexander Mountain carried on business in the name of Alexander Mountain & Co. without any partners. He also admitted that Mr. Alexander Mountain was dead, and the probate of his will has been produced. It showed that he died on July 10, 1947, the writ in this action being issued on Oct. 24, 1947. By his will his widow, Doris Mountain, was appointed executrix. Probate was granted to her and she is the sole legatee under the will. Counsel for the executrix has asked me to substitute the executrix as the plaintiff in the action. The defendants, on the other hand, have taken the objection that I have no power to make that amendment. If I had the power, I should certainly do it. As the point raised was one of some importance and may go to the Court of Appeal, it seemed to me that the best way of dealing with the matter was to invite counsel for the executrix to take out a summons returnable at once, asking for leave to amend, which I would treat as a summons taken out before the hearing of the action, so that, if my judgment had to be against him, as I feel it must be, he could go to the Court of Appeal, and, if the Court of Appeal should take a different course, then the action would remain alive and all the expense would not have been thrown away. Accordingly, a summons was taken out and returned to me on the same day. It is on this summons, which applies for leave to amend, that I now have to give my decision.

The action is brought on a contract made by the late Mr. Alexander Mountain in his lifetime, and it is brought, and could only be brought, as he is dead, by his executrix for the benefit of his estate. The fact that the executrix will take as sole legatee under the will does not seem to me to matter. She must sue, if at all, in a representative capacity as representing the late Mr. Alexander Mountain. If this action had been brought by Mr. Alexander Mountain in his lifetime, the title of the writ would not have been right, because the action could not have been brought by "Alexander Mountain & Co (suing as a firm)," as there was no firm. It should have been brought by Mr. Alexander Mountain, though I do not suppose there would have been any objection if he had described himself on the writ as "trading as Alexander Mountain & Co." If, however, the action had been brought in the name of "Alexander Mountain & Co." by mistake, then the decision in W. Hill & Son v. Tannerhill (1) would have enabled me to have amended the writ. In that action W. Hill, an individual trading alone and without partners as W. Hill & Son, issued a writ in the firm name, contrary to R.S.C., Ord. 48A, r. 1. The Court of Appeal held that, as W. Hill was an actually existing person and the real plaintiff in the action, he was entitled to the order. The words "& Son" were struck out and the action was allowed to remain as though the proper plaintiff, Walter Hill, had been substituted. DU PARCQ, L.J., said ([1944] K.B. 472, 475) :

I do not say what we should have done or what the learned judge would have been in a position to do if there had been no "W. Hill" of the address given and the owner of the lorry had been someone of a different name trading in the name of "W. Hill & Son." A question may arise about that some day, but in this case there is a "W. Hill," and all that need be said is that "and Son" ought not to have been added.

Counsel for the executrix in this case argued that DU PARCQ, L.J., left open the very question that arises here today, and invited me to give a decision on it.

I do not feel convinced that the question that DU PARCQ, L.J., left open is the question that arises today.

It seems to me the only point that I have to decide is whether I have power to amend this action under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 2, which provides :

Where an action has been commenced in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, or where it is doubtful whether it has been commenced in the name of the right plaintiff, the court or a judge may, if satisfied that it has been so commenced through a bona fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as may be just.

I am not at all satisfied that "bona fide mistake" in the rule means a mistake as to the effect of the rules. I think that it means a slip, or something of that sort. I do not think it means a mistake as to what the practice of the court is, and I am doing no injustice to anybody if I say that there is no evidence before me that there was here a bona fide mistake. Apparently, it was considered that, because the executrix was carrying on the business of the deceased, therefore she was the proper plaintiff and entitled to sue in the name under which he had been carrying on the business. If the action were properly constituted in the name of the plaintiff, it should have been "Doris Mountain, plaintiff," while "Alexander Mountain & Co." could only refer to the late Mr. Alexander Mountain.

In Tellow v. Orela, Ltd. (2), which was a judgment of no less an authority than the late LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN (then RUSSELL, J.), the facts seem to be singularly similar to the facts of this case. There, an action was commenced in the name of a dead man, which has been done in the present case, since it is admitted that there was no firm of Alexander Mountain & Co., and, had he been alive, Alexander Mountain would have been the only person entitled to sue. In Tellow v. Orela, Ltd. (2) it was sought to substitute, as plaintiff, the dead man's widow, whom he had appointed by his will as his executrix and who had carried on the business after his death, which is exactly what happened here. RUSSELL, J., in dealing with the application to substitute the executrix as plaintiff, referred to Clay v. Oxford (3), which was decided under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and said ([1920] 2 Ch. 24, 26) :

... Clay v. Oxford (3) arose under ss. 34 and 222 [of the Act of 1852]. The head-note is : "Where an action is commenced in the name of a dead man, his representatives cannot be substituted as plaintiffs." There, the action was commenced on May 10, in the name of John Clay, as plaintiff. It was afterwards discovered that John Clay had died before the date of the writ, and on June 14 a summons was taken out to substitute the names of his executrix and executor as plaintiffs. That summons was abandoned ; but on Nov. 7 another summons to the same effect was taken out and MARTIN, B., made the order prayed. A rule nisi to rescind that order having been obtained, the matter was argued. The court, consisting of KELLY, C.B., BRAMWELL, B., CHANNELL, B., and PIGGOTT, B., was unanimous in rescinding the order . . . Thus under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, there was no power to substitute as plaintiffs the representatives of a man who was dead when an action was commenced in his name, either under the special provisions of the Act or under the general words of s. 222. In that condition of things the present rules were framed, and the question is whether they allow that which the Act of 1852 did not allow. I do not think they do, and it would be straining the rules to hold otherwise. The rules relied on are rr. 2 and 11 of Ord. 16 . . . In my opinion [r. 2] means that, where an action has been commenced between two living parties by a living plaintiff, and the living plaintiff afterwards turns out to be the wrong person, an application may be made to the court, and the court can substitute another person for the living plaintiff or may add another person as co-plaintiff as the case may be. But it does not justify the court in creating a plaintiff in an action for the first time.

RUSSELL, J., then concluded his judgment by saying (ibid., 27) :

In my opinion the names of "parties improperly joined" and the names of "parties who ought to have been joined" are, within the meaning of that rule, the names of living persons.

As I understand, the only distinction which counsel for the executrix draws between Tellow v. Orela, Ltd. (2) and this case is that, in this case, the action was commenced, not in the name of Alexander Mountain, but in the name of "Alexander Mountain & Co.", which I have already pointed out is wrong. I cannot agree that two wrongs make a right, and that would be the effect of my decision if I held that I could distinguish this case from Tetlow's case (2). If the action had been brought by the executrix in the name of Alexander Mountain, it would have been in breach of the rules, and, if the action was brought by the executrix in breach of the rules, describing her as "Alexander Mountain & Co.," it would not distinguish the case in any way from the decision of RUSSELL, J., in Tetlow v. Orela, Ltd. (2). Therefore, much as I regret having to do it, I feel obliged to give effect to the objection that has been taken, and to dismiss this summons with costs. I think the proper order to make is to stand over the action for fourteen days, and, if notice of appeal is given within that time, until the Court of Appeal have given their decision. If the Court of Appeal uphold my decision, the action will stand dismissed with costs. Of course, that will not prevent the executrix from bringing another action. If, on the other hand, the Court of Appeal take a different view from that which I have expressed, then the action may be reinstated in the list, keeping its place.

Summons dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Forsythe, Kerman & Phillips (for the executrix); C. Grobel, Son & Co., agents for Arthur Robson, Chiswick (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Not followed. WHITE v. WHITE. Not followed. CACKETT (ORSE. TRICE)
[1948] 2 All E.R. 151. v. CACKETT. [1950] 1 All E.R. 677.

GRIMES (otherwise EDWARDS) v. GRIMES.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Finnemore, J.), May 10, 1948.]

Nullity—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Coitus interruptus—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a).

In 1946, the parties went through a ceremony of marriage. Against the wishes of the wife, the husband always persisted in the practice of coitus interruptus. The wife petitioned for a decree of nullity, on the ground that the marriage had not been consummated.

HELD: coitus interruptus was not a full and natural intercourse, but, by its very nature, was partial and incomplete, and the marriage had, therefore, not been consummated and the wife was entitled to a decree.

D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845) (1 Rob. Eccl. 279), applied.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. Compare the decision in this case with that of WILLMER, J., in White v. White (p. 151, post) where he decided that the practice of coitus interruptus did not prevent the consummation of the marriage, and, therefore, that the wife petitioner was not entitled to a decree of nullity on the ground that her husband had wilfully refused to consummate the marriage.

FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 339.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Baxter v. Baxter, [1947] 2 All E.R. 886; [1948] A.C. 274; [1948] L.J.R. 479.
- (2) D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 279; 27 Digest 267, 2350.
- (3) L— v. L— (otherwise D—), (1922), 38 T.L.R. 697; 27 Digest 267, 2357.
- (4) Snowman (otherwise Bensinger) v. Snowman, [1934] P. 186; 103 L.J.P. 87; 151 L.T. 180; Digest Supp.

PETITION by the wife for a decree of nullity on the ground that, by insisting on the practice of coitus interruptus, the husband had wilfully refused to consummate the marriage. A decree nisi was granted. The facts appear in the judgment.

Tolstoy for the wife.

The husband was not represented.

FINNEMORE, J.: This case raises a point of considerable interest which was deliberately left undecided by the House of Lords in Baxter v. Baxter (1). The point is whether a marriage has been consummated when the practice of coitus interruptus has always been followed.

The wife, Mrs. Grimes, is asking for a decree of nullity of her marriage with the respondent husband, Walter Robert Grimes, on the ground that he has wilfully refused to consummate the marriage. The parties went through a ceremony of marriage on Sept. 21, 1946, and from first to last the only form of intercourse—a term I use neutrally for the moment—which took place between the parties was that which is described as “coitus interruptus,” that is to say, on every occasion, and there were many, when there was intercourse between these two people, the husband withdrew before emission. The wife says that from the beginning she objected, for she wanted to have children. The husband said he did not want children and there never would be any children, and his mother had so advised him. The two mothers appear to have taken part in the discussion when it was apparent, as it soon was, not surprisingly, that the young people were not getting on very happily together. The wife’s mother said this was an unnatural way of living and could be injurious to health. The husband’s mother said: “Nonsense,” and added she had advised her son to adopt this practice and he was going to do so. He continued, and refused to have intercourse with his wife in the normal way at any stage. Finally, the parties became estranged, and, for some considerable time now they appear not even to have corresponded.

It is now plain, following Baxter v. Baxter (1), that, if a husband and wife, when having intercourse use preventatives so that children may not result, that is to be regarded as full sexual intercourse between them and results in the marriage being consummated. Here, however, it is argued that, if the practice adopted is that of coitus interruptus, there is no proper intercourse and, therefore, no consummation of the marriage, irrespective of any question of there being children or no children. The argument of counsel for the wife can be stated quite simply and shortly, and it is that for a marriage to be consummated there must be normal and full intercourse. It has been laid down by the House of Lords that there may be such normal and full intercourse although preventatives are used to prevent the conception of children, but it has always been held, from the earliest days that, to establish consummation of marriage, intercourse must be natural and complete. There is no natural and no complete intercourse unless there is emission from the one into the body of the other, and, therefore, the practice of coitus interruptus does not merely prevent the procreation of children. It also prevents any real intercourse at all, and, therefore, consummation of marriage. Counsel cited a number of authorities, going back before the beginning of last century and contended that it has always been held that there must be emission into the body of the other party to create consummation of marriage. The real difficulty is that all these decisions were before the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, and relate to charges of impotence and incapacity because in those days no-one had thought of wilful refusal as a ground for relief of this kind. I do not think that alters the principle involved because whether a husband, under the old law, was unable to perform the act, or whether, under the statute of 1937, he refuses to perform it, the result is the same. There is no proper intercourse, and, it is argued, no consummation. Counsel referred me to the passage in BAYLE, DICTIONARY DES MAIZEAUX, relating to the old-fashioned methods of examination of the parties. It certainly says in terms that one of the things the viewers must look for is that emission which was a vital element in consummation. One of the things they have to examine is where, what, and what type of emission is produced. The passage is at p. 800 in vol. 4 and it says (inter alia) that the viewers must inform themselves “whether the intromission has been made; and also an facta sit emissio, ubi, quid, & quale emissum.” Counsel then referred to BECK’S MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE, p. 56, again suggesting that emission is an essential part of intercourse: “The inability to propel the semen out of its vessels is frequently to be considered as an absolute cause; but generally it is a curable one.” We are not concerned here with the medical side of the point and merely seek some further authority that emission is one of the qualities essential to produce a proper act of normal intercourse. Counsel further cited CHITTY’S MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE at pp. 374 and 375 :

It may here suffice to observe, that imperfections constituting impotency rarely occur, and that many supposed defects may be removed by surgical operation. Impotency may exist on the part of the man or of the woman, though in the great majority of instances on record, it has been alleged against the former ; and though not a very frequent event in either sex, is comparatively more rare in the female. In the male it denotes an incapacity erectio ac intromissio penis cum emissione seminis.

That is laying down quite plainly that without penetration and emission there is incapacity, and, therefore, in those days, grounds for alleging non-consummation owing to incapacity on the part of the man if he was unable to do those necessary things.

It would follow, in my opinion, that, if that be true, then under the new law, if the man, although he is able to do those things, wilfully refuses to perform them, he is not performing the normal and full act of intercourse, and, therefore, he is not consummating the marriage.

I think, perhaps, that the strongest case—certainly the most famous one which sums up all this matter—is the well known judgment of DR. LUSHINGTON in D—e v. A—g (2). DR. LUSHINGTON says (1 Rob. Eccl. 298) :

I apprehend that we are all agreed that, in order to constitute the marriage bond between young persons, there must be the power, present or to come, of sexual intercourse. Without that power, neither of two principal ends of matrimony can be attained, namely, a lawful indulgence of the passions to prevent licentiousness, and the procreation of children, according to the evident design of Divine Providence.

Here DR. LUSHINGTON is laying down two ends of matrimony. One is, of course, the procreation of children, but the other is the providing of lawful and normal methods of people satisfying their sexual desires apart from licentiousness or indiscriminate intercourse with other people. He continues (ibid.) :

Though all are so far agreed, this unanimity of opinion does not remove the existing difficulty, for that difficulty lies in the meaning of the term “sexual intercourse.” How is it to be defined ? This is a most disgusting and painful inquiry, but it cannot be avoided. Sexual intercourse, in the proper meaning of the term, is ordinary and complete intercourse ; it does not mean partial and imperfect intercourse ; yet, I cannot go the length of saying, that every degree of imperfection would deprive it of its essential character. There must be degrees difficult to deal with ; but if so imperfect as scarcely to be natural, I should not hesitate to say that, legally speaking, it is no intercourse at all. I can never think that the true interest of society would be advanced by retaining within the marriage bonds parties driven to such disgusting practices. Certainly it would not tend to the prevention of adulterous intercourse, one of the greatest evils to be avoided.

DR. LUSHINGTON goes on to draw a vital distinction between full intercourse, though malformation may make conception impossible, and incomplete intercourse and says (ibid., 299) :

If there be a reasonable probability that the lady can be made capable of a vera copula—of the natural sort of coitus, though without power of conception, I cannot pronounce this marriage void . . . If, on the contrary, she is not and cannot be made capable of more than an incipient, imperfect, and unnatural coitus, I would pronounce the marriage void . . . In the case first supposed, the husband must submit to the misfortune of a barren wife, as much when the cause is visible and capable of being ascertained, as when it rests in undiscoverable and unascertained causes. There is no justifiable motive for intercourse with other women in the one case, more than in the other. But when the coitus itself is absolutely imperfect, and I must call it unnatural, there is not a natural indulgence of natural desire ; almost of necessity disgust is generated, and the probable consequences of other connexions with men of ordinary self control become almost certain. I am of opinion that no man ought to be reduced to this state of quasi unnatural connexion, and consequent temptation, and, therefore, I should hold the marriage void.

It is argued in this case that Baxter v. Baxter (1) falls into the first of these classes, i.e., a natural sort of coitus, though without power of conception, while the practice of coitus interruptus falls into the second class as incipient, imperfect, and unnatural. If DR. LUSHINGTON's principles are applied to the facts of the present case I think it is right to say that there was never any natural or complete intercourse. Certainly there was no intercourse designed to give the proper satisfaction to the woman and no intercourse likely or designed to do either of the very things which DR. LUSHINGTON lays down as essential to normal, natural and complete intercourse and, therefore, to consummation.

As I understand it, Baxter v. Baxter (1) decided that there may be all the normal elements of intercourse, including emission and, consequently, satisfaction, but there has been introduced an artificial preventative to stay the possible procreation of children. That, the House of Lords has said, does not prevent consummation of the marriage. It prevents the procreation of children, but it is a form of intercourse which in these days ordinary people would accept as natural and complete, and, therefore, it amounts to consummation, a word which is to be understood, as LORD JOWITT, L.C., said in his speech ([1947] 2 All E.R. 892): "in common parlance and in the light of social conditions known to exist." The point here is whether coitus interruptus is a natural and complete intercourse. All the authorities that have been cited to me, going back a long time, plainly suggest that it is not, because, for there to be natural and complete intercourse, there must be emission within the body of the wife. In the present case there was no such intercourse. It is difficult to see how a coitus which is interruptus can be said to be complete. D—e v. A—g (2), and the view laid down by DR. LUSHINGTON therein, have been cited and approved more than once since. It was referred to in L— v. L— (3), decided by HORRIDGE, J., which differs on its facts from the present case. The wife, owing to an operation, was sterile, and the husband sought to obtain a decree of nullity on that ground. The petition was rejected by the learned judge because sterility was no ground for nullity. The parties could perform the normal act of intercourse which, under ordinary conditions, would or might result in the procreation of children. He held that, as sexual intercourse was possible, the fact that it could not result in children because of the wife's condition was irrelevant, but HORRIDGE, J., accepts the great opinion of DR. LUSHINGTON in D—e v. A—g (2) on this particular point. In Snowman v. Snowman (4), BATESON, J., in his judgment, again cited ([1934] P. 188) the words I have quoted from DR. LUSHINGTON's speech in D—e v. A—g (2):

There must be degrees difficult to deal with; but if [the intercourse is] so imperfect as scarcely to be natural, I should not hesitate to say that, legally speaking, it is no intercourse at all.

That case also was decided before the Act of 1937, but I can see no difference in principle since 1937 as to what intercourse means. It is true that we are dealing with a case, not where one party is incompetent or incapable, but where he wilfully refuses to perform the act which is the full act of intercourse consummating the marriage.

I have come to the conclusion that to provide a successful defence both in a case of incapacity and in one of wilful refusal intercourse must equally be full and natural intercourse, and I hold that coitus interruptus is not a full and natural intercourse, but, by its very nature, a partial and incomplete intercourse. I find, on the facts, that the husband here always and against the wishes of the wife, carried out this practice which prevented a normal, complete or natural intercourse. Accordingly, I am satisfied that the husband wilfully refused to consummate the marriage and that the wife is entitled to the relief for which she asks. Accordingly, I pronounce a decree of nullity.

Decree nisi of nullity.

Solicitor: Seton Pollock, Services Divorce Department, Law Society (for the wife).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WHITE (otherwise BERRY) v. WHITE.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), May 11, 12, 1948.]

Nullity—Cruelty—Wilful refusal to consummate marriage—Coitus interruptus—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 7 (1) (a).

The parties went through a ceremony of marriage in 1937. In spite of the wife's protests the husband consistently practised coitus interruptus, with the result that the wife, who was of a nervous disposition, suffered in health. She was examined by a mental specialist who, in a report to her doctor, said, inter alia, that, unless the husband could be persuaded to change his attitude, to cease the practice of coitus interruptus and start a family, as the wife desired, psychotherapy could have no lasting effect. The specialist's report was shown to the husband by the wife's doctor, but the husband persisted in the practice. The wife petitioned for a decree of nullity under s. 7 (1) (a) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, on the ground of the husband's wilful refusal to consummate the marriage, and, in the alternative, for a decree of dissolution on the ground of the husband's cruelty, both claims being based on the same course of conduct.

HELD: the marriage had been consummated, and, therefore, the wife was not entitled to a decree of nullity: Baxter v. Baxter ([1947] 2 All E.R. 886) applied; but the husband's conduct, which he knew was resented by, and was undermining the health of, the wife, constituted cruelty in law, and the wife was entitled to a decree of dissolution on that ground.

Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes ([1948] 2 All E.R. 147), not followed.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.] Compare the decision in this case with that of FINNEMORE, J., in Grimes v. Grimes (p. 147 ante) where he decided that coitus interruptus was not full and natural intercourse, and, therefore, the marriage had not been consummated, so that the wife was entitled to a decree of nullity on the ground of the husband's wilful refusal to consummate the marriage.

FOR THE MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1937, s. 7 (1) (a), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 30, p. 339.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Baxter v. Baxter, [1947] 2 All E.R. 886; [1948] A.C. 274; [1948] L.J.R. 479.
- (2) Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes, (1948), ante p. 147.
- (3) D—e v. A—g (falsely calling herself D—e), (1845), 1 Rob. Eccl. 279; 27 Digest 267, 2350.
- (4) L. v. L. (otherwise D.), (1922), 38 T.L.R. 697; 27 Digest 267, 2357.
- (5) Rice v. Raynold-Spring-Rice, [1948] 1 All E.R. 188; [1948] L.J.R. 675.

PETITION by the wife for a decree of nullity on the ground that the husband, by consistently practising coitus interruptus, had wilfully refused to consummate the marriage, and, in the alternative, for a decree of dissolution on the ground of cruelty. A decree of nullity was refused, but a decree nisi of divorce was granted on the ground of the husband's cruelty. The facts appear in the judgment.

Victor Williams for the wife.

Marshall-Reynolds and Cridlan for the husband.

WILLMER, J.: This case started with a petition by the wife for the decree of nullity on the ground of the alleged wilful refusal of the husband to consummate the marriage. The petition is anterior in date to the well known decision of the House of Lords in Baxter v. Baxter (1). Shortly after the decision of the House of Lords in that case the petition was amended by adding an alternative plea, namely, that, assuming the marriage to be a valid marriage, the husband was guilty of cruelty so as to justify the court in pronouncing a decree of dissolution. The ground on which both the prayer for nullity and the alternative prayer for dissolution are based is an allegation that from beginning to end the husband practised what is known as coitus interruptus. It is said, in the first place, that in those circumstances the marriage has never been consummated and that the non-consummation was due to wilful refusal on the part of the husband, and, in the alternative, assuming the marriage to have been consummated, that the conduct of the husband in relation to his sexual behaviour has amounted to cruelty so as to warrant a decree of dissolution.

The husband, by his answer, merely denies each and every allegation contained in the petition and the amended petition. There is no cross prayer for relief on his part. I have had the benefit of hearing the evidence of both the parties. I have also heard some valuable medical evidence called on behalf of the wife, and I have had the additional advantage of hearing evidence from the wife's sister, with whom the parties resided for a considerable period of the married history. I would like to say at once—because this conclusion influences all the other conclusions at which I have arrived—that, having heard the evidence of the parties, I was left in no doubt that the husband was a witness on whose statements I could place no reliance. On the other hand, I thought that the wife gave her evidence fairly and well, and on most of the crucial points where her evidence could be tested it was well supported both by her sister's evidence and by the medical evidence of the doctors. Generally speaking, therefore, I approach this case on the basis that the wife's account of what happened is substantially to be believed, and the husband's account, where it differs from the wife's, is not to be believed.

That being so, I can state the salient facts quite briefly. The parties were married, or went through a ceremony of marriage, in September, 1937. It is common ground that no intercourse at all took place for six months and that about six months after the marriage what is called coitus interruptus took place. The wife's case is that thereafter, throughout the married life, intercourse was rarely resorted to—only about once in every three or four months or so—and that whenever it was resorted to it always took the form of coitus interruptus. She says—and I believe her—that she showed her husband quite plainly that she did not approve of it and made it clear to him that she wanted children, but that she received an answer from him either that he did not want to risk children because he could not afford them or that he was too tired. The husband says that from time to time, and, in particular, on an occasion about nine months after the marriage, there was full intercourse between the parties, but he goes on to say that after that he sometimes indulged in coitus interruptus and sometimes had full intercourse. Without going into details, I wholly disbelieve that story, and I accept the wife's version that throughout the married life the husband persistently followed this practice of coitus interruptus.

The wife was a woman of a somewhat nervous disposition. She had, before marriage, had a nervous breakdown, and I think that there is no doubt, in view of the medical evidence which I have received, that the practice of coitus interruptus (which also deprived her, if not of the possibility, at least of the likelihood, of having children, and, therefore, led to a certain amount of friction between the parties) had its effect on her health, and in the later years of the marriage she was repeatedly having to go into hospital suffering from nervous complaints. I need not go into detail about these visits to hospital. The matter came to a head in the spring of 1946 when her own general practitioner thought that he ought to take a second opinion from a mental specialist. Accordingly, the wife was sent to visit Dr. Strauss, a specialist in nervous diseases, who has given evidence before me. A copy of his report, written at the time, is also before me. The significance of this report is that the wife's own medical adviser summoned the husband to see him and read to him extracts from the report so that the husband could be left in no doubt of the view which had been taken, namely, that it was his conduct to a large extent which had brought about the bad state of health of the wife. I have no doubt that the husband fully understood exactly what the specialist had to say.

The extracts from Dr. Strauss's report are as follows. The first extract is from part of the history of the case and it reads as follows:

The marriage was disastrous from the start. Her husband was unwilling to have children, and coitus interruptus has been practised throughout marriage, so that Mrs. White has never had any satisfaction whatsoever from the sexual side of married life. In any case, sexual intercourse takes place very seldom—about once in two or three months, at the most.

There is another passage in the report which is also material, and which was also read and explained to the husband.

Unless her husband can be persuaded to change his whole attitude, to cease the practice of coitus interruptus, to start a family—and much else, I do not see how psychotherapy can have any lasting effect. I leave you to judge whether Mr. White is capable of appreciating the situation and possesses the goodwill to try and put it right. If you think that nothing can be done along these lines, Mrs. White would be well advised to separate from her husband and go and live with one of her sisters.

It was in response to that paragraph of Dr. Strauss's report that Dr. McLean very properly thought it was his duty to interview the husband and see what he could do. The interview resulted in nothing. The husband was un-cooperative and continued as he had previously conducted himself. In May, 1946, the wife again had to go to hospital. She was advised then not to go back to her husband, but she did so and remained with him until she once more had to go into hospital in November, 1946. During the period between May and November there was no intercourse whatsoever. When she was in hospital in November, 1946, the wife made up her mind that she could not go back to the husband again, and there has been no co-habitation since that date.

I should state that in this case there is evidence from Dr. McLean that, when coitus interruptus is practised, the possibility of conception none the less remains, and for this reason. According to him, many men do in fact have a small emission of semen before the main emission that follows on the completion of the act. There is always the possibility, therefore, that from this minor preliminary emission conception may result. Dr. McLean said that, speaking as a medical adviser, he would not recommend the practice of coitus interruptus as a means of birth control. That may or may not be of some materiality. It seems to me a significant piece of evidence, because, if I came to the conclusion that in such circumstances a decree of nullity could be pronounced on the ground of non-consummation, one might get a very curious result. The marriage would be annulled on the supposed ground of non-consummation, notwithstanding the fact that the wife might have borne, not one child, but many children. It seems a curious position that that which might very well produce a child or children should at the same time be a reason for obtaining a decree of nullity on the ground of non-consummation.

In those circumstances, the points which I have to determine are (i) whether the wife is entitled to a decree of nullity on the ground of wilful refusal of the husband to consummate the marriage, such non-consummation consisting of the practice which he followed of having only coitus interruptus and never complete intercourse. If I decide that in the affirmative, the other question does not arise. If, on the other hand, I decide that there is no ground for a decree of nullity, then I must go on to consider (ii) whether the husband's practice of coitus interruptus and his persistence in that practice, which he knew his wife resented and was undermining her health, is sufficient to constitute cruelty so as to entitle the wife to a decree of dissolution.

Let me deal with the question of nullity first. It is, to my mind, an extremely difficult question, as well as being one of extreme importance. It is a question which the House of Lords specifically left open for future decision when they had Baxter v. Baxter (1) before them. I shall have to refer to that case, and to the speech of LORD JOWITT, L.C., because it appears to me that, notwithstanding the express reservation of this subject for future consideration, the House of Lords have, inferentially, at any rate, decided the question of principle which must lie at the root of the question. Before I do that, however, I should refer to the fact that only two days ago, FINNEMORE, J., had before him an undefended petition in Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes (2). There the petition was brought by a wife praying for a decree of nullity on the ground of wilful refusal having regard to the fact that the husband had persisted throughout the marriage in coitus interruptus—in other words, the same ground was put forward in that case as has been put forward in this case. That case was undefended and this case has been defended, but, as I have already explained, having accepted the evidence of the wife and rejected that of the husband, I am really in the same position, as far as the facts are concerned, as FINNEMORE, J., in Grimes (otherwise Edwards) v. Grimes (2). I have, however, had the advantage of hearing argument on both sides in this case, and, although I naturally have the highest regard for the view expressed by FINNEMORE, J., I cannot in the circumstances regard his decision as necessarily binding on me, especially if I come to the conclusion, as I do, that the reasoning of the House of Lords in Baxter v. Baxter (1) must impel me to the contrary conclusion. I regret very much that, within two days, there should be contrary decisions on what appears to be the same point, but it only goes to emphasise what I said at the beginning, that this is an extremely difficult point and one which will, in my humble judgment, at some stage have to be decided by a higher tribunal.

The reasons why I have come to a conclusion differing from that of FINNEMORE, J.—i.e., the conclusion that I cannot in this case pronounce a decree of nullity—are as follows. In Baxter v. Baxter (1) the House of Lords, quoting with approval both the decision and reasoning of DR. LUSHINGTON in D. v. A. (3), drew a distinction between conception, on the one hand, and mere coitus on the other. D. v. A. (3) was a case, not of wilful refusal (because it was decided many years before that was made a ground for nullity), but a case of incapacity. It was a husband's petition for nullity. It was proved that the wife was completely without a uterus, and that her vagina, instead of the normal dimensions, measured only some two inches. DR. LUSHINGTON took the view, in which the House of Lords concurred, that the matter for decision was whether the malformation of the vagina was such as to render coitus impossible. The question whether conception was possible was in his view beside the point. DR. LUSHINGTON actually went so far as to adjourn the case for further evidence on the question whether medical skill could do anything to cure the malformation of the wife's vagina. In Baxter v. Baxter (1) ([1947] 2 All E.R. 886, 890) LORD JOWITT, L.C., reads this quotation from the judgment of DR. LUSHINGTON in D. v. A. (3) (1 Rob. Eccl. 279, 299):

"In one sense of the term, there can be no doubt, namely, that as relates to conception, the malformation is incurable; but it is to me doubtful, whether they mean that it is incurable as to the mere coitus. In this difference, I think, lies the true distinction. If there be a reasonable probability that the lady can be made capable of a vera copula—of the natural sort of coitus, though without power of conception, I cannot pronounce this marriage void. If, on the contrary, she is not and cannot be made capable of more than an incipient, imperfect, and unnatural coitus, I would pronounce the marriage void."

LORD JOWITT, L.C., goes on:

That means that had DR. LUSHINGTON been satisfied that the vagina could by natural or artificial means have been extended by two inches or thereabouts he would have been obliged to refuse a decree on the ground that the wife was capable of vera copula, the complete absence of the uterus notwithstanding.

The decision in D. v. A. (3) was followed, as the House of Lords pointed out, by HORRIDGE, J., in L. v. L. (4). LORD JOWITT, L.C., ([1947] 2 All E.R. 886, 891), quotes the following passage from the judgment of HORRIDGE, J., in that case (38 T.L.R. 697, 698):

Does "a capacity of consummation" mean penetration merely or penetration followed by fertility? The authorities cited in the footnote certainly speak of the procreation of children as being essential to marriage, but the question is whether they refer merely to the capacity to procreate, or to the capacity to do an act which usually results in procreation. The question would be of greater difficulty if it were not for the decision of DR. LUSHINGTON in D. v. A. (3). In that case the respondent had no uterus, and the vagina was very short. If Mr. Bayford's argument were correct, counsel for the petitioner in that case would merely have had to prove that the respondent had no uterus; but the question whether the possibility of partial penetration was a ground for refusing relief was there exhaustively considered, and the decision turned on the impossibility of complete penetration. All that inquiry would have been unnecessary if Mr. Bayford's argument were sound, and in that sense the question was directly involved in the case, and I cannot regard DR. LUSHINGTON'S opinion on this point as obiter.

LORD JOWITT, L.C., continues:

The learned judge then said that the passages to which I have already referred disposed of the husband's case. I am in complete agreement with this judgment.

There we have the House of Lords completely agreeing both with the decision and with the reasoning of HORRIDGE, J., in L. v. L. (4). LORD JOWITT, L.C., in effect, sums up his decision and the decision of their Lordships by quoting a passage from LORD STAIR'S INSTITUTIONS, 1832, I, tit. 4, para. 6, which, I may say, has been much relied on by both sides in argument before me. The passage is this:

So then it is not the consent to marry; as it relateth to the procreation of children, that is requisite; for it may consist, though the woman be far beyond that date; but it is the consent whereby ariseth that conjugal society, which may have the conjunction of bodies as well as of minds ; as the general end of the constitution of marriage is the solace and satisfaction of man.

It seems to me that, if one looks at the principle underlying the decision in Baxter v. Baxter (1), the House of Lords was drawing the same distinction as had been drawn in the earlier cases cited between conception, on the one hand, and mere conjunction of bodies, on the other. The question, therefore, is what is meant by this "conjunction of bodies" or, to use the Latin phrase, vera copula. There is no question in this case, but that full entry and penetration has been achieved. It is submitted on behalf of the wife that there is no vera copula unless there is not only full entry and penetration, but also completion of the act within the body of the woman, whether with or without the use of mechanical contraceptives. On the other hand, it is contended that there is a complete conjunction of bodies, a vera copula—which means literally "true conjunction"—as soon as full entry and penetration has been achieved. What follows goes merely to the likelihood or otherwise of conception.

In my judgment, the latter contention must be correct. It seems to me to follow from the reasoning of the House of Lords in Baxter v. Baxter (1). I find it impossible, having heard this matter fully argued, to say that this marriage has not been consummated. Much as I regret to arrive at a different view from FINNEMORE, J., on this point, I feel bound to say that I cannot pronounce a decree of nullity in this case.

That makes it necessary for me to consider whether a case of cruelty has been made out. I introduce the discussion on that by again referring to Baxter v. Baxter (1). In the concluding passage of his speech the LORD CHANCELLOR says this ([1947] 2 All E.R. 886, 892):

I take the view that in this legislation Parliament used the word "consummate" as that word is understood in common parlance and in the light of social conditions known to exist, and that the proper occasion for considering the subjects raised by this appeal is when the sexual life of the spouses, and the responsibility of either or both for a childless home, form the background to some other claim for relief.

It seems to me that the House of Lords was there saying that questions arising out of imperfect intercourse of one sort or another may very well arise in connection with allegations of cruelty. Similarly, they may arise in desertion cases where matters of that sort are put forward by the opposite party as constituting reasonable cause, and that, in the view of the House of Lords, is the proper place to consider sexual irregularities of the sort contemplated. What the House of Lords was saying in relation to intercourse with the use of contraceptives seems to me to apply equally to the case of coitus interruptus—a proper place to consider the effect of that is in relation to claims that may be made for dissolution on the ground of cruelty or desertion.

My attention was drawn to the case of Rice v. Raynold-Spring-Rice (5), which followed very shortly after the decision of the House of Lords in Baxter v. Baxter (1). That was a case in which the Divisional Court, hearing an appeal from justices, came to the conclusion, in agreement with the view of the justices, that coitus interruptus, practised by one party against the will of the other, was a good ground for the other spouse separating from the offending party, that is to say, was such as to constitute a good defence to a claim based on desertion. In argument I asked counsel for the husband whether, on the basis of the facts as I have now found them, the wife would have a good defence if sued by the husband for desertion, and, as I understood him, he was not prepared to contend that she would not. That, of course, is not sufficient by itself to make out a case of cruelty, although it goes some way along the road. Here, however, I have, as it seems to me, all the necessary facts which would entitle me to pronounce a decree on the ground of cruelty. I have a course of conduct persisted in by the husband, notwithstanding the objection and repeated complaints of the wife. I have a course of conduct which, according to the medical evidence, is calculated to impair the health of a woman of nervous disposition such as the wife in the present case. I have a course of conduct which did, in fact, according to the medical evidence, result in serious injury to the health of the wife. There may well have been other causes contributing to the wife's breakdown in health. Her health did, undoubtedly, break down, but I am left in no doubt, having heard the wife's evidence and the medical evidence, that, at any rate, one of the potent factors contributing to the breakdown in health was the persistent refusal of the husband to have full intercourse in the normal way. I am not saying by any means that the practice of coitus interruptus is a ground in every case for pronouncing a decree on the ground of cruelty. The evidence of the doctor which I have heard is that there are many cases, where the parties are a normal man and a normal woman, in which it does no harm to either of them, but where one gets a woman of a nervous disposition like this the practice, as I understand it, may be most damaging to health. A husband must take his wife as he finds her, and, if she is a woman of a type who needs the full and natural completion of the act, to persist in withholding it from her, in the face of her repeated complaints and objections, is in itself an act of cold, calculated cruelty. If, as in this case, it does result in serious injury to health or does contribute in marked degree to the breakdown of health of the other spouse, then, in my judgment, it is only right that this court should give relief. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that in this case the persistence in the practice of coitus interruptus, although it does not enable me to say that the marriage has never been consummated, is, nevertheless, a matter which merits the condemnation of the court, and is abundantly sufficient to entitle the wife to the alternative relief claimed. I, therefore, propose to reject the prayer for a decree of nullity and to pronounce a decree nisi of dissolution on the alternative ground Decree nisi with costs.

Solicitors: Joynson-Hicks & Co., agents for W. Davies & Son, Woking (for the wife); Joseph Lilly (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re PASKINS' WILL TRUSTS. PASKINS v. UNDERWOOD AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), June 10, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Gift of house on trust for sister for life—Gift over to testator's housekeeper "provided she is living with my sister at the time of my sister's death"—Housekeeper living in the same house, but entirely apart from sister, at time of sister's death.

In 1938, the testator made an arrangement with M.U. whereby she and her child were to be allowed to have two rooms in his house and M.U. was to act as his companion and housekeeper. In the following year, the testator's sister, an elderly woman, also came to live with them. By his will, dated Feb. 22, 1939, the testator gave the house on trust for the sister for life and, on the sister's death, on trust for M.U. absolutely, "provided she is living with my sister at the date of my sister's death," but, if M.U. predeceased the sister or was not living with the sister at the date of the sister's death, the house was to form part of the residuary estate, which was given to the testator's son. The testator died on Mar. 25, 1941, and for about a year after his death the sister and M.U. continued to live together happily, but the relationship then changed, they ceased to have their meals together, M.U. only looked after the rooms she herself occupied, and she ceased to do anything with the sister, who lived alone in part of the house, and bought and prepared her own food. On June 12, 1945, the sister gave M.U. notice to leave the house, but M.U. refused to go, and claimed that, in view of the reversionary gift of the house to her conditional on her residence with the sister, she had an implied right to reside in the house. In September, 1945, the sister met with an accident (from the effect of which she died on Oct. 15, 1945), but during her illness M.U. gave her no help:—

HELD: (i) "living with" a person implied personal association with that person and not merely residing in proximity with him without personal contact, and, therefore, M.U. was not "living with" the sister at the date of the sister's death within the meaning of the will and was not entitled to the house under the terms of the will.

(ii) the reversionary gift of the house to M.U. did not confer on her an implied right to continue to reside in the house irrespective of the sister's wishes to enable her to satisfy the condition on which the gift was made.

[AS TO CONDITIONS RELATING TO RESIDENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., pp. 109, 110, note; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 468, 469, Nos 2879-2888.]

WITNESS ACTION.

A By his will, the plaintiff's father, Arthur Paskins, gave a leasehold house on trust for his sister, Alice Paskins, for her life, and after her death on trust for the first defendant, Minnie Underwood, absolutely, provided she was living with the sister at the date of the sister's death, and, if she was not doing so, the house was to fall into the residuary estate, which, subject to the sister's life interest therein, was given to the plaintiff absolutely. The testator died on Mar. 25, 1941, and the sister died on Oct. 15, 1945. The plaintiff claimed :
B (i) a declaration that Mrs. Underwood was not living with the testator's sister at the time of the sister's death within the meaning of the will, and (ii) an order directing the second defendant, Mabel Minnis, (who was sued as the sister's personal representative), to assent to the property vesting in the plaintiff for the residue of the term. Mrs. Underwood counterclaimed (i) for a declaration that she was living with the testator's sister at the date of the sister's death within the meaning of the will, and (ii) for an order directing the property to be vested in her. VAISEY, J., held that Mrs. Underwood was not living with the testator's sister at the date of the sister's death within the meaning of the will, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. The facts and the relevant provisions of the will appear in the judgment.

Hewins for the plaintiff (son of the testator).

C. A. Settle for the first defendant (Mrs. Underwood).

W. G. H. Cook for the second defendant (Mabel Minnis).

VAISEY, J.: This action is entitled "In the matter of the trusts of the will of Arthur William Paskins" who, at all material times down to the date of his death, resided at a house called "The Nest" in Weston Lane, Woolston, in the county borough of Southampton. The story begins with the testator reading in a newspaper an advertisement which was inserted by the first defendant, Mrs. Underwood, in which she expressed the desire for two unfurnished rooms for herself and a child in return for services. The testator wrote to Mrs. Underwood, informing her that he could let her have the two rooms, but not so much for the services which would be required as for the sake of refined and congenial company in his home. He then went on to explain that he was a very elderly man living alone in his own residence which was already comfortably furnished. As a result of that letter, the testator and E Mrs. Underwood came to an arrangement under which, as from April, 1938, she and the testator set up a common home and lived together, with Mrs. Underwood's child, as one family and in complete harmony, Mrs. Underwood acting as housekeeper and companion and doing a woman's work about the house for this small party. The arrangement seems to have worked very well. Mrs. Underwood looked after the testator, did the cooking, mending,
F cleaning, buying of provisions, and so forth, and, as far as I can make out, the whole of the expenses of the establishment were borne and paid by the testator. No doubt, Mrs. Underwood gave full consideration for the accommodation which she enjoyed for herself and her child, and I have every reason to suppose that she made the concluding years of the testator comfortable and happy.

On Feb. 22, 1939, after this arrangement had continued for several months, the testator made his last will. By that will he appointed the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., to be his executor and trustee, and he gave the house (known as "The Nest") to the bank on the following trusts :
H

To permit my sister Alice Paskins to have the use and enjoyment thereof during her life she keeping the same in good and tenantable repair paying all outgoings in respect of the property and keeping the same insured against loss or damage by fire And on the death of my said sister upon trust for Mrs. Minnie Underwood (provided she is living with my sister at the date of my sister's death) absolutely But if the said Minnie Underwood shall have predeceased my said sister or shall not be living with my sister at the date of my sister's death then the said message or premises shall fall into and form part of my residuary estate.

After giving his sister the use of the furniture and effects in the house for her life, he directed that after her death that furniture and those effects should fall into and form part of his residuary estate, and the residuary estate was given on trust, so far as is material, for the sister, Alice Paskins, for her life and after her death to the testator's son, Dr. William Arthur Paskins, absolutely. Finally, the testator explained that he had refrained from appointing his son to be executor and trustee of the will owing to the fact that he was living abroad.

At about the time of the making of that will, the testator's sister, Alice Paskins, joined the party at "The Nest" and she made the fourth of a quartet which continued to live there down to the death of the testator, which occurred on May 25, 1941. Harmony continued to prevail. When the testator died, the sister, Alice Paskins, was the tenant for life of the house and she continued to live there. For a year or more after the death of the testator, Alice Paskins, Mrs. Underwood and Mrs. Underwood's child continued to live together happily, but by the end of 1942 the relations between Miss Paskins and Mrs. Underwood changed for the worse and persons who down to that time had been a happy party became completely at variance. Instead of having their meals together, Miss Paskins and Mrs. Underwood had their meals separately. Mrs. Underwood continued to keep the rooms particularly occupied by her clean and in good order, and Miss Paskins, to use the language of Mrs. Underwood, "retreated to the front of the house." At that time Miss Paskins was between 80 and 90 years old and, although her mind was perfectly clear, I do not think that there can be much doubt that she was becoming feeble. On the evidence I am satisfied that during the last two years of her life she was living in something not far removed from squalor. The front room on the ground floor in which she spent her days was very dirty, she kept herself warm with an oil stove as best she could, and such food as she ate during that time was bought and prepared by herself. Mrs. Underwood ceased to do anything whatever, except, occasionally, the very slightest items of service, for Miss Paskins, the owner of the house in which she was living. There was no common life between Miss Paskins and Mrs. Underwood during 1943, 1944 and such part of 1945 as Miss Paskins was living. In September, 1945, Miss Paskins slipped in her room and suffered an injury which prevented her from moving, but Mrs. Underwood gave no help in the illness and friends of Miss Paskins came in to do for her what was necessary. I find as a fact that, for a considerable time before, and, what is more important, at the time of the death of Miss Paskins, there had been a complete separation between her and Mrs. Underwood and they were not living together. There was no personal association between them down to and including the date of Miss Paskins' death. I agree that there was physical proximity. They were separated only by the thin walls of the house, and they must have met on the staircase, but, so far as it was possible for people living under the same roof to live apart, I think that they were doing so. I do not think that the expression in the will, "living with my sister," indicates a condition of mere proximity. I think it means living with the sister in the sense of being personally associated with her, and of such personal association I have no evidence whatever that I can accept. The evidence which I can accept is all the other way. In my view, Mrs. Underwood was not living with Miss Paskins in any sense which I can attach to the words of the will.

If it is necessary for me to decide whose fault this separation was, I am bound to say that on the evidence before me I should incline to the view that it was the fault of Mrs. Underwood. I think it is highly significant that when Miss Paskins met with this accident and was visited by one of her friends, Mrs. Underwood volunteered the remark: "This is my house." In my judgment, however, it is not necessary for me to apportion the blame. Miss Paskins may have been a bad tempered, querulous and troublesome old lady whom it was no pleasure to serve, but I do not find any such thing proved. Even if the separation was more her fault than that of Mrs. Underwood, that does not alter the fact that, according to the words of the will as I construe them, Mrs. Underwood ceased to live with Miss Paskins long before the date of Miss Paskins' death (which occurred on Oct. 15, 1945, as a result of the accident), and was continuing to live apart from her at that date. Assuming that Miss Paskins had been entirely capricious, I cannot see that this reversionary gift to Mrs. Underwood obliged Miss Paskins to continue to associate with Mrs. Underwood if the association had become uncongenial to her.

On June 12, 1945, the solicitors for the bank, acting also for Miss Paskins, wrote to Mrs. Underwood, saying that they had been instructed to give her a week's notice to remove herself and her personal belongings from "The Nest," "the reason for your being given such notice being that your behaviour and conduct towards Miss Paskins has given her great dissatisfaction since Mr. Paskins' death." The letter continued :

The legal position is that Miss Paskins as tenant for life of "The Nest" has full powers of selling, leasing and managing the property, the property passing to yourself upon the death of Miss Paskins, providing you are living with her at that time. It is clear from Mr. Paskins' will that it should be in the sole power of his sister to decide whether or not you should be allowed to continue to live with her after his death, in other words, that Miss Paskins is the sole arbiter of your suitability to be found living with her at the date of her death.

In reply to this letter, Mrs. Underwood's solicitor wrote, saying :

I do not know what the testator's intention was when he made the will but it would appear that the reversionary gift to my client conditional on her residence with Miss Paskins implies a right for her to reside at "The Nest." I have, therefore, advised my client to remain there.

I have never yet heard it said that a legacy to servants if they are in the service of a third person at the time of that third person's death obliges that third person to continue to employ the servants so as to enable them to qualify for their legacies. That seems to me to be ridiculous. I cannot use any other term in regard to the claim put forward by the solicitor of Mrs. Underwood. I cannot see on what possible ground it could be said that Miss Paskins was obliged for the rest of her days to keep Mrs. Underwood in her house, whether she liked her or not, merely to enable Mrs. Underwood to comply with the condition in the will. Such a contention seems to me to be quite unfounded.

For the reasons I have given, the condition imposed by the testator's will as that on which Mrs. Underwood should take the property has not been fulfilled. "Living with a person" implies personal association with that person and is not satisfied by mere proximity or by anything short of personal contact. I think that that is particularly the case if one looks, so far as one is entitled to look, at the conditions which existed when the testator made his will, at which time the association between him and Mrs. Underwood, and, shortly afterwards, between him, Mrs. Underwood and Miss Paskins, had been wholly amicable and, indeed, involved something like the setting up and maintenance of a common home. I make an order declaring that Mrs. Underwood was not living with Alice Paskins at the date of her death within the meaning of the testator's will. I will order the second defendant to assent to the property vesting in the plaintiff for the residue of the term of years which the lease granted. As regards the counterclaim, I must dismiss it and I must order the first defendant, Mrs. Underwood, to pay the costs of the plaintiff both of the action and of the counterclaim.

Judgment for the plaintiff. First defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs of the action and the counterclaim. Costs of the second defendant to come out of the testator's estate.

Solicitors : Vertue, Son & Churcher, agents for Churcher & Churcher, Gosport (for the plaintiff); White & Leonard, agents for R. H. Cross, Southampton (for the first defendant); Mawby, Barrie & Letts, agents for Bell, Pope & Bridgwater, Southampton (for the second defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. F. FUGGLE, LTD. v. GADSI Applied. GOLDTHORPE v. BAIN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Goff, C.J., and Lord Evers, M.R.)
[1952] 2 All E.R. 23.

June 8, 9, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Recovery of possession—Dwelling-house required as residence for “person engaged in whole-time employment” of landlord—Employee under contract, but unable to commence work owing to illness—Termination of contract shortly after order of county court—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), sched. I, para. (g).

The landlords claimed possession of a dwelling-house under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, sched. I, para. (g), on the ground that it was required for occupation as a residence for W., a person engaged in their whole-time employment. W. was engaged on July 11, 1947, and was to commence work on Sept. 10, 1947, by which date he had freed himself from his previous employment, but he was taken ill on Sept. 7, 1947, and was unable to commence work until Oct. 30, 1947. The hearing of the action in the county court began on Oct. 1, 1947, and judgment was delivered on Oct. 29, 1947. The employment of W. was terminated on Nov. 5, 1947.

HELD : (i) the language of para. (g) was satisfied if there was a contract for service and the date thereby fixed for the commencement of the service had already arrived at the time of the hearing, which was the relevant date, and the fact that W. was not able to work owing to illness did not negative the view that at that date he was engaged in the whole-time employment of the landlords.

Benninga (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijstra ([1945] 2 All E.R. 433), distinguished.

(ii) with regard to the termination of W.'s employment on Nov. 5, 1947, the Court of Appeal could not take into account a matter which had happened after the hearing in the county court which, if it had happened before the hearing, might have affected the judge's findings of fact, and, if the tribunal of fact was satisfied, under s. 3 (1) of the Act, on adequate evidence, that it was reasonable to make an order for possession, the Court of Appeal could not interfere.

Quære : Whether an employee could be described as being engaged in the whole-time employment of the landlord, if, at the date of the hearing, the employee was under notice, given or received, determining the engagement.

[AS TO RECOVERY OF POSSESSION OF PREMISES REQUIRED FOR OCCUPATION AS A RESIDENCE FOR LANDLORD'S EMPLOYEE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 331, para. 395; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 580, 581, Nos. 7292-7295.]
Case referred to :

(1) Benninga (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijstra [1945] 2 All E.R. 433; [1946] K.B. 58; 115 L.J.K.B. 28; 173 L.T. 298; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the landlords from an order by His Honour JUDGE DONE, made at Watford County Court and dated Oct. 29, 1947, refusing the landlords' claim for possession of a dwelling-house which they required for occupation as a residence by their employee. The appeal was allowed, and an order was made for possession. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

M. H. Lush for the landlords.

The tenant did not appear.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : In the action in which this appeal is brought the landlords sought to obtain possession of a dwelling-house on the ground that they “reasonably required” it “for occupation as a residence for some person engaged in [their] whole-time employment.” I take those words from the relevant part of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933,—para. (g) of sched. I to that Act. That paragraph deals with one of the cases in which the court is empowered to make an order without proof of alternative accommodation. Certain conditions must be fulfilled. Thus (i) it must be reasonable to make the order; (ii) the dwelling-house must be reasonably required for the occupation stated; (iii) it must be shown that the tenant was in the employment of the landlord or of a former landlord when the dwelling-house was let to him. All those conditions the county court judge held to be fulfilled, and he would have made the order for possession but for a point of law on which he conceived himself to be bound by what he understood was the effect of observations made by the members of the Court of Appeal in Benninga (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijstra (1). Those observations related to the words in para. (g.), "some person engaged in his whole-time employment," and the judge came to the conclusion that the person for whom possession was sought could not be properly described as engaged in the whole-time employment of the landlords.

The house with which we are concerned in the present case was occupied by a man in the employment of the landlords who left in July, 1942. On July 25, 1942, the tenant and his wife went into occupation under a contract of tenancy which the county court judge found was a contract with the tenant and not with his wife. The tenant's occupation and employment was such as to bring para. (g) into operation. On July 11, 1947, the landlords engaged one Wilson to enter their employment. At first his engagement was made conditional on accommodation being found for him, but, having regard to the coming into force of the Control of Engagement Order, 1945, the landlords engaged him on a firm engagement to start work on Sept. 10, 1947. By that time he had freed himself from his previous occupation, but, unfortunately, three days before Sept. 10, he was taken ill, and, although he gave evidence at the hearing, he was not then fit to begin work. There was no suggestion at the hearing nor did the judge take the view, that by reason of his inability to start his work on the date agreed, namely Sept. 10, the contract had been determined. In fact, Wilson began work on Oct. 30.

The hearing in the county court began on Oct. 1, and was adjourned to Oct. 22. On Oct. 29 the county court judge delivered judgment dismissing the claim. After having referred to the observations in this court in the Benninga case (1), he said :

I feel it right to follow the opinions expressed by the Lords Justices in that case. It seems to me that the paragraph gives two alternative conditions, with which the landlord must comply. Either the man at the date of the hearing must be a person engaged in his whole-time employment, or, if not engaged in his whole-time employment, he must be a person with whom a contract for such employment has been entered into, that is to say, a contract conditional on housing accommodation being provided.

I did not read the latter limb of para. (g) because it is not relevant to the present case. It would have been relevant if the original arrangement had stood, but, as I have said, that was altered in view of the Control of Engagement Order, 1945. The county court judge went on to say :

It seems to me that, if the man is not working, but a contract for employment was made with him, that is not enough unless it is a contract of a particular kind, namely, a conditional contract of this nature. The alternative to that is a person actually engaged in employment, that is to say, not only under contract, but working.

That appears to me to make clear what was passing through the judge's mind. He reads the words "engaged in his whole-time employment" as referring to a man who is not merely under contract but who is also actually working at the relevant date. At the relevant date, the date of the hearing in the county court, Wilson was not under contract to anybody other than the landlords. Under that contract he was bound to begin his work on Sept. 10. Had he done so, there is no question that the county court judge would have made the order. The only reason why he did not make the order was that the man was not physically able to begin work on Sept. 10. In my opinion, that is a misreading of the language of the section which is satisfied where there is a contract for services and the date thereby fixed for the commencement of the services has arrived at the time of the hearing. If the date for the commencement of the services arrives at some future date, the observations in this court on which the county court judge relied would no doubt apply, because in the Benninga case (1) that is actually what happened.

Although we shall presently see the difference between the two cases, I may shortly refer to the facts in that case. The landlords were alleging that they required the premises in question for a man called Schuler who, they said, was a workman engaged in their whole-time employment. They had arranged in February, 1945, with Schuler for him to come into their employment, but that was not a contract for the immediate beginning of work because Schuler was under a contract with somebody else and that contract persisted until Apr. 16, 1945, which was the first day on which he became free to work for the landlords. The hearing in the county court took place on May 2, 1945. The plaintiff was issued on Mar. 20, 1945, on which day it was manifest that Schuler could not have begun his work because he was still under contract with his former employer. It is also clear that by May 2 the contract to engage him which had been made in the preceding February became capable of practical fulfilment because by Apr. 16 he was free and, therefore, at the date of the hearing, he was not merely under the contract which had been come to long before, but was actually engaged in the work which the contract contemplated. The argument was that the relevant date for ascertaining whether he was engaged or not was the date of the plaintiff, but the court negatived that. On the subject of engagement there were some observations of MACKINNON, L.J., and MORTON, L.J., which I must read. MACKINNON, L.J., says this ([1945] 2 All E.R. 433, 435):

The word "engaged" is deplorably ambiguous. An employer "engages" a servant when he makes an agreement with him for his services. A workman is "engaged" on work when he is actually carrying it out. In fact "engage" of a master has an entirely different meaning to "engaged in" of a workman. In the phrase we are concerned with the use is of the workman. I do not find it necessary to express a final opinion on the point, but I am inclined to think that it was not until Apr. 16, 1945, that Schuler became a "person engaged" in the whole-time employment of the plaintiffs, however obvious it may be that the plaintiffs had "engaged" Schuler long before that date.

In that case it so happened that the date as from which Schuler was able to begin his work coincided with the date when he actually did begin his work. Here the date on which Wilson was engaged to begin his work was Sept. 10, but that on which he actually began work was later, the postponement not being due to a suspension or cancellation of the contract of engagement, but simply to his ill-health. The reasoning of the county court judge would have prevented the landlords getting possession if Wilson had only been in bed for a week with a cold. In point of fact his illness was longer because it involved an operation, but that does not affect the contract. The facts are quite different from those in reference to which the observations of MACKINNON, L.J., were made in the Benninga case (1). I think myself that MORTON, L.J., and MACKINNON, L.J., mean precisely the same thing, but I find in the actual language used by MORTON, L.J., a slightly clearer exposition of the point. What he says is this (ibid., 436):

There can be no doubt that Schuler was a person engaged in the whole-time employment of the plaintiff company from Apr. 16, 1945, onwards.

That, of course, was the date on which he became free from his existing engagement, and on which, in fact, he did commence his work because he, unlike Wilson, did not suffer from any temporary indisposition. MORTON, L.J., goes on:

It is, therefore, unnecessary to decide whether he answered this description at an earlier date, but I think that he did not, for the reasons stated by MACKINNON, L.J. . . . It seems to me that from February to April, 1945, Schuler had been engaged for whole-time employment in the future by the plaintiff company but was engaged in the whole-time employment of other persons.

To emphasise the distinction, the word "for" and the word "in" are printed in italics, which, no doubt, represented the Lord Justice's own underlining in the script of his judgment, but it brings out this point. It was true that under the February arrangement Schuler was engaged for employment and under a contract for that purpose, but he was not engaged in the employment until he was free from his existing contract. It seems to me that, once this is appreciated, the county court judge's interpretation is one which cannot be supported. In my judgment, on the facts of this case, at the relevant date—the date of the hearing in the county court—Wilson was engaged in the whole-time employment of the landlords.

The county court judge having found all other relevant facts in favour of the landlords, that would be an end of the matter but for one circumstance which I ought to mention. The tenant, who was successful in the county court, has not appeared before us. Counsel for the landlords, with great propriety, called our attention to a matter which had happened since the judgment, and the matter was this. He told us that Wilson commenced work on Oct. 30—that is, the day after the judgment was delivered, but, for some reason which we do not know, he terminated his employment on Nov. 5. It does not appear exactly how it was terminated, but one thing is clear—at the date of the hearing there was no current notice to determine the contract of engagement. Counsel informed us of that fact because he thought it was right that we should know it, but he argued, and, in my opinion, correctly, that it does not entitle us to re-examine the questions of fact which the judge decided, particularly the question of reasonableness. I must not be taken as expressing any opinion, but if, at the date of the hearing in such a case as this, the man for whom the house is required is under notice given or received determining the engagement, it may be that the county court judge would be right in holding that he could not be described as being engaged in the whole-time employment of the employer. I say nothing about it one way or the other. I merely call attention to the point. Another question which might arise in those circumstances was whether it would be reasonable at the date of the hearing to make the order, but no circumstance of that kind existed here. On the evidence before him, the judge came to a finding of fact which it was essential for him to decide, namely, the matter of reasonableness, and on the evidence there is no question that he had ample jurisdiction to come to such a conclusion. Indeed, I should have been surprised if he had not.

What is the position of this court? On the facts as they existed at the hearing and as found by the judge, once the judge's error of law, if I may respectfully say so, is put right, the order would automatically follow, but something happened after the hearing which, if it had happened before the hearing took place, might have led the county court judge to take a different view from that which he did take on the facts. Ought this court to pay regard to some matter which has happened since the hearing which, if it had happened before the hearing, might have affected the judge's findings of fact? In my judgment, this court cannot take into account such subsequent matters of fact. If it did so, it would be setting itself up as a judge of fact on a matter which the legislature has put into the hands of the county court judge, and as to which, if the county court judge, on adequate legal evidence, has decided, this court has no jurisdiction whatever to interfere with his decision. The only thing that this court could ever do in such a case as that, if it was right to take such a matter into account, would be to send the action back to the county court judge to decide the issues of fact in the light of the new circumstances. That, as it seems to me, would be intolerable, because there would never be finality. It seems to me that, once one allows this court to examine new facts which have taken place after the judgment on which itself it is not competent to judge, one would completely lose all finality, and nobody would know where he was. It might be suggested that this court, which on appeal would be making the order, ought not to make it unless it were satisfied as to the reasonableness of making it. In my judgment, when s. 3 (1) of the Act speaks of the court being satisfied that it is reasonable to make an order, it means that the tribunal of fact must be satisfied that it is reasonable to make an order. Once the tribunal of fact is so satisfied on adequate evidence, the competence of this court to dabble in that matter is completely ruled out.

That conclusion seems to me to be quite consistent with one aspect of the matter to which I will just refer. It is to be noted that the conditions of engagement relating to the new tenant under the provisions of para. (g) do not contemplate or require an engagement of any particular duration. In other words, the person engaged, for whom the house is obtained, might, as events turn out, give notice a day after the order for possession has been made. The employees of the type contemplated would be those engaged on a weekly contract, and the legislature must have realised that it might happen (and I have no doubt in many cases it does happen) that a landlord would get possession under this section, and then for some reason, perhaps a day, perhaps a week, perhaps a month afterwards, the contract of employment would come to an end and the house would no longer be required for that tenant. If the condition of engagement had been that it was to last for not less than six months, or something of the kind, then one would have something much more solid, but once one comes to the conclusion, as one must, that this provision applies whether the engagement is a weekly engagement or one for six months or a year, the right of the landlord to obtain possession is not to be taken away because the very next day the contract of engagement may be brought to an end. In the present case I think this court is bound by the position as it existed at the date of the hearing.

In the result, the appeal must be allowed, and an order made for possession, but we ought to consider to what extent and subject to what conditions we will make an order, remembering the provisions of the relevant section of the principal Rent Act, the Act of 1920, s. 5, which provides that at the time of making an order "(2) . . . the court may . . . suspend execution on any such order or judgment, or postpone the date of possession, for such period or periods as it thinks fit, and subject to such conditions (if any) in regard to payment by the tenant of arrears of rent. . ." The conclusion to which I have come is that the landlords are entitled to their order, but in view of the facts existing at this moment I think that this court is entitled to consider whether or not any terms should be attached to it. Whether or not the landlord has a new employee ready to move in, I do not know. It may be he has; it may be he has not. What seems to me to be the proper form of order to make is an order for possession within one month, with a right to either party to apply to the county court judge for an extension of the time. What I am saying now is in no sense to deprive the county court judge of his discretion, but it might be that, if the month comes to an end and the landlords have not a new employee to put in, the tenant may say: "Would it not be reasonable to give me longer time?" On the other hand, the landlords may have engaged a man who will be ready to move in at the end of the month, which means the landlords could say that the month ought not to be extended. That is the sort of point—not the only sort of point—which might come up for the consideration of the county court judge if either party were to apply under the order which I propose.

WROTTESELEY, L.J.: I agree.

EVERSHED, L.J.: I agree. As we are differing from the careful judgment of the county court judge I will add a few sentences of my own. The learned county court judge, as my Lord has pointed out, read the observations in the Benninga case (1) as compelling him to conclude that the landlords must fail because their servant, Wilson, was, though under contract, not actually working at the material date, namely, the date of the hearing. For my part I do not think that the observations of MACKINNON, L.J., and MORTON, L.J., lead to any such view of the construction of the material terms of para. (g). In any case, in my judgment, Wilson, was, according to the ordinary acceptation of the English language, in fact at the material time engaged in the whole-time employment of the landlords. He was then under an existing obligation by contract to work whole-time for the landlords, though he was not able to work owing to illness. In my judgment, the latter fact does not negative the view that he was engaged at that time in the whole-time employment of the landlords, just as much as he would have been if on the material date he had happened to be away on a holiday. It seems to me that, if one asks the question, say, of a postal worker whether he is engaged in the whole-time employment of the Crown, the answer cannot be in the negative merely because on the day on which one asks the question the worker happens to be away ill or on his holiday. I venture to think that the learned county court judge misread the language which he cited, though it is, no doubt, true that one sentence particularly, in MACKINNON, L.J.'s judgment, might have led at first sight to the other conclusion.

On the other matter I confess that I have myself felt some difficulty in regard to the exact extent of the obligation imposed on this court by s. 3 (1) of the Act of 1933 on an appeal by a landlord. It has been said many times that proof of the relevant facts under para. (g), or under the other paragraphs of sched. I to that Act, is necessary in order to give the court jurisdiction to make an order, but that the court, in making an order, has in addition to satisfy itself that it is reasonable to make that order. However, in my judgment, the order proposed by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS is, in the circumstances of this case, the order the court ought to make, and I say that, having particular regard to the finding of the learned county court judge that at the date of the hearing it was reasonable to make an order for possession as asked for by the landlord.

Appeal allowed with costs in both courts.

Solicitor: Wilfrid R. Lush (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BALDWIN v. GURNSEY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), June 9, 1948.]

Housing—Registration of living accommodation—Exclusion of Rent Restrictions Acts—Householder not in physical occupation of premises at date of registration—Relative dates of letting and registration—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927) (as amended by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452, and S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1622), reg. 68CB (1), (6).

On Feb. 14, 1946, the owner of premises, who was contemplating going abroad, made a provisional agreement, which was not intended to be binding until she received an appointment to employment abroad, to let a part of her premises to the tenant for occupation as a dwelling-house. On Feb. 22, 1946, the owner registered that part of the premises with the local housing authority, under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB (added by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452), as living accommodation available for occupation by tenants or lodgers. At that date the only physical occupation which the owner had of the premises was that the rooms other than those registered contained her furniture. Subsequently, she obtained her appointment, and the tenant went into occupation of the rooms. The owner, having served a valid notice to quit, now sought possession of the part of the premises so let, but the tenant claimed the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. Regulation 68CB provides: "(1) Where a local housing authority have established a register for the purposes of this regulation, any person having in any dwelling in the area of the authority occupied by him living accommodation which he is willing to make available . . . for occupation by tenants or lodgers, may apply to the authority for registration of the accommodation . . . (6) No accommodation registered for the purposes of this regulation which has been let in accordance with the registered terms and conditions shall, as respects that letting, be treated as a dwelling-house to which the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939, apply. . ."

HELD: (i) at the time of the registration the owner had a sufficient occupation of the premises to allow of registration under reg. 68CB, for the word "occupied" in para. (1) of the regulation related to the kind of occupation which was required for rating purposes and not to the physical occupation which was required in the case of a tenant claiming the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts.

(ii) since the binding agreement for letting (as distinct from the provisional agreement of Feb. 14, 1946) took place after the registration under the regulation, para. (6) had effect, the premises let were not a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied, and the owner was entitled to possession.

Per COHEN, L.J.: So long as a registration under reg. 68CB (1) remains in force, para. (6) of that regulation has effect.

Quære: whether, if premises were registered, the validity of the registration could be challenged in proceedings for possession.

[FOR THE DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 68CB., see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, pp. 1045-1046].

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE TEMPLE MORRIS, K.C., at Swansea County Court, dated Nov. 10, 1947.

In an action for possession of part of a dwelling-house which had been registered under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB (added by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452), the tenant claimed the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts on the grounds (a) that the registration was not good because the landlord was not in occupation of the premises at the time of the registration, within the meaning of para. (1) of the regulation, and (b) that the registration was subsequent to the letting. The county court judge held that there was no binding agreement to let until after the registration, and that the landlord was in occupation of the premises at the date of the registration within the meaning of the regulation, and he made an order for possession. On an appeal by the tenant, the Court of Appeal now upheld the decision of the county court judge and dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment.

V. Ruston (for Stephen Benson) for the tenant.
C. A. Morgan Blake for the landlord.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE TEMPLE MORRIS whereby he made an order for possession of part of certain premises to take effect within 28 days. The part of the premises which were let consisted of a kitchen and bedroom together with the general use of the scullery. Notice to quit was duly given and no question arises with regard to that. The whole question is whether or not these premises are taken out of the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts by reason of the fact that they were registered under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB, (which was added as from Nov. 16, 1945, by S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1452). The facts as found by the learned judge were these. The landlord was contemplating going abroad to Germany where she hoped to get a position under the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Association, and, therefore, she was willing for a short period of time to let part of the dwelling-house of which she was the owner. Accordingly, she availed herself of the provisions of reg. 68CB and registered the rooms under that regulation. Before she registered the rooms, she had come to an arrangement with the tenant which the learned judge describes in these words:

I accept the evidence of the plaintiff [the landlord] and I find the following facts—that on Feb. 14, 1946, she agreed to let to the defendant the accommodation now occupied by the defendant, but it was an agreement to let subject to the plaintiff receiving an appointment with U.N.R.R.A. which she subsequently received, and, when she received her appointment, she confirmed and made the agreement which she had provisionally agreed to do when she went abroad. The plaintiff registered the premises on Feb. 22, 1946. The rooms subsequently let to the defendant were unoccupied on February 23, 1946. The plaintiff went abroad in March, 1946. The defendant went into occupation on Mar. 8, 1946.

Before dealing further with the case, it is necessary to refer to the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 68CB:

(1) Where a local housing authority have established a register for the purposes of this regulation, any person having in any dwelling in the area of the authority occupied by him living accommodation which he is willing to make available, whether with or without furniture for use therein, for occupation by tenants or lodgers, may apply to the authority for registration of the accommodation and of the terms on which the householder is willing to make it available as aforesaid. (2) On application being made under the last foregoing paragraph the local housing authority shall, if they are satisfied that the accommodation is, or will be rendered, suitable for occupation as aforesaid and approve the said terms, enter the accommodation and terms in the register, together with any conditions as to the number of persons to occupy the accommodation, the use of furniture or other facilities or otherwise as the authority may think requisite: Provided that the authority shall not be required to register any accommodation, and may cancel the registration of any accommodation, if it appears to them that it would be likely to be made available for occupation as aforesaid without being registered under this regulation.

Paragraph (3) contains a provision with regard to cancellation of the registration:

... on the application of the person for the time being entitled, subject to the rights over the accommodation of any tenant or lodger, to occupy the dwelling in which it is comprised.

Then there are other provisions in paras. (4) and (5) which are not material to the present appeal and we come to para. (6):

No accommodation registered for the purposes of this regulation which has been let in accordance with the registered terms and conditions shall, as respects that letting, be treated as a dwelling-house to which the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939, apply; and in determining for the purposes of those Acts the standard rent of any dwelling-house no regard shall be had to any such letting of such accommodation.

The first point made by counsel for the tenant is that, at the time when these premises were registered by the landlord, she was not in occupation of them, because the evidence showed that the only occupation she had then was that the rooms in the premises other than the rooms subsequently let to the tenant contained her furniture. It is said by counsel for the tenant that the procedure for registration under reg. 68CB can only properly take place when the person seeking to register is physically in occupation of the premises. In my view, that argument is not open to the tenant so long as the registration, which has, in fact, taken place, subsists and has not been cancelled. I think para. (6) of reg. 68CB applies so long as there is in force a registration, and the only way to get rid of a registration, if it is not properly made, is to take the requisite proceedings under the regulation to get it cancelled, but, however that may be, I think that the presence of the landlord's furniture in the other rooms of the house would, for the purposes of the regulation, amount to an occupation within the meaning of para. (1). I do not think that the kind of occupation envisaged by reg. 68CB is the physical occupation which is required in the case of a tenant who is claiming the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. This is a regulation speaking of "householders" and giving certain powers to the local authority. I think that the meaning of the word "occupied" is similar to the kind of occupation which is required for rating purposes and is not confined to the physical occupation of the applicant.

The next point made by counsel for the tenant is that, in any event, on its proper construction para. (6) of reg. 68CB only succeeds in excluding the Rent Restrictions Acts if the letting in question is subsequent to the registration, and, on the true view of this case, the landlord let these premises before she registered them. If that were so, I think that counsel for the tenant would succeed, but the difficulty is that the "letting" depends entirely on the evidence of the landlord and the tenant with regard to the conversations which had taken place between them, and there is nothing in writing. Having heard the evidence, the learned judge found certain facts. I have already cited the passage in which he set out his finding and I merely re-read it for the purpose of emphasising the fact that he has found what the agreement was :

... on Feb. 14, 1946, she agreed to let to the defendant the accommodation now occupied by the defendant, but it was an agreement to let subject to the plaintiff receiving an appointment with U.N.R.R.A. which she subsequently received, and, when she received her appointment, she confirmed and made the agreement which she had provisionally agreed to do when she went abroad.

This finding of fact that there was on Feb. 14 a provisional agreement only and that it was made subject to the landlord obtaining an appointment puts counsel for the tenant out of court on that point. For these reasons, I think that the appeal fails.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree. I would like to base my conclusion solely on the ground that the premises were occupied by the landlord within the meaning of reg. 68CB (1). TUCKER, L.J., referred to the argument whether, if the premises are, as a matter of writing, on the register, the registration can be disputed in inter partes proceedings such as these. I express no opinion on that. I would like to reserve the question whether, if it could be shown by proper evidence that the registration was irregular, the tenant might be able to make that point in proceedings of this kind or whether he would have to take other proceedings to get the premises removed from the register.

COHEN, L.J. : I prefer to base my reason for rejecting the argument of counsel for the tenant solely on the ground that, in my view, so long as the registration remains in force, one cannot get away from the effect of para. (6) of reg. 68CB. I am not dissenting in the least from the view my brothers have formed, but I have not come to a conclusion on it and prefer to reserve my views on that subject until the time comes when it is necessary for me to come to a conclusion. So far as the second point is concerned, I only desire to add that the only fair reading of the learned judge's judgment is that he took the view that no binding agreement was intended to be made between the parties before the registration. The landlord stated plainly that she told the tenant that she was registering the rooms with the local authority. If she did that, it is wholly inconsistent with any binding agreement before she had done so. For these reasons I agree that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Rhys Roberts & Co., agents for Myer Cohen & Co., Cardiff (for the tenant) ; John B. Purchase & Clark, agents for D. O. Thomas & Co., Swansea (for the landlord).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHAW v. ROOTES SECURITIES, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Somervell, L.JJ., and Romer, J.), May 28, June 15, 1948.]

Workmen's Compensation—Compensation—Calculation of weekly payments—Change in rates of remuneration—Alteration in working hours—Same wage paid for 44 hours week as previously paid for 47 hours week, with same rates of overtime as before—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1).

By the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, s. 6 (1): "For the purpose of calculating—(a) any weekly payment payable under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1925 to 1943 . . . the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident shall, if and whenever a change occurs after the date of the accident in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed during the relevant period before the accident, be deemed, so long as the changed rates obtain without further change, to be the average weekly earnings which he would have earned during that period if the changed rates had obtained throughout that period."

In 1943 a workman employed in engineering was injured in an accident arising out of and in the course of her employment. Her pre-accident average weekly earnings were £3 10s. based on an average of 57 hours worked a week, and in 1946, on proceedings to review under s. 6 of the Act of 1943, they were fixed by agreement at £4 2s. 6d. By an industrial arbitration award made in June, 1946, to take effect from Jan. 1, 1947, the pay for women workers in engineering was fixed at 62s. 6d. for a 44 hours week, instead of 62s. 6d. for a 47 hours week. Overtime remained payable at time and a third for the first 2 hours and time and a half thereafter. On an application by the workman for a further re-adjustment in her weekly payment, it was contended by the employers that the basic weekly wage rate had remained unchanged at 62s. 6d. and the rates for overtime were as before, and, therefore, there was merely an alteration in working hours resulting in an increase in the remuneration actually received in respect of the same number of total hours worked, and no change in the "rates of remuneration," within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act:—

HELD [SOMERVELL, L.J., dissenting]: the alteration in the hours required to be worked in order to earn the weekly wage of 62s. 6d., with the consequent payment at overtime rates for the 45th, 46th and 47th hours worked [i.e., time and a third for the 45th and 46th hours and time and a half for the 47th hour] and the increase in the overtime rate from time and a third to time and a half for the 48th and 49th hours, constituted a change in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed during the relevant period, within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1943.

[AS TO FLUCTUATION OF WAGE RATES, see HALSBURY, 1947 Supplement, Workmen's Compensation, para. 1306.]

FOR THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1943, s. 6, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, pp. 189, 190.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hill v. Wolverhampton Corrugated Iron Co., Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 72; [1939] 2 K.B. 469; 108 L.J.K.B. 536; 161 L.T. 6; 32 B.W.C.C. 129; Digest Supp.
- (2) Trawlers (Grimsby), Ltd. v. Crouchen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 253; 36 B.W.C.C. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Paterson v. William Beardmore & Co., Ltd., [1948] W.N. 175.

APPEAL by the employers from an award of His Honour JUDGE TUCKER, made at Hanley and Stoke-on-Trent County Court, and dated Feb. 20, 1948.

The workman, who was entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, claimed a re-adjustment of her weekly payments under s. 6 of the Act of 1943, on the ground that there had been a change in the rates of remuneration in the class of employment in which she had been employed by reason of an industrial arbitration award whereby the weekly wage of 62s. 6d. was to be payable for a 44 hours week instead of for a 47 hours week and the overtime rates were to remain as they were. The employers contended that there had been no change in the rates of remuneration within the meaning of s. 6, but the county court judge made his award in favour of the workman. The employers appealed, but their appeal was now dismissed by the Court of Appeal (SOMERVELL, L.J., dissenting). The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Beney, K.C., Neil Lawson and Garrard for the employers.

M. E. Holdsworth for the workman.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 15. The following judgments were read.

TUCKER, L.J.: This appeal from an award of His Honour JUDGE TUCKER, sitting as an arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, raises a question as to the construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, s. 6. The relevant parts of this section are as follows:

(1) For the purpose of calculating—(a) any weekly payment payable under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1925 to 1943 . . . the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident shall, if and whenever a change occurs after the date of the accident in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed during the relevant period before the accident, be deemed, so long as the changed rates obtain without further change, to be the average weekly earnings which he would have earned during that period if the changed rates had obtained throughout that period.

On Feb. 23, 1943, the workman, the applicant in the arbitration proceedings, was injured in an accident arising out of and in the course of her employment as a machine worker with the employers (the present appellants) whereby she lost the second, third and fourth fingers of her right hand. Her pre-accident average weekly earnings were £3 10s. based on an average of 57 hours worked a week. She was paid full compensation on this basis until April, 1946, when she obtained employment with Woolworths, Ltd., at £2 10s. a week. She then received compensation at the rate of half the difference. Thereafter there were a series of rises in her wages which reduced her compensation, and on Sept. 28, 1947, her wages became £3 10s. Meanwhile, her pre-accident wages had been twice re-adjusted as a result of proceedings to review under s. 6 of the Act of 1943—in April and May of 1946, on which latter occasion they were fixed by agreement at £4 2s. 6d. In the present proceedings she claimed a further re-adjustment as from Jan. 1, 1947, consequent on an industrial arbitration award whereby it was alleged that there had been a change in the rate of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which she was employed during the relevant period before the accident, bringing the revised pre-accident average earnings to £4 8s. 6d. The change effected by the award was that the pay for women workers in engineering was fixed at 62s. 6d. for a 44 hours week, instead of 62s. 6d. for a 47 hours week, and overtime remained payable at the rate of one and a third for the first two hours and time and a half thereafter, with double time for Sunday work. The question is whether this alteration in the hours required to be worked in order to earn the weekly wage of 62s. 6d., with the consequent payment at overtime rates for the 45th, 46th and 47th hours worked and the increase in the overtime rate from one and a third to one and a half for the 48th and 49th hours, constitutes a change in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed during the relevant period. The learned county court judge has answered this question in the affirmative, and, in my opinion, he was right.

The argument for the employers is that the basic weekly wage rate has remained unchanged at 62s. 6d. and the rates of overtime for the first two and the subsequent hours remain at one and a third and one and a half as before, and all that has happened is that there has been an alteration in working hours which has resulted in an increase in the remuneration actually received in respect of the same number of total hours worked as distinct from a change resulting from the alteration of a previously fixed "rate" of remuneration, which means the quantum per unit of time. I think that the words "rates of remuneration" in s. 6 of the Act of 1943 should be construed broadly and given the meaning which they would naturally convey to a worker or employer in industry. If a man receives 62s. 6d. for working 44 hours instead of 47 and is paid at overtime rates for the extra 3 hours, I think that both he and his employer would naturally refer to the change as an alteration in working hours which has produced a change in the rates of remuneration, and that it would be putting too narrow and legalistic an interpretation on the language to say that there was no rate per hour for the extra three hours when they were included in the normal working week because the contract between the parties provided for a week's work at a weekly wage and, therefore, there has been no change. With regard to the 48th and 49th hours the position appears reasonably clear. Here there has been a change in the overtime rate from one and a third to one and a half, and it seems to me no answer to say: "Yes, but the rate fixed for the first two and subsequent hours of overtime remain unchanged." When you come to apply the formula to the two hours in question, the result is a change in the rate of remuneration applicable to those two hours which have always been overtime hours. I would agree that a mere change in the hours of a working week where no question of overtime is involved would not constitute a change in the rate of remuneration. It is, however, essential in the present case to remember that we are bound to apply the change to the average 57 hours per week in fact worked by the workman before her accident, and this necessarily involves applying overtime rates to hours which did not previously carry overtime rates.

We were referred to three authorities, namely, Hill v. Wolverhampton Corrugated Iron Co., Ltd. (1), Trawlers (Grimsby), Ltd. v. Crouchen (2) and Paterson v. William Beardmore & Co., Ltd. (3), a recent decision of the House of Lords in a Scottish case. The first two of these cases were decisions under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 11 (3), now repealed and replaced by s. 6 of the Act of 1943, and the recent House of Lords case was a decision approving the two earlier English decisions of the Court of Appeal in so far as they were applicable to that case, which fell to be dealt with under s. 6 of the Act of 1943. I do not think it is necessary to refer to these authorities as they do not seem to me to touch the point which calls for decision in the present appeal. For these reasons, I think this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: In this case the words that have to be construed are the words in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, s. 6:

... whenever a change occurs after the date of the accident in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed ...

If the remuneration for a particular piece of work is put up from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d., or if, the working week remaining unaltered, wages are raised from £3 to £4 or lowered from £4 to £3, there is clearly a change in the rates of remuneration. Suppose, however, a working week is reduced from 48 hours to 42, the wages being reduced from 96s. to 84s., is there such a change? The workman is still getting 2s. per hour, but he is getting 12s. less per week. In the present case, the normal working week was reduced from 47 hours to 44, the same wage £3 2s. 6d. being paid for the 44 hours as were paid for the 47. Is this a change in the rates of remuneration? The answer seems to me to depend on whether the rate of remuneration is properly expressed as a rate for a week or for so many hours in a week. If the former, then I think a reduction of working hours, though it gives the workman more spare time, leaves unaffected his rate of remuneration which is a weekly rate. In a case such as this, where the wage was clearly a weekly wage, this seems to me to be the natural and ordinary meaning of the words. An agricultural worker paid on a weekly basis works longer hours in summer than in winter for the same wage. I would not have said that there is a change in his rate of remuneration as between summer and winter. I would have said his rate of wages is the same, but he works shorter hours in winter. A domestic servant is engaged on the basis of having so much "time off" in the week. The employer increases the amount of time off, the wages, which I am assuming are expressed on a weekly or monthly basis, remaining unchanged. I would say there was no change in the servant's rate of remuneration. Suppose, on the other hand, the rate was a rate per hour. If the number of hours the man is to work are reduced, the rate remaining the same, there would be no change in the rate though less would be earned in the course of the day. If the reduction was accompanied by an increase in the rate, then there would be a change, although he might at the end of each day or week draw exactly the same sum as he did before the reduction.

I have so far considered the issue without regard to the question of overtime. In the present case, the workman before the accident worked 10 hours overtime in addition to the 47 hours week. The overtime rates have not been altered, but under the present arrangement anyone who works more than 44 hours moves into the overtime scale. Here again, I would have said that there is no change in the rate of remuneration for overtime. There is a change, but not a change in the rate. The overtime rates become applicable after a shorter working week.

If one takes the simple cases cited at the beginning of this judgment, the section produces a logical result. If the man had not been injured, he could at the relevant date be earning those higher rates. The consequent loss is a result of his injury. If, however, one takes the case of the reduction of a working week, it does not in the least follow that the workman, if uninjured, would be working an amount of overtime which would bring him up to the old hours, but the effect of the construction put forward on behalf of the workman would necessitate this assumption. The point is not an easy one, and, having regard to the conclusions come to by my brethren, I need not say that I have doubts as to the correctness of my own opinion. If it had been intended to cover reductions of the working week by the words used, I would have expected this to be stated expressly as, in my opinion, it falls outside the ordinary meaning of the words. The learned county court judge based his conclusion on the fact that after the change a person was paid the same sum for 44 hours as previously for 47 hours, and this was a change in the rate of remuneration. This is, as it seems to me, to treat a weekly wage as if it was a wage payable weekly per hour worked. It is possible so to regard it, but I do not think, for the reasons I have given, that this is its natural sense.

In the two cases to which we were referred, Hill v. Wolverhampton Corrugated Iron Co., Ltd. (1) and Trawlers (Grimsby), Ltd. v. Crouchen (2), emphasis is laid on the fact that a change in weekly earnings is not necessarily a change in the rates of remuneration. I do not think that they assist in solving the present problem. For these reasons I would allow the appeal.

ROMER, J.: The question in the appeal is whether, by reason of the industrial arbitration award of June, 1946, a change occurred in the rates of remuneration obtaining among female machine workers. If no such change occurred, it follows that the rates of remuneration remained the same. Were, then, the rates of remuneration obtaining among female machine workers the same after the award became operative as those that had obtained before? In my opinion, a comparison between the two rates shows that they were not the same. Before the award, an operative was paid 62s. 6d. for 47 hours of work in a week. Overtime was not paid until the 48th hour of work had been reached, and, accordingly, was not earned by any worker who thought that, if she worked for the standard week, then she had worked enough. To those of more industrious inclinations time and a third was payable for the 48th and 49th hours, and time and a half for the 50th and subsequent hours. After the award, the worker who had considered that 47 hours a week of work was enough found that, without in any way revising that view, or working any longer, she was earning as much as had previously been earned by a fellow operative whose weekly hours of work had averaged 50. Is, then, 62s. 6d. for 47 hours' work a week, and overtime for subsequent hours, the same "rate of remuneration" as 62s. 6d. for 44 hours' work, and overtime for subsequent hours? I should have thought myself that it was not the same rate at all, but that it was, on the contrary, a change in the rates of remuneration payable to the worker, and none the less because it resulted from an alteration in her working hours.

As a result of the award two alterations occurred, one irrelevant to present purposes, the other relevant. The irrelevant alteration was that a workwoman who now works only 44 hours would not, as formerly, be breaking her contract with her employers. The relevant alteration relates to the remuneration payable to her (a) if she works her contractual 44 hours, and (b) if she works for more than the 44 hours. Taking (b) first, it seems to me reasonably plain that there has been a change in the rate of remuneration for the first 5 excess hours which she works, for she is paid more money, and on a different basis of remuneration, in respect of each of them than she was paid before. The case of (a) is more doubtful, but I think the result is the same, for a reward of 62s. 6d. for 44 hours' work is, in my view, a different "rate of remuneration" from a reward of 62s. 6d. for 47 hours' work. In order to see the position rightly on the facts of the present case one has to consider two factors, namely, the remuneration paid and the work by which it is earned. To describe the latter as a week's work, or work for a week, is, as I think, no description at all. The term week, or working week, is meaningless unless one knows of what the week, or working week, consists, and, unless one does know that, there is nothing that can be related to the other factor, the remuneration which is paid, for any purpose at all—whether for inquiry (irrelevant on this appeal) whether the remuneration is adequate or inadequate, or whether (and this is what concerns us) a change in the remuneration has occurred. A

It is for this reason that I cannot accept the employers' argument to the effect that, as there has been no change either in the remuneration for "the week," or in the quantum of remuneration for overtime work, therefore no change has occurred for the purposes of s. 6 of the Act of 1943. The argument is founded on a view which is, I think, erroneous, namely, that, because there has been no change in the standard time rate per week, the change in the standard time itself must, therefore, be regarded as irrelevant. To my mind, the duration of the standard time per week is just as relevant to the solution of the present problem as the quantum of the remuneration which is paid in respect of it. Prima facie, a reduction of a weekly wage by one-tenth would amount to a change in the rate of remuneration within s. 6. If, however, inquiry reveals that the working time for the week had been reduced in the same proportion, it would follow that no such change had occurred. For the above reasons, I am in favour of dismissing the appeal. B

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Berrymans, agents for T. Haynes Duffell & Son, Birmingham (for the employers); Preston, Lane-Claypon & O'Kelly, agents for Hollinshead & Moody, Tunstall, Staffs. (for the workman). C

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] D E

DYDE v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD (STAFFORD COLLIERY UNIT).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), May 31, June 15, 1948.] F

Workmen's Compensation—Award—Appeal—"Decision" on question of law—Finding of arbitrator forming the basis of an award—Workman's notional pre-accident average weekly earnings—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), sched I, para. 4.

Workmen's Compensation—Compensation—Calculation of weekly payments—Change in rates of remuneration—Miner paid a rate per shift—Normal working week reduced from 6 shifts, paid at rate of 25s. per shift, to 5 consecutive shifts, paid at rate of 25s. per shift, with a bonus of 25s. if full qualifying 5 shifts worked—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1). G

A workman employed as a coal cutter gave up work on Oct. 28, 1945, on account of illness, and on July 21, 1947, he was certified by a medical board as partially disabled by pneumoconiosis, an industrial disease within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 43. Before his notional accident, he had been paid at the rate of 25s. a shift, the normal working week consisting at that time of 6 shifts. By an agreement, dated Apr. 18, 1947, and made between the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers, a 5 days week was introduced into the coal mining industry as from May 5, 1947, and the normal working week was to consist of 5 consecutive shifts, paid at the same rate as before, with a bonus for H those who worked the full qualifying 5 shifts. The result of the agreement was that the workman would have received 25s. per shift for 5 shifts, plus a further 25s. by way of bonus, which would have resulted in a rate of 30s. per shift, i.e., a total of £7 10s. for 5 shifts actually worked. In making his award under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, the arbitrator found that the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, had resulted in a change in the rate of the workman's remuneration, within s. 6 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, and that, as a result of the agreement, the workman's revised or notional pre-accident average weekly earnings were £8 4s. 6d. a week. The employers appealed from the finding which was the basis of the award, but did not appeal from the actual order whereby the arbitrator ordered them to pay certain sums to the workman.

By sched. I, para. 4, to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925: "The Arbitration Act, 1889, shall not apply to any arbitration under this Act; but a committee or an arbitrator may, if they or he think fit, submit any question of law for the decision of the judge of the county court, and the decision of the judge on any question of law, either on such submission, or in any case where he himself settles the matter under this Act, or where he gives any decision or makes any order under this Act, shall be final, unless within the time and in accordance with the conditions prescribed by rules of the Supreme Court either party appeals to the Court of Appeal . . ."

HELD: (i) the arbitrator's finding that the workman's revised or notional pre-accident average weekly earnings were £8 4s. 6d. was a "decision" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, sched. 1, para. 4, and formed part of his award, and, accordingly, an appeal lay from the decision.

(ii) the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, as applied to the shifts worked by the workman, resulted in a change in the rate of his remuneration, within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1943.

Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd. (ante p. 168) distinguished by SOMERVELL, L.J.

[AS TO FLUCTUATION OF WAGE RATES, see HALSBURY, 1947 Supplement, Workmen's Compensation, para. 1306.

FOR THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1943, s. 6, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 36, pp. 189, 190.]

Case referred to:

(1) Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd., ante p. 168.

APPEAL by the employers from an award of His Honour JUDGE TUCKER, made at Hanley and Stoke-upon-Trent County Court, and dated Jan. 8, 1948.

In making an award under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, the county court judge based the award on a finding that there had been a change in the rate of the workman's remuneration within the meaning of s 6 of the Act of 1943 as a result of an agreement, dated Apr. 18, 1947, and made between the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers whereby the normal working week was reduced from 6 shifts to 5 shifts, paid at the same rate a shift as before, but with a bonus for those who worked the full qualifying 5 shifts. The employers appealed from this finding of the judge, but not from the actual order to pay the workman the sums set out in the award, and a preliminary point was taken whether an appeal lay from a finding which was the basis of an award. The Court of Appeal now held that an appeal lay, and confirmed the decision of the county court judge. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Beney, K.C., G. F. Sunderland and Neil Lawson for the employers.

Paull, K.C., and Henry Burton for the workman.

Cur. adv. vult.
June 15. The following judgments were read.

TUCKER, L.J.: This appeal involves a similar question to that which arose in Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd. (1), in which we have just delivered judgment. Before dealing with the main issue, it is necessary to refer shortly to a preliminary point, which counsel for the workman brought to our notice, to the effect that the matter complained of in the appeal formed no part of the arbitrator's award, and that, as there is no appeal from his actual order whereby he ordered the employers to pay to the workman the sums set out in paras. 1 and 2 of his award, the appeal relates to matters which do not at present arise, and that, consequently, this court might not think it right to embark on an appeal which is really hypothetical.

The award begins as follows :

Having duly considered the matter submitted to me, I do hereby make my award as follows : Whereas I find the applicant's revised or notional pre-accident average weekly earnings (pursuant to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943) are £8 4s. 6d. per week. And whereas I find the applicant's earning capacity in the open labour market as from June 19, 1947, was, and is, £3 10s. (1) I order that the [employers] . . .

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, sched. I, para. 4, dealing with appeals, provides :

The Arbitration Act, 1889, shall not apply to any arbitration under this Act ; but a committee or an arbitrator may, if they or he think fit, submit any question of law for the decision of the judge of the county court, and the decision of the judge on any question of law, either on such submission, or in any case where he himself settles the matter under this Act, or where he gives any decision or makes any order under this Act, shall be final, unless within the time and in accordance with the conditions prescribed by rules of the Supreme Court either party appeals to the Court of Appeal . . .

We were of opinion that the arbitrator's finding that the workman's revised or notional pre-accident average weekly earnings are £8 4s. 6d. was a "decision" within the meaning of para. 4 of the schedule and formed part of his award, and was not merely a recital, and, consequently, that an appeal lies from that decision. We, accordingly, held that we could properly proceed with the appeal.

The facts in this case were as follows. In 1945 the workman was employed as a coal cutter chargeman, working underground in the Fenton Pit of the Stafford Coal & Iron Co., Ltd. He had worked in mining for 25 years. On Oct. 28, 1945, he gave up work on account of illness. On Feb. 11, 1946, he was suspended from further work by a medical board and on July 21, 1947, he was certified by a medical board as partially disabled by pneumoconiosis, an industrial disease within s. 43 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, as from June 19, 1947. It is admitted that he has a good claim to compensation on the basis of partial disablement as from that date. As a result of an agreement, dated Apr. 18, 1947, between the National Coal Board (the successors to the Stafford Coal & Iron Co., Ltd.) and the National Union of Mineworkers, a five days week was introduced into the coal mining industry as from May 5, 1947. The uncontradicted evidence was that, under the arrangements in force prior to the workman's notional accident, he had been remunerated at the rate of 25s. a shift. The normal working week then consisted of 6 shifts which were paid for at the rate of 25s. per shift. Under the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, the normal working week consists of 5 consecutive shifts with a bonus for those who work the full qualifying 5 shifts. The material provisions are contained in paras. 1, 5, 18 and 20 of the schedule to the agreement :

(1) The normal working week for underground workers shall be one of 5 consecutive shifts of 7½ hours plus one winding time. (5) A workman who works 5 full qualifying shifts in any week shall be paid a bonus calculated as provided in cl. 18. A workman's qualifying shifts are his 5 normal shifts or alternatively one or more full overtime shifts worked at the request of the management between his first and fifth normal shift together with such number of his normal shifts as makes a total of five. Save as provided in cll. 6 and 7 a workman who fails in any week to satisfy the conditions mentioned in this clause shall not be paid a bonus. (18) The amount of the bonus payment referred to in cll. 5 and 7 shall be : (a) for a day wage man qualifying under cl. 5 his average day wage rate for the week in question including the war addition and the skilled shilling (if payable) but excluding other allowances. (b) for a day wage man qualifying under cl. 7 the same proportion of the bonus which he would have received under (a) as the number of qualifying shifts worked or deemed to have been worked by him in that week bears to 5. (c) for a piece-worker (whether qualifying under cl. 5 or cl. 7) 16 per cent. of his aggregate earnings (excluding overtime) in respect of his qualifying shifts in that week with a minimum of £1 (or the appropriate proportion of £1 where he qualifies for bonus in respect of less than five shifts). (20) Subject to the authorisation of the National Reference Tribunal sub-para. (1) and (2) of the fifth award shall be amended as follows : (1) Payment for week-end work and overtime shall be at the rate of double and one and one half times the normal rates respectively. (2) Week-end work shall comprise all work done during a period beginning with the commencement of the Saturday afternoon shift and ending with the commencement of the Sunday night shift.

The effect of this agreement on the workman would have been that he would have got 25s. per shift for 5 shifts, namely, £6 5s., plus a further 25s. by way of bonus, making a total of £7 10s. for 5 shifts actually worked, which results in a rate of 30s. per shift. Under the former system, if he worked the full week, he would have received the same total of £7 10s., but he would have had to work 6 shifts, with the result that his rate per shift would have worked out at 25s. per shift. For any less number of shifts he would still receive 25s. per shift. There is no dispute as to figures and it is conceded that, if there had been a "change in the rates of remuneration," then, as applied to shifts actually worked by the applicant, his revised pre-accident average weekly earnings were rightly fixed by the learned county court judge at £8 4s. 6d.

The workman relies on the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, s. 6, which provides :

(1) For the purpose of calculating—(a) any weekly payment payable under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1925 to 1943 . . . the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident shall, if and whenever a change occurs after the date of the accident in the rates of remuneration obtaining in the class of employment in which the workman was employed during the relevant period before the accident, be deemed, so long as the changed rates obtain without further change, to be the average weekly earnings which he would have earned during that period if the changed rates had obtained throughout that period.

The workman contends that the introduction of the 5 days week under the terms of the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, has resulted in a change in the rate of his remuneration per shift. For the employers it is said that the rate of remuneration per shift remains unaltered, but that a workman now receives a new additional kind of remuneration in the form of a bonus payable in a certain event at the end of the week. It is a short point which does not call for elaboration. In my view, this is a clearer case than Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd. (1), and I think that the workman's contention, which was accepted by the county court judge, is correct. The new agreement as applied to the shifts worked by the applicant results, in my view, in a change in the rate of his remuneration which was, and still remains, a rate per shift. For these reasons, I think that this appeal fails.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree, but, as I differed from the other members of the court in Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd. (1), I will state my reasons for thinking that this case is to be distinguished. The question here is whether a "change in the rates of remuneration," within s. 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, was effected by the agreement between the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers on Apr. 18, 1947. In considering whether it effected a change, the first matter to investigate is the basis of remuneration at the date of the accident, in this case a notional accident. The only evidence as to this is in the applicant's evidence, the judge's note being as follows: "For 12 months before ceased work doing work of coal cutter chargeman. Paid at rate of 25s. shift." The rate, therefore, was a rate per shift. The relevant provisions of the Act and of the agreement have already been read, and I will not repeat them. The rate per shift apart from the bonus remains as it was at the time of the accident, 25s. If, however, the workman works five shifts, he gets a further 25s., bringing up the amount per shift worked to 30s. Does this provision as to bonus alter the "rates of remuneration"? I think it does. I will assume that the workman is under no contractual liability to work five shifts. It is, I think, relevant that this is agreed to be the normal working week. If, therefore, a man works the normal working week, he gets 30s. per shift now, whereas at the time of the accident he only got 25s. per shift. This seems to me to be a change in the rates of remuneration, and this is not affected by the fact that his rate of remuneration is unaltered if he does not work the five qualifying shifts. Counsel for the employers submitted that the bonus must be disregarded, and regard had only to the primary rate per shift. This, I think, is to disregard the effect of the agreement. The agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, goes some way towards changing from a shift basis to a weekly basis of remuneration. There is no evidence that at the time of the accident there was anything but a rate per shift. If what had happened had been to change a normal working week of 6 shifts into one of 5 shifts, the remuneration for the 5 shifts being the same as the old remuneration for 6 shifts, a more difficult question would have arisen on which I should desire to reserve my opinion.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree. It is plain that before the accident the rate of remuneration of the applicant workman was fixed as a rate per shift, not a weekly rate. The rate as fixed was 25s. per shift. The question is whether a change in that rate was effected by the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947, between the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers. The primary object of that agreement was to deal with hours, not with wages. It made no direct alteration in the rate per shift, but it cut down the normal working week to one of 5 consecutive shifts and it provided in cl. 5 for the payment of a bonus to a workman who works 5 full qualifying shifts in any week or who, though he has not worked 5 full shifts, fulfils the conditions specified in cl. 5 or cl. 7. The necessary consequence of these provisions is that a workman, instead of being entitled to 25s. per shift, is entitled to 25s. per shift plus X. The unknown quantity X may be 5s. per shift or a proportionate part thereof under cl. 7, or it may be nil if in any week the workman has not worked 5 shifts and does not fulfil the conditions specified in cl. 5 or cl. 7. Despite this last possibility, it seems to me impossible to say that no change in the rate of remuneration has been effected by the agreement of Apr. 18, 1947. For these reasons, I agree with the learned county court judge and with my brothers that there has been a change in the rate of remuneration within the meaning of s. 6 of the Act of 1943. Accordingly, the appeal, in my opinion, fails.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: The Solicitor, National Coal Board (for the employers); Simmonds, Church Rackham & Co., agents for McKnight & Ryder, Hanley, Staffs. (for the workman).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FISH v. KAPUR AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lynskey, J.), June 9, 10, 1948.]

Negligence—Res ipsa loquitur—Dentist—Extraction of tooth—Fracture of jaw.

In an action for damages for negligence against a dentist a patient proved that in extracting a wisdom tooth he had left part of the root of the tooth in her jaw and had fractured the jaw.

HELD : this fact alone was not sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the dentist and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did not apply.

[As to DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 671-675, paras. 956-958; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 88-92, Nos. 539-607.]

Cases referred to :

(1) Warner v. Payne, unrep., Apr. 15, 1935.

(2) Edwards v. Mallan, [1908] 1 K.B. 1002; 77 L.J.K.B. 608; 98 L.T. 824; 13 Digest 484, 341.

ACTION by the plaintiff, Mrs. Winifred May Fish, claiming damages from the defendants, dental surgeons, on the ground that the second defendant had been negligent in extracting one of her teeth as a result of which part of the root of the tooth was left in and her jaw was fractured. LYNSKEY, J., held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did not apply and that there was no evidence of negligence. The facts appear in the judgment.

Charles Burke (Solley with him) for the plaintiff.

N. G. L. Richards for the defendants.

LYNSKEY, J. : The plaintiff claims damages for negligence and breach of duty against Mr. S. K. Kapur, a dental surgeon, and also against Mr. I. K. Kapur, who, I gather (although I have had no direct evidence about the matter) was also a dental surgeon. Mr. S. K. Kapur practices his profession at Lloyds Bank Chambers, Grays, Essex, and Mrs. Fish resides at Brookman Avenue, Grays. On May 1, 1946, a wisdom tooth was troubling her and she

A went to the premises occupied by Mr. S. K. Kapur and asked him to remove the tooth. She saw a nurse who took her into the surgery and placed her in the dentist's chair. The dentist, Mr. I. K. Kapur, came in, and, according to her evidence, she was immediately given an anaesthetic without the dentist making any previous examination. Whether he examined the tooth after she was under the anaesthetic she, of course, does not know. I should have thought that obviously he must have done so before he extracted the tooth. In the extraction he left part of the root of the tooth in the jaw, and, by some means unexplained, the jaw was fractured. The plaintiff came out of the anaesthetic and was given a mouthwash then and there and a mouthwash to take home. That night she was in considerable pain. Next day her mouth was so painful and the weather so bad that she decided not to go and see the dentist, but she went on May 3, and, according to her, Mr. I. K. Kapur said that the bruising and swelling was the result of having the tooth out. On May 6 she consulted her doctor, Dr. Headon. He examined her face and he saw it was swollen, but, according to his view, there was nothing to suggest that there had not been a perfectly normal extraction or that the plaintiff had a fracture of the jaw. On May 10 the plaintiff again saw Mr. I. K. Kapur and pointed out that her face was still swollen and that she could not open her mouth properly. Apparently, she was suffering from some spasm affection of the muscles of the mouth which had probably been caused as a result of one of the nerves or muscles being involved in the fracture or being separated in the fracture. The technical name given to it is "trismus." At that time she said that the dentist referred to her jaw and asked: "Do your teeth feel numb?" and her reply was "Yes." He again looked into the mouth and said: "It will be all right in about a week." He did not take an X-ray, did not tell her that part of the tooth was remaining in the jaw, and did not refer her to a doctor or hospital. On May 17 she went to a hospital, where they X-rayed her and found that the jaw was fractured. They sent her to the Oldchurch County Hospital at Romford for treatment. At that hospital she was examined and X-rayed again. The fracture of the jaw was confirmed, but it was found to be healing and uniting in good alignment, so that no treatment was necessary. No support was given to the jaw, either by wearing a plate or otherwise, and the jaw was allowed to heal of its own accord. She could not have the root of the tooth removed until the fracture had completely united, but she had it out in April, 1947.

E No suggestion has been made, either by the plaintiff herself or by any of the medical or dental witnesses called for her, of any improper act on the part of the defendant. He has chosen, through his counsel, to submit that there is no evidence of negligence and to stand on that submission, with the result that I have not seen him in the witness box and he has not given any explanation of what took place. All I have in the shape of evidence of negligence in the operation of extracting the tooth, if I have anything at all, is that, after the extraction there was a fracture of the jaw. I am asked by the plaintiff's counsel to say that, where you have a qualified dentist who extracts a tooth and, after that extraction, the jaw is found to be fractured, that of itself is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the dentist. In other words, it is sought to apply to a case of that sort the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. 2

G There have been many cases in which actions have been brought against dentists, or claims made against them, for fractures occasioned in the course of the extraction of teeth. Counsel for the plaintiff has not been able to refer me to any authority where any court has held that the fact that a fracture of the jaw is found after a tooth has been extracted is of itself prima facie evidence of negligence. Counsel for the defendants has referred me to Warner v. Payne (1) where one of the questions which arose was whether the fact that a fracture of the jaw had occurred in the course of the extraction of a tooth was prima facie evidence of negligence. The learned judge, giving judgment, said:

H I think that both the plaintiff and her husband had in mind all along that, provided they could prove that there was a fracture or that the fracture was caused in the extraction of the tooth, they had good ground for complaint about the dentist. I should certainly not hold that the mere fact that the jaw was fractured in the course of an extraction would be of itself any evidence of negligence against the dentist at all.

In my view, that statement of the law is correct, but I am not depending on that in the present case, because the plaintiff has called a Dr. Devas and also a Mr. Siggers, Dr. Devas being a doctor of medicine and Mr. Siggers being a dental surgeon. Dr. Devas said in evidence that it is possible to fracture a jaw during an extraction without any negligence, and, apparently, Mr. Siggers took the same view, because he said that when one is extracting teeth fractures may occur without fault on the part of the dentist and equally one may leave the root of the tooth in without any blame attaching to him. He said: "I would not consider myself negligent in leaving the root of a tooth behind." A
In the face of that evidence I cannot hold that the fact that this fracture was caused in the process of extraction of the tooth was in itself any evidence of negligence. The result is that I have nothing left on which I can base any finding of negligence on the part of the defendants which resulted in the fracture, and, so far as that part of the case is concerned, the plaintiff's case must fail. B

It is, however, said, further, that there was negligence on the part of the defendant, I. K. Kapur, in not diagnosing the existence of a fracture when he saw the plaintiff on May 10. According to her, at that time her face was swollen, she had this trismus, and, in addition, she says that Mr. Kapur asked her if her teeth were numb and she said: "Yes." According to Mr. Siggers, one may have trismus, although it is unusual, and swelling where a tooth has been extracted, even where there is no fracture, and in those circumstances the swelling and the trismus will clear up after a short while, but, he says, if numbness is present that is evidence that there may be a fracture because of the severance of the nerve or the muscles or their involvement in the fracture. The plaintiff complains that Mr. Kapur did not tell her that she had a fracture and did not recommend her to go to a hospital or to a doctor, but merely said she would be all right in a week's time. In those circumstances, she says, apart from anything as to the actual fracture, that was lack of care in diagnosis on his part. If, however, Mr. Kapur had found a fracture at that time, what would have been the position? I asked Dr. Devas what he would have done if he had seen that there was a fracture before May 10, and he said: "I might have supported her jaw for her. I do not know if I would. It may have eased the pain or discomfort, or it might not." I have also the fact that when she went to the hospital on May 17 they found that the fracture was already healing in good alignment and there was no necessity for any treatment in the shape of a support or otherwise. All that they gave her was mouth wash, as, indeed, Mr. Kapur had done in the earlier stages. I can see, therefore, no evidence which indicates that the plaintiff sustained any further or additional pain or discomfort as a result of the defendant's failure to diagnose on May 10. C D E

As Mr. Burke has pointed out to me, having regard to a decision in Edwards v. Mallan (2) an action of this sort is an action in tort and not an action in contract. Being an action in tort of this nature, breach of duty does not avail a plaintiff unless it results in damage. The result is that, as there is no proof of any damage following on that failure to diagnose—if there was a failure, which I do not know—it means that the plaintiff cannot succeed in respect of possible neglect which took place on May 10 in failing to diagnose the existence of the fractured jaw. The result must be judgment for the defendants. F G

Judgment for defendants, with costs.

Solicitors: Harold Miller & Fraser (for the plaintiff); Le Brasseur & Oakley (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BORTHWICK (deceased). BORTHWICK AND ANOTHER v. BEAUVAIS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), June 15, 1948.]

Discovery—Originating summons—Application under Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938—R.S.C., Ord. 54F, rr. 1, 14.

Family Provision—Discovery of documents—Practice—R.S.C., Ord. 54F, rr. 1, 14.

A R.S.C., Ord. 54F, dealing with applications under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, provides by r. 1 that an application to the court under s. 1 of the Act shall be made in the Chancery Division by originating summons inter partes, and r. 14 provides that the ordinary practice and rules in the Chancery Division, in so far as they are not inconsistent with the Act or R.S.C., Ord. 54F, shall apply to proceedings under the Order.

B The widow and infant child of the testator had issued an originating summons under the Act and applied for discovery of various documents relating inter alia to the net value of the estate.

C HELD : a plaintiff on an originating summons is not entitled as of right to discovery, but the court has jurisdiction to order discovery. The cases in which the jurisdiction ought to be exercised are, however, rare, and, in such exceptional cases, the plaintiff's proper course is to make a special application, supported by affidavit, showing the particular special circumstances in which the application is made. In this case no special circumstances had been disclosed justifying the making of an order for discovery.

[FOR R.S.C., ORD. 54F, see THE YEARLY PRACTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT, 1940, pp. 1096-1099.]

D PROCEDURE SUMMONS by the plaintiffs, the widow and an infant child of a testator, applying for discovery of documents on an originating summons under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938. The plaintiffs had filed an affidavit in support of their application, but ROXBURGH, J., held that this affidavit did not disclose special circumstances justifying the making of an order for discovery, and refused the application.

Lightman for the plaintiffs.

A. C. Nesbitt for the executors.

E Parbury for certain beneficiaries.

Danckwerts for the Attorney-General.

ROXBURGH, J.: This application, which raises a matter of some general importance, is made in an originating summons in the matter of the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938. The summons asks that :

F . . . such provision as the court may think fit may be ordered to be made out of the estate of the above-named testator for the maintenance of the plaintiffs and each of them.

G The plaintiffs are the widow of the deceased and an infant daughter. The application is an application, not for unlimited discovery, but for discovery limited in the manner which I will indicate by reading the affidavit filed in support of the application. The affidavit, which is by H. C. R. Burley, a managing clerk in the employment of the plaintiffs' solicitors, says, in para. 2: "On Apr. 26, 1948, my principals wrote and despatched" to the solicitors for some of the defendants, the executors of the testator, "a letter a copy of which is now produced and shown to me." That letter is from the plaintiffs' solicitors to the solicitors for the defendant executors and is as follows :

H With further reference to our complaint about your clients' failure to disclose all relevant documents, which was repeated before the learned master on Feb. 19 last, we must now give you notice that we require : (a) Inspection of all proofs, pleadings and instructions to counsel, and his opinions relating to the claim by Mary Elizabeth Borthwick to be entitled to the chattels and other property of the deceased. (b) Inspection of all correspondence and other documents in the possession of or passing between the executors and/or their solicitors with the Estate Duty Office concerning the value of the shares. (c) Inspection of all cases to counsel and the opinions of counsel of and concerning the value of the shares in Auzlene, Ltd., Ridgmount, Ltd. and other companies in which the deceased held shares and copies of the respective memoranda and articles of association of the said companies. Will you please let us know within the next 3 days whether you are prepared to let us have a list of these documents and give us an opportunity of inspecting the same and taking up copies of such of the said documents as we may require. Please let us know within the time we have limited whether you are now prepared to concede our right to the inspection and copies as set out above, so as to save the costs which will be incurred by a further summons.

The affidavit of Mr. Burley continues :

The defendant executors have the documents referred to in the said letter in their possession or power, all of which relate to the matters in issue herein, but refuse to disclose the same. I am advised by counsel and verily believe that the plaintiffs cannot safely proceed to trial without having access to the said documents.

Counsel for the plaintiffs submitted two propositions. His first was that in every application under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, in which net estate is material (and net estate is material in all of them by reason of the form of the Act), the applicant is entitled as of right to discovery relating to all documents bearing on the value of the net estate. His second proposition was that, in every case under the Act where the value of the net estate is not agreed, the court ordinarily ought to order such discovery as may enable the applicant to advance his or her own case as to the value of the net estate. Applications under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, are governed by R.S.C., Ord. 54F. Rule 9 says :

The court or a judge may require evidence in regard to any matter which the court or a judge considers to be relevant to the application and may direct any party to the proceedings or any person on whom notice of the proceedings has been served to attend on the hearing of the application and give evidence orally or to be cross-examined on any affidavit made by him.

The application which is now before me was not made under that rule. There is no other material rule under R.S.C., Ord. 54F, except r. 14, which says :

The ordinary practice and rules in the Chancery Division in so far as they are not inconsistent with the Act or this Order shall apply to proceedings under this Order.

Under R.S.C., Ord. 54F, r. 1, proceedings under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, have to be made in the Chancery Division by originating summons, and, therefore, it seems reasonably plain that the practice of the Chancery Division to which I ought to refer in order to apply r. 14 is the practice of the Chancery Division in relation to originating summonses.

As counsel for the plaintiffs did not support his first proposition with any authority, I reject it without hesitation. No plaintiff has a right to have discovery when the proceedings are by originating summons. On the other hand, I am satisfied that the court has jurisdiction to order discovery when the proceedings are by originating summons. However, that jurisdiction is very rarely exercised, and I am satisfied that I ought not to accede to the submission of counsel for the plaintiffs that the court ordinarily ought to order discovery in every case where the value of the net estate is not agreed. On an originating summons where there are no points of claim, the cases in which any such jurisdiction ought to be exercised must be, in my judgment, rare. If a plaintiff seeks to ask the court to order discovery on an originating summons, in which there are no points of claim, I am sure that he is not entitled to bring to the court all the evidence which has been filed on the originating summons and ask the court to peruse it, or so much thereof as counsel thinks fit to refer to, in order to decide whether there ought to be discovery or not. The proper course, in my judgment, in such an exceptional case is to make a special application, supported by an affidavit, showing the particular special circumstances in which the application is made. To some extent Mr. Burley's affidavit seems to be directed to that end, and, in so far as it is so directed, I am satisfied that no such special circumstances are disclosed therein as would justify me in making an order for discovery in this particular case.

Application refused. Plaintiffs to pay party and party costs of defendants other than those who did not ask for costs.

Solicitors : Steavenson & Couldwell, agents for Gosschalk & Austin, Hull (for the plaintiffs and certain beneficiaries) ; Atkey & Son (for the executors) ; Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOWNESS v. O'DWYER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Evershed, L.J.J.),
June 3, 4, 7, 8, 15, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Furnished letting—Rent of furniture substantial portion of whole—Date when comparison to be made—Rent reduced by rent tribunal—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2) (i) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 10 (1))—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (2) (b).

In 1946 the landlord let a dwelling-house, together with the use of certain furniture, on a weekly tenancy at a rent of 30s. a week, of which sum 3s. 6d. was agreed to be at all material times the sum attributable to the use of the furniture. It was also conceded that that sum was not a substantial portion of the contractual rent. In 1947 the rent was reduced by a rent tribunal set up under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, to 8s. a week, and, subsequently, in proceedings brought by the tenant under s. 9, of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, the county court judge held that the "normal profit" in respect of the premises (including the use of the furniture) was 13s. 6d. a week and the landlord was ordered to repay payments made in excess of that sum. The contractual tenancy having been determined by a valid notice to quit, the landlord claimed in an action for recovery of possession that, having regard to the order of the rent tribunal or, alternatively, to the decision of the county court judge, the weekly amount attributable to the use of the furniture at the date of service or the expiry of the notice was a substantial portion of the whole rent within the meaning of s. 10 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, and that, consequently, the premises were excluded from the general protection of the Acts by virtue of proviso (i) to s. 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, or of s. 3 (2) (b) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 :—

Held: the relevant date on which to compare the part of the rent attributable to the use of furniture with the whole rent was the time when the original contract of tenancy was made, and nothing subsequently done by the tenant disentitled him from asserting that the rent of the premises in question was 30s. a week at any material date.

Joswiak v. Hierowski, ([1948] 2 All E.R. 9), followed.

Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. v. Levitt ([1946] 2 All E.R. 653), distinguished.

Per cur. : An order made under s. 9 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, does not have the effect of substituting some other figure for the figure of rent provided by the contract.

[AS TO PREMISES LET AT A RENT INCLUDING PAYMENT FOR USE OF FURNITURE, see HALSBURY, Halsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 314, para. 370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 560, 561, Nos. 7078-7084.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Lambert v. Keating and Another, [1947] L.J.N. C.C.R. 149.
- (2) Palser v. Grinling, [1946] 2 All E.R. 287; [1946] K.B. 631; [1947] L.J.R. 97; 175 L.T. 204; 2nd Digest Supp.; affd. H.L. [1948] 1 All E.R. 1.
- (3) Joswiak v. Hierowski, [1948] 2 All E.R. 9.
- (4) Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff, [1946] 2 All E.R. 294; [1946] K.B. 645; 115 L.J.K.B. 484; 175 L.T. 192; 2nd Digest Supp.; affd. H.L. [1948] 1 All E.R. 1.
- (5) Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. v. Levitt, [1946] 2 All E.R. 653; [1947] A.C. 209; [1947] L.J.R. 65; 176 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL, by the landlord, from an order of His Honour JUDGE EARENGEY, K.C., made at Clerkenwell County Court, and dated Oct. 28, 1947, refusing possession of premises let to the tenant with the use of furniture, on the ground that the rent attributable to the use of the furniture did not form a substantial portion of the whole rent at the relevant date, namely, the date of the original contract of tenancy. The appeal was dismissed. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Heathcote-Williams and H. I. Spence for the landlord.
Samuel Magnus for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 15. EVERSHED, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. The plaintiff is the landlord of a dwelling consisting of a single room situate at 54, Highbury Grove, London. At some time early in 1946 the landlord let the premises, together with the use of certain furniture, to the tenant. The tenancy was weekly and the rent agreed on for the premises, including the use of the furniture, was 30s. per week. We have not been told the details of the furniture, but it has been agreed before us by both the landlord and the tenant that the proper weekly sum attributable to the use of the furniture is and was at all material times 3s. 6d., being the figure fixed by the county court judge in certain proceedings later mentioned. It has, accordingly, been conceded by the landlord that the portion of the contractual rent, namely, 30s. per week, which was attributable to the use of the furniture was not a "substantial portion of" this whole rent within the terms of s. 10 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, so that the premises were not, on these facts, excluded from the general protection of the Rent Acts by virtue of the first proviso to s. 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, or of s. 3 (2) (b) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939.

In the beginning of the year 1947 the tenant applied to the Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal, established under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, for a reduction of the rent pursuant to the Act. It is to be observed that by s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1946 its provisions appear to apply to any contract of letting in respect of premises in a district to which the Act applies (as it did in this case) where the rent payable includes payment for the use of furniture, notwithstanding that the portion of the whole rent attributable to the use of the furniture is not sufficiently substantial to exclude the premises from the general protection of the Rent Acts. The Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal, on the tenant's application, exercised its powers under s. 2 (2) of the Act of 1946 by reducing "the rent payable under the contract" to 8s. per week. It has been assumed (though not proved) that the local authority duly entered in the register required to be kept by s. 3 of the Act of 1946 the particulars required by that section, including the reduced rent of the premises as fixed by the tribunal, and on that footing it became thereafter unlawful for the landlord to demand for the premises any rent in excess of 8s. per week. There is, however, no power in the Act of 1946 for the tribunal to order repayment of past payments of rent in excess of the figure fixed by it. In other words, the scheme of the Act appears to be that the tribunal has power to alter the existing contract for the future, but not retrospectively, by reducing the rent payable under the contract.

Not content with his performance before the Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal, the tenant then proceeded to apply to the county court under s. 9 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (as amended by sched. I to the Act of 1939). The material words of sub-s. 1 of this section, as amended, are as follows:—

Where any person lets . . . any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, or any part thereof, at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the county court on the application of the lessee that the rent charged is yielding or will yield to the lessor a profit in excess of the normal profit as hereinafter defined, the court may order that the rent, so far as it exceeds such sum as would yield such normal profit shall be irrecoverable, and that the amount of any payment of rent in excess of such sum which may have been made in respect of any period after the passing of this Act shall be repaid to the lessee.

The landlord (who had previously served a notice to quit on the tenant) counterclaimed for possession. On this application (which is not the subject of the present appeal and in respect of which there was, in fact, no appeal) the county court judge, purporting to exercise the powers conferred by s. 9 of the Act of 1920 (as amended), held that "normal profit" in respect of the premises (including the use of the furniture) was 13s. 6d., and ordered, accordingly, that all sums previously paid by the tenant for rent in excess of that sum (which amounted to £46 odd) should be paid by the landlord to the tenant. On the counterclaim the learned judge held that the landlord's notice to quit was invalid, so that the counterclaim failed on that ground, but he also went on to decide that, 3s. 6d. per week being the amount properly attributable to the use of the furniture, this figure must (in accordance with a previous decision of his own in Lambert v. Keating (1)) be related for the purposes of s. 10 of the Act of 1923, not to the reduced rent of 8s. per week fixed by the Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal nor to the figure of normal profit (namely, 13s. 6d. per week) which he had himself determined, but to the original contractual rent of 30s. per week, and that, accordingly, the premises were not excluded from the general protection of the Rent Acts by virtue of proviso (1) to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920 or by s. 3 (2) (b) of the Act of 1939.

As I have said, there was no appeal from this decision and the landlord in fact repaid, or accounted to the tenant for, the full sum of £46 odd which the county court judge held to be repayable by her to the tenant. The landlord, however, served on the tenant a fresh notice to quit, admittedly, on this occasion, valid and effectual to determine the contractual tenancy, and then proceeded to bring a second action for possession before the same county court judge alleging that, in the circumstances above narrated, the premises were, at the date of the service or expiry of such notice, outside the protection of the Rent Acts. In these proceedings the landlord alleged that, having regard to the order of the Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal reducing the rent payable under the original contract of tenancy to 8s. per week or (alternatively) to the decision of the county court judge fixing the "normal profit" of the premises at 13s. 6d. per week, the weekly amount attributable to the use of the furniture (namely, 3s. 6d. per week) was a substantial portion of the rent payable at the date of the service or expiry of the notice, and, accordingly, that the premises were outside the protection of the Rent Acts under the provisions of those Acts already quoted. The learned county court judge, however, in his judgment delivered on Oct. 28, 1947, following his previous decision in the earlier action between the same parties and following also the judgments of this court in Palser v. Grinling (2), adhered to his view that the weekly sum attributable to use of the furniture had to be related to the original contractual rent of 30s. per week, and that, accordingly, the premises were not shown to be excluded from the general protection of the Rent Acts. It is from this decision that the landlord has appealed to this court.

We have been informed that since the date of this judgment the landlord has, in fact, accepted rent from the tenant at the figure of 8s. per week, and counsel for the tenant has argued that this fact is, in any event, fatal to the appeal on the ground that, by so accepting rent, the landlord must either have affirmed the existence of a contractual tenancy between herself and the tenant, or be taken to have assented to the tenant's claim to be a statutory tenant of the premises—both alternatives being wholly inconsistent with the landlord's contention that the tenant is a trespasser in respect of the premises in question. On the view that we take it is unnecessary to express any opinion on this point.

A number of other interesting questions have been argued before us by counsel for the landlord, but on many of them it is also unnecessary to express any opinion. It is, in our judgment, sufficient to say that the learned county court judge was correct in the view that he took of the proper date at which it is necessary to relate the weekly amount attributable to the use of the furniture (that is, admittedly, 3s. 6d.) to the total rent payable. It is to be observed that the proviso to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920 (and equally s. 3 (2) (b) of the Act of 1939) refers to premises "bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of . . . furniture." Now, the formula "bona fide let," etc., seems to us prima facie to import a test as to the state of mind (at least) of the landlord and the only time at which such an inquiry can usefully be made is the time when the contract of letting was made. Further, by s. 10 of the Act of 1923 it is necessary to take into account the value of the furniture to the tenant in estimating the sum fairly attributable to the use of the furniture. It is obvious that changes in the identity and the circumstances of the tenant no less than the effect of the passage of time on the furniture itself may cause, from time to time, considerable fluctuations in the "value to the tenant" of the furniture, and it would, therefore, appear that, unless the ratio of the value of the furniture to the total amount of the rent is fixed once and for all at the time when the contract of tenancy is made, the application from time to time of the Act to any premises which have been let together with the use of furniture must be subject to great uncertainty.

But, in any case, our task on this question has been much simplified for us by the recent decision of this court in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3). In that case the same point arose and in the course of delivering the judgment of the court ASQUITH, L.J., said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 9, 10):

We are further of opinion that the relevant date on which to compare the part of the rent attributable to the use of furniture with the whole rent is the time when the original contract of tenancy is made. In Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Mischeff (4) in the Court of Appeal, where the rent was raised from £275 to £375 in the last 6 months of the tenancy, that court assumed (and on this point was not questioned by the House of Lords) that the original figure was the material one, though it happened that for the purpose of that case it did not matter which. To take any other date would create serious inconvenience and uncertainty.

Then the learned Lord Justice takes an example as to which, as has been pointed out, there may have been a slip in the language used. It is true that the general rule under the Rent Acts is that the status of any premises, for the purpose of the Acts, should be determined at the date when the landlord seeks to enforce his rights. In this connection counsel for the landlord strongly relied on the decision of the House of Lords in Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. v. Levitt (5). In that case, so far as material, the question was at what date the application should be considered of s. 12 (7) of the Act of 1920 in order to determine whether or not the rent payable in respect of the premises in question was less than two-thirds of their rateable value and the House of Lords held the answer to be "at the time when the landlord sought to enforce his rights." This case does not appear in fact to have been cited in this court in Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) though it is clear that the decision of the House of Lords was published some time before the argument in the former case was heard. In our judgment, however, the opinions in the Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. case (5), which related to the provisions of s. 12 (7) of the Act of 1920, cannot, in any event, be regarded as authority on the proper construction of the very different language of s. 12 (2) of the same Act. Moreover, to say that the status of the premises must be determined at the time when the landlord seeks to enforce his rights is, in any event, not to answer the argument in favour of counsel for the landlord, for it does not follow that the status of the premises at that date, as regards the proportion of the value of the furniture to the total rent, is not to be determined by reference to the time when the tenancy was created. In any case, Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) is an authority which binds this court and which we are bound to follow. We add that, even were this not so, it seems to us that the landlord would be faced with a serious difficulty under the terms of s. 12 (6) of the Act of 1920, but in the circumstances we express no view on the effect of this somewhat enigmatic provision.

Counsel for the landlord finally sought to escape from the effects of Jozwiak v. Hierowski (3) by arguing that, having regard to what occurred on the previous hearing before the county court judge, the tenant was disentitled to assert that the rent of the premises in question was in fact 30s. per week at any material date. To make good this point counsel contended either that the earlier judgment (assuming it to have been valid and effectual) substituted for all purposes the rent of 13s. 6d. per week for the original figure of 30s. per week, or that (assuming the judgment to have been pronounced without jurisdiction) the parties had so acted that the tenant was now estopped from asserting that the rent had at any time been 30s. per week. As regards the first part of the argument, it is, in our judgment, clear from the terms of s. 9 of the Act of 1920 (which we have quoted above) that an order made thereunder does not have the effect of substituting some other figure for the figure of rent provided by the contract. At most so much of the contractual rent as exceeds the "normal profit" is held to be irrecoverable. As regards the second branch of the argument, it is unnecessary to express a final opinion on the question whether the county court judge had, in fact, jurisdiction to make the order which he did under this section. It was forcibly argued that on the general scheme of the Acts s. 9 was only intended to apply to premises let at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture where the effect of such a letting is (by virtue of the proviso to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920, as amended by s. 10 of the Act of 1923) to exclude them from the general protection of the Acts, for, unless this is so, it is difficult to see how the provisions of s. 9 of the Act of 1920 as regards normal profit can be made to fit into the provisions of the same Act as to standard rent. We express no final opinion on this point, but, in any case, once there had been a registration (as we assume there has been in the present case) pursuant to the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, in respect of any premises the rent payable in respect whereof has been reduced under that Act, s. 7 of that Act excludes the application of s. 9 of the Act of 1920 as regards the rent of those premises in respect of any period after the registration. We may add that the latter part of s. 7 of the 1946 Act lends no little support (as argued by counsel for the tenant) to the view that an order made under that Act reducing the rent payable under a contract of letting cannot have the effect of taking outside the general protection of the Rent Acts premises which prior to the making of the order had been within such protection. The language referred to in s. 7 is this: "but save as aforesaid nothing in this Act shall affect any provisions of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939."

Assuming however (without deciding) that the previous order of the county court judge was made without jurisdiction, it is, nevertheless, impossible, in our judgment, to say that what the parties did pursuant to the judgment gives rise to any estoppel against the tenant. By acting in accordance with the judge's directions it is possible that (following in this respect Stone (J. & F.) Lighting & Radio, Ltd. v. Levitt (5) already referred to) landlord and tenant might have been held to have made a new contract on the terms implicit in those directions, but in the present case such a conclusion is negatived by the fact that the rent paid and received after the judgment was not the sum which the county court judge specified as the normal profit but the figure of 8s. per week which the Hackney, Islington and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal had previously fixed. In any case we cannot see in anything which the landlord or the tenant did following the judgment any of those elements necessary to establish an estoppel—any representation made by the tenant to the landlord and acted upon by the landlord which would disentitle the tenant from proving as a fact the truth that the rent fixed originally by the contract was the sum of 30s. per week. We may add with regard to our general conclusion that a contrary view would mean that the tenant of a furnished dwelling within the Act of 1946 is being invited to apply for a reduction in his rent under that Act and the tribunal is being empowered to grant it without either of them being warned by the legislature that the result may be the destruction of the tenant's security of tenure under the Rent Acts. In our judgment, therefore, the learned county court judge was right and this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Markham Thorp & Co. (for the landlord); J. S. I. Rabin (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MEDITERRANEAN AND EASTERN EXPORT CO., LTD. v.
FORTRESS FABRICS (MANCHESTER), LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J.), June 9, 11, 1948.]

Arbitration—Award—Validity—Damages—Mercantile contract—Expert evidence—Duty to hear—Arbitrator with special knowledge of subject-matter.

Buyers of textile goods refused to accept them on the ground that they were not up to sample, but were unmerchantable and unfit for the purpose for which they were supplied. The dispute was referred to arbitration in accordance with the rules of a chamber of commerce which provided for the determination of such disputes "by commercial men of experience and special knowledge of the subject-matter." The parties submitted statements to the arbitrator in accordance with the rules, but neither of them called expert evidence or had professional representation at the hearing. The sellers claimed that there had been a breach of contract and asked for an award of £2,455 2s. 6d., the price of the goods, plus interest. The arbitrator found for the sellers and, as the property in the goods had not passed to the buyers, awarded £796 13s. 11d. damages.

HELD: (i) the arbitrator, having had all disputes referred to him and having found for the seller, had jurisdiction to award the damages properly recoverable notwithstanding the wrong basis of the sellers' claim.

(ii) the arbitrator, having been appointed because of his knowledge and experience of the trade, was entitled to fix the damages without hearing expert evidence thereon.

Dicta of LORD ESHER, M.R., and LOPES, L.J., in Wright v. Howson (1888) (4 T.L.R. 386, 387), LORD CRANWORTH, L.C., in Eads v. Williams (1854) (4 De G. M. & G. 674, 687), and of BRANSON, J., in Jordsen & Co. v. Stora etc. Aktiebolag (1931) (41 Lloyd's L.R. 201, 203), applied.

Owen v. Nicholl, ([1948] 1 All E.R. 707), distinguished.

[AS TO DUTY TO HEAR WITNESSES AND VALIDITY OF AWARD, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 653, 663, paras. 1105, 1118; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 441-445, 471-513, Nos. 991-937, 1155-1519.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Wright v. Howson, (1888), 4 T.L.R. 386, C.A.; 2 Digest 455, 1024.
- (2) Eads v. Williams, (1854), 4 De G.M. & G. 674; 3 Eq. Rep. 244; 24 L.J.Ch. 531; 24 L.T.O.S. 162; 2 Digest 442, 920.
- (3) Jordsen & Co. v. Stora, etc., Aktiebolag, (1931), 41 Lloyd L.R. 201.
- (4) Owen v. Nicholl, [1948] 1 All E.R. 707.

MOTION to set aside award.

The buyers rejected a quantity of textile goods which they had bought from the sellers on the ground that they were not up to sample, but were unmerchantable and unfit for their intended purpose. The dispute was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator found that there had been a breach of contract on the part of the buyers and awarded the sellers £796 13s. 11d. damages and costs. The buyers applied to have the award set aside on the ground that the sellers had claimed only the price of the goods and that no expert evidence had been called on either side on which the arbitrator could arrive at the amount of the damages. The court upheld the award.

Heathcote-Williams and Glyn for the buyers.

C. P. Harvey for the sellers.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 11. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment. By a contract dated Oct. 16, 1946, Fortress Fabrics (Manchester), Ltd., agreed to sell to the Mediterranean and Eastern Export Co., Ltd., a quantity of textile goods which subsequently the buyers refused to accept, alleging that the goods were not up to sample, but were unmerchantable and unfit for the purpose for which they were supplied, namely, export to South Africa. It appears that the sellers had a quota entitling them to export goods to that country, part of which they allocated to the buyers, which would enable them to sell those goods in that market to the extent of the quota transferred to them. In consequence of the refusal to accept, the parties agreed to arbitration in accordance with the rules of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and, by a submission dated Aug. 16, 1947, it was agreed that the dispute should be referred to arbitration by that Chamber whose decision should be final and binding on both parties, and, in accordance with the rules of the Chamber, Mr. G. W. Armitage was appointed sole arbitrator under the rules. Rule 1 states :

The object of the tribunal of arbitration shall be the determination and settlement by commercial men of experience and special knowledge of the subject-matter in dispute or difference of any dispute or difference relating to trade, manufactures and commerce (including customs of trade) by whomsoever submitted.

It is obvious, therefore, that parties who submit their disputes to the Chamber's tribunal intend and expect that they will have the benefit of arbitration before a person well acquainted with the class of business in which they are engaged, because he is selected for his knowledge and experience of the trade.

The parties submitted statements to the arbitrator in accordance with the rules. The sellers' document, which was prepared without professional assistance, set out the contract, such letters as were admitted to be material, and certain facts to which I need not refer, and asked for an award of £2,455 2s. 6d., the price of the goods plus interest at 5 per cent. per annum. The buyers' statement set out their case and contentions, alleging that they were justified in rejecting the goods. In claiming the price of the goods the sellers, no doubt, fell into an error, often made in such circumstances, of asking for the price on the footing that the property had passed, whereas, in fact, as it was a sale of future goods, the property had not passed, and what they were entitled to was not the price, but damages for non-acceptance. The arbitrator held a meeting at which both parties attended without professional representation, nor did they or either of them seek to call expert evidence. The reason for this is obvious. They had the advantage of an arbitrator who himself was an expert and he would be in a position as good as or better than expert witnesses to come to a decision on his own knowledge, which was the reason why he had been appointed. The arbitrator decided the questions submitted to him in favour of the sellers and, by his award, dated Feb. 26, 1948, found (i) that the goods delivered by the sellers were of merchantable quality and in accordance with the contract, and (ii) that, in refusing to accept delivery of the same, the buyers had committed a breach of contract by reason of which the sellers had suffered damage to the extent of £796 13s. 11d., which sum he awarded to the sellers together with the costs of the arbitration.

The buyers now seek to set aside the award, and the first point which was taken by their counsel was that because the sellers had claimed the value, by which they obviously meant the price of the goods, the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to award damages. In my opinion, that contention clearly fails. The arbitrator was obviously right in forming the opinion that no property had passed, and, therefore, the price, as such, was not recoverable, but, as all disputes had been referred to him, and, as he had awarded in favour of the sellers on the merits and found a breach of contract on the part of the buyers, it was, in my opinion, clearly within his jurisdiction, while not awarding the price, to award damages, otherwise the matter would be left undecided as to what his finding entitled the sellers to recover. Because the sellers put forward a claim on a wrong basis it seems to me impossible to say that the arbitrator is not entitled to award compensation on the true basis, i.e., damages instead of price.

The more serious question that was argued was that neither side had tendered evidence with regard to damage and, therefore, the arbitrator had no material before him on which he could fix the amount which the sellers were entitled to receive. This would be a formidable, and, indeed, fatal, objection in some arbitrations. If, for instance, a lawyer was called on to act as arbitrator on a commercial contract he would not be entitled, unless the terms of the submission clearly gave him power so to do, to come to a conclusion as to the amount of damages that should be paid without having evidence before him as to the rise or fall of the market, as the case may be, or as to other facts enabling him to apply the correct measure of damage, but, in my opinion, the case is different where the parties select an arbitrator, or agree to arbitrate under the rules of a chamber of commerce under which the arbitrator is appointed for them, and the arbitrator is chosen or appointed because of his knowledge and experience of the trade. There can be no doubt that with regard to questions of quality and matters of that description an arbitrator of this character can always act on his own knowledge. As LORD ESHER, M.R., said in Wright v. Howson (1), where it was suggested that the umpire ought to have received evidence from experts (4 T.L.R. 386, 387):

What would this experienced manufacturer care for the opinion of the weaver? He was selected and appointed on account of his own superior experience.

LOPES, L.J., said (ibid.):

Such a man is selected for the very purpose of deciding according to his own experience and examination.

It is well known in the experience of the courts that many trades have their own tribunals of arbitration—the Corn Trade, the Produce Brokers' Association, the Oil and Fat Trades Association are instances—and no one has doubted—certainly not in modern times—that it is open to an arbitrator skilled in the trade to use his own knowledge and experience on many matters, such as quality, without having witnesses called before him. One of the reasons why commercial men like to go to arbitration before arbitrators of this description is because it saves the expense of calling witnesses and having the conflicting views of experts thrashed out and decided on. The parties are content and intend to accept the judgment of a man in their own trade on whose judgment they know they can rely.

This, indeed, I think, has long been the law. An early illustration is Eads v. Williams (2). The arbitrators were there appointed to settle the amount to be paid as the rent of a coal mine and LORD CRANWORTH, L.C., said (22 L.T.O.S. 162, 163):

I do not agree in the suggestion that it was incumbent upon those parties to examine witnesses; I do not think that is the meaning when a matter is referred to a surveyor, and people of skill to value, and settle what the value of the property to be bought or let is . . . they are entrusted, from their experience and from their observation, to form a judgment which the parties referring to them agree shall be satisfactory; therefore I do not think that there was anything of importance in their not examining witnesses, provided bona fide they meant to say, "We know sufficiently of the subject to decide properly without examining witnesses."

There are other decisions to a like effect and I would only mention Jordeson & Co. v. Stora, etc., Aktiebolag (3) to which counsel for the sellers called my attention. BRANSON, J., in giving judgment, said (41 Lloyd L.R. 201, 203):

Now, I think that the fact that this umpire was an expert in the timber trade and was appointed because he was such an expert must not be lost sight of. I think the parties must be taken to have assented to his using the knowledge which they chose him for possessing; I do not mean to say knowledge of special facts relating to a special or particular case, but that general knowledge of the timber trade which a man in his position would be bound to acquire.

I can see no reason why this principle should not be applied to a question of damages just as much as to a question of quality. Counsel for the buyers relied on Owen v. Nicholl (4) which seems to me to fall within the other class of case to which I have referred of a lawyer acting as arbitrator. That was a case in which an action had been referred under the County Courts Act, 1934, and the registrar of the county court had been appointed the arbitrator. It was an arbitration to decide whether or not the parties were in partnership and the registrar had used his own knowledge of the contents of a bankruptcy file to which neither of the parties referred. The Court of Appeal held that, as he had used knowledge which he had acquired in his capacity as registrar of the Bankruptcy Court and not in his capacity as referee, the award could not stand. In my opinion, that case has no relevance or application to an arbitration where the parties have chosen the arbitrator because of his special knowledge of their own trade. A man in the trade who is selected for his experience would be likely to know, and, indeed, would be expected to know, the fluctuations of the market and would have plenty of means of informing himself or refreshing his memory on any point on which he might find it necessary so to do. In this case, according to the affidavit of the sellers, they did take the point before the arbitrator that the South African market has "slumped." Whether the buyers contested that statement does not appear, but an experienced arbitrator would know, or have the means of knowing, whether that was so or not and to what extent, and I see no reason why in principle he should be required to have evidence on this point any more than on any other question relating to a particular trade. It must be taken, I think, that, in fixing the amount that he has, he has acted on his own knowledge and experience. The day has long gone by when the courts looked with jealousy on the jurisdiction of arbitrators. The modern tendency is, in my opinion, more especially in commercial arbitrations, to endeavour to uphold awards of the skilled persons that the parties themselves have selected to decide the questions at issue between them. If an arbitrator has acted within the terms of his submission and has not violated any rules of what is so often called natural justice the courts should be slow indeed to set aside his award.

In my opinion, the arbitrator did act in this case within the submission, and I think also he has acted as the parties intended he should act and I see no reason for interfering with his award. This motion fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Motion dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: D. H. Geller & Co. (for the applicants); Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker, agents for Walker, Dean & Marshall, Manchester (for the respondents).
Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Applied. WIMBUSH v. CIBULIA. [1949]
 2 All E.R. 432.

Followed. WIMBUSH v.
 CIBULIA.
 [1949] 2 K. B. 564

CURL v. ANGELO AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Evershed, L.JJ.),
 June 10, 11, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—"Separate dwelling"—Rooms let for extra bedroom accommodation for adjoining hotel—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2).

The landlord claimed possession of two rooms let to the tenant for use as extra bedroom accommodation for the hotel which the tenant conducted on adjoining premises. The rooms were usually occupied by guests, but also on occasion by members of the tenant's family or staff.

HELD: the rooms were not let as a "separate dwelling" within the meaning of s. 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and the landlord was entitled to an order for possession.

Vickery v. Martin ([1944] 2 All E.R. 167), distinguished.

Richmond (Duke) v. Dewar (1921) (38 T.L.R. 151), criticised.

[AS TO SEPARATE DWELLING, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 312, para. 369; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, p. 557, Nos. 7044-7046.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Skinner v. Geary, [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.
- (2) Vickery v. Martin, [1944] 2 All E.R. 167; [1944] K.B. 679; 113 L.J.K.B. 552; 171 L.T. 89; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Richmond (Duke) v. Dewar & Cadogan Hotel Co., Ltd., (1921), 38 T.L.R. 151; 31 Digest 558, 7058.
- (4) Wright v. Howell, (1947), 204 L.T. Jo. 299.

APPEAL, by the landlord, from an order of His Honour JUDGE ALLSEBROOK, made at Kendal County Court, and dated Nov. 18, 1947, refusing possession of two rooms in his house let by the landlord to one of the defendants for use as extra bedroom accommodation for the tenants' adjoining hotel. The appeal was allowed. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Heathcote-Williams for the landlord.

Shorrocks for the tenants.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: The question raised by this appeal is one which must be decided with reference to the particular facts as found by the county court judge, remembering always that a variation in such facts in a different case might lead to a different conclusion of law.

The plaintiff (the landlord) is the owner of a house two rooms of which were let to a neighbour, Mrs. Angelo, by his father on his behalf while he was absent on war service. He now seeks to recover possession of those two rooms. Both Mr. and Mrs. Angelo are defendants, but I understand that the actual lessee was Mrs. Angelo, who was the proprietress of a hotel next door called Webbs' Commercial Hotel. The county court judge held that Mrs. Angelo was entitled to rely on the Rent Restrictions Acts, and dismissed the claim.

It is important to go straight to the facts as found by the judge without any comment at the moment. He says this :

The [landlord's] father as his agent lawfully let to the [tenants] two upstairs rooms for extra accommodation as bedrooms for the [tenants'] Webbs' Commercial Hotel . . . A partition had been erected shutting off the premises let from the [landlord's] premises . . . The rooms were let and taken for the purpose of increasing the [tenants'] bedroom accommodation in their business of proprietors of the unlicensed hotel known as Webbs' Commercial Hotel, and the rooms were used for that purpose. At first one room was used for a guest for two or three years. The other room was at first used as a store room. Some six months after the letting this latter room was used as a bedroom. Later on the male [tenant] used it as a bedroom, and both rooms were used as bedrooms for guests, or the [tenants], or members of their family or staff, up till now. All these uses were within the terms of the letting and the [tenants] had the right to use the two rooms for any or all of the purposes to which they put them.

The substantial question in the case may be thus formulated. On those facts are the two rooms in question within the provisions of the Act which lay down the class of tenement to which the Act is to apply ? The relevant provision is s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920, which provides : " This Act shall apply to a house or a part of a house let as a separate dwelling . . . " Can it be said that the two rooms in question were let as a separate dwelling ? As I have said, whether or not a particular case falls within those words must depend on the facts of that case, and it may be that some comparatively small difference in fact may tip the scales one way or the other. The question we have to decide is as to the applicability of that language to the facts as found in this case. The first thing that may be said is that a certain amount of common sense has to be brought to the consideration of these Acts. The courts have had to consider what the overriding purpose and intention of the Acts are, and I cannot put it in a more clear or authoritative way than by using the words of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Skinner v. Geary (1) ([1931] 2 K.B. 546, 560), that the object was to protect the person residing in a dwelling-house from being turned out of his home. That is a common-sense conception, but one that cannot always be easily applied to the facts of any individual case.

On the facts as found by the judge can it be said, as a matter of fair and reasonable construction of simple words in the English language, that these premises were the " home " of anybody ? They were a mere annexe or overflow of the hotel. They were taken to enable the accommodation of the hotel to be extended, by way either of finding additional rooms for guests or of accommodating the proprietress herself and her husband or their servants. The people who used them were normally resident in the hotel in the sense that the bulk of their living activities were concerned with the hotel. To comply with s. 12 (2) of the Act there must be a letting " as a separate dwelling " ; and the first question that suggests itself to my mind is : Were these rooms let as a dwelling ? That prompts the question at once : Dwelling for whom, and what is meant by a " dwelling " ? It was argued by counsel for the tenants that, provided the particular activity, if it can be so called, of sleeping is conducted on premises, that is in itself sufficient to make those premises properly to be described as a " dwelling." Curiously enough, he confined his argument to the one case of sleeping. Other activities which are normally carried on in a dwelling, such as cooking and eating, he said would not be enough, but I do not know why. As I followed his argument, if these two rooms had been let off and used, not for the purpose of bedrooms, but for the purpose of kitchens or sitting rooms for the hotel, he would not have argued that they were dwellings. There is something (according to his argument) of particular value and importance in sleeping, and when a room is used as a bedroom it immediately becomes a dwelling. It must not be thought for a moment that I am throwing any doubt on the proposition that where there is a letting to a man of one room which is the only place where he moves and has his being, that circumstance will prevent the room being a " dwelling " within the meaning of the Act, but here one has the activities connected with the dwelling of all these people divided between two tenements. Their main activities of living are conducted in the hotel. They go out to sleep in these rooms—sometimes the guests, sometimes the servants, and so on. Where is the “dwelling”? It seems to me clear that this annexe or accretion to the accommodation of the hotel cannot be regarded as a “dwelling,” much less as a “separate dwelling.”

The argument would, it seems to me, lead to the extraordinary conclusion that, if a person took three different rooms from three different landlords in three different buildings, perhaps in three different streets, and slept in one and cooked in another and spent the day sitting and reading or having his meals in the third one, there would be three separate dwellings. That is what the argument must lead to, unless the theory that sleeping is the decisive test is accepted. In truth and in fact, the dwelling of the tenant who is to be protected under the Act would, in the case assumed, be distributed over those three tenements and one could not predicate of any one of them that it was let as a dwelling or occupied as a dwelling. That is a totally different case, of course, from the case where the only premises demised consist of one room and that is the only place where the tenant moves and has his being.

Looking at it broadly and as a pure matter of common-sense, again it seems to me impossible to say that rooms let in the circumstances of this case can be regarded as separate dwellings. The learned county court judge took the view that they were protected by the Act, and I find some little difficulty in following his reasoning. He says at the end of his judgment :

As I find that the two rooms in question are a dwelling-house within the meaning of s. 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, it appears to me, upon consideration, that the present case is governed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Vickery v. Martin (2).

Section 3 (3) of the Act of 1939 deals with a case where part of the premises demised is used for business purposes, and it provides that in such a case that is not to prevent the premises being a dwelling-house. With all respect to the learned judge, I do not see the applicability of that sub-section to the present facts. We are not talking here of two rooms, part of which are used for one purpose and part of which are used for another. We are dealing with two rooms which are at various times occupied by the proprietor of the hotel and at various times by his guests. The sub-section relates to cases where physically part of the premises is used for business purposes and part for dwelling purposes. The facts in Vickery v. Martin (2) were quite different from the facts in this case. There what was demised was a dwelling-house, but the tenant, who was carrying on a boarding-house business, used part of it to accommodate her guests and part of it for her own purposes as a dwelling-house, and the question was whether the premises were taken out of the category of a dwelling-house because, although she normally occupied certain rooms she moved on occasion from room to room on the premises in order to provide proper accommodation for her guests. It was argued that that prevented it being said that any part of it was being used by her as a dwelling-house, but this court took the view that such temporary and periodical migration in the house did not prevent the house being in part used as a dwelling-house—in other words, that in those circumstances it was not necessary to pin the tenant down to a specific room in which she kept throughout. It seems to me that that case has nothing to do with the present.

Certain other authorities were referred to, and the one I must mention first is a decision of the Divisional Court in Duke of Richmond v. Dewar (3). The facts in that case are not very fully explained, but the point appears to have been whether or not, on the facts, what, apparently, nobody was disputing was a dwelling ought to be regarded as having ceased to be a dwelling because it was also used for business purposes. I do not find that the court was directing its mind to the problem with which we have to deal here. The question was whether, having regard to the expiration of the section of the Act of 1920 which had protected business premises, the premises ought to be considered as business premises not protected by the Act. Two rooms and a studio had been taken by the Cadogan Hotel Co. to be used as sleeping apartments for their staff, and the court, on the facts, treated those rooms as not having been put out of the category of “dwelling-house” because they were used for business purposes. The passage which was particularly relied on was a sentence from the judgment of SCRUTTON, L.J., in which he is reported as having said (38 T.L.R. 151, 152) that "he thought that the use of a house for sleeping apartments was one of the main characteristics of a dwelling-house." Relying on that, counsel for the tenants says: "Here are rooms that are used as sleeping apartments. A sleeping apartment is one of the main characteristics of a dwelling-house. Ergo, these rooms are dwelling-houses." If SCRUTTON, L.J.'s words are to be construed in the sense that a room which is slept in is always a dwelling-house, I would dissent from that proposition. In certain cases obviously that must be so, but in the present case the rooms are merely used as overflows from the normal occupation of an adjoining hotel. To say on these facts that the mere use of a room for sleeping constitutes it a dwelling-house is, in my opinion, to carry the matter much too far. I do not regard that authority as in any way concluding the present question, and I may also say that it has generally been thought to be inconsistent with the views expressed in later cases as to the true scope and operation of the Act. It has been criticised on the ground that the tenants there were a limited company who could not themselves occupy and the position of limited companies under tenancy agreements has been considered in many subsequent cases, but I think it is open to criticism on another ground. It would appear to involve giving a protection extending beyond what is now accepted as the real fundamental object of the Act which I have already quoted—protecting a tenant from being turned out of his home. How can it be said that the owner of a hotel who takes two rooms in a neighbouring house and puts his guests or his servants or himself in them, as occasion makes it convenient, can be said to be turned out of his home when he is forced to give up those two rooms and has still his hotel? The rooms are not his "home" at all, I should have thought. Therefore, quite apart from the question of the position of a company, the observations in that case, if they bear the meaning that counsel here would attribute to them, cannot really be regarded nowadays as authoritative—at any rate for the purpose of deciding such a question as we have here.

On the other hand, similar questions to the one that we have here have been considered: Wright v. Howell (4), a decision of this court, related to an unfurnished room in a flat of a landlord. The tenant had living in the same building his parents-in-law who had a flat on the upper floor. The tenant took the room in question as a bedroom. Later, he installed an electric cooker, having previously taken his meals with his wife in her parents' flat. He and his wife used the flat for all normal purposes and when she had a baby he and his wife went back and again slept in his parents-in-law's flat. The landlord claimed possession, and this court affirmed the county court judge, who made an order for possession. The finding of the court is thus reported (204 L.T. Jo. 299, 300):

HELD: that, as the room, when let to the tenant, was devoid of cooking arrangements and water supply, and as the word "dwelling" on its true construction included all the major activities of life, particularly sleeping, cooking and feeding, and as one of those activities, sleeping, was at all relevant times no longer being carried on there, the room was not a dwelling and the tenancy was not protected.

It must not, I think, be taken that the words there used are to be applied literally and verbally to every set of facts where only one of those major activities is carried on. I have already said, and I wish to make it clear (and I do not think the court in Wright v. Howell (4) intended to assert the contrary) that it is possible to have one room let and occupied as a dwelling. Whether or not the letting satisfies that description must depend on the facts of each case. What I am saying is that on the facts of Wright v. Howell (4) and on the facts of the present case one cannot attribute the character of a dwelling to a room where the tenant carries on one only of his many home activities, while he carries on others in a different tenement altogether. On the facts of this case, the county court judge ought, in my opinion, to have decided in favour of the landlord, and, accordingly, there must be an order for possession.

WROTTESELEY, L.J.: I agree with all that has fallen from the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and with his reasons. Since the county court judge purported to base his decision on Vickery v. Martin (2) I would add that that case could only apply to the present case had the premises let been, not, as in this case, two rooms which were let as an adjunct to the hotel next door, but the hotel next door together with these two rooms. Those are not the facts in this case, and, therefore, Vickery v. Martin (2) is of no assistance whatever.

EVERSHED, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed with costs in both courts on Scale "A."

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for H. Rhodes, Kendal (for the plaintiff); Gibson & Weldon, agents for Leslie G. Powell, Kendal (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re STEELE'S WILL TRUSTS, NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. STEELE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), June 10, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Heir-loom—Rule in Shelley's case—"To be held by him and by his eldest son on his decease and to descend to the eldest son of such eldest son and so on to the eldest son of his descendants and I request my son to do all in his power by his will or otherwise to give effect to this my wish."

By her will, dated Dec. 14, 1903, a testatrix, who died on Nov. 19, 1929, gave her diamond necklace to her son C. "to go and be held as an heir-loom by him and by his eldest son on his decease and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son and so to the eldest son of his descendants as far as the rules of law and equity will permit (and I request my said son to do all in his power by his will or otherwise to give effect to this my wish)." On Apr. 28, 1945, C. died, having provided by his will: "I give my diamond necklace to my trustees upon trust for my son R. during his life and after his death for his eldest son absolutely." On the date of this summons R. had a son D. living, who himself had a son born on July 24, 1947. It was argued that Shelley v. Shelley (1868) (L.R. 6 Eq. 540) was not now authoritative and that the necklace had been vested in C. absolutely:—

HELD: notwithstanding the trend of modern decisions towards holding precatory trusts non-binding, there was no reason to treat Shelley v. Shelley as wrongly decided; the rule in that case should be applied in the construction of the testatrix's will, and, therefore, the necklace should have been held on trust for C. for life, and thereafter for R. for life, and thereafter for D. for life, and after the death of the survivor of them on trust for the eldest son or grandson of D. and otherwise in the manner decided in Shelley v. Shelley including the ultimate trust (in default of any male issue of D. taking an absolutely vested interest) in favour of C. absolutely.

Shelley v. Shelley (1868) (L.R. 6 Eq. 540) rule applied.

[AS TO EXECUTORY TRUSTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 107-109, paras. 184-189; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 608-612, Nos. 530-557.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Shelley v. Shelley, (1868), L.R. 6 Eq. 540; 37 L.J.Ch. 357; 16 W.R. 1036; 44 Digest 950, 8034.
- (2) Re Hamilton, Trench v. Hamilton, [1895] 2 Ch. 370; 64 L.J.Ch. 799; 43 W.R. 577; 39 Sol. Jo. 524; 12 R. 355; sub nom. Re Hamilton, Re Ashtown, Trench v. Hamilton, 72 L.T. 748, C.A.; 43 Digest 588, 376.
- (3) Re Williams, Williams v. Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12; 66 L.J.Ch. 485; 76 L.T. 600; 45 W.R. 519; 41 Sol. Jo. 452, C.A.; 43 Digest 552, 17.
- (4) Re Hill, Hill v. Hill, [1902] 1 Ch. 537; 71 L.J.Ch. 222; 86 L.T. 146; affd., [1902] 1 Ch. 807, C.A.; 44 Digest 951, 8037.
- (5) Re Adams & Kensington Vestry, (1884), 27 Ch.D. 394; 54 L.J.Ch. 87; 51 L.T. 382; 32 W.R. 883, C.A.; 43 Digest 581, 296.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the construction of a will in which the gift of a necklace was couched in similar terms to those construed in Shelley v. Shelley (1868) (L.R. 6 Eq. 540). It was submitted that Shelley v. Shelley was no longer binding because the precatory trust, in keeping with modern tendencies, should be disregarded, with the result that there was an absolute gift to the first named beneficiary. WYNN-PARRY, J., held that the rule in Shelley v. Shelley ought to be applied, and made an order following, mutatis mutandis, the minutes in that case. The facts appear in the judgment.

Rink for the plaintiffs (the executor of the will of the son of the testatrix, and the grandson, and great-grandson of the testatrix).

P. W. E. Taylor for the first defendant (the surviving executor of the will of the testatrix).

E. J. T. G. Bagshawe for the second defendant (the great-great-grandson of the testatrix).

WYNN-PARRY, J. : By her will, dated Dec. 14, 1903, the testatrix, Mrs. Adelaide Sherrif Steele, provided, by cl. 2 :

I give my diamond necklace to my son Charles Steele to go and be held as an heirloom by him and by his eldest son on his decease and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son and so to the eldest son of his descendants as far as the rules of law and equity will permit (and I request my said son to do all in his power by his will or otherwise to give effect to this my wish).

The son, Charles Steele, died on Apr. 28, 1945, having made a will dated Dec. 22, 1930, in which, by cl. 3, he said :

I give my diamond necklace to my trustees upon trust for my son Charles Ronald Steele during his life and after his death for his eldest son absolutely.

Charles Ronald Steele, mentioned in that clause, is the second plaintiff to this summons and his eldest son is the third plaintiff, David Steele. David Steele has a son born on July 24, 1947, after the death of the testatrix.

The question which arises is whether, on the true construction of the passage in cl. 2 of the will of the testatrix which I have read, the necklace became vested in the testatrix's son, Charles Steele, absolutely, or, whether it was held on trust for Charles Steele for his life and after his death for his son, Charles Ronald Steele, for his life, and after his death for David Steele for his life, and after the death of the survivor on trust for the eldest son or grandson of the third plaintiff, David Steele, and otherwise in the manner decided in Shelley v. Shelley (1), including the ultimate trust (in default of any male issue of David Steele who takes an absolutely vested interest) in favour of Charles Steele absolutely. In Shelley v. Shelley (1) the testatrix by her will made the following bequest (L.R. 6 Eq. 540) :

I give my best long string of pearl earrings, bracelets with diamond snaps, and my pearl necklace and earrings, and all my rings with pearls, diamonds, and emeralds mixed, and all the rest of my pearls and emeralds [and other jewels] to my nephew, John Shelley, to go and be held as heir-looms by him, and by his eldest son on his decease, and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on, to the eldest son of his descendants, as far as the rules of law or equity will permit. And I request my said nephew to do all in his power, by his will or otherwise, to give effect to this my wish as to these things so directed to go as heir-looms as aforesaid.

With the exception of the latter words "as to these things so directed to go as heir-looms as aforesaid" the relevant provision in the will which I have to construe in terms mutatis mutandis exactly corresponds with those in the will which fell to be construed in Shelley v. Shelley (1). In that case it was held that on the true construction of that provision a valid executory trust was created for John Shelley for life with remainder to his eldest son for his life and on the death of that eldest son in trust for his eldest son to be a vested interest in him when he should attain 21, but if he should die in his father's lifetime or after his death without having attained 21, leaving an eldest son born before his father's death, in trust for such last-mentioned eldest son to be a vested interest when he should attain 21, and, subject to these limitations, the jewels vested in John Shelley absolutely and passed by his will. The basis of the decision was this. SIR W. PAGE WOOD, V.-C., held that the words of the gift to John Shelley "to go and be held as heir-looms by him and by his eldest son on his decease," if they stood alone, would have been a gift to the first taker for life and on his death would have gone to the next taker absolutely. He continues (ibid., 543) :

But these are not the only words, as the testatrix goes on to say : "And to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on to the eldest son of his descendants as far as the rules of law or equity will permit," and further, there is a request to the nephew "to do all in his power, by his will or otherwise, to give effect to this my will as to these things so directed to go as heir-looms as aforesaid."

The VICE-CHANCELLOR held that the addition of those words prevented the first taker from receiving the gift absolutely. The order in Shelley v. Shelley (1) was (ibid., 549):

... that a good executory trust was created by the will and codicil of the testatrix, Helen Parker, of the jewels and jewellery thereby respectively bequeathed as heir-looms, and that such trust ought to have been executed by the late John Shelley, the nephew of the said testatrix, and that defendant Elizabeth Shelley, the widow and executrix of the said John Shelley, is now bound to execute such trust . . . that under such trust the said John Shelley was entitled to the enjoyment of such jewels and jewellery during his life, and that plaintiff Edward Shelley, the eldest son of the said John Shelley, is entitled to the enjoyment thereof during his life, and that upon the death of the said plaintiff the same will be held in trust for the eldest son of the said Edward Shelley, if living at the decease of the said Edward Shelley, the same to become a vested interest in such son when he shall attain the age of 21 years, but if he shall die in the lifetime of the said plaintiff Edward Shelley, or after him under the age of 21 years, leaving an eldest son born before the plaintiff's decease, then in trust for such last-mentioned eldest son, to be a vested interest when he shall attain the age of 21 years; and in case the said jewels shall not become absolutely vested in any person under the limitations aforesaid, then (subject to the life interest of the said Edward Shelley) in trust for the said John Shelley absolutely.

It is, therefore, clear that, if Shelley v. Shelley (1) governs the present case, there is complete machinery for working out the trust on which this necklace ought to be held. The attack is made on the basis that, in view of the modern trend of decisions as regards precatory trusts, Shelley v. Shelley (1) should not be followed. I do not propose to embark on a detailed review of the authorities, but will content myself with observing that it appears to me from a review of the later authorities to which I was referred—Re Hamilton deceased (2), Re Williams deceased (3), and Re Hill deceased (4)—that there is no ground for regarding the authority of Shelley v. Shelley (1) as being no longer binding although it is clear that there is now a strong tendency to recognise what LINDLEY, L.J., in Re Williams deceased (3) described as "this sensible rule," namely, that which was said by LORD ST. LEONARDS in his work on the LAW OF PROPERTY published in 1849, p. 375:

The law as to the operation of words of recommendation, confidence, request, or the like, attached to an absolute gift, has in late times varied from the earlier authorities. In nearly every recent case, the gift has been held to be uncontrolled by the request or recommendation made, or confidence expressed. This undoubtedly simplifies the law, and it is not an unwholesome rule, that if a testator really mean his recommendation to be imperative, he should express his intention in a mandatory form; but this conclusion was not arrived at without a considerable struggle.

It is said in JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., vol. 2, p. 845, after references to Shelley v. Shelley (1) and other cases:

Owing to the change in the principles of construction applicable to precatory trusts, many of the cases above referred to would probably not be followed at the present day. On the other hand, in the present edition of THEOBALD ON WILLS, 10th ed., there are two references, at pp. 339 and 514, to Shelley v. Shelley (1) in which no suggestion is made by the learned editor that the authority of that case has been in any way impaired. The manner in which the modern view has evolved is, I think, simply that the courts have indicated that there is established in the older authorities no binding or overriding rule of construction which would disentitle one to look at each will and to extract from that will what was the true intention of the particular testator or testatrix. Indeed, in Re Hamilton deceased (2), LINDLEY, L.J., quoted ([1895] 2 Ch. 373) with approval the words of COTTON, L.J., in Re Adams and Kensington Vestry (5) (27 Ch.D. 410):

I have no hesitation in saying myself, that I think some of the older authorities went a great deal too far in holding that some particular words appearing in a will were sufficient to create a trust. Undoubtedly confidence, if the rest of the context shows that a trust is intended, may make a trust, but what we have to look at is the whole of the will which we have to construe, and if the confidence is that she will do what is right as regards the disposal of the property, I cannot say that that is, on the true construction of the will, a trust imposed upon her. Having regard to the later decisions, we must not extend the old cases in any way, or rely upon the mere use of any particular words, but, considering all the words which are used, we have to see what is their true effect, and what was the intention of the testator as expressed in his will.

In the later case of Re Hill (4), Shelley v. Shelley (1) was considered by SWINFEN EADY, J., who said ([1902] 1 Ch. 541):

In Shelley v. Shelley (1) the testatrix gave certain jewellery "to my nephew John Shelley, to go and be held as heirlooms by him, and by his eldest son on his decease, and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on to the eldest son of his descendants, as far as the rules of law or equity will permit." I stop there, omitting the subsequent direction in that will, because there is nothing equivalent to it in the present case. WOOD, V.-C., held in substance that the words which I have read, if they had stood alone and unqualified by the subsequent direction, would have created an absolute interest in the nephew John.

That case, therefore, is no authority for casting any doubt on the correctness of the decision in Shelley v. Shelley (1) or on its validity today.

Shelley v. Shelley (1) has stood for eighty years and I have before me a will which, as I have already observed, is, as regards the relevant passage, couched in the same language mutatis mutandis as that which was considered by WOOD, V.-C., in Shelley v. Shelley (1). That appears to me to afford the strongest indication that the testatrix by this will, which appears clearly on the face of it to have been prepared with professional aid, intended that the diamond necklace in question should devolve in the same manner as the jewellery in Shelley v. Shelley (1) was directed to devolve by the order made therein. Having regard to the nature of this indication of intention and to the circumstances, I cannot see any good reason why, notwithstanding the admitted trend of modern decisions, I should treat Shelley v. Shelley (1) as wrongly decided, and, therefore, a case which I ought not to follow.

I come to the conclusion that I must declare that, on the true construction of the will of the testatrix, the diamond necklace should have been held on trust for Charles Steele for his life, and after his death for the second plaintiff, Charles Ronald Steele, for his life, and after his death for David Steele, the third plaintiff, for his life, and after the death of the survivor of them on trust for the eldest son or grandson of the third plaintiff, David Steele, and otherwise in the manner decided in Shelley v. Shelley (1) including the ultimate trust (in default of any male issue of David Steele who take an absolutely vested interest) in favour of Charles Steele absolutely and that the order in this case will follow mutatis mutandis the minutes which appear in the case of Shelley v. Shelley (1).

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the estate of Charles Steele.

Solicitors: Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for Hett, Davy & Stubbs, Scunthorpe (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MORGAN AND SON, LTD.*v. S. MARTIN JOHNSON & CO., LTD.
[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Cohen, L.JJ.), June 3, 1948.]

Practice—Summary judgment—Leave to defend—Set-off and counterclaim—Equitable set-off—R.S.C., Ord. 14.

The plaintiffs issued a writ under R.S.C., Ord. 14, claiming against the defendants charges for storage of vehicles and for telephone calls. The defendants admitted the claim, but contended that the plaintiffs had broken the terms of the contract of storage by delivering up a vehicle to someone otherwise than in accordance with the contract, or, alternatively, that the plaintiffs had acted in breach of their duty as bailees by keeping so inefficient a watch on the vehicle that it was stolen. The defendants, accordingly, claimed a set-off to the extent of the whole of the plaintiffs' claim, and a counterclaim to the extent to which the damages for breach of contract or for negligence exceeded the amount of the plaintiffs' claim. The master ordered that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to sign final judgment on the claim, with a stay of execution pending the trial of the set-off and counterclaim, and this order was confirmed by the judge in chambers with a variation allowing stay of execution until trial of the counterclaim or further order. From this order the defendants appealed.

HELD: since the defendants' set-off and counterclaim disclosed an equitable set-off, which, by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1925, would constitute a good defence to the action, the proper order was that the defendants should have unconditional leave to defend and not that there should be judgment for the plaintiffs with a stay of execution.

[AS TO LEAVE TO ENTER JUDGMENT AND UNCONDITIONAL LEAVE TO DEFEND, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, pp. 49, 50, paras. 77, 78; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 283-287, Nos. 164-199.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Banks v. Jarvis, [1903] 1 K.B. 549; 72 L.J.K.B. 267; 88 L.T. 20; 40 Digest 420, 416.
- (2) Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton, (1866), L.R. 2 Exch. 56; 4 H. & C. 656; 36 L.J.Ex. 33; 43 Digest 796, 2336.
- (3) Young v. Kitchin, (1878), 3 Ex.D. 127; 47 L.J.Q.B. 579; 40 Digest 380, 115.
- (4) Rawson v. Samuel, (1841), Cr. & Ph. 161; 10 L.J.Ch. 214; 40 Digest 379, 105.
- (5) Williams v. Davies, (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 464; 1 Dowl. 647; 3 Tyr. 383; 2 L.J.Ex. 102; 40 Digest 422, 429.
- (6) Beasley v. Darcy, (1800), 2 Sch. & Lef. 403 n; 31 Digest 482, 6308 vii.
- (7) O'Connor v. Spaight, (1804), 1 Sch. & Lef. 305; 31 Digest 483, e.
- (8) Ex p. Stephens, (1805), 11 Ves. 24; 4 Digest 390, 3572.
- (9) Piggot v. Williams, (1821), 6 Madd. 95; 42 Digest 230, 2028.
- (10) Cawdor (Lord) v. Lewis, (1835), 1 Y. & C. Ex. 427; 4 L.J. Ex. Eq. 59; 1 Digest 456, 1442.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL by the defendants from an order of LYNSEY, J., dated Apr. 30, 1948, confirming with variations the order of the master whereby it was ordered that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to sign final judgment on their claim under R.S.C., Ord. 14, with a stay of execution until trial of the counterclaim or further order. The appeal was allowed. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Hale for the plaintiffs.

H. C. Leon for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J.: The action in which this is an appeal was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants under Ord. 14. By their statement of claim the plaintiffs claimed £353 3s. 0d., being as to £352 17s. 0d. their charges for open storage accommodation provided by them pursuant to their letter to the defendants of May 15, 1947, and as to 6s. 0d. for the use of the plaintiffs' telephone by the defendants or their servants. The defendants opposed the claim and put in an affidavit by their secretary, Mr. Ernest Weinfeld, in the following terms:

The claim by the plaintiffs is made in respect of the storage by the plaintiffs of vehicles for the defendants, and I say that it was an express or implied term of the agreement by the plaintiffs to store such vehicles that they would store them with due care and that they would not deliver them up to anyone except against the signature on a letter dated May 12, 1947, from the defendants to the plaintiffs, or against a collection order issued by Reo Motors, Ltd.

The affidavit continues:

I admit that the plaintiffs stored vehicles for the defendants and that, but for the matters hereinafter referred to, the sum of £353 3s. 0d. would be due from the defendants to the plaintiffs, but I say that the plaintiffs in breach of the terms of the said contract and further or alternatively in breach of their duty as bailees of the defendants of a certain Dodge vehicle . . . either delivered up the said vehicle to someone without the authority of the defendants and without either the signature or the collection order referred to in the said letter dated May 12, 1947, or alternatively kept so inefficient a watch on the said vehicle that it was stolen. In consequence the said vehicle has been wholly lost to the defendants and the value thereof is approximately £375 . . .

It is conceded that the defendants' claim had been put forward some time before the writ was served and that it was a bona fide claim which had to be investigated. Questions will arise at the trial as to the nature of the duty owed, the circumstances in which the motor car disappeared, and whether or not the plaintiffs are liable, but the defendants' claim was clearly bona fide and arising out of the subject-matter of the plaintiffs' claim and closely interwoven with it. The effect of the order which the judge made, one often made in cases of this kind, was to give the plaintiffs judgment for the amount of the claim, but to stay execution pending the trial of the defendants' counter-claim. Ordinarily speaking, such an order will adequately protect the defendants in a case of this kind, and I find it a little difficult to follow the precise reasons which counsel for the defendants has advanced for his clients' objection to this order. None the less, if it was a wrong order, he is entitled to take the point. Any litigant is entitled to say: "I prefer not to have a judgment against me even if I am adequately protected against there being any premature enforcement of that judgment."

In my view, it all comes down to this. In circumstances such as the present, would a court of equity have granted relief by way of equitable set-off in proceedings where both claim and what I call counterclaim for convenience were pending before that court? It is not necessary to consider, as I thought at one time it might be, what the position would have been in a court of equity where the counterclaim was proceeding in a court of equity and the claim was proceeding in the King's Bench Division, or what course a court of equity would have taken for the protection of the plaintiff in the action in chancery with regard to the proceedings that might be going on in the other Division. It is sufficient for this case to ascertain what a court of equity would have done where both claims were pending before the Chancery Court. It is conceded by counsel for the plaintiffs, on the authorities which have been relied on and cited by counsel for the defendants that he cannot contend that in circumstances such as the present a court of equity would not have allowed the defendants' claim by way of equitable set-off. Since the Judicature Act, of course, all courts have to give effect to the equitable relief which would have been given by a court of equity. Sections 38, 39, and 40 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, are the relevant sections. Section 38 provides:

If a defendant claims to be entitled to any equitable estate or right, or to relief on any equitable ground against any deed, instrument or contract, or against any right, title or claim asserted by any plaintiff or petitioner in the cause or matter, or alleges any ground of equitable defence to any such claim of the plaintiff or petitioner, the court or judge shall give to every equitable estate, right or ground of relief so claimed, and to every equitable defence so alleged, the same effect by way of defence against the claim of the plaintiff or petitioner, as the Court of Chancery ought formerly to have given if the like matters had been relied on by way of defence in any suit or proceeding instituted in that court for the like purpose.

Section 39 provides:

(1) The court or judge shall have power to grant to any defendant in respect of any equitable estate or right or other matter or equity, and also in respect of any legal estate, right or title claimed or asserted by him (a) all such relief against any plaintiff or petitioner as the defendant has properly claimed by his pleading, and as the court or judge might have granted in any suit instituted for that purpose by that defendant against the same plaintiff or petitioner.

By s. 40:

The court or judge shall take notice of all equitable estates, titles and rights, and all equitable duties and liabilities appearing incidentally in the course of any cause or matter, in the same manner in which the Court of Chancery would formerly have taken notice of those matters in any suit or proceeding duly instituted therein.

I might also read the first part of s. 41:

No cause or proceeding at any time pending in the High Court or the Court of Appeal shall be restrained by prohibition or injunction, but every matter of equity on which an injunction against the prosecution of any such cause or proceeding might formerly have been obtained, whether unconditionally or on any terms or conditions, may be relied on by way of defence thereto: Provided that (a) Nothing in this Act shall disable either of the said courts, if it thinks fit so to do, from directing a stay of proceedings in any cause or matter pending before it . . .

That indicates that, although before the Judicature Act, a matter might have been dealt with by way of injunction, it now becomes a matter of defence.

I do not think it is necessary, in view of the admission of counsel for the plaintiffs as to the effect of the authorities, to refer to many of the cases cited by counsel for the defendants, but I think it is necessary to refer to one or two. Bankes v. Jarvis (1) was an action to recover a debt due to the plaintiff as a trustee, and it was held that the defendant was entitled to set up as a defence that the cestui que trust was indebted to him in a sum for unliquidated

A damages exceeding the amount of the claim. The facts were that a man named Bankes had carried on a practice as a veterinary surgeon and before going abroad he gave to the plaintiff, his mother, authority in writing to sell the practice. That she did, together with the goodwill, fixtures and fittings, to the defendant for the sum of £100, payable in two instalments. The action was brought for the second instalment under that agreement. The claim was not disputed, but the defendant counterclaimed £51 as damages for breach by Bankes of his covenant to indemnify the defendant, being £21 for rent which the defendant had been compelled to pay through the default of Bankes and £30 paid by the defendant in settlement of a claim for damages for breach by Bankes of a covenant to repair. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., in giving judgment, said ([1903] 1 K.B. 551) :

B The action was, however, brought by the mother as agent or trustee for her son, and the case, therefore, raises the simple question whether the defendant can set up as a defence the claim for unliquidated damages which he has against the son in the same way as he could have set off a debt due from the son if it had been a liquidated amount. In my opinion the case is covered by the sections of the Judicature Act and the rule which have been referred to. I think that it was intended by s. 24 (2) and (3), of the Judicature Act to give to a defendant the right to set up a defence, such as is relied on here, in the same way as he might have raised an equitable defence before the Judicature Act. If grounds exist which formerly would have entitled a defendant to file a bill in Chancery to restrain the plaintiff from proceeding with his action, I think a defendant is now enabled to rely on those grounds as a defence to the action. If in the present case there had been a claim by the defendant to set off a liquidated sum of £50 due to him from the son, the defendant would clearly have been entitled to rely on that set-off as a defence to the action . . . A plaintiff suing as trustee cannot be in a better position than an assignee for value suing in his own name, against whom all equitable defences can be relied on.

D CHANNELL, J., said (ibid, 553) :

E I think that this counterclaim ought to have been allowed as a set-off—that is to say, it is a good defence to the extent of the plaintiff's claim ; it could not, of course, stand as a counterclaim for the full amount. The case of Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton (2) is clear authority that before the Judicature Act a liquidated amount owing to the defendant by the plaintiff's son could have been set off by the defendant against the claim of the plaintiff suing as trustee for her son. Then the Judicature Act, and more especially the rules, distinctly put an unliquidated claim on the same footing as a liquidated claim for the purpose of set-off ; and consequently the defendant's claim against the plaintiff's son, which, if liquidated, could have been pleaded before the Judicature Act as a set-off to the plaintiff's claim, can now, although unliquidated, be relied on as a defence to the extent of the claim.

F I should, perhaps, before reading that case, have referred to Young v. Kitchin (3) at p. 127. That again was a case of assignment in which, according to the headnote :

G The statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff sued as assignee by deed of a debt due from the defendant to the assignor on a building contract. The defendant pleaded, by way of set-off and counterclaim, that he was entitled to damages for breaches of contract by the assignor to complete and deliver the buildings at the specified time whereby the defendant lost the use of them. On demurrer to so much of the defence as alleged breaches of contract by the assignor ; HELD, that the defendant was not entitled to recover any damages against the plaintiff, but was entitled by way of set-off or deduction from the plaintiff's claim to the damages which he had sustained by the non-performance of the contract by the assignor ; and that the form of the defence must be amended accordingly.

H It is to be observed in that case that the defence alleged not only defects in the work, but also contained a claim by way of set-off and counterclaim. The sixth paragraph set out that there had been a breach of that part of the agreement whereby the plaintiff had promised to complete and deliver the buildings in August and September, "that the works were to be paid for by the defendant on the architect's certificate as they proceeded, and that defects (if any) were to be remedied or allowed for by Downs & Co.", the contractors. The seventh paragraph alleged that Downs & Co. did not deliver up the buildings until November, "whereby the defendants was unable to let the buildings for the reception of hops, for which purpose they were erected." The eighth paragraph alleged defects in the buildings when delivered up. I have drawn attention to those paragraphs to show that part of the set-off and counterclaim related to failure to deliver up buildings completed at the contract date and it was not confined solely to claims relating to defects in the performance of the work. In those circumstances, CLEASBY, B., said ((1878) 3 Ex. D. 130) in giving judgment on this part of the case :

There are two objections taken to the defence—one of substance and the other of form. In substance I think the defendant is entitled to the benefit of this defence in reduction of the plaintiff's claim. The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (6) says that the assignment of a debt or other legal chose in action shall be "subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee if this Act had not passed," that is, subject to all equities which would be enforced in a court of equity. I think this is a case where, in equity, the whole matter might be dealt with and the plaintiff's claim settled, after deducting all that ought to be deducted in respect of the failure to complete and deliver the buildings. That is my opinion on the general merits ; but on the question of form I will consider the pleadings.

We were also referred, and I think it might be helpful just to mention it on this question of equitable set-off, to Rawson v. Samuel (4) and to the passage in the judgment of LORD COTTENHAM, L.C. (Cr. & Ph. 179), where he refers to some of the previous authorities. He said :

Several cases were cited in support of the injunction ; but in every one of them, except Williams v. Davies (5), it will be found that the equity of the bill impeached the title to the legal demand. In Beasley v. Darcy (6) the tenant was entitled to redeem his lease upon payment of the rent due ; and in ascertaining the amount of such rent, a sum was deducted which was due to the tenant from the landlord for damage done in cutting timber. Both were ascertained sums, and the equity against the landlord was that he ought not to recover possession of the farm for non-payment of rent, whilst he owed to the tenant a sum for damage to that same farm. In O'Connor v. Spaight (7) the rent paid formed part of a complicated account ; and it was impossible, without taking the account, to ascertain what sum the tenant was to pay to redeem his lease. In Ex parte Stephens (8) the term equitable set-off is used ; but the note having been given under a misrepresentation, and a concealment of the fact that the party to whom it was given was at the time largely indebted to the party who gave it, the note was ordered to be delivered up as paid. In Piggott v. Williams (9) the complaint against the solicitor for negligence went directly to impeach the demand he was attempting to enforce. In Lord Cawdor v. Lewis (10) the proposition is too largely stated in the marginal note ; for, in the case, the action for mesne profits was brought against the plaintiff, who was held, as against the defendant, to be, in equity, entitled to the land. None of these cases furnish any grounds for the injunction in the case before me.

Those cases to which he referred do, however, indicate the kind of circumstances in which the Courts of Chancery give this equitable relief. The case most in point was that of Piggott v. Williams (9), where there was a charge against a solicitor of negligence which went directly to impeach the demand for payment which he was making.

In view of those authorities, I think that the present case is one where, on the facts set out in the affidavit, the Court of Chancery would have clearly allowed the defendants' claim as an equitable set-off against the plaintiffs' claim. In those circumstances, although I think the point is, perhaps, rather an academic one, strictly speaking, I think, the proper order that should be made in a case of this kind is that the defendants should have unconditional leave to defend and not that there should be judgment for the plaintiffs with a stay of execution. I have confined my observations to cases, such as the present, where it is quite clear that the court of equity would have given relief by way of equitable set-off. What the position may be with regard to other kinds of counterclaims it is not necessary to consider. Therefore, although orders of this kind have, in cases very like the present, often been made, I think the point taken by counsel for the defendants is unanswerable and that he is entitled to succeed in his appeal.

COHEN, L.J. : I agree so entirely with what has fallen from my Lord that I wish to add very few words in stating my reasons for considering that the order made below must be varied. Once counsel for the plaintiffs conceded—as, in my view, he was constrained by the authorities to which we were referred, and, in particular, by the decision in Piggott v. Williams (9) to concede—that the facts alleged in Mr. Weinfeld's affidavit, if proved at the trial, would establish a good equitable set-off, it followed that the appeal must succeed. Before the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875, such claims were often enforced by injunction, but it is plain from s. 41 of the Act of 1925 that an injunction would not now be the appropriate way of giving effect to a set-off and that under s. 38 effect should be given to it as an equitable defence if so pleaded. That being so, it seems to me to follow that the matter must be dealt with as in Young v. Kitchen (3). CLEASBY, B., indicated that equity would deal with the matter by deducting from the claim of the plaintiff all that ought to be deducted in respect of the failure, if failure be proved, to deliver the lorry that the plaintiff received from the defendant. I only desire to add one word. Counsel for the defendants was tempted in the course of the argument to suggest that such a set-off would arise if, for instance, in an action for failure to deliver goods, there was a counterclaim for libel. It is unnecessary for us to decide that, but I think that argument was inconsistent with the observations of LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., in Rawson v. Samuel (4). Appeal allowed. Plaintiffs to pay defendants' costs of the appeal, and the costs before the master and the judge to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors: Braby & Waller (for the plaintiffs); Buckeridge & Braune (for the defendants).

orted by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Distinguished. PYRAH v. DONCASTER CORPN. [1949] 1 All E.R. 883.

ROBERTS v. DOROTHEA SLATE QUARRIES CO., LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord du Parc, Lord Normand and Lord Oaksey), April 29, 30, May 3, June 23, 1948.]

Workmen's Compensation—Injury by accident—Silicosis—Slate worker—Injury to lungs by inhalation of dust—Continuous process extending over a period of time—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 1 (1).

From 1921 to 1941 a workman was employed in slate quarries as a slate splitter, working in closed sheds in which the air was impregnated with dust on account of the work done there. The slate contained particles of silica which were inhaled by the workman and produced silicosis. In November, 1941, the workman's health broke down and he had been completely incapacitated since 1942. On Jan. 22, 1946, a medical board, constituted under the Silicosis and Asbestosis (Medical Arrangements) Schemes, 1931 to 1943, certified that he was totally disabled by silicosis as from Nov. 6, 1945. Silicosis is not an industrial disease within s. 43 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, but by s. 47 power is given to the Secretary of State to make schemes in regard to the payment of compensation by employers to workmen in specified industries involving exposure to silica dust. Schemes had been made in pursuance of this power, but the workman was not entitled to compensation under them. He claimed compensation under s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1925 on the ground that the disease was an "injury by accident" within the meaning of the sub-section, because the incapacity for work was caused by the final clotting of the lungs by the particles of silica and was due either to one final accident or to a number of successive accidents:—

HELD: the incapacity caused by silicosis was the result of a continuous process going on substantially from day to day over a period of years and could not be said to be the result of an accident or a series of accidents, each one of which was specific and ascertainable, and, accordingly, on a true construction of the Act of 1925, silicosis was not an "injury by accident" within the meaning of s. 1 (1).

Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds ([1926] 1 K.B. 497), approved.

[AS TO DISEASES CONTRACTED BY WORKMAN IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 819-822, paras. 1157, 1158; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 34, pp. 273-275, Nos. 2311-2324.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Trim Joint District School Board of Management v. Kelly, [1914] A.C. 667; 83 L.J.P.C. 220; 111 L.T. 305; 7 B.W.C.C. 274; 34 Digest 270, 2300.
- (2) Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co., Ltd., [1914] A.C. 62; 83 L.J.K.B. 197; 109 L.T. 759; 7 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 288, 2415.

- (3) Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, [1926] 1 K.B. 497; 95 L.J.K.B. 676; 134 L.T. 459; 18 B.W.C.C. 535; 34 Digest 272, 2310.
- (4) Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey, [1905] A.C. 230; 74 L.J.K.B. 474; 92 L.T. 578; 7 W.C.C. 1; affg. S.C. sub nom. Higgins v. Campbell & Harrison, Ltd., Turvey v. Brintons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K.B. 328; 34 Digest 464, 3799.
- (5) Fenton v. Thorley & Co., Ltd., [1903] A.C. 443; 72 L.J.K.B. 787; 89 L.T. 314; 5 W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 266, 2264.
- (6) Innes (or Grant) v. Kynoch, [1919] A.C. 765; 88 L.J.P.C. 85; 121 L.T. 39; 12 B.W.C.C. 78; 34 Digest 272, 2308.
- (7) Steel v. Cammell, Laird & Co., Ltd., [1905] 2 K.B. 232; 74 L.J.K.B. 610; 93 L.T. 357; 7 W.C.C. 9; 34 Digest 271, 2302.
- (8) Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvage, (1921), 90 L.J.K.B. 1340; 126 L.T. 49; 14 B.W.C.C. 158; affg. S.C. sub nom. Selvage v. Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd., [1921] 1 K.B. 355; 34 Digest 272, 2309.
- (9) Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., Gorley v. Backworth Collieries, (1905), 93 L.T. 360; 7 W.C.C. 19; 34 Digest 271, 2303.
- (10) Walker v. Hockney Brothers, (1909), 2 B.W.C.C. 20; 34 Digest 273, 2311.
- (11) Ormond v. Holmes & Co., Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 795; 107 L.J.K.B. 21; 157 L.T. 56; 30 B.W.C.C. 254; Digest Supp.
- (12) Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young, [1940] 2 All E.R. 85; [1940] A.C. 479; 109 L.J.P.C. 49; 162 L.T. 344; sub nom. Young v. Fife Coal Co., 33 B.W.C.C. 107; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (13) Walkinshaw v. Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd., 1935 S.C. (H.L.) 36; sub nom. Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. v. Walkinshaw, 28 B.W.C.C. 230.

APPEAL by the workman from a decision of the Court of Appeal (SCOTT, MORTON and BUCKNILL, L.J.J.), dated Feb. 7, 1947.

The workman, who was certified by a medical board constituted under the Silicosis and Asbestosis (Medical Arrangements) Schemes, 1931 to 1943, as totally disabled by silicosis as from Nov. 6, 1945, claimed compensation from the employers (i) for injury by accident under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, s. 1, and (ii) alternatively, under the Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931. The county court judge held that there had been no injury by accident within the meaning of s. 1 of the Act of 1925, but that the workman was engaged in working with silica rock within the meaning of art. 2 (iv) of the Scheme of 1931, and he made an award in the workman's favour under the Scheme. The workman and the employers both appealed to the Court of Appeal, who dismissed the workman's appeal from the judge's decision on the claim under s. 1 of the Act, but allowed that of the employers from the award under the Scheme on the ground that the workman was not within the Scheme. The workman accepted the decision of the Court of Appeal refusing his claim under the Scheme, but appealed to the House of Lords on the question whether the disease was an injury by accident within s. 1 of the Act of 1925. The House of Lords held that it was not, and dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER.

Beney, K.C., and Dare for the workman.

Gerrard, K.C., and F. Atkinson for the employers.

The House took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, this case raises the important question whether incapacity due to silicosis can be included within the category of "personal injury by accident" within the meaning of those words as used in s. 1 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. No doubt, the exact question is whether the silicosis existing in a particular individual is within that category, but it was not suggested to your Lordships, nor do I think it could be maintained, that the case in question is in any way abnormal or differs in its features or symptoms from the general run of cases in which a workman suffers from silicosis.

The facts are short and are not in dispute. The workman, a man of 66, had worked in slate quarries for most of his life and for the respondents from 1921 until November, 1941, when his health broke down. Except for a period of some three weeks in April, 1942, he has been unable to work since then. He had been employed over these years as a slate splitter in closed sheds in which a large quantity of dust impregnated the air as a result of the work done there. The slate contains very fine granules of quartz throughout the material of which it is composed and these granules are inhaled by the workman, reach the lungs, injure its smaller air passages and cells, are carried into the inner tissues and lymphatic system, and thus produce fibrosis. This process goes on for years causing the workman to be short of breath and finally incapacitating him. The workman first became aware of the shortness of breath a month or two before November, 1941, when he ceased work for the first time and on Jan. 22, 1946, a medical board constituted under the Silicosis and Asbestosis (Medical Arrangements) Schemes, 1931 to 1943, certified that he was totally disabled by silicosis and that this total disablement began on Nov. 6, 1945. In these circumstances the workman launched two alternative claims against his employers : (i) for injury by accident under s. 1 of the Act ; (ii) under the Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931 (S.R. & O., 1931, No. 342). Both claims were heard together by the learned county court judge of Caernarvonshire. At the hearing the workman's doctor deposed, and the learned arbitrator accepted the evidence, that the workman suffered from and was incapacitated by silicosis and that his condition was directly due to the inhalation of the slate dust in the course of and as a result of his employment. On this evidence the learned county court judge held that there had been no injury by accident, but made an award under the Scheme. From his decisions both parties appealed to the Court of Appeal who dismissed the workman's appeal, but allowed that of the employers on the ground that the Scheme of 1931 only applied to persons employed in the process of (inter alia) cutting silica rock, and, since silica rock was defined under the Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1928 (for which the Scheme of 1931 was substituted) as excluding any rock containing less than 50 per cent. of free silica and as the material on which the workman had been working contained less than this percentage, the employers' appeal naturally succeeded. The workman's appeal, on the other hand, was dismissed on the ground that there was no injury by accident. The workman accepts the decision of the Court of Appeal refusing his claim under the Scheme, but appeals to your Lordships' House on the question of accident or no accident.

My Lords, in Trim Joint District School Board of Management v. Kelly (1) it was pointed out by LORD DUNEDIN ([1914] A.C. 667, 684, 685) that the expression "injury by accident" in the Act "must be interpreted according to the meaning of the words in ordinary popular language" and that this view had been accepted by your Lordships in a number of authoritative cases, as, indeed, it has both before and after that decision. No doubt, the ordinary meaning may include a wide range of incidents, but, apart from authority, I cannot think it would be thought to include the growth of incapacity by a continuing process extending over so long a period. It is true, indeed, that the words "injury by accident" have been held applicable to cases where disability has been developing over a number of years and then suddenly the injury causing the incapacity comes into being ; to other cases where a number of specific injuries contribute to that incapacity ; to others, again, where a microbe either alighting in a cut or itself finding its way through some organ of the body causes an illness ; but the difference between injury by accident and disease has always been recognised and some one incident or definite and distinct series of incidents have been required if the Act is to apply. I conclude that, apart from authority, the development of silicosis would not be described as injury by accident, but this view has to be checked by a consideration of the previous authorities, and, in particular, those decided in your Lordships' House. Their effect must, therefore, be weighed, but, in doing so, the words of LORD DUNEDIN in Trim Joint District School Board of Management v. Kelly (1) must always be borne in mind when he said (ibid., 684) :

In the first place, as I had occasion to point out in the recent case of Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co., Ltd. (2)—with the approval of those of your Lordships who took part in the judgment—the ultimate criterion must always be found in the words of the Act itself, and not in tests, explanations, or definitions given by judges, however eminent.

The argument on behalf of the workman, as I understood it, was that, whether the culminating illness be regarded as caused by the final clotting of the lungs so that the man can no longer work or is suspended, or whether one regards his condition as due to a numerous series of accidents caused by each particle of silica which reaches, injures and obstructs the lungs, the result is the same. There is either one final accident or a large number of successive accidents culminating in total or partial incapacity for work. Undoubtedly, the number of matters held to come within the domain of the Workmen's Compensation Acts has gradually been increased, partly by decisions in the courts or in your Lordships' House and partly by statute. Industrial diseases are illustrations of statutory enlargement. They did not provide a claim for compensation until 1906 [Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 8] and, by the Act of 1925, silicosis, which is not an industrial disease, was brought within the purview of the Act by s. 47 and the schemes made under that section, but the question now engaging your Lordships' attention is not concerned with these statutory additions, nor do I think that the amendments of the Act which brought them within its mischief have any effect on the conclusion which your Lordships should reach.

It has been suggested that the necessity felt for providing compensation for silicosis by means of a scheme shows that without it that disease would not be covered. I do not think this result necessarily follows. Industrial diseases and those illnesses dealt with in the various Schemes made under s. 47 of the Act of 1925 are of slow and gradual growth, so that it is difficult or impossible to determine at what moment of time they must be considered to come within the ambit of this Act. Moreover, the employer responsible for the condition had to be determined. The disease might, at any rate in some cases, be the result of accident and, as LORD ATKIN, then ATKIN, L.J., pointed out ([1926] 1 K.B. 497, 505) in Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds (3), anthrax is a scheduled disease, though, as in Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (4) it might result from an accident. It is with this latter aspect that your Lordships are concerned and, in dealing with it, I put aside arguments based on the fact that it has been thought desirable to deal specifically with certain diseases by means of the provisions of ss. 43 and 47 of the Act of 1925.

Nor do I think that it is necessary to decide whether some or all diseases may in certain circumstances be the result of an accident. In the earlier decisions it is clear that disease was considered to be outside the scope of the Acts. LORD MACNAGHTEN, for instance, in Fenton v. Thorley & Co., Ltd. (5) said ([1903] A.C. 443, 448):

The words "by accident" are, I think, introduced parenthetically as it were to qualify the word "injury," confining it to a certain class of injuries, and excluding other classes, as, for instance, injuries by disease or injuries self-inflicted by design.

But two years later in Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (4), anthrax caused by the entry of the bacillus into the eye of an employee engaged in working with wool was held to be injury by accident, though the moment of entry could not be determined. The EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C., thought that, though idiopathic disease was excluded, yet disease might be the consequential result of an injury, and LORD MACNAGHTEN found many incidents in the case which would properly be described as accident as, e.g., the presence of the bacillus, its escape in spite of the measures taken to protect the workman and its incursion into a penetrable part of his body, but the attack was recognised as one individual incident occurring at a particular though unascertainable time. Moreover, LORD LINDLEY was careful to assert that not all diseases caught in the course of the employment would be covered, and LORD ROBERTSON, taking the view that such a result might follow, thought no injury by accident established and expressed a dissenting opinion. In Innes (or Grant) v. Kynoch (6), however, LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., appears to have taken the view that, in consequence of the increased knowledge of the origin of diseases, almost any attack by a bacillus might be an accident and the subject of compensation, but that the employers' position was protected because in the normal case it would be difficult to prove that the attack arose out of and in the course of the employment. The actual illness which caused incapacity in that case was blood poisoning from bacilli in bone dust alighting on an abrasion on the workman's leg. Again, it was impossible to say with certainty when the infection occurred and, indeed, it may not have happened all at once, but may have been spread over a period of time, but LORD PARMOOR, while unable to draw any distinction between an accident which has been proved to have occurred at a particular hour or a particular day and an accident in reference to which the particular hour or day cannot be established, added ([1919] A.C. 765, 796) that it was one which certainly was proved to have occurred within some narrow limitation of time. LORD WRENBURY said (ibid., 800) :

... the date of the occurrence of the accident is reasonably fixed so as to connect the injury with the accident.

LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., himself said (ibid., 772) :

That it should be some particular occurrence happening at some particular time is essential, otherwise it is not in the nature of an accident.

In the earlier cases under the Acts, as e.g., in Steel v. Cammell, Laird & Co., Ltd. (7) the necessity of fixing a date on which the accident occurred was stressed, and the suggestion that in the case of lead poisoning a continuous absorption might be contemplated as a series of accidents was rejected [per COLLINS, M.R. ([1905] 2 K.B. 225, 237)] on the ground that in that case notice of the accident would be impossible. In Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvage (8), however, in which blood poisoning followed a series of scratches, the difficulty as to notice did not bar the claim. In the Court of Appeal the question was asked whether the condition was less the result of an accident because, in addition to that accident, there were a number of previous accidents, all contributing to the septic condition of the patient which eventually resulted, and it was held that it was not. LORD WRENBURY in the House of Lords said (126 L.T. 49, 50) :

To my mind it is immaterial that the accidents, the scratches, were sustained over successive periods of time. The only question is whether when the injury resulted it resulted from the scratches which were suffered in the course of the employment.

The period was, in fact, four months and the injury the result of a limited number of scratches. LORD BUCKMASTER in the House of Lords noted this circumstance in referring (ibid.) to "a series of accidents, each one of which is specific and ascertainable though its actual influence on the resulting illness cannot be precisely fixed . . ."

This was the state of the authorities when the question whether incapacity from silicosis resulted from injury by accident came up for decision in Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds (3). It was held that it did not so result, not because of the difficulty in giving notice, but because the illness was due, not to an accident as that word is used in the Act, or to a series of accidents, but was the result of a continuing process repeated from day to day. In arriving at that conclusion, POLLOCK, M.R., based his view on what he considered would in common language be described as an accident, and quoted the words set out above of LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Grant's case (6) and the observations of LORD BUCKMASTER ([1919] A.C. 765, 774) :

Death due to disease differs widely from death due to other injury in many obvious respects. The actual occurrence and onset of the illness cannot be stated with the same certainty: the possibility of infection from other sources than the source of infection present at work cannot be overlooked; and the difficulty of bringing these conditions within the common meaning of the phrase "accident" is in itself considerable. This outlook is not confined to cases of silicosis. Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., Gorley v. Backworth Collieries (9) (the "beat hand" and "beat knee" cases) are to the same effect, and so are Walker v. Hockney Brothers (10) (the case of cycling paralysis) and Ormond v. Holmes & Co., Ltd. (11) (the case of the blacksmith's striker).

In truth, two types of case have not always been sufficiently differentiated. In the one type, there is found a single accident followed by a resultant injury, as in Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (4), or a series of specific and ascertainable accidents followed by an injury which may be the consequence of any or all of them, as in Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvage (8). In either case it is immaterial that the time at which the accident occurred cannot be located. In the other type, there is a continuous process going on substantially from day to day, though not necessarily from minute to minute or even from hour to hour, which gradually and over a period of years produces incapacity. In the first of these types, the resulting incapacity is held to be injury by accident. In the second it is not. In the case of silicosis it is, of course, possible to divide up the cause of the final collapse and say that each particle of silica striking upon and adhering to the lung is a separate accident, but, however analytically maintainable, the attribution of the resultant silicosis to an accidental cause is an unreal one. The distinction between accident and disease has been insisted on throughout the authorities and is, I think, well founded. Counsel for the employers formulated the proposition on which he relied by suggesting that, where a physiological condition is produced progressively by a cumulative process consisting of a series of occurrences operating over a period of time, and the microscopical character of the occurrences and the period of time involved are such that in ordinary language that process would be called a continuous process, the condition is not produced by an accident or accidents within the Acts. I do not know, however, that any explicit formula can be adopted with safety. There must, nevertheless, come a time when the indefinite number of so-called accidents and the length of time over which they occur take away the element of accident and substitute that of process. In my opinion, disability from silicosis is one of such instances. It cannot be said to be the result of injury by accident. I would dismiss the appeal and put the liability for costs on the workman.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the appellant workman, who, while he was in the employment of the respondent employers, contracted the disease known as silicosis, claims to be entitled to compensation under s. 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. He claims that while in their employment personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment was caused to him. Even, my Lords, if the Act had stopped at s. 1, I should have felt little doubt that the claim could not be sustained. It appears from the medical evidence adduced in this case that silicosis is caused by the inhalation of minute particles of free silica which, reaching the inner tissues of the lung, produce a fibrotic condition and interfere with its proper function. It is a slow and gradual process which may take many years to develop. To say that a workman who has contracted silicosis in the way that I have mentioned has suffered "personal injury by accident" is to legislate, not to interpret the statute. Your Lordships were properly confronted with decisions of this House which have gone a long way in placing what is inappropriately called a benevolent construction on the statute, and, if there was to be found in them any authority for the proposition that to contract silicosis is to suffer personal injury by accident, that would be an end of the matter. I am, however, satisfied that there is no such authority. To this question I will return.

The Act, however, does not stop at s. 1. Two other sections appear to me to be of vital importance in considering the scope of that section. They are ss. 43 and 47. They might as well for this purpose be ss. 2 and 3. Section 43, which in substance re-enacted s. 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, provides that the Act shall, subject to the prescribed conditions, apply to certain industrial diseases, so that a workman contracting such a disease becomes entitled to compensation as if it were a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. It is true that sub-s. (4) of that section provides that nothing therein contained shall affect the rights of a workman to recover compensation in respect of a disease to which the section does not apply, if it is a personal injury by accident within the meaning of the Act. In view of the decision in Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (4) (the "anthrax case"), which was shortly before the Act of 1906, it was, no doubt, necessary to insert some such provision as this, but the scheme of the Act so far seems to me clearly to differentiate between an injury by accident and a disease which gives to its victim a right to compensation as if it were an injury by accident. Silicosis, however, has never been an industrial disease within s. 43. On the contrary, and, as I think, very significantly for this purpose, that disease has been the subject of special legislation, first under the Workmen's Compensation (Silicosis) Acts, 1918 and 1924, and then under s. 47 of the Act of 1925. The latter section, re-enacting the relevant earlier Acts, provides:

(1) The Secretary of State may by scheme provide for the payment of compensation by the employers of workmen in any specified industry or process or group of industries or processes involving exposure to silica dust . . .

Under this section numerous schemes have been made, but, unfortunately for the workman, no scheme had at the relevant time been made which applied to the process or industry of slate making in which for the greater part of his working life he has been engaged. Therefore, he has sought to bring his case within s. 1, but, if silicosis which is the result of working in conditions that involve "exposure to silica dust" is "personal injury by accident" within

s. 1, there was no need for the Acts of 1918 and 1924, nor for s. 47 of the Act of 1925. It is, in effect, to make nonsense of the Act to read together first s. 1 (which on this view must run "personal injury by accident, including disease arising from exposure to silica dust") and then s. 47, which authorises the Secretary of State to make schemes in regard to that same disease. It can hardly, I think, be suggested that, in regard to silicosis contracted in particular industries, the Secretary of State may make provisions which override those applicable to injuries covered by s. 1, but that, in regard to silicosis contracted in industries for which he does not think fit to make a scheme, the sufferer may have recourse to s. 1. The result is that the opinion, which I should have reached on s. 1 standing by itself, is confirmed by a consideration of the scheme of the Act.

I must, however, briefly consider certain decisions which are said to be relevant. First there is Williams v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds (3). In this case the plaintiff, who was employed in the mining industry to which the Workmen's Compensation (Silicosis) Acts, 1918 and 1924, did not apply, claimed compensation for silicosis under the Act of 1906. The Court of Appeal (POLLOCK, M.R., and ATKIN and SARGANT, L.JJ.) rejected his claim. The court, and particularly ATKIN, L.J., thought that the earlier case of Steel v. Cammell, Laird & Co., Ltd. (7), to which I will next refer, was binding on them, but it is a valuable authority in that it is precisely in point and has not been adversely criticised in the twenty years that have passed since its decision. I would cite in aid of what I have said earlier in this opinion the concluding words of SARGANT, L.J. ([1926] 1 K.B. 497, 510):

... the whole introduction of s. 8 [i.e., of the Act of 1906] and the language in which it is framed seem to me to be strong evidence that an injury arising by the gradual and cumulative effect of industrial conditions producing disease was not regarded by the framers of the Act as being within the ordinary sense of the word "accident," and therefore liable to be compensated for under any section other than s. 8 itself.

In Steel's case (7) the plaintiff, who suffered from partial paralysis due to lead-poisoning, claimed compensation for injury by accident under the earlier Act of 1897. His claim was rejected and, though some part of the reasoning of the court can no longer be regarded as valid, the decision was, as I have pointed out, regarded as binding in Williams' case (3) and has never been dissented from. It is to be observed that this case was decided on May 10, 1905, by a court consisting of COLLINS, M.R., and MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., and that the same court in December, 1903, had decided the anthrax case (reported sub nomine Higgins v. Campbell and Harrison, Ltd., Turvey v. Brintons, Ltd. (4)) in favour of the workman, which decision had been affirmed in this House on Apr. 14, 1905. At about the same time, after the decision of the anthrax case, two other cases came before the Court of Appeal and I think it worth while to cite what VISCOUNT CALDECOTE, L.C., said about them in Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young (12) as lately as Mar. 14, 1940. The LORD CHANCELLOR said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 85, 88):

The two cases, one of "beat hand" and the other of "beat knee," which came before the Court of Appeal very shortly after the decision of your Lordships' House in Brintons, Ltd. v. Turvey (4)—namely, Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., Gorley v. Backworth Collieries (9)—followed a different line. They were each decided in favour of the employer on the grounds that the injury was the inevitable result of work long continued, and was not anything which could be described as having happened on a particular duty. Walker v. Hockney Brothers (10), the case of the man who gradually over a period of 5 years acquired paralysis by riding a carrier bicycle, was another decision in favour of the employer. There is no reason to doubt the correctness of the decisions in the three cases I have last mentioned. In all of them the facts were such as to make it impossible to identify any event which could, however loosely, be called an accident. In these cases, the workman failed, not because a disease is outside the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Act altogether, but because the burden of proof that there had been an accident was not discharged.

It appears to me, my Lords, that these authoritative words are decisive of the present case. They occur in a case in which the decision was in favour of the workman whose claim was in respect of an injury known as "dropped foot," that is, a paralysis of the muscles of the leg caused by pressure on the peroneal nerve which prevents dorsiflexion of the foot. It is sufficient for my purpose to cite one further passage from the opinion of VISCOUNT CALDECOTE, L.C., where, after referring to LORD TOMLIN's observations in Walkinshaw v. Lochgelly Iron & Coal Co. (13), he said (ibid., 90) :

... I find it impossible to distinguish in principle the present case from the case I have last mentioned. The pressure on the peroneal nerve during a spell of work on Apr. 27 brought about the paralysis of the claimant's muscles which is described as dropped foot. I apply the test of LORD M'LAREN, often quoted, and always with approval. The claimant sustained a definite physiological injury in the reasonable performance of his duties, and as the result of the work he was engaged in at the time of the injury. The fact that, in the course of his work for a month before the day when he first suffered from dropped foot, he had felt some loss of the power of dorsiflexion of the right foot seems to me in no way to affect his right to compensation.

The passages that I have cited—to which I would add the pertinent observation of LORD ROMER ([1940] A.C. 479, 480) : "The question is, was there a physiological change for the worse in the respondent's condition on a particular occasion while he was at work?"—show that the ratio decidendi in Fife Coal Co., Ltd. v. Young (12) was that the workman could there point to a particular physiological change on a particular day. He could, indeed, point to the particular day—Apr. 27—a condition that, I think, need not always be satisfied in view of what was said by LORD BIRKENHEAD ([1919] A.C. 765, 772) in Innes (or Grant) v. Kynoch (6) and by LORD BUCKMASTER in Burrell (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Selvaige (8). In the latter case a girl, after sustaining numerous cuts and scratches on her hands in the course of her work over a long period, ultimately became totally incapacitated as a result of blood poisoning. It was held (126 L.T. 49, 50) that she was not the less entitled to compensation because her disease was due :

... not to one specific and definite accident, but to a series of accidents, each one of which is specific and ascertainable though its actual influence on the resulting illness cannot be precisely fixed ...

It was on this case that counsel for the workman most strongly relied. It is, I think, the highwater mark, and it is just because I find it impossible to say of a sufferer from silicosis that his disease is due to "a series of accidents each one of which is specific and ascertainable," that I cannot admit his claim under s. 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. It was the same reason that led Parliament to supplement that section by other provisions for the benefit of workmen suffering from silicosis and similar diseases. I would dismiss this appeal.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, I had the advantage of reading in advance the opinion which my noble and learned friend LORD SIMONDS has just delivered, and I find myself so completely in agreement with it that I wish to add only one general observation, and that, I fear, a trite one. Your Lordships are engaged in construing an Act of Parliament, and that duty is not to be performed by deducing from dicta contained in earlier judgments principles which may seem to follow from them. The pursuit of such a course of reasoning may take one on an interesting and attractive journey, but it is all too likely to lead to a destination far removed from any end contemplated by the legislature. Each step may be thought to justify a further advance, until at last the border-line is crossed which divides the reasonable interpretation of the statute from an unwarranted extension of its provisions. It is the duty of every tribunal to resist all temptation so to transgress. I am for dismissing this appeal.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, I agree with the opinions which have been delivered by my noble and learned friends.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, my noble and learned friend, LORD OAKSEY, who is not able to be present, has asked me to say that he concurs in the opinions which have been expressed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Shaen, Roscoe & Co., agents for Elwyn Jones & Co., Bangor (for the workman) ; Whitfield, Byrne & Dean, agents for Carter, Vincent & Co., Bangor (for the employers).

[Reported by C. ST.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WELLSTED'S WILL TRUSTS. WELLSTED v. HANSON.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), June 3, 14, 1948.]

Trustee—Trustee for sale—Sale of realty—Power to re-invest in realty—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 28 (1).

The Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28 (1) provides: "Trustees for sale shall, in relation to land or to manorial incidents and to the proceeds of sale, have all the powers of a tenant for life and the trustees of a settlement under the Settled Land Act, 1925 . . . and (subject to any express trust to the contrary) all capital money arising under the said powers shall, unless paid or applied for any purpose authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1925, be applicable in the same manner as if the money represented proceeds of sale arising under the trust for sale."

By his will, dated Aug 18, 1915, a testator, who died on Dec 9, 1920, gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust for sale and conversion, with power to postpone such sale and conversion, and out of the proceeds thereof to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and certain legacies. He directed that the residue should be invested, with power to his trustees to vary such investments, and that his trustees should stand possessed of the said residue and the investments for the time being representing the same on certain trusts for his widow and issue. At the date of his death, the testator's residuary estate included real property to the value of £91,000. From time to time, both before and after Jan 1, 1926, part of the realty was sold and the proceeds invested in trustee securities. The trustees also had in hand at the date of this summons money being proceeds of the sale of realty awaiting investment and a sum received as value payments under the War Damage Act, 1943, in respect of damage to part of the real property. It was proposed to sell realty and re-invest in other realty, to realise some securities representing the proceeds of sale of realty and similarly re-invest in realty; and to expend the sums in hand in the purchase of realty.

HELD: while s 28 (1) permitted the acquisition of land by exchange or by purchase for the preservation or protection of unsold land held by the trustees, it did not permit land to be acquired as an investment, and, therefore, the trustees had no power to invest in the manner proposed.

Re Wakeman, National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Wakeman ([1945] 1 All E.R. 421), Re Kempthorne, Charles v. Kempthorne ([1930] 1 Ch. 268), Re Stimpson's Trusts, Stimpson v. Stimpson ([1931] 2 Ch. 77), considered.

[FOR THE LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1925, s. 28, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 15, pp. 203-207.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Wakeman, National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Wakeman, [1945] 1 All E.R. 421; [1945] Ch. 177; 114 L.J.Ch. 145; 172 L.T. 226; 2nd. Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Kempthorne, Charles v. Kempthorne, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L.J.Ch. 107; 142 L.T. 111, C.A.; Digest Supp.
- (3) Re Stimpson's Trusts, Stimpson v. Stimpson, [1931] 2 Ch. 77; 100 L.J.Ch. 312; 145 L.T. 249; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of a will and of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28, the trustees for sale of certain real property had power to re-invest in real property money and securities representing the proceeds of the sale of part of the realty and also money in hand representing compensation under the War Damage Act, 1943, for damage to the real property. VAISEY, J., held that they had no such power. The facts appear in the judgment.

Wilfrid Hunt for the plaintiffs (trustees under the will).

E. Milner Holland, K.C., and Hesketh for the first and second defendants (daughter and grandson of the testator interested in the residuary trust funds). Jennings, K.C., and Geoffrey Cross for the third defendant (infant grandson of the testator interested in the residuary trust funds).

Cur. adv. vult.

June 14. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. On this summons I have to consider what is the true effect of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28, in regard to a question which has been much discussed and controverted ever since the Act was passed, but which (rather surprisingly) has not hitherto been judicially determined.

The circumstances in which the question arises in the present case must first be stated. By his will, dated Aug. 18, 1915, the testator, William Henry Wellsted, appointed executors and trustees and gave the whole of his estate not thereby otherwise disposed of unto the trustees on trust for sale and conversion and directed that out of the proceeds thereof and his ready money his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies should be paid. He further directed that the residue of such moneys should be invested with power for his trustees from time to time to vary such investments and that his trustees should stand possessed of the said residuary trust moneys and the investments for the time being representing the same (which he defined as "the residuary trust fund") in trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life if she should so long continue his widow. Subject to the wife's interest the residuary trust funds were directed to be held on certain trusts for the benefit of the testator's children and their families of which it is only necessary to say that such trusts are still subsisting. The widow (as I was informed) survived the testator, but did not marry again, and she is now dead. The plaintiffs are the present trustees of the will. The first defendant is a daughter of the testator entitled to a life interest in a fourth share in the said residuary trust funds. The second defendant is an adult grandson of the testator entitled in remainder to part of another such fourth share. The third defendant is an infant grandson with a similar interest in remainder. There are provisions in the will empowering the trustees to postpone the sale and conversion of the testator's real and personal estate, or any part thereof, for so long as they should think fit, and so that in the meantime the rents, profits and income of such part of his estate as should for the time being remain unsold should be applied as income. There are further provisions empowering the trustees in their absolute discretion to allow the whole or any part of his estate to remain in the same condition or state of investment in which it should be at the time as that of his death.

On Jan. 4, 1917, the testator made a codicil to his will, and he died on Dec. 9, 1920. Shortly after his will and codicil were proved by the executors. The testator's residuary estate at his death comprised (in addition to personal property of considerable value) real estate of the value of £91,000, or thereabouts. Prior to Jan. 1, 1926, when the Law of Property Act, 1925, came into operation, real estate of the testator of the value of £16,000, or thereabouts, had been sold, and after part of the proceeds had been applied in the payment of duties there remained a sum of about £8,800 which was invested in trustee investments (neither the will nor the codicil prescribing any particular range of investments), and these are still held and can presumably be identified. From time to time after the said date further parts of such real estate have been sold, realising a total of £13,100, or thereabouts. The proceeds were placed in similar investments which are also still held, and can also, no doubt, be identified. A house forming part of the testator's estate has recently been sold, and the plaintiffs have in hand a sum of £574 7s. 0d., being the proceeds of sale still awaiting investment. They also have in hand sums amounting in all to £3,192 13s. 0d., received as value payments under the War Damage Act, 1943, in respect of freehold properties which formed and form part of the estate and had been injured by enemy action. Besides the investments and sums of money already mentioned (and other investments) the trustees still hold a considerable amount of real estate which belonged to the testator at his death and still remains unsold. Its value is said to be upwards of £40,000. The plaintiffs consider that it would be advisable that some part of it should be sold and the proceeds re-invested in the purchase of other real estate. Some, possibly all, of the adult beneficiaries, including the first and second defendants, concur in that opinion, and they have further suggested that the said sums of £574 7s. 0d. and £3,192 13s. 0d., and some of the before-mentioned investments representing the said sums of £8,800 and £13,100, might advantageously be invested or re-invested in the purchase of real estate.

The question is whether the plaintiffs have power to effect any, and, if so, which, of these projected transactions. That, admittedly, depends on what the true meaning and effect of s. 28 of the Act may be. When the summons first came before me, I directed it to stand over in order that the third defendant should be added as a party and that his guardian ad litem should assist the court by submitting on his behalf an argument that the course which the beneficiaries generally desired to be open to the plaintiffs to follow at their discretion was not, in effect, open to them at all. At the adjourned hearing this was done, and I am greatly indebted to all the counsel for the help they have given to me.

I must now turn to s. 28, which is certainly a puzzling piece of legislation. It is not made any easier to follow by the insertion by an amending Act into the middle of sub-s. (1), on which the question mostly turns, of some words which have no bearing whatsoever on the present problem, and are a mere parenthesis awkwardly dividing the relevant words at the beginning of the section from the relevant words at the end of it. I accept the suggestion of counsel that I should consider and deal with the section in its original form, that is, with the parenthesis omitted. Section 28 provides :

“(1) Trustees for sale shall, in relation to land or to manorial incidents and to the proceeds of sale, have all the powers of a tenant for life and the trustees of a settlement under the Settled Land Act, 1925, including in relation to the land the powers of management conferred by that Act during a minority: . . . and (subject to any express trust to the contrary) all capital money arising under the said powers shall, unless paid or applied for any purpose authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1925, be applicable in the same manner as if the money represented proceeds of sale arising under the trust for sale. All land acquired under this sub-section shall be conveyed to the trustees on trust for sale. The power conferred by this sub-section shall be exercised with such consents (if any) as would have been required on a sale under the trust for sale, and when exercised shall operate to over-reach any equitable interests or powers which are by virtue of this Act or otherwise made to attach to the net proceeds of sale as if created by a trust affecting those proceeds . . . (5) This section applies to dispositions on trust for sale coming into operation either before or after the commencement or by virtue of this Act.

Neither sub-s. (3) nor sub-s. (4) appear to throw any light on the matter.

The problem which now presents itself came near to solution in Re Wakeman (1). There, however, the only land held by the testator had already been sold and the proceeds had been invested in authorised investments which were readily distinguishable from other parts of his estate. Three points were raised in argument: first, that the reference to proceeds of sale in the sub-section did not give to trustees for sale the powers of investment given by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 73, because such powers are not really powers but are imperative trusts. That point, of course, arises here. Secondly, that the proceeds of sale cannot, after being invested in something else, be re-invested in land because, even if there is a power of investment, there is no power of re-investment. That point also arises here. Thirdly, that after all the land had been sold the powers no longer exist because the trustees are no longer “trustees for sale” within the meaning of the Act which, by s. 205 (xxix), defines that expression as meaning “persons (including a personal representative) holding land on trust for sale.” It was only on that third point, which does not arise in the present case, that UTHWATT, J., based his decision. He said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 422) :

The language of the definition is clear and does not in my view allow one to put on the phrase “trustees holding land on trust for sale” a gloss which would make it include “trustees who have held, but no longer hold, land on trust for sale.” The question remains whether in s. 28 the context requires a different meaning to be given to the expression “trustees for sale.” The suggestion is that the phrase here includes trustees who, while not holding any land on trust for sale, have under their control proceeds of sale resulting from an exercise in the past of a trust for sale. In my view, neither the language used in the section nor the subject-matter to which the section is addressed suggest any such extended meaning. The language used is clear. As regards subject-matter the main point of the section is not to encourage dealings in land but to facilitate dealings with land, and to that end powers are given which may be duly exercised if circumstances so require. There is no reason in the nature of things why trustees who have sold all land at any time held by them should remain endowed with powers which find their origin and meaning in land holding and which could if existing be used only as respects proceeds of sale. It was argued that the construction which I place on the phrase “trustees for sale” in s. 28 would produce whimsical results. On that construction the retention by trustees of any land—however minute in quantity—would keep alive the powers given by the section as regards the proceeds of sale of all land theretofore sold by them: with the sale of that land all those powers would disappear. That, it was argued, could not have been intended. Again, it was said that on the same construction the powers applicable as regards proceeds of sale of land are under the 1925 legislation, less than the powers formerly exercisable under the Settled Land Acts, 1882-1890, and that this fact was a reason for its rejection. No doubt it is right, where there is used in a statute language which is capable of more than one construction, to consider and to take into account the consequences of alternative constructions and also to take into consideration previous legislation on the same topic. But here the language used is clear and unambiguous and the statute must, therefore, be left to speak for itself. It would be out of place to deal in any detail with the substance of the statements involved in the two contentions. I would only say upon the first of these contentions that some easily workable definition of "trustees for sale" was desirable and is given, and, conceding the accuracy of the statements contained in the contention, its weight disappears when the general point of the section is borne in mind; and upon the second of them, that I do not think that it is accurate in fact and that the prior legislation as regards lands held on trust for sale proceeds upon a footing entirely different from that adopted in the 1925 legislation. I accordingly hold that the bank are not trustees for sale within the meaning of the Act, and, as trustees of the testator's will, do not possess any power to buy land.

There are two passages in that judgment of UTHWATT, J.'s, to which (although they are more obiter dicta) I ought, I think, to pay great attention. One is where that learned judge says:

As regards subject-matter the main point of the section is not to encourage dealings in land but to facilitate dealings with land, and to that end powers are given which may be duly exercised if circumstances so require.

The other passage is this:

No doubt it is right, where there is used in a statute language which is capable of more than one construction, to consider and to take into account the consequences of alternative constructions and also to take into consideration previous legislation on the same topic.

The section has to some extent been considered and observed on in two other reported cases to which I will now refer. The first is Re Kempthorne (2) in which two points were involved. The facts, so far as relevant, may be taken from the headnote ([1930] 1 Ch. 268):

By his will dated Dec. 2, 1911, a testator devised to his brother Charles "all my freehold and copyhold property," and gave all his leasehold property and personal estate and effects, subject to payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies upon trust for division amongst his brothers and sisters as therein mentioned. The testator died on Aug. 15, 1928, and was at his death entitled (subject to the effect of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925) to two equal ninth shares of certain freehold property comprised in his father's residuary estate, and to one equal fourth part of certain freehold minerals purchased by him. He also owned the entirety of certain other freehold property. The residuary gift of personalty lapsed as regards three equal seventh parts owing to the death of two legatees in the testator's lifetime:—HELD, (1) that as the land held in undivided shares was by the Law of Property Act, 1925, sched. I, pt. IV, para. 1, and s. 35, subjected to a trust for sale as from Jan. 1, 1926, the testator's interest in undivided shares of freehold property was then converted into personal property and passed on his death under the gift of personal property.

In the course of his judgment MAUGHAM, J., said (ibid., 273):

Prima facie, therefore, at the date of the death of the testator and as a result of s. 24 of the Wills Act, the undivided shares were of the nature of land held upon the statutory trusts for sale. It is, however, asserted that, as a result of s. 28 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the persons who are trustees and who hold the land on the statutory trusts are in such a position that any moneys arising from the sale became capital moneys and are applicable in the same way as if the money arose under the Settled Land Act, 1925. If that were the true effect of s. 28, s. 75 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1925, would apply, and there would accordingly be an equitable re-conversion of the land, so that the effect of the legislation of 1925 would not be to deprive the devisee of these undivided shares. That, I may add, appears to be the view taken by the learned editor of WOLSTENHOLME and CHERRY'S CONVEYANCING STATUTES (see vol. ii, 11th ed., p. 202), and appended as a note to s. 75 (5); and see p. 276, where the learned editor writes: "There can be undivided shares in proceeds of sale, i.e., equitable interests in land which become capital money (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 28), and so can be treated as land." In support of that he refers to s. 75 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and he adds: "Thus although a trust for sale operates to convert the land into personalty there is an immediate re-conversion." There are no doubt difficulties in accepting that view on the true construction of s. 28 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, for the section does not say that capital money arising from the exercise of a trust for sale shall be applicable as if it were capital money arising under the Settled Land Act: and it may be that there is some difficulty, on the language, in holding that s. 28 has the effect contended for before me and the effect mentioned in the passage from WOLSTENHOLME.

In the Court of Appeal LORD HANWORTH, M.R., after referring to the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 35, proceeded (ibid., 287):

But it is said that in other sections there are indications that the proceeds of sale under the statutory trusts are to be treated as realty. As an illustration of this, reference is made to s. 28, which deals with the powers of management conferred on trustees for sale. That section has been amended, and our attention was called to the amendment, which confers enlarged powers of management in certain cases. It is said that powers conferred by s. 28 are to operate upon the proceeds of sale and prevent conversion. But it appears to me that s. 28 is passed alio intuitu. It has no reference to revoking or altering the natural effect in law of a trust for sale which operates to effect conversion.

LAWRENCE, L.J., pointed out (ibid., 291) that the section draws:

... a sharp distinction between capital money arising from a sale of land under a trust for sale and capital money arising from a sale of settled land (whether consisting of an undivided share or of the entirety) under the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

RUSSELL, L.J., also referred to the section, but not, I think, so as to throw any light on the present case.

The references to the section in Re Stimpson's Trusts (3) are, I think, difficult to follow. The point of that decision may be taken, so far as it is material, from the headnote ([1931] 2 Ch. 77):

Trustees of a will held land upon trust for sale and the proceeds of sale were not subject to any trust for re-conversion under the will:—HELD, that they were entitled to exercise the power of advancement out of capital conferred upon them by s. 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, in favour of a remainderman, subject to the consent of the tenant for life, whose life interest was protected against assignment.

I will read the judgment of LUXMOORE, J., where he says (ibid., 81):

It is therefore necessary in the case of property held on trust for sale to consider whether or not the proceeds of such sale are by statute or in equity to be considered as land or applicable as capital money for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925. It is difficult to understand exactly what the sub-section is aimed at. There is, so far as I am aware, no statute which provides that the proceeds of sale of property held on trust for sale are to be considered as land, and certainly there is no rule in equity to that effect. The rule is entirely to the contrary. The only suggestion that has been made by counsel is that the reference in the sub-section to statute is a reference either to s. 28 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, or to s. 75 of the Settled Land Act, 1925. Section 28 of the Law of Property Act provides that: "Trustees for sale shall, in relation to land or to manorial incidents and to the proceeds of sale, have all the powers of a tenant for life and the trustees of a settlement under the Settled Land Act, 1925, including in relation to the land the powers of management conferred by that Act during a minority": Pausing there, all it comes to is that trustees for sale have the right to exercise certain powers under the Settled Land Act, 1925. Then—leaving out the interpolation contained in the schedule to the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926... the section proceeds: "and (subject to any express trust to the contrary) all capital money arising under the said powers shall, unless paid or applied for any purpose authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1925, be applicable in the same manner as if the money represented proceeds of sale arising under the trust for sale."

I return to s. 28 itself. The marginal heading does not, of course, form part of the section and cannot be used as a guide to its interpretation. It is, however, to be noticed that LORD HANWORTH, M.R., in the passage from his judgment which I have quoted describes the section as dealing with questions of management. The first observation I would make is that neither the words "subject to any express trust to the contrary," which appear later in sub-s. (1), nor any similar words are to be found at the beginning of that sub-section. The consequence of that is that the powers, whatever they may be, conferred on trustees for sale by the Act are powers of which they cannot be deprived by any provision in the trust instrument. Suppose a case (and it does not really differ from the present case) in which a testator, by his will coming into operation either before or after Jan 1, 1926, has directed that his real estate is to be sold and that the proceeds are to be invested in British government securities "and in no other form of investment." If the section has the wide operation contended for, the direction for investment would be overridden, and the land of such a testator, say, in Devonshire, could be sold and the proceeds applied in purchasing land in, say, Northumberland. That land in turn could be sold and the proceeds laid out in buying land in Kent and the operation could be repeated at the discretion of the trustees indefinitely. Such a result is, to my mind, so surprising as by itself to raise grave doubts as to the validity of the contention.

The next point to which I would draw attention is that the words "including in relation to the land the powers of management conferred by that Act"—that is the Settled Land Act, 1925—"during a minority" might be held to indicate by a sort of inverse application of the ejusdem generis rule that the powers previously mentioned were, or were analogous to, powers of management, but the separate mention, by way of inclusion, of those particular powers would seem to be accounted for by the circumstance that they were not formerly part of the settled land legislation, but were to be found in the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 42, and the Law of Property Act, 1922, s. 61. The point, if it exists, is a very minor one, but these are waters in which the swimmer may be pardoned for grasping at even the smallest of straws.

The problem is, of course, to discover what are the powers to which the section refers or, more particularly, whether those powers include the directions given by the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 73 (1), as to the investment or other application of capital money. Section 73 (1) provides :

Capital money arising under this Act, subject to payment of claims properly payable thereout and to the application thereof for any special authorised object for which the capital money was raised, shall, when received, be invested or otherwise applied wholly in one, or partly in one and partly in another or others, of the following modes (namely) :—(i) In investment in government securities, or in other securities in which the trustees of the settlement are by the settlement or by law authorised to invest trust money of the settlement, with power to vary the investment into or for any other such securities ; (ii) In discharge . . . of incumbrances . . . ; (iii) In payment for any improvement authorised by this Act ; . . . (x) In purchase of the freehold reversion in fee of any part of the settled land, being leasehold land held for years ; (xi) In purchase of land in fee simple, or of leasehold land held for sixty years or more unexpired at the time of purchase, subject or not to any exception or reservation of or in respect of mines or minerals therein, or of or in respect of rights or powers relative to the working of mines or minerals therein, or in other land ; (xii) In purchase either in fee simple, or for a term of sixty years or more, of mines and minerals convenient to be held or worked with the settled land, or of any easement, right, or privilege convenient to be held with the settled land for mining or other purposes ; . . . (xix) In payment to any person becoming absolutely entitled or empowered to give an absolute discharge ; (xx) In payment of costs . . .

In the view that I take, and am about to indicate, I am not prepared to say that any one of these matters is in itself excluded from the purview of s. 28, but the words of that section, when examined, appear, in my judgment, to indicate some limit in the conditions necessary to permit of recourse being had to them.

The question may be put more precisely as follows : Are the trustees for sale entitled to purchase or otherwise acquire land as an investment ? The last few words are to be emphasised. Generally speaking the powers referred to would seem to include all those enumerated in pt. II of the Settled Land Act, 1925, that is to say, in ss. 38 to 72 inclusive headed "Powers of a tenant for life." I need not specify them in detail. They include powers of exchange, leasing powers, powers to grant options, power to dedicate streets, to cut and sell timber, and many others. Section 90 also comes into the scheme. Section 102 is brought into it expressly. It seems to me, however, that all these powers are given to persons for the time being holding land on trust for sale in order for their being exercised in relation to such unsold land and not otherwise. Similarly, I read the section as saying that the proceeds of sale of other land already effected by such persons may be applied by them in connection with such exercise of those powers in the same manner as capital moneys might have been applied under a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1925. That the section contemplates that land may be acquired under its provisions is plain from its wording. I do not doubt that such acquisition might be by way of exchange or by purchase, but, in my view, the acquisition of land as an investment is outside the authority which the section confers. If land is required for the preservation or protection of the unsold land or for its improvement, the case is, to my mind, wholly different. For example, an easement or other appurtenance over adjoining land, or a piece of ground necessary to preserve the amenities of the unsold land or to round off an estate, could, in my judgment, be acquired either by purchase or exchange within the terms of s. 28. Another example would be the purchase of the reversion in a lease. This is a very different matter from adding land to the range of permissible investments prescribed by the instrument creating the trust, or by law. I cannot believe that the section was intended to have such a far-reaching and revolutionary effect. I cannot believe that it permits an estate in Devonshire to be exchanged for a house in London any more than that it permits such an estate to be sold and the proceeds applied in the purchase of such a house. It seems to me, therefore, that, while the section permits the acquisition of land by exchange or by purchase in relation to or in connection with the unsold land held by the trustees for sale, it does not go so far as to permit land to be acquired as an investment.

The view which I am taking seems to gain some support from the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 32, which deals with the case where a settlement of land held on trust for sale contains a power to invest money in the purchase of land. This is hardly consistent with the contention that every such settlement necessarily contains such a power by virtue of s. 28. It must always be remembered that land may be purchased by trustees as an investment with the leave of the court under the Trustee Act, 1925, s. 57, if the expediency of the proposed transaction can be satisfactorily proved. I do not overlook the arguments to the contrary of the view which I have taken. It is true that the powers of a tenant for life do include the power to select modes of investment (Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 73), and the power to contract for the purchase of land. None the less, I come to the conclusion that not only these, but all the other powers, are only to be exercised within limits. It is possible to say that s. 73 is not an empowering section at all, but I do not decide the case on that ground. The application of proceeds of sale under s. 28 is limited to certain purposes (see the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 71), and their investment is not a "purpose authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1925," to quote the words of s. 28.

I may sum up by saying that when the words of the section are examined, I think that the proper meaning to extract from them is very shortly that in relation to and in respect of land held on trust for sale (but not otherwise) the trustees may (1) exercise all or any of what can be succinctly called the Settled Land Act powers, and may (2) apply proceeds of sales of land for what may also succinctly be called Settled Land Act purposes, and the section is careful to say that, if there is any capital money in hand as the result of any such dealings which is not applied to a Settled Land Act purpose, then it has to be dealt with under the provisions of the trust itself. I would put it thus. When the trustees are trustees with money to invest they are no longer trustees with land to sell and are outside the section altogether so far as that money is concerned. My decision is, I am aware, contrary to the views expressed by the writers of the text books and I hope that no one will suppose that I regard the point otherwise than as one of doubt and difficulty.

If the case fails as regards the £574 7s. 0d. in hand, and as regards the proceeds of future sales (and I think it does), it is even more difficult to sustain as regards the investments representing the £8,800 and £13,192 in respect of which a power of re-investment would have to be established. The £3,192 13s. 0d. received in respect of War Damage is admittedly not, and never was, proceeds of sale. I must declare that the trustees have no such power of investment or re-investment as the summons suggests. They have no power to invest or re-invest in the purchase of real estate as an investment.

The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client must be paid out of such part of the capital of the trust moneys as the plaintiffs may decide to be most convenient.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Smith & Hudson (for the plaintiffs and the third defendant); Smith & Hudson, agents for Rollit, Farrell & Bladon, Hull (for the first and second defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] A Re BRITISH FOLDING BED CO. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v.

N. A. WOODIWISS & CO.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), April 12, May 25, 26, June 16, 1948.] B

Bankruptcy—Commencement of bankruptcy—Petition adjourned—Application for liabilities adjustment order—Protection order made—Bankruptcy proceedings stayed—Adjustment order refused—Bankruptcy petition restored—Receiving order—Date of commencement of bankruptcy—Costs—Solicitors' profit costs and disbursements incurred by debtor before and after notice of act of bankruptcy—Whether allowable out of bankrupt's estate—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), ss. 30 (2), 37 (1). C

On Jan. 16, 1942, the debtors committed an act of bankruptcy, and on Jan. 21, 1942, a bankruptcy petition based thereon was presented. On Feb. 13, 1942, the petition came on for hearing, and at the request of the debtors was adjourned for six weeks. On Mar. 20, 1942, during the adjournment of the petition, the debtors applied to the county court for a liabilities adjustment order under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941, and on Mar. 25, 1942, the county court made a protection order and referred the affairs of the debtors to the liabilities adjustment officer for investigation and report. The county court also ordered the sale of the debtors' stock-in-trade and the payment into court of the proceeds. On Mar. 27, 1942, consequent on the protection order, the bankruptcy petition was stayed. In November, 1942, the liabilities adjustment officer reported, and recommended that the application be dismissed and the protection order revoked, and on Apr. 15, 1943, the county court judge made an order in those terms, also ordering that creditors represented at the hearing should be allowed their costs out of the moneys of the debtors in court. An application for the payment of the debtors' costs out of their assets was refused. On Oct. 22, 1943, the Court of Appeal dismissed the debtors' appeal against the order revoking the protection order. The bankruptcy petition was restored and on Nov. 9, 1943, a receiving order was made, based on the act of bankruptcy of Jan. 16, 1942. At all material times the respondents, a firm of solicitors, acted for the debtors, and they claimed payment in full of both their disbursements and profit costs in some instances, and payment in full of disbursements and admission to proof of profit costs as debts in other instances. D

HELD: (i) as regards profit costs and disbursements incurred before Jan. 16, 1942, the respondents' rights must be limited to proof in respect of the taxed amounts, whether of costs or disbursements, and in order to arrive at the provable amount there must be deducted from the taxed total any sums paid to the respondents on account of those costs and disbursements before Jan. 16, 1942. E

(ii) there was nothing in the Act of 1941 to suggest that where a debtor obtained a protection order which was subsequently revoked and was followed by a receiving order against him, founded on an act of bankruptcy committed before the date of the protection order, the bankruptcy was not to be deemed to relate back to and commence on the date of the act of bankruptcy in the ordinary way, or that persons having notice of the act of bankruptcy were, merely by virtue of the fact that the act of bankruptcy had been followed by the making and subsequent revocation of a protection order, to be in any better position in the ensuing F bankruptcy with respect to debts contracted after they had had such notice than they would have been in if the protection order had not been made, and, therefore, the ordinary rules of bankruptcy should be applied and the respondents were not entitled to anything by proof or otherwise in respect of costs and disbursements incurred after Jan. 16, 1942, when they had notice of the act of bankruptcy, except in so far as those costs and disbursements could be regarded as payment for services resulting in benefit to the debtors' estate within the principle in Re Simonson, Ex parte Ball ([1894] 1 Q.B. 433).

THE COURT disallowed the respondents' claim for profit costs and disbursements in respect of the adjustment proceedings in the county court and in respect of the unsuccessful appeal to the Court of Appeal on the ground that the proceedings were wholly brought for the benefit of the debtors and not for the benefit of the estate. As regards the profit costs and disbursements in an action brought by S. against the debtors by leave of the county court, the court substantially allowed the taxed amount on the ground that the defence of the action had, on the Re Simonson principle, resulted in a benefit to the estate. The respondents claimed to apply towards satisfaction of the costs and disbursements in the adjustment proceedings certain sums deposited after Jan. 16, 1941, generally on account of costs, in addition to receiving from the estate the full amount allowed in respect of the S. proceedings. It appeared from a memorandum and letter of the respondents that the money had in fact been applied towards the costs of the S. proceedings.

HELD: the respondents could not be allowed anything out of the estate without giving credit against their admissible claims for what they had received, and, therefore, such an application of the deposited sum was not permissible.

Re Sinclair, Ex parte Payne (1885) (15 Q.B.D. 616), distinguished.

[AS TO RELATION BACK OF TRUSTEE'S TITLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 241-249, paras. 316-323; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 5, pp. 638-646, Nos. 5739-5797.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Simonson, Ex p. Ball, [1894] 1 Q.B. 433; 63 L.J.Q.B. 242; 70 L.T. 32; 5 Digest 642, 5773.
- (2) Re Sinclair, Ex p. Payne, (1885), 15 Q.B.D. 616; 53 L.T. 767; 5 Digest 641, 5764.

MOTION by a trustee in bankruptcy for directions as to the payment or otherwise out of the bankrupt's estate of certain profit costs and disbursements claimed by solicitors who, or whose predecessor in business, acted for the bankrupt both before and after the act of bankruptcy on which the petition was based and of which they had immediate notice. The facts appear in the judgment.

Morle, K.C., and R. M. Talbot for the applicant (the trustee in bankruptcy).
Platts Mills for the respondents (the claimants).

Cur. adv. vult.

June 16. JENKINS, J., read the following judgment. This is an application by the trustee in the bankruptcy of the partners in a firm known as "The British Folding Bed Company" for directions as to certain costs and disbursements claimed by Messrs. N. A. Woodiwiss & Co., solicitors, to be payable in full out of the estate of the bankrupts. The claimants are the successors in business of Mr. N. A. Woodiwiss, a solicitor, who, before his death on June 30, 1945, had been practising alone under the style of N. A. Woodiwiss & Co. as the sole surviving partner in a former firm of that name. The claims dealt with in the evidence and discussed in argument before me were not confined to sums claimed as payable in full. There were actually three matters in respect of which both profit costs and disbursements were claimed to be payable in full, and twelve matters in respect of which disbursements were claimed to be payable in full and profit costs were claimed as debts which should be admitted to proof and rank for dividend in the bankruptcy. It was agreed at the hearing that on the present application I should deal with the whole position between the claimants and the trustee and give directions as to the admissibility or otherwise of each of the amounts claimed whether as a provable debt or as a proper subject for payment in full.

The facts relevant to the claims may be summarised as follows. The relevant act of bankruptcy, in the form of failure by the debtors to comply with a bankruptcy notice, was committed on Jan. 16, 1942. Mr. Woodiwiss was at all material times acting as solicitor to the debtors, and it was admitted before me that for the present purpose he must be assumed to have had notice of the act of bankruptcy on the date on which it occurred. A bankruptcy petition founded on the above-mentioned act of bankruptcy was presented on Jan. 21, 1942, and came on for hearing on Feb. 13, 1942, when, at the request of the debtors, it was adjourned for six weeks. During the period of this adjournment, on Mar. 20, 1942, the debtors applied to the Westminster County Court for a liabilities adjustment order under the Liabilities (War-Time) Adjustment Act, 1941, and on Mar. 25, 1942, the Westminster County Court made a protection order under that Act in respect of the debtors and their affairs, referred the affairs of the debtors to the liabilities adjustment officer for investigation and report, adjourned the application for a liabilities adjustment order, and ordered that the stock-in-trade of the debtor firm should be sold with the approval of the liabilities adjustment officer and that all moneys realised by the sale should be paid into court. On Mar. 27, 1942, the bankruptcy petition was stayed by reason of the protection order thus made. The stock-in-trade of the debtor firm was in due course sold and the proceeds of such sale were paid into court in accordance with the county court's order of Mar. 25, 1942. By a further order of the Westminster County Court made in the liabilities adjustment proceedings on Aug. 5, 1942, it was ordered that the assets of the debtors be charged to the liabilities adjustment officer, such charge not to include the banking account or accounts of the debtors or any dividends arising out of such assets that might become payable to the debtors, and that the said charge should be subject to any existing charges on the debtors' assets and to any lien for costs on moneys coming into the hands of the debtors' solicitors.

The liabilities adjustment officer's investigation was protracted and his report under the county court's order of Mar. 25, 1942, was not completed until November of that year. In the concluding paragraph of his report he expressed the view that the case was not one in which it would be practicable or proper to make an adjustment order, and recommended that the application should be dismissed and the protection order revoked. The adjourned application for an adjustment order ultimately came on for hearing in April, 1943, when it was strenuously opposed by a number of creditors. On Apr. 15, 1943, after a hearing which seems to have lasted for seven days the learned county court judge made an order dismissing the debtors' application for an adjustment order and revoking the protection order, and directing (inter alia) that the creditors represented at the hearing be allowed their costs taxed on county court scale "C" out of the moneys of the debtors in court. I have been supplied with a copy of the transcript of the shorthand notes of the last day's proceedings in the county court from which it appears that an application was made for an order under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Rules, 1942, r. 60 (4), for the payment of the debtors' costs out of their assets and was refused by the learned county court judge. It was also represented to him that costs had been incurred by the debtors in prosecuting and defending certain actions for the benefit of the creditors and he was asked to make an order for payment of these costs out of the assets, but declined to do so. The debtors appealed to the Court of Appeal from the county court's order of Apr. 15, 1943, revoking the protection order, and their appeal was dismissed on Oct. 22, 1943. The bankruptcy petition was then restored and on Nov. 9, 1943, a receiving order founded on the act of bankruptcy committed on Jan. 16, 1942, was made. Adjudication followed on Nov. 30, 1943.

The claims on which the directions of the court are now sought are conveniently set out as items 1 to 15 of exhibit "G.C.2" to the affidavit of the trustee sworn in these proceedings on Feb. 26, 1948, and I will refer to them by the same numbers. Several of the items listed in this exhibit represent profit costs and disbursements incurred wholly or in part before the date of the act of bankruptcy (i.e., Jan. 16, 1942) in actions by or against the debtors commenced prior to that date. So far as costs and disbursements incurred before Jan. 16, 1942, are concerned, the trustee does not dispute the ordinary right of proof, subject to taxation of the relevant bills, but he says that the claimants' right must be limited to proof in respect of the taxed amounts, whether of profit costs or of disbursements, and that there is no justification whatever for the claim for payment of the disbursements in full. He further says that, to arrive at the provable amount, there must be deducted from the taxed total any sums paid to Mr. Woodiwiss on account of these profit costs and disbursements before Jan. 16, 1942. In my opinion, the trustee is quite clearly right on this part of the case.

The remainder of the profit costs and disbursements in question were incurred after Jan. 16, 1942, and (so far as they call for special mention at this stage) they include (item 3) a sum of £250 11s. 6d., profit costs and disbursements in the liabilities adjustment proceedings in the Westminster County Court (which are claimed in full), and also (item 15) £50 7s. 6d. disbursements and £135 4s. 0d. profit costs in the unsuccessful appeal to the Court of Appeal from the revocation of the protection order by the county court, which are claimed to be payable in full as regards the disbursements and provable as regards the profit costs. They also include (item 1) £581 5s. 3d. claimed in full as representing profit costs and disbursements (substantially all incurred after Jan. 16, 1942) in respect of the successful defence in the High Court and the Court of Appeal of an action brought against the debtors by a Miss Phyllis Stanley for £2,240 money lent, and (item 2) £69 2s. 7d. profit costs and disbursements claimed in full in respect of an action brought by the debtors against a company called Whitaker & Co., Ltd., after Jan. 16, 1942, which was still pending at the date of the receiving order and was settled by the trustee.

To deal with the items (or parts of items) representing profit costs and disbursements incurred after Jan. 16, 1942, it is necessary first to consider the question whether the proceedings in the county court under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941, had the effect of displacing in favour of the claimants (or Mr. Woodiwiss through whom they claim) the ordinary rules of bankruptcy under which the bankruptcy of a debtor is deemed to have relation back to and commences at the time of the act of bankruptcy on which the receiving order is made: Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 37 (1); and a person having notice of any act of bankruptcy cannot prove for any debt or liability contracted by the debtor subsequently to the date of his so having notice: ibid., s. 30 (2). In my judgment, this question should be answered in the negative. I can find nothing in the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941, to suggest that where a debtor obtains a protection order which is subsequently revoked and is followed by a receiving order against him, founded on an act of bankruptcy committed before the date of the protection order, the bankruptcy is not to be deemed to relate back to and commence on the date of the act of bankruptcy in the ordinary way, or that persons having notice of the act of bankruptcy are, merely by virtue of the fact that the act of bankruptcy has been followed by the making and subsequent revocation of a protection order, to be in any better position in the ensuing bankruptcy with respect to debts contracted after they have had such notice than they would have been in if the protection order had not been made. No doubt, under the wide powers conferred on the court making a protection order by the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Act, 1941, s. 3 (2), directions may be given which may materially affect the ordinary course of administration in bankruptcy even though the protection order is ultimately revoked and a receiving order founded on an antecedent act of bankruptcy supervenes. Thus, the county court might (I apprehend) have directed the defence or prosecution, on behalf of the debtors, of any of the various actions and the payment of the costs of so doing out of the assets, but it gave no such directions. It might also (under the Liabilities (War-Time Adjustment) Rules, 1942, r. 60 (4)), have directed the debtors' costs of the adjustment proceedings to be paid out of the assets, but (as already mentioned) it declined to do so. None of the orders actually made in the adjustment proceedings gave Mr. Woodiwiss, so far as I can see, any special rights in respect of any of the amounts now claimed.

In my judgment, therefore, the ordinary rules of bankruptcy must be applied. It follows that the claimants are not entitled to anything, whether by way of proof or otherwise, in respect of any of the profit costs or disbursements incurred after the date on which Mr. Woodiwiss had notice of the act of bankruptcy (i.e., admittedly the date of commission of the act itself, namely, Jan. 16, 1942) except in so far as they can be brought within the exception recognised in Re Simonson (1), the scope and limits of which are thus stated in the headnote ([1894] 1 Q.B. 433):

As a general rule a trustee in bankruptcy may, in the exercise of his discretion, adopt and pay for services rendered to a bankrupt after notice of an act of bankruptcy, where such services have clearly resulted in a benefit or profit to the bankrupt's estate commensurate with the services rendered, but he must be very strict in the application of the rule.

Applying the ordinary rules of bankruptcy, tempered by this exception, to the claims in the present case, the directions I give are as follows: (A) As to the Stanley action, (item 1), it appears that the county court gave the plaintiff leave to proceed unless her claim was admitted by the debtors, and that the debtors' defence of the action and appeal benefited the estate to the extent of the £2,240 which would have been a provable debt if judgment had been allowed to go by default. The trustee acknowledges the benefit and agrees that Mr. Woodiwiss's services in the matter, contributing as they did to this result, should be paid for out of the estate on the Re Simonson (1) principle. He points out however that, if the proceedings in bankruptcy had taken their ordinary course without the interposition of the stay occasioned by the protection order, the litigation of Miss Stanley's claim would have taken the form of proof and rejection of proof followed by an appeal to the judge in bankruptcy and thence to the Court of Appeal, and he says that this mode of procedure would have been cheaper to the estate than the defence of the action which was actually brought. There is no reason (says the trustee) why the claimants should receive more from the estate for Mr. Woodiwiss's services in securing this benefit than it would have cost the trustee to do so if he had dealt with the matter. I think this contention is well founded, and I, therefore, direct that the trustee should allow the claimants the full amount (to be taxed) of their profit costs and disbursements in the Stanley action and appeal but so that on such taxation any costs or disbursements in excess of those which would have been properly incurred if the claim had been made by proof in the bankruptcy and not by action are to be disallowed. (B) As to item 2, the action by the debtors against Whitaker & Co., Ltd., which was begun after Jan. 16, 1942, the writ not having been issued until July 24, 1942, there was a counterclaim in this action and at the date of the receiving order it had not come to trial, and the defendant company seems to have proved in the bankruptcy in respect of its counterclaim, which proof seems to have been rejected. Ultimately, on May 29, 1945, the matter was settled by means of a consent order (the trustee being made a party for this purpose) on terms that the claim and counterclaim should be withdrawn (each side paying their own costs), that the defendant company should make no claim in the bankruptcy in respect of the costs awarded to them by the Court of Appeal in the adjustment proceedings, and that the defendant company should withdraw an appeal they had lodged against the rejection of their proof. It is by no means apparent that the trustee could not have settled this claim and cross-claim in the bankruptcy on equally favourable terms if the action had never been started. Accordingly, I cannot regard the case as falling within the Re Simonson (1) principle, and I direct that this item (2) should be wholly disallowed. (C) As to items 3 and 15, which are the profit costs and disbursements in respect of the adjustment proceedings in the county court (claimed in full) and the disbursements (claimed in full) and profit costs (claimed as provable) in respect of the unsuccessful appeal to the Court of Appeal in those proceedings, I see no justification whatever for either of these claims and direct that they should be wholly disallowed. It should be remembered that in the county court an order for payment of the debtors' costs out of the assets was actually asked for and refused, and obviously there could be no question of any such order being made on the unsuccessful appeal from the county court. These proceedings were brought wholly for the benefit of the debtors and not at all in the interests of their estate, and it is reasonably plain that they ought never to have been brought. Mr. Woodiwiss must have been well aware of the risk he was running. (D) Item (4) relates to the defence of an action commenced by Miss Stanley against the debtors, after the date of the act of bankruptcy, for damages for conspiracy. I think the trustee's objection that the claim involved was not a provable debt, so that the estate cannot have benefited by the defence of the action is unanswerable. Accordingly, I direct that this item should be wholly disallowed. (E) Item (5) relates to the defence of an action brought against the debtors and others between the date of the act of bankruptcy and the date of the protection order. It was stayed as against the debtors by the protection order, and no further steps were taken against them. Accordingly (as counsel for the claimants agreed) there can be no ground for any claim in respect of this item, which must be accordingly disallowed. (F) Item (6) was profit costs and disbursements in respect of an action brought by the debtors against one J. A. Maine for the return of certain rolls of cloth deposited by the debtors with the defendant as security for a loan or payment of £394 as the value of such cloth. The defendant had in a previous action recovered judgment in June, 1941, for the amount of the loan (which I understand to have been £2,000 owing on certain bills) but leave to proceed was only given as to the excess over £394, and on terms that the debtors should pay the £394 into court to abide the result of an action to be brought by the debtors on their claim with respect to the cloth. This action was accordingly commenced by the debtors against Maine on July 15, 1941, the £394 being paid into court on July 29, 1941. The action was continued after Jan. 16, 1942, but never came to trial, chiefly, it would seem, on account of the absence of an essential witness on war service. Ultimately on Dec. 15, 1944, the trustee settled the action on terms (so far as material) that £244 of the £394 in court should be paid out to the trustee, and the balance to the defendant's solicitors, each side paying their own costs. Counsel for the claimants argued that, so far as profit costs and disbursements incurred in this action after Jan. 16, 1942, are concerned, the case comes within the Re Simonson (1) principle because in the result the estate benefited from Mr. Woodiwiss's efforts to the extent of £244. In my view, however, this is not made out. The sum of £394 was already in court on Jan. 16, 1942, and non constat that the trustee could not have settled the matter on equally favourable terms if no step had been taken in the action after that date. The position might have been different if after Jan. 16, 1942, further steps in the action in order to keep the claim to the £394 alive had been necessitated by pressure on the part of the defendant, but this is not shown, and if there had been such pressure the debtors' proper course would surely have been to apply for directions in the adjustment proceedings. Accordingly, I think the proper way of dealing with item (5) is to allow (for proof only, and not payment in full) the amount (to be taxed) of the profit costs and disbursements incurred down to Jan. 16, 1942, and I so direct. (G) The remaining items (Nos. 7 to 14 inclusive) relate to a number of actions in which, with one exception, the profit costs and disbursements in question were incurred wholly or mainly before Jan. 16, 1942, the exception being No. 8, an action by the debtors against a company called All Transport Storage, Ltd., in which the greater part of the costs was incurred after that date. The proper direction in all these cases is clearly, I think, that the amount (to be taxed) of the profit costs and disbursements incurred down to Jan. 16, 1942, should be admitted to proof (not payment in full), and this is not disputed by the trustee. I think it is clearly not made out that the continuance of action No. 8 after Jan. 16, 1942, resulted in any benefit to the estate so as to bring it within the Re Simonson (1) principle.

I should add that the facts I have stated regarding the various actions, so far as not in evidence, represent the substance of the position in each case as agreed by counsel before me. I should add further that, in the course of the discussion, counsel for the trustee offered by way of compromise to admit as provable (subject to taxation) certain of the profit costs and disbursements claimed although incurred after Jan. 16, 1942. I do not intend the directions given above to rule out the possibility of concessions on these lines as part of a general compromise on the figures, and, in particular, on the amount to be allowed in respect of item (1) (the Stanley action), which both in amount and because it ranks for payment in full, is by far the most important of those which I have considered allowable. Nor do I intend to rule out the possibility of dispensing with taxation, if figures can be agreed without going to that expense.

It only remains to consider the position with respect to certain sums received by Mr. Woodiwiss from the debtors on account of costs. These are £153 received before Jan. 16, 1942, and £245 5s. 0d. received subsequently to that date. As regards this latter sum, counsel for the claimants contends that he is entitled to appropriate it towards satisfaction of his claim for profit costs and disbursements in the liabilities adjustment proceedings (which I have disallowed) and thus recover pro tanto that disallowed claim in addition to receiving from the estate the full amount (when ascertained) which I have held allowable in respect of the Stanley action (item 1). He relies on Re Sinclair (2), in which certain small sums paid by a bankrupt to his solicitor to defray counsel's fees and other expenses in resisting bankruptcy proceedings were held (on adjudication following) not to be recoverable from the solicitor by the trustee in bankruptcy. I do not think this argument is well founded. In the first place, the £245 5s. 0d. was (as counsel for the trustee points out) in fact appropriated by the claimants to their costs and disbursements in the Stanley action by a memorandum enclosed in a letter from them to the trustee dated Aug. 8, 1947. Secondly, I do not see that Re Sinclair (2) has anything to do with this case, as the amount here in question does not represent sums paid to defray the necessary costs of opposing bankruptcy proceedings, but is the aggregate of some ten payments made between March, 1942, and the end of June, 1943, generally on account of costs, just as the £153 received before the act of bankruptcy represents the aggregate of some nine payments received between June and December, 1941, generally on account of costs. This clearly appears from the claimants' letter to the trustee dated Mar. 14, 1947, which lists all the items to which I have referred, other than the adjustment proceedings in the county court and Court of Appeal, encloses the bills relative to the listed matters, and concludes :

We still have to deliver our accounts re the adjustment proceedings. In addition to these accounts we enclose statement giving particulars of the amounts received by us on account of these respective matters.

The enclosed statement sets out a list of the payments made on account of costs on various dates from June 20, 1941, to June 29, 1943, without appropriation to any particular matter and without distinguishing between amounts received before and after the act of bankruptcy. The totals of £153 and £245 5s. 0d. are simply the result of adding up the amounts shown by the dates in this statement to have been received before and after the act of bankruptcy respectively. Further, this is not a case, as was Re Sinclair (2), in which the trustee is seeking to recover from a solicitor sums paid to him by the bankrupt, but is a case in which solicitors are claiming against the estate. In my opinion, the correct view clearly is that the claimants in the present case cannot be allowed anything out of the estate without giving credit against their admissible claims for what they have received. Accordingly, I direct that the £153 received before the act of bankruptcy must be deducted from the taxed (or agreed) total of the profit costs and disbursements incurred before the act of bankruptcy, and the proof must be only in respect of the balance remaining after such deduction, and that the £245 5s. 0d. received after the act of bankruptcy must be deducted from the taxed (or agreed) amount allowed in respect of the Stanley action (item 1), and only the balance (if any) of that amount remaining after such deduction is to be paid to the claimants. I make no order as to the costs of this application as between the trustee and the claimants, but the trustee should be allowed his costs out of the estate of the debtors.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors : Biddle, Thorne, Welsford & Barnes (for the trustee in bankruptcy) ; N. A. Woodiwiss & Co. (for the claimants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re THOMPSON (deceased). WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. AND ANOTHER v. THOMPSON AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), June 16, 1948.]

Administration—Will—Capital or income—Compensation for damage to requisitioned property—Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (1) (b) (2) (3).

By his will, dated Mar. 12, 1937, a testator, who died on Jan. 15, 1938, after bequeathing annuities to various persons, gave his residuary estate to his executors and trustees on trust to pay the income to H. for life and on her death to pay the capital to charitable institutions. In 1943, certain leasehold property forming part of the residuary estate was requisitioned by the Ministry of Supply. In 1946, it was de-requisitioned, and compensation became payable by the Ministry under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 2 (1) (b), in respect of the cost of making good damage to the premises which had occurred during the period of requisition.

HELD: the compensation did not accrue until the premises were de-requisitioned and was not annual produce of the residuary estate, and, therefore, it formed part of the capital of the residuary estate and should not be applied as income.

[FOR THE COMPENSATION (DEFENCE) ACT, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 32, pp. 1015-1018.]

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine (inter alia) whether a sum of £400 received by the executors and trustees of the will of Frederic Willoughby Thompson from the Ministry of Supply in respect of dilapidations to leasehold premises forming part of the residuary estate, which had been requisitioned by the Ministry, ought to be treated as part of the capital of the residuary estate, or whether it ought to be applied as income. It was conceded that sums received from sub-lessees by way of compromise of their liabilities under covenants to repair formed part of the capital.

Wilfrid Hunt for the plaintiffs (the trustees).

E. I. Goulding for the defendant Hilda Scott Thompson (an annuitant and interested in the income of the residuary estate for her life).

A. C. Nesbitt for the defendant the North London or University College Hospital (entitled under the ultimate trusts of the will).

R. L. Megarry for the remaining defendants.

HARMAN, J.: It is contended on behalf of the equitable tenant for life that this sum is income because of the words of the enactment under which it was paid, i.e., the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 2 (1) (b). That subsection provides:

The compensation payable under this Act in respect of the taking possession of any land shall be the aggregate of the following sums . . . (a) a sum equal to the rent which might reasonably be expected to be payable by a tenant in occupation of the land . . . under a lease . . . whereby the tenant undertook to pay all usual tenants' rates and taxes and to bear the cost of the repairs and insurance . . . (b) a sum equal to the cost of making good any damage to the land which may have occurred during the period for which possession thereof is so retained . . .

The argument is (i) that compensation consists of the aggregate of those two heads and both ought to go in the same direction, and, (ii) that the rent which the Crown has been paying has been so much the less because the notional tenant was supposed to bear the costs of repair, and, therefore, the £400 in question here is merely the difference between the amount payable under a repairing lease and that payable under a non-repairing lease and is in the nature of additional rent.

I do not think the tenant for life can succeed because, to do so, she must show that this money can properly be described as the annual produce of the residuary estate. Under s. 2 (2) of the Act compensation payable under s. 2 (1) (a) accrues from day to day, but under s. 2 (3) compensation under s. 2 (1) (b) does not accrue until the end of the period. Therefore, I do not think that compensation of the latter class forms part of the income to which the tenant for life is entitled. Furthermore, it seems that, in effect, that compensation is properly described as dilapidations. It is compensation for damage to the inheritance which has been done by the occupation by the Crown. That being so, there is no more reason why it should be treated as income than the compensation payable by the sub-tenant of the property which admittedly must go to the inheritance. I, therefore, decide that this £400 is capital.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties to be taxed and paid out of estate.

Solicitors: Hilder, Thompson & Dunn (for the plaintiffs and all defendants except the North London or University College Hospital); Pennington & Son (for the North London or University College Hospital).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ned. C.A. [1949] 1 All E.R.

ALLIANCE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. SHAFFER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Slade, J.), June 14, 15, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—"Rent"—Lease of flat—Agreement in contemporaneous document to pay annual sums for decorative alterations and cost of management—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (1), sched. I).

Before the coming into operation of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, a flat was let on a yearly tenancy at a rent of £175, but contemporaneously with the lease the parties executed a deed, described in the endorsement as a supplemental agreement, under which the tenant and any person in whom the lease at any time might be vested covenanted to pay an additional £40 a year in consideration of decorative and other alterations carried out by the landlords and a further £60 a year towards the cost of the management of the building in which the flat was situated, the second agreement to run concurrently with the lease and to determine with it and the sum payable thereunder to be paid together with the rent and to be recoverable "by distress or otherwise as for rent in arrear." The flat came within the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts on the coming into operation of the Act of 1939.

HELD: the intention of the parties was that the premises should be enjoyed on the terms of, and subject to the liabilities specified in, both documents, and the additional sums, being part of the price paid for the beneficial occupation of the premises, were part of the rent, and, therefore, the standard rent within s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (as amended by s. 3 (1) and sched. I of the Act of 1939) was £275.

Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark ([1948] 1 All E.R. 165), followed.

White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. ([1944] 1 All E.R. 689), distinguished.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-315, paras. 369-370; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 559-561, 563-565, Nos. 7068-7084, 7111-7127.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark, [1948] 1 All E.R. 165; [1948] K.B. 630.
- (2) White v. Richmond Court, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 689; [1944] K.B. 576; 113 L.J.K.B. 497; 171 L.T. 41; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Harman v. Richards, (1852), 10 Hare, 81; 22 L.J. Ch. 1066; 17 Digest 300, 1126.

ACTION by the landlords for arrears of rent of a flat amounting to £115 2s. 2d., and counterclaim by the tenant for rent overpaid amounting to £165 13s. 6d. and for a declaration that the standard rent of the flat was £175. The action was originally commenced in the Bloomsbury County Court, but on an objection to the jurisdiction raised by the tenant the action was transferred to the High Court which upheld the contention of the landlords that the standard rent of the flat was £275 and gave judgment in their favour on both claim and counterclaim. The facts appear in the judgment.

Lionel Blundell for the landlords.

Michael Hoare for the tenant.

SLADE, J.: This case raises a short, but by no means easy, point of law. By a lease dated May 23, 1944, made between the plaintiffs as landlords of the one part, and the defendant as tenant, of the other part, the defendant became tenant to the plaintiffs of a flat, No. 12, on the fifth floor of Weymouth Court, London, for a term of three years from June 7, 1944. The rent reserved by that lease was expressed to be £300 a year payable by equal quarterly payments on the usual quarter days. By a memorandum endorsed on the lease and dated May 7, 1947, the parties agreed that the term should be extended, by mutual consent, for a further seven years, the rent to be increased to £325 per annum as from June 7, 1948. The landlords concede that the rents of £300 a year reserved by the lease and £325 a year reserved by the endorsement are, in any event, excessive. They say that the standard rent of the premises is £275 a year, while the tenant says it is £175 a year. It is agreed between the parties that the only question I have to determine is whether the standard rent of the premises is £275 a year or whether it is £175 a year.

To ascertain the standard rent of the premises I have to look at s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as modified by s. 3 (1) and sched. I of the Act of 1939 in relation to houses which immediately prior to the passing of the Act of 1939 were not subject to any control. By sub-s. (1) (a) of that section, as so modified, the expression "standard rent" means "the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1, 1939." Both parties agree that these premises were let on Sept. 1, 1939, and, therefore, the rent at which they were let at that date is the standard rent of the premises. The standard rent of the premises depends on two documents which were executed by the landlords when letting the premises to a previous tenant, Mr. Reginald Denham, on May 31, 1934. The first document in point of time demised the premises to Mr. Denham "for the term of seven years from June 24, 1934, determinable as hereinafter mentioned"—I think they were determinable at the end of the third and fifth year of the seven years term by the appropriate notice—"yielding and paying therefore during the said term the yearly rent of £175." The first covenant by the lessee to the lessor was to "pay the rent hereby reserved." There was the usual proviso for re-entry conditioned by the words "if the rent hereby reserved shall be in arrear or unpaid." On the same day another agreement was signed sealed and delivered by Mr. Denham and sealed by the landlords, which begins by reciting that "the lessors have this day granted unto the lessee a lease in respect of a flat known as 12, Weymouth Court." It then recites that the lessors have made considerable decorative and other alterations to the premises and that "it has been agreed between the parties that the lessee in consideration thereof"—"thereof" I take to mean the expenditure by the lessors on the decorative and other alterations to the premises—"shall contribute the sum of £10 a quarter, i.e., £40 per annum during the period of his lease towards the cost of the aforesaid alterations in addition to the sum of £60 per annum towards the cost of the management of the building." It is those two sums of £40 and £60 per annum which make up the £100 difference between the £275, which the landlords say is the standard rent, and the £175, which the tenant says is the standard rent, of the premises. The operative part of this agreement is in these terms:

(1) The lessee shall pay to the lessor the sum of £25 on each of the four quarter days in each year during the period of his lease together with and as the rent reserved by the said lease becomes due. (2) This agreement shall run concurrently with the said lease and shall be deemed at an end as and when the said lease is terminated. (3) All amounts payable hereunder shall be recoverable by distress or otherwise as for rent in arrear.

Then there is a provision that the agreement shall be binding on the person or persons in whom the lease is for the time being vested.

The first question which arises in construing the expression in s. 12 (1) (a) of the Act of 1920, as amended, "standard rent" means the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1, 1939, is: What is included in the word "rent"? On that there have been a number of decisions. There have also been a number of decisions on the meaning of the word "rent" in proviso (i) to s. 12 (2) of the Act, which uses the words:

This Act shall not, save as otherwise expressly provided, apply to a dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of board, attendance, or use of furniture.

That proviso has been used in some cases to show that the word "rent" within the meaning of the Rent Restrictions Acts may include payments in respect of board, attendance, or the use of furniture and cannot, therefore, be limited to the old common law meaning of the word "rent," but may include elements which are not strictly part of the term "rent" when given that restricted meaning. Recently a case came before the Court of Appeal which, with one possible exception—although an important exception—appears to me to be substantially on all-fours with the facts of the present case, namely, Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark (1). That was a case on s. 12 (1) (a) of the amended Rent Act of 1920, and I understand it to lay down at least two principles. First, that the term "rent" in the context "standard rent" carries a meaning sufficiently wide to cover additional payments, whether or not some of the benefits to the tenant to which the additional payment is attributable have already been expressly or impliedly included in the main grant, and, secondly, that a covenant to pay a sum of money, an "additional sum," or just "an amount," may be a covenant to pay rent for the purposes of the definition of "standard rent" although the payment is not described in the agreement as rent.

It is unnecessary to decide whether a payment which was not tied up with the term "rent" by reference to the addition of such remedies as distress could be construed as being rent, because in the present case the second agreement of May 31, 1934, expressly provides that the £100—i.e., the aggregate of the £60 and the £40—shall be "recoverable by distress or otherwise as for rent in arrear." It is unnecessary also to decide whether the additional payment, even though described as rent, would constitute rent for the purposes of the definition if it was clear from the agreement that it related to something which did not really touch or concern the demised premises at all, e.g., if it were a payment—to use an illustration given by EVERSHER, L.J., in the Property Holding Co., Ltd. case (1) ([1948] 1 All E.R. 165, 174)—by the tenant for the use of a garage belonging to the landlord which was not included in the demise. In my judgment, both the matters for which the extra sums of £40 and £60 a year are made payable do touch and concern the demised premises. The first is a payment in respect of decorations and alterations to the demised premises themselves, and the second is a payment towards the cost of the management of the building of which the demised premises form part, the benefit of which management accrues to the tenant by virtue of his occupation of the demised premises. Except, as I have said, for the fact that in the Property Holding Co., Ltd., case (1) the rent and the additional payment were all contained in the one document, whereas, in the present case, the £175 and the £100 are in two separate documents, the decision in the Property Holding Co., Ltd. case (1) appears to me to have turned on precisely the point which arises in this case, and I am, of course, bound by that decision.

The question, therefore, which arises is whether the fact that the rights of the parties in this case depend on the two documents which were executed between the landlords and Mr. Reginald Denham in 1934 distinguishes the case in law from the decision in the Property Holding Co., Ltd. case (1). Before I deal with that I must refer to one case on which counsel for the tenant relied. It is also a decision of the Court of Appeal, White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (2), and also a case under s. 12 (1) (a), but with the important distinction that the flat in the present case was actually let on Sept. 1, 1939, and it, therefore, became unnecessary to consider the remaining provisions of s. 12 (1) (a), whereas in White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (2) the premises had never been let prior to Sept. 1, 1939, and, therefore, the method of ascertaining the standard rent was by reference to later words in s. 12 (1) (a), which are in these terms: "Or in the case of a dwelling-house which was first let after the said Sept. 1, 1939, the rent at which it was first let," i.e., the rent at which the premises were first let after Sept. 1, 1939. In White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (2), by a lease dated Mar. 24, 1941, the landlords demised to a tenant a flat which had never been previously let, and the lease reserved the rent at £200 a year. The counterpart of the lease was duly executed by the tenant. Pausing there for a moment, on the execution of that counterpart there came about, in my judgment, and I think it underlies the decision of the Court of Appeal, a concluded lease between the landlords and the tenant of the premises in question at a rent of £200 a year, and if that document was a concluded agreement and the premises had never previously been let, that document constituted the first letting of the premises. If nothing else had happened and somebody had asked this question on the following day: "Have these premises ever been let?" the answer, in my judgment, would have been "Yes, they were let yesterday." Q.: "Was that the first time they had been let?" A.: "Yes." Q.: "What was the rent reserved?" A.: "£200 a year." Therefore, £200 a year would have been the rent at which the premises were first let after Sept. 1, 1939. After the tenant had executed the counterpart—and it does not seem to me to affect the principle whether it was two hours or two days afterwards—he executed another document under which the landlords, in consideration of the flat being taken in an undecorated condition, agreed to reduce the rent by £50 a year during the continuance of the tenancy, thus making the rent actually payable by the tenant £150 a year. On an application by the tenant to the county court to determine the standard rent the county court judge fixed it at £150 a year, which was the difference between £200 a year and the £50 reduction. On appeal to the Court of Appeal, it was held that the rent at which the dwelling-house was first let within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (a) was £200 a year—the rent reserved by the original lease and counterpart executed by the tenant. The key to the decision in that case seems to me to be contained in the words of SCOTT, L.J., where he says ([1944] K.B. 576, 578):

It is to be observed that the lease was completely self-contained and that the deed executed by the landlords on the same day necessarily followed the lease in point of time since it expressed the reduction in the amount of the rent fixed by the lease, the counterpart of which had been signed by the tenant. I agree with the landlords' contention that that concludes the matter.

I understand SCOTT, L.J., in those words to be saying that the question for decision, according to the wording of the Act, is: "What is the rent at which the premises were first let?" When he says that "the second agreement necessarily followed the lease in point of time" he was emphasising that fact because it was the first document which constituted the first letting, and when he says: "I agree with the landlord's contention that that concludes the matter," I think he was saying that the premises were first let by that document and, whatever effect any subsequent document might have on the contractual obligations of the parties towards each other, nothing could alter the fact that it was the first document under which the premises were first let. I, therefore, think that White v. Richmond Court, Ltd. (2) is distinguishable from Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clark (1)—in which case, incidentally, it was not cited, possibly because of an oversight, but more probably because the point was not thought to be material on the question which arose.

Is there any distinction in law between having the rent and the additional payment contained in the same document, on the one hand, and having them contained in two documents, on the other hand? Before I answer that question, I must deal shortly with one other point raised by counsel for the tenant. He said, correctly, that on May 18, 1937, the landlords wrote to Mr. Denham, the then tenant of the premises, in reply to a letter, dated May 17, 1937:

We are in receipt of your letter of the 17th instant and note that you desire to remain in the above flat on a yearly tenancy as and from June 24 next on the same terms and conditions as your present tenancy. To this we are agreeable and we are informing our accounts department accordingly.

I agree with counsel that the correct interpretation to put on that document was that the option to determine the tenancy had not been exercised in accordance with the terms of the original lease but that the landlords were content to accept the desire of Mr. Denham to terminate the agreement. I agree that the right way to regard that is as a surrender of the existing tenancy and the creation, by agreement, of a new yearly tenancy on the same terms and conditions as the former tenancy. It is common ground that that yearly tenancy was still in operation on Sept. 1, 1939, and it was that tenancy which was the tenancy under which the premises were let at the material date. Counsel for the tenant further argues that that clearly put an end to the earlier of the two documents of May 31, 1934, and, as the latter of the two documents, by the operative cl. 2, made the later agreement run concurrently with the earlier one, the effect of the termination of the earlier one was also to terminate the later one. I agree with that too, but it does not carry the matter any further because the yearly tenancy was on the same terms and conditions as the former tenancy. If, therefore, the terms and conditions of the former tenancy are to be found in the two documents and not merely in the one, then the terms of the yearly tenancy were the ordinary terms of a yearly tenancy as supplemented by the terms of the tenancy which had been surrendered. Does, then, the fact that the contract of tenancy was contained in two documents instead of one alter the principle which I understand the Court of Appeal to have laid down in Property Holding Co., Ltd. v. Clarke (1)? In my judgment, it does not. The emphasis has been put, in a number of cases, on the necessity for looking at the substance rather than the precise form of a transaction—I am dealing now solely with the Rent Acts and the words "standard rent" in those Acts—and of giving a liberal interpretation to the word "rent."

I have no evidence before me of the circumstances in which the landlords entered into these two agreements on the same day with Mr. Denham. I have no evidence before me as to how these two agreements came to be executed when one agreement would have sufficed. I am, however, entitled to look at the two agreements themselves. The original document signed by Mr. Denham—the second of the two documents of May 1, 1934—was put in and it was described on the endorsement as a supplemental agreement. It is clear that the second agreement in point of time can have no meaning unless it is read in conjunction with the earlier agreement of the same date. That agreement is equally easily identifiable, because the later agreement says:

The lessors have this day granted unto the lessee a lease in respect of a flat known as 12, Weymouth Court, No. 1, Weymouth Street, in the parish of Saint Marylebone in the County of London and whereas the lessors have made considerable decorative and other alterations to the premises and whereas it has been agreed between the parties that the lessee in consideration thereof shall contribute the sum of £10 per quarter, i.e., £40 per annum during the period of his lease towards the cost of the aforesaid alterations in addition to the sum of £60 per annum towards the cost of the management of the building. Now it is hereby agreed as follows, viz., (1) The lessee shall pay to the lessors the sum of £25 on each of the four quarter days in each year during the period of his lease together with and as the rent reserved by the said lease becomes due. (2) This agreement shall run concurrently with the said lease and shall be deemed at an end as and when the said lease is terminated.

One can only find when the lease is capable of termination by looking at the earlier document of the same date. Then there is the point, though I place no reliance on it, that this agreement is to be binding on the persons in whom the lease is for the time being vested. I think the proper way to interpret those two documents is to regard the second as being supplemental to the first. I think that the intention of the parties was that the premises should be deemed to be enjoyed on the terms and subject to the liabilities of both documents, and that the additional payments covenanted to be paid under the second document were intended to form part of the price which Mr. Denham was to pay for his beneficial occupation of the premises.

I inclined to that view before counsel for the landlords cited to me a case with regard to the construction of contemporaneous deeds. He referred me to a passage in the judgment of SIR WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, V.-C., in Harman v. Richards (3) where he says (10 Hare 81, 85):

The question, whether several deeds are to be taken as parts of the same transaction, must, as I apprehend, depend upon all the surrounding circumstances of each particular case, and not upon the simple fact, whether the deeds are or are not by express reference grafted into or connected with each other; and we must therefore, in this case, look to what are the surrounding circumstances, so far as they affect the connection of the deeds.

The only surrounding circumstances of which I have evidence are those which can be inferred from the language of the documents themselves, and, for the reasons I have indicated, I am satisfied that it was the intention of the parties in this case that the documents should be read together. I have not overlooked the fact that the crucial matter is not necessarily what the parties themselves intended should be a contract enforceable between them, but what was the rent at which the premises were actually let, bearing in mind that the Acts operate, so to speak, in rem, binding the premises with the standard rent. In the present case I can see no ground for supposing that there was not a valid agreement that the amount to be paid for the enjoyment of these premises—at a time when the parties were at arms length and the premises were not subject to any control—should be £275 a year, and I hold that the standard rent of the premises in question in this action is £275 a year. That being so, it was agreed that there would be judgment for the landlords on the claim for the amount claimed and also judgment for the landlords on the counterclaim.

A I, therefore, make the following order : Judgment for the landlords for £115 2s. 2d. on the claim with costs on the appropriate county court scale up to the time of transfer and thereafter on the High Court scale ; judgment for the landlords on the counter-claim with costs on the appropriate county court scale, up to the time of transfer to the High Court and costs on the High Court scale thereafter.

Order accordingly.

B Solicitors : Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the landlords) ; Bernard Shaffer (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

CHARLES OXFORD, LTD. v. GONSHAW, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., and Wrottesley, L.J.), June 14, 1948.]

D

Practice—Inspection of goods—Non-compliance with order—Striking out defence—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21.

Court of Appeal—Vexatious and oppressive defence—Inherent jurisdiction to strike out.

E

R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21, provides : “ If any party fails to comply with any order . . . for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall be liable to attachment. He shall also . . . be liable . . . if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended . . . ”

F

G

H

The plaintiffs, who were wholesale dealers in clothing, issued a specially indorsed writ against the defendants claiming the return of, or the value of, or damages for wrongful detention of, 107,080 clothing coupons, being the balance of coupons, which, together with some cloth for making up, the plaintiffs had delivered to the defendants. On an application for summary judgment under R.S.C., Ord. 14, the defendants filed an affidavit denying liability on the ground that cloth to the value of 63,045 coupons, delivered by the plaintiffs, had been made up, and, further, that, in accordance with the contract, cloth of their own to the value of 36,951 coupons had also been made up, and that the garments were and always had been ready for delivery on payment. Leave to defend was granted and a defence containing substantially the same allegations was delivered, except that the figures, which were later said to have been due to a mistake, were omitted. On Nov. 18, 1947, the master ordered the defendants to give to the plaintiffs inspection of the garments referred to in the defence within 10 days and ordered that in default the defence be struck out and the plaintiffs be at liberty to sign final judgment. Pursuant to that order judgment was signed by the plaintiffs on Dec. 9, 1947. On Jan. 12, 1948, on an application by the defendants, the judgment was set aside and the defendants were ordered by the master to deliver within 14 days a schedule of the goods mentioned in the defence and to give full inspection within 7 to 14 days of the delivery of that schedule. That order did not provide that in default of compliance the defence should be struck out. On Jan. 23, 1948, in response to that order the defendants delivered to the plaintiffs a schedule of garments of 27,000 coupons value and an invoice covering a sale of the remainder of the goods to a third person. On Apr. 19, 1948, the master, purporting to exercise jurisdiction under R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21, ordered that the defence be struck out, that the plaintiffs be at liberty to sign judgment, and that the defendants be put in the same position as if they had not defended. The latter order was affirmed by the judge.

HELD: (i) failure to comply with the order for inspection of goods, although analogous to discovery, did not fall within the words "discovery or inspection of documents" in R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21.

(ii) the fact that the master and the judge were exercising, or purporting to exercise, jurisdiction under that rule did not prevent the Court of Appeal from granting relief on the ground that the defence was vexatious and oppressive, if that was the proper course to take.

[AS TO FRIVOLOUS AND VEXATIOUS PLEADINGS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 252-256, paras. 418-420; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Pleading, pp. 82-92, Nos. 691-777.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Reichel v. Magrath, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 665; 59 L.J.Q.B. 159; 54 J.P. 196; Digest, Pleading 84, 701.

APPEAL by the defendants from an order of PRITCHARD, J., dated May 6, 1948, affirming an order of the master, purported to be made under R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21, that the defence should be struck out on the ground of the failure of the defendants to comply with an order for inspection of goods. The appeal was allowed on the ground that there was no jurisdiction to make the order under that rule, but the Court of Appeal, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, struck out a part of the defence as being vexatious and oppressive. The facts appear in the headnote.

Stenham and Bernard Lewis for the defendants.
Gallop, K.C., and Gillis for the plaintiffs.

LORD GREENE, M.R., stated the facts, read R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21, and continued: On appeal, PRITCHARD, J., affirmed the decision of the master, but expressed some doubt whether under r. 21 there was jurisdiction to make such an order. It would have been competent to the master, when he made the order of Jan. 12, 1948, to provide that in default the plaintiffs should have liberty to sign judgment, but he did not do so. The question, therefore, is whether under this or any other rule the plaintiffs, on default, are entitled to have an order giving them liberty to sign judgment. That was the point on which PRITCHARD, J., felt doubt. It has not been seriously argued before us that the court had jurisdiction, and, in my judgment, it had not. The rule gives specific power to the court to strike out the defence and to place the defendant in the same position as if he had not defended in certain limited classes of case, namely, failure to comply with an order to answer interrogatories or for discovery or inspection of documents. The defendants' failure in this case does not come under any of those heads. It was failure to comply with an order for inspection, and, although inspection is in a sense analogous to discovery, it does not, in my opinion, fall within the phrase "discovery or inspection of documents" in the rule. The clothing here cannot be described as "documents."

Counsel for the plaintiffs, however, defended his order on a different ground. He suggested, in the first place, that the order might be construed as having been made in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the court to strike out a frivolous and vexatious defence. That view I am unable to accept, because the very language of the order and the observations of PRITCHARD, J., make it clear that neither the master nor the judge conceived themselves to be exercising any such jurisdiction. Counsel took as his alternative point that the Court of Appeal have the power to exercise the inherent jurisdiction and strike out the defence on that ground, and to give the same relief as is given by the order, namely, liberty to sign judgment. His reference to Reichel v. Magrath (1) satisfies me that, although the master and the judge were purporting to exercise a different jurisdiction, that does not prevent this court from giving relief on the ground that the defence is vexatious and oppressive if we consider that that is the proper course to take. In my opinion, counsel for the plaintiffs is right when he says that we have jurisdiction to make an order which is appropriate to a case of vexatiousness and oppression. In my opinion, also, this defence, so far as it relates to the specific sentences dealing with the cloth and the garments of which inspection ought to have been given, is vexatious and oppressive. That seems to me to be the only inference to be drawn from the conduct of the defendants. They obtained leave to defend on the faith of an allegation of precisely the same character (save that it contained certain figures) as they subsequently pleaded, when it came to putting in the defence they omitted the figures, and they now say that the allegation in their affidavit was due to a mistake. Not only were two or three orders for inspection made against them, but, taking only the last one, they not only did not comply with it, but deliberately flouted it and put it out of their power to give the inspection which had been ordered.

To my mind, therefore, the defendants should not be allowed to maintain the defence for a moment longer, subject to a point which I am about to mention. The jurisdiction to strike out a defence or paragraphs of a defence is quite different from the jurisdiction under which the court gives liberty to sign judgment. The effect of striking out the parts of this defence to which I have referred would be to leave the rest of the defence intact for what it is worth, and, if that is sufficient to prevent the plaintiffs obtaining summary judgment, they will go to trial in the ordinary way and have to prove their case. If, however, what is left of the defendants' case is not sufficient to entitle them to defend but is such as to enable the plaintiffs to take a more summary step, that is the fault of those parts of the defence which we are allowing to stand. I am not disposed to give counsel for the plaintiffs the full relief for which he asks on the ground of vexatiousness and oppression. He asks for the whole defence to be struck out. I am not prepared to do that, but I consider that in the discretion of the court we ought to strike out all the matters which are dealt with in the paragraphs in relation to which inspection was ordered, because it is the conduct of the defendants in relation to those paragraphs that satisfies me that the defence contained in them can only be described as frivolous and vexatious and oppressive.

I have said there is a qualification, and I must now mention it. The only defence which seems to me to arise from the facts is that, as the goods mentioned in the schedule are shown to be goods which the plaintiffs are under contract to buy and in relation to which coupons were delivered or debited to the defendants, the defendants have a good defence in respect of that quantity of coupons, and, in my discretion, I should not feel disposed to preclude the defendants from putting up that limited defence, for what it is worth, and amending their defence accordingly. In the result, the order below will be modified in the way I have indicated. There will be leave to substitute for the paragraphs we strike out a paragraph limited to the garments mentioned in the schedule and their coupon value. No further liberty to amend will be granted.

WROTTESELEY, L.J. : I agree.

Order varied. Defendants to pay three-fourths of the costs of the appeal in any event.

Solicitors : Edward Davis, Nelson & Co. (for the defendants); B. A. Perkoff (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

INSALL v. NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), June 18, 1948.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—Uncontrolled dwelling-house let at uneconomic rent—Subsequent letting, when controlled, at increased rent—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), sched. 1).

In 1938 Mrs. G., the owner of property, sold it to the landlords, and at the same time, in pursuance of an arrangement made during and as part of the negotiations for the sale, the landlords granted to Mr. and Mrs. G. a tenancy of part of the premises at a rent of £50 per annum. The tenancy agreement did not disclose any consideration for the lease beyond the rent and the usual covenants. An arrangement appeared in correspondence immediately following the grant of the lease that Mr. G. should continue to manage the property, but there was no evidence to show that that arrangement was a binding obligation for services. There was, however, evidence to show that a rent of £50 per annum, while not being less than two-thirds of the rateable value, was not an economic rent. The tenancy agreement was still continuing on Sept. 1, 1939, when the part of the premises in question became subject to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939. On Sept. 4, 1946, after the termination of this tenancy, the same part of the premises was let to another tenant at a rent of £120 per annum, and that tenant applied to the court for a declaration that the standard rent was £50 per annum.

HELD: that the rent at which the premises were let on Sept. 1, 1939, was the actual monetary rent being paid under the tenancy agreement, namely, £50, and not a rent in money plus services, and that that rent was the standard rent, regardless of whether or not that figure represented the full economic value of the premises.

Chamberlain v. Farr ([1942] 2 All E.R. 567), applied.

Roberts v. Jones ([1946] 2 All E.R. 678), distinguished.

Observations of SCOTT and MACKINNON, L.JJ., in Davies v. Warwick ([1943] 1 All E.R. 309, 311, 312), considered.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, p. 312, para. 369; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 564-566, Nos. 7117-7132.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Roberts v. Jones, [1946] 2 All E.R. 678; [1947] K.B. 221; [1947] L.J.R. 606; 176 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Davies v. Warwick, [1943] 1 All E.R. 309; [1943] K.B. 329; 112 L.J.K.B. 245; 169 L.T. 130; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Chamberlain v. Farr, [1942] 2 All E.R. 567; 112 L.J.K.B. 206; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE CAPORN, made at Nottingham County Court and dated Dec. 19, 1947, fixing at £120 per annum the standard rent of premises let, when uncontrolled, at a rent of £50, and subsequently, when controlled, let to the tenant at £120. The Court of Appeal now upheld the tenant's contention that the standard rent was £50 per annum. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Lionel A. Blundell for the tenant.

Heathcote-Williams for the landlords.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of His Honour JUDGE CAPORN in which he fixed the standard rent of certain premises at £120 per annum. The application was made to him by the present tenant of the premises, pursuant to s. 11 (1) of the Act of 1923, which provides:

The county court shall have power on the application of a landlord or a tenant to determine summarily any questions as to the amount of the rent, standard rent or net rent of any dwelling-house to which the principal Act applies, or as to the increase of rent permitted under that Act or this Part of this Act.

The tenant asked the judge to fix the rent at £50 in place of the contractual rent of £120 which he had undertaken to pay, but the judge decided against him and fixed it at £120. It is common ground that the house in question, which formed a part of Newstead Abbey, was subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts. It was also agreed that the premises were brought within the control of those Acts by the Act of 1939, and that on Sept. 1, 1939, there was in existence a letting under an agreement dated Nov. 7, 1938, which purported to fix the rent at £50 per annum, and it was conceded that that sum was being paid by the tenant to the landlord on Sept. 1, 1939.

On Sept. 1, 1939, the tenants of the part of the premises in question were a Mr. and Mrs. German. Before 1938 Mrs. German was the owner of the premises, and in 1938 she came to an agreement with the corporation of Nottingham whereby she sold to the corporation these premises and other property for a total amount of some £3,950. Part of the arrangement which was come to between the parties in the process of negotiating the sale of the premises was that Mr. German, or Mr. and Mrs. German, should be granted a tenancy of these premises at a rental of £50 per annum after the corporation had bought them, and an agreement was signed giving effect to that arrangement. It was said on behalf of the corporation that this rent of £50 did not represent the real economic rent of the premises, but was a preferential rent which had been agreed to in the case of Mr. and Mrs. German, because Mr. German had for many years shown himself interested in Newstead Abbey and the property generally, had managed or supervised it, and had promised to continue to do so. The county court judge held that that was the true view of the negotiations which took place. I do not think, having regard to the view I take as to the main question involved in this appeal, that it is necessary to express any opinion whether there was sufficient evidence to support that finding by the learned judge, but I am going to assume that there was.

[His LORDSHIP referred to the correspondence and the evidence and continued:] In my view, it is impossible to say that on that evidence and those documents there was a binding contractual obligation on Mr. German that he would continue to manage these properties on behalf of the corporation so that he would have committed a breach of contract if, within a day or two days after the commencement of the tenancy, he had ceased to render those services. I take the view on the material before us that it was merely a gratuitous undertaking on his part, with no period of time fixed for its continuance, and was nothing more than what is called a "gentleman's agreement" or an honourable undertaking given in the course of negotiations. Even if I am wrong about that and it did constitute an obligation on the part of Mr. German, I am unable to take the view which counsel for the landlords asks us to take, that it amounted to a promise to perform services which amounted to part of the rent payable for these premises. Counsel for the landlords says that the rent was £50 in money plus services, but, having regard to the evidence and the documents, I find it impossible to say that the true view of the transaction which culminated in this tenancy agreement was that £50 did not really represent the rent, and that there could be no standard rent at that period for these premises because there was an unknown quantity, namely, the value of the services which Mr. German had undertaken to render. There is not one word in the tenancy agreement putting on Mr. German any obligation to perform any service at all, either as a condition of the tenancy or as creating a collateral obligation on his part. Therefore, I think that the rent was fixed by the agreement between the corporation and Mr. and Mrs. German, namely, the rent of £50, unless it can be said that that cannot be taken as the standard rent of the premises because that did not represent the full economic value of the premises, and that I regard as the substantial question which arises for decision in the present appeal.

The learned judge's note of his own decision was as follows :

Letting to Germans—was negotiated as part of conditions of sale by Mrs. German to corporation—in light of services that had been and were to continue to be rendered by Mr. German. £50 reserved not a fair market criterion of rental value of premises at time, but as part of terms of sale and services. Clear this must have been so from all the surrounding facts including rents at which similar houses part of same estate let to other tenants. In my view first let within meaning of Rent Acts when let to the applicant, and £120 is standard rent.

We have a note taken by counsel for the tenant of the learned judge's judgment which I need not read in full, but when the learned judge comes to give his actual decision on the case, having referred to the cases that were cited to him, and, in particular, to Roberts v. Jones (1) he says :

As I understand the language of SCOTT, L.J., the Rent Restrictions Acts refer only to a rent of a dwelling-house which at the time of the rent being fixed was a free house so that the rent fixed would prima facie afford criterion of fair market value. It seems to me that, as you can look to the statute, so equally you can look to other matters. As between the two parties they were ignoring the fair market value of the property and dealing with it as part and parcel of a bigger thing. Counsel has drawn my attention to other cases which do not fit in with my view of the law. My view supported by Roberts v. Jones (1) . . . On the facts of this case I am quite satisfied that the letting to Germans was negotiated as part and parcel of the terms of sale to the corporation. They had acquired another part and were anxious to acquire this part owned by Mrs. German. Mr. German, moreover, had for some time voluntarily acted as a sort of supervising agent. Germans quite willing to transfer to corporation provided they could go on living there. Mr. German willing to go on supervising. It was part and parcel of the terms of sale they should stay on at rent of £50 and that Mr. German should go on doing the services. Never any negotiation about the rent.

With regard to the authorities, the cases principally relied on by counsel for the tenant were Davies v. Warwick (2) and Chamberlain v. Farr (3). Davies v. Warwick (2) dealt with a house which in 1916 had been let at a rent of 4s. 3d., but which then went outside the Acts and was brought within the sphere of the Acts again by the Act of 1939, and in October, 1939, was let at 12s. 6d. The question was whether the standard rent was 12s. 6d., the rent at which the premises were first let after Sept. 1, 1939, or whether it was the 4s. 3d. provided for in the previous letting in 1916. In the course of dealing with that case SCOTT, L.J., and MACKINNON, L.J., made certain observations which, I think it is true, went beyond what was strictly necessary for the decision of the case, but, nevertheless, those observations require careful consideration. SCOTT, L.J., dealing with the hardship which it had been suggested would result by going back to a rent in 1916 which might bear no relation to the circumstances prevailing at the later date with which the court were concerned, said ([1943] 1 All E.R. 309, 311) :

The statutory reference back to some almost prehistoric letting might take one to a time when economic conditions and the value of money were totally different from what they are today . . . Or, again, a landlord might, as an act of kindness, have let a cottage to some deserving person for a short time at a nominal rent ; the retainer dies, and the landlord wants either to let at a market rent or to sell. In either choice he is penalised by the retrospective provision in the Act. That Parliament was not intending to penalise landlords is shown by s. 6 of the 1933 Act, which, in certain circumstances, made the average rent of comparable houses in the neighbourhood the test for the standard rent. In the present case there is no evidence that either landlord or tenant had any knowledge that the house had ever before been let ; neither plaintiff nor defendant was called as a witness, so that the allegations in the pleadings were never tested. I cannot doubt that if the hardships of the kind I indicate had been foreseen by Parliament, discretion might well have been given, and might by an amending Act still be given, to the court to have regard to circumstances which make the rigid application of the past-rent rule work unfairly ; and in such case to fix a rent with due regard to the fair value of other houses in the neighbourhood and so temper the rigour of the Act.

MACKINNON, L.J., said (ibid., 312) :

If reliance be placed on a previous letting 50 or 500 years ago, the judge is given no discretion to take into account the altered value of money. If the landlord proves that the rent the tenant agreed to pay is perfectly fair, and is in fact lower than the rent being paid by every other tenant of identical houses, the judge is not allowed to consider that. If the landlord proves that the previous letting years ago was an act of charity at a nominal rent by the owner to his aged relative, or at a low or nominal rent to a servant, the judge cannot take either of these facts into account. If the landlord proves that, under the old letting the tenant agreed to do all the repairs whereas in the agreement with the recalcitrant tenant the landlord had to do the repairs—apparently that is not a matter the judge is allowed to consider. Indeed, if it were proved that at the old letting relied on the landlord agreed to a very low rent in consideration of a lump sum paid down by the tenant, or in consideration of the tenant putting the house in repair and enlarging it, I find it difficult to see how the judge could take either of those circumstances into account. The standard rent under this section is to be "the rent" at which the house was last "let" before Sept., 1939, with no qualification whatever, and with no discretion given to the judge to consider the terms and circumstances of that last letting, or even its date.

That is very strong language indicating the view the learned Lords Justices took as to the meaning of the word "rent" in this Act for this purpose.

I think that Chamberlain v. Farr (3) is even more in favour of the contention of counsel for the tenant. In that case the tenant had entered into an agreement for buying premises No. 1, Falling Lane, Yiewsley, which were then in the course of construction. Completion was to take place on Aug. 7. Under cl. 7 of the agreement it was provided that, if the vendor should allow the purchaser to occupy the property before the completion of the purchase, the purchaser agreed that the occupation was to be a tenancy at will at 17s. 6d. The house was not in a condition for completion and occupation on the date fixed, and it was impossible for the purchaser to go into occupation so as to bring that clause into operation. Instead, an arrangement was come to under which he went into possession of No. 7 in the same road—a 1939 Act house—and agreed to pay a rent of 12s. per week. The question was whether the 12s. per week that he agreed to pay in those circumstances for No. 7 was or was not to be regarded as the standard rent. LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1942] 2 All E.R. 567, 569):

We, therefore, have this position. Here is a tenancy and here is a rent of 12s. per week. There is no question about that. It would appear on those facts that 12s. is the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on Sept. 1, 1939, within the meaning of s. 6. It was argued that this rent cannot be regarded as a rent contemplated by that section, because, it was contended, it was not a full economic rent, and the parties must have contemplated that, sooner or later, it would be raised to an economic figure. It is said that that is really what the registrar, and after him the learned deputy county court judge, meant in their judgments. With regard to this it would be sufficient to say that there is no evidence whatever to support that contention, but I go further, and I say that, even if there had been an arrangement or understanding that this was not a full, economic rent, it would not have displaced the operation of the relevant words of s. 6, because, whether it was an economic rent or whether it was not, whether the parties did or did not contemplate that it might thereafter be raised, it was, in fact, the rent at which the dwelling-house was let on the relevant date. Once there is sufficient evidence (and on this basis there clearly was sufficient evidence) to enable the court to ascertain that rent, the court is precluded, and admittedly precluded, from having regard to the standard rents of similar dwelling-houses in the neighbourhood for the purpose of determining the standard rent of the house in question. Of course, in cases where the rent which is in fact paid under a lease is to a particular extent below an economic rent, there is provision in the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (7), for dealing with the case. In such a case, which is where the rent payable is less than two-thirds of the rateable value, the Act is to apply as if the tenancy did not exist. Therefore, there is ample provision for cases of non-economic rents, where they fall below the stated figure mentioned in that subsection. It is not suggested that that subsection applies to the present case.

Those authorities, I think, strongly support the view that, provided one has a rent which is a real rent and not a sham, the fact that it does not come up to the true economic rent which might be obtained in respect of the premises, or the fact that it has been reduced for family reasons or in preference for a particular tenant, are matters which must be excluded from the purview of the court in fixing the standard rent.

The case primarily relied on by counsel for the landlords was Roberts v. Jones (1), which, in my opinion, is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In that case a dwelling-house, which had been reconstructed with the aid of a grant made under the Housing (Rural Workers) Act, 1926, had been let in the year 1938 to a tenant at 7s. 6d. per week, that being the rent fixed by the local authority in accordance with the conditions imposed by that Act. In 1941 the house became unoccupied, and later in the same year the landlord let the house to another tenant at 17s. 6d. per week, and repaid the grant. Thereupon the Act of 1926 ceased to apply to the house, which became subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts. The question which arose was whether the standard rent was the 17s. 6d. for which the house was let after it had come within the purview of these Acts, and it was held that the standard rent was the rent at which the house was first let after being freed from the restrictions of the Housing (Rural Workers) Act, 1926, namely, 17s. 6d. a week. SCOTT, L.J., said [1946] 2 All E.R. 678, 680):

... the standard rent provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts prima facie do not apply to houses the rent of which is subject to different and special legislation.

Earlier in his judgment the learned Lord Justice said this ([1947] K.B. 221, 224; [1946] 2 All E.R. 678, 680):

There is, therefore, no question of going back to see what was the rent when the old house, which ex hypothesi had ceased to exist, was let at a half-a-crown a week. If the house let under the Housing (Rural Workers) Acts at 7s. 6d. is to be regarded, 7s. 6d. is the criterion; but, if the Rent Restrictions Acts refer only to the rent of a dwelling-house which at the time of the rent being first paid was a free house, so that the rent would prima facie afford a fair market criterion of the rental value of the house, then the court can have no regard at all to the time when the rent was 7s. 6d., for the house was not then free and its rent cannot be the standard. In that case it must have regard to the rent of 17s. 6d., which was the first rent of this house freely agreed between landlord and tenant, after the time when this house, a new house, became free from the restrictions of the Housing (Rural Workers) Acts.

Then the learned Lord Justice goes on to deal with those Acts and comes to the view which is summarised in the headnote. I find nothing in that judgment which conflicts with the decisions in Davies v. Warwick (2) and Chamberlain v. Farr (3). The mere fact that the learned Lord Justice says: "if the Rent Restrictions Acts refer only to the rent of a dwelling-house which at the time of the rent being first paid was a free house, so that the rent would prima facie afford a fair market criterion of the rental value of the house," and indicates that, in his view, that was the foundation for the policy of the Act in fixing the standard rent in a certain way, is, in my view, no authority for the proposition that the court, in fixing a standard rent, has any business to disregard a contract actually arrived at between the parties and substitute some fresh rent for that which they have arrived at, based on the view of the court of the real economic value of the premises. I think that, to attribute that meaning to what they said, would be stretching the language of the learned Lord Justice and also that used by SOMERVELL, L.J., in his judgment far beyond anything which they intended. It is true that, in arriving at their decision and explaining the working of the Act, expressions were used in which reference was made to the fair market value of the rent and to the effect of legislation depressing that value, but, as I have said, there is nothing in this case which can be relied on as authority for an entirely novel proposition until now, that the function of the county court judge is to ascertain the real economic rent as distinct from the contractual rent at which the parties have arrived. For these reasons I think that this appeal succeeds, and there must be a declaration that the standard rent of these premises is the sum of £50, and not £120.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree that the appeal must be allowed. I thought that counsel for the landlords, in the course of his argument, was inclined to agree that, if the position was that a low rent was accepted by the corporation because Mr. German had voluntarily in the past been useful to Newstead Abbey, and had given them an assurance, again on a voluntary basis, that he was prepared to go on in that way in future, the case was covered by Chamberlain v. Farr (3), and he could not succeed. Whether or not I was right in that, I am satisfied myself, for the reasons that have been given by TUCKER, L.J., that, if it were the position that the corporation were accepting the figure that had been put forward, although it was less than the economic rent, that would be covered by what the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said in Chamberlain v. Farr (3). Certainly the main part of counsel's argument was based on the submission that there was evidence on which the learned county court judge could find that Mr. German had put himself under a contractual liability to continue to do what he had been doing and to look after the property and, a second proposition—necessary, I think, for his submission to get on its legs—that that undertaking was part of the consideration for the use and occupation of this house. It seems to me that, in a case like this where one starts with a lease, a document which purports to set out the consideration for the use and occupation of a house, one needs, at the least, unambiguous evidence if a court is to be entitled to hold that there was some other consideration for the use and occupation in addition to that expressed in the document. In my opinion, there is no such unambiguous evidence here on which the learned judge could find both that there was a legal obligation to do this work and that the undertaking of that legal obligation was consideration additional to the rent as set out for the use and occupation of the house. If counsel for the landlords had been successful on those two points, or if, to put it another way, the court was confronted with a lease which, on the face of it, showed, in addition to the rent, some further consideration which could be evaluated in money, then a different question would be raised which can be dealt with when it arises. With regard to the authorities, again I agree with what has been said by TUCKER, L.J. I think it is possible that some of the examples given by SCOTT, L.J., and MACKINNON, L.J., in Davies v. Warwick (2) went beyond what was necessary for the decision of that case, and may raise questions on which I would like to hear argument before coming to a definite opinion. I think in particular, that the Lords Justices, in the examples which both of them gave of a purely nominal rent, may not have had in mind s. 12 (7) of the Act of 1920, which is referred to by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS in Chamberlain v. Farr (3).

COHEN, L.J. : I also agree with the order proposed by TUCKER, L.J. I only desire to add a word on one point. As I understand the judgment of the learned county court judge, he based his decision on a passage in the judgment of SCOTT, L.J., in Roberts v. Jones (1) which my Lord has already read, and which is in these terms :

... if the Rent Restrictions Acts refer only to the rent of a dwelling-house which at the time of the rent being first paid was a free house, so that the rent would prima facie afford a fair market criterion of the rental value of the house, then the court can have no regard at all to the time when the rent was 7s. 6d., for the house was not then free and its rent cannot be the standard.

The county court judge appears to have understood SCOTT, L.J., as having laid down that in any case where there was evidence to indicate that the fixed rent was not a fair market rent the court must disregard it. He says :

It seems to me that as you can look to the statute, so equally you can look to other matters. As between the two parties they were ignoring the fair market value of the property and dealing with it as part and parcel of a bigger thing.

If that were the true interpretation of the observations of SCOTT, L.J., it would, I think, be inconsistent with the decision of this court in Chamberlain v. Farr (3) to which my Lord has referred, but I do not so understand the observations. I think SCOTT, L.J., was clearly saying that, where one finds that the rent was not fixed by agreement between the parties, but was imposed under a statutory provision, then it could not be said to be a fair market criterion of the rental value of the house. I think, if that was his intention, that his real meaning is clear from the other passages in his judgment. If that be the true view, as I think it is, there is nothing inconsistent in the decision in Roberts v. Jones (1) with the decision in Chamberlain v. Farr (3). In my view, on the facts of this case, we are compelled by the decision in Chamberlain v. Farr (3) to hold that the learned county court judge was wrong, and that the standard rent is, as my Lord has said, £50 a year. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Torr & Co., agents for Harrop White, Gamble & Vallance, Mansfield, Notts. (for the tenant); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for A. J. G. Hardwicke, Nottingham (for the landlords).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GRANT v. SUN SHIPPING CO., LTD. AND OTHERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Thankerton, Lord Porter, Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parcq and Lord Oaksey), March 2, 4, 5, 8, 9, June 23, 1948.]

Negligence—Stevedore—Injured by falling into uncovered hatch—Hatch covers and electric lights removed by ship repairers—Breach of statutory regulations by shipowner and repairers—Contributory negligence—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), regs. 12 (c), 37, 45.

On Feb. 12, 1942, a stevedore, who was employed with other labourers in shifting cargo on a ship berthed at a quay in Glasgow, was rolling oil drums along an alleyway between the hatches and the ship's starboard side, on the 'tween deck, from No. 3 to No. 1 hatch, passing No. 2 hatch on the way. The 'tween deck was lit by three clusters of portable electric lights, two on the starboard side casting light up the starboard alleyway, and one on the port side near No. 2 hatch, arranged so as to light the place where the oil drums were to be stowed. At the same time workmen employed by a company of ship repairers were at work in the holds, strengthening the decks and sides of the ship. On the morning in question, the repairers were shoring up the 'tween deck and removed some of the hatch covers to make room for wires which were used as a support for staging. At noon, when the stevedore and his mates went for their dinner, the repairers were still at work, and the stevedore heard one of the officers of the ship tell them to see that everything was secure when they finished their work. When the stevedore and his mates returned to their work at 1 p.m., the repairers had left, having completed their work, and had removed the staging and wiring. They had, however, failed to replace the hatch covers and to refix the cluster of lights on the port side which they had, apparently, taken down for the purpose of their work and had left lying on the deck. As the stevedore was rolling an oil drum up the starboard alleyway and alongside No. 2 hatch, he found himself in darkness and noticed that the port cluster of lights had gone. He shouted to the other men not to come forward and then observed the missing lights on the other side of the ship. Assuming that the hatch covers were on, he turned round to go and get the lights, stepped on to the hatch coaming and fell into the hold below, suffering injury. By the Docks Regulations, 1934, which were made "in respect of the processes of . . . moving and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf or quay," it was provided (by para. (b) under "Duties") that it was "the duty of the owner, master, or officer in charge of a ship to comply with pt. II" of the regulations, and by reg. 12, which was in pt. II: "When the processes are being carried on . . . (c) all parts of the ship to which persons employed may be required to proceed in the course of their employment, shall be efficiently lighted, due regard being had to the safety . . . of all persons employed . . ." Regulation 37, which was in pt. IV, provided that hatches should be fenced or securely covered, when not in use for the passage of goods, and, by para. (d) under "Duties," it was "the duty of every person who by himself, his agents, or workmen carries on the processes, and of all agents, workmen, and persons employed by him in the processes, to comply with pt. IV" of the regulations. By reg. 45, if any hatch covering or lights were removed in case of necessity, they were to be restored "at the end of the period during which their removal was necessary by the persons last engaged in the work that necessitated such removal." In an action by the stevedore (a) against the shipowner for breach of statutory duty, and (b) against the repairers for negligence at common law, it was contended by the defence that the stevedore was guilty of contributory negligence, and the shipowner further contended that the repairers were also in breach of statutory regulations and were solely or chiefly to blame, while the repairers claimed that liability should rest on the shipowner alone as the essential cause of the accident was the failure of the shipowner's servants to see that everything had been made secure for the workmen after the repairers left:—

HELD: (i) the accident was a result of the negligence and breach of statutory duty of both the shipowner and the repairers, and the repairers could not escape liability by reason of the so-called "rule of the last opportunity," as it was still their negligence which directly contributed to the accident. It was a settled principle that, when separate and independent acts of negligence on the part of two or more persons had directly contributed to cause injury and damage to another, the person injured might recover damages from any one of the wrongdoers, or from all of them.

Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland etc. Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 350), applied.

(ii) (LORD OAKSEY dissenting) on the facts, the stevedore did not fail to take the ordinary care which was to be expected of him in the circumstances, and he was not guilty of contributory negligence. Where the negligence which was the cause of the accident was a breach of regulations, made to secure the safety of workmen which might be presumed to be strictly enforced in the ordinary course of the ship's discipline, it could not be said that the workman was careless if he assumed that there had been compliance with the law.

Gee v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (1873) (L.R. 8 Q.B. 161), approved.

(iii) accordingly, the shipowner and the repairers were both liable to the stevedore in damages.

[Per LORD DU PARCQ]: (i) Since the ship was at the quay side, the pursuer was engaged in "moving and handling goods . . . at" a "quay," within the meaning of the Docks Regulations, 1934.

(ii) The regulations imposed on the repairers the duty of replacing the hatch coverings and of leaving the lights in their proper place after removing them, and, accordingly, the repairers were in breach of their duty, under regs. 37 and 45, while the shipowner had failed in his duty under reg. 12.

[AS TO EFFECTIVE CAUSE OF INJURY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 590-596, paras. 843-845; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 24, 25, Nos. 118-124.]

AS TO CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 679-688, paras. 963-970; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 109-117, Nos. 726-781.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Macdonald v. Wyllie & Sons, (1898), 1 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 339; 36 Sc.L.R. 262; 6 S.L.T. 209; 36 Digest 84, 556 xxviii.
- (2) Eccles v. Cross & M'Ilwham, 1938 S.C. 697; Digest Supp.
- (3) M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; Digest Supp.
- (4) Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland and Orkney and Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; sub nom., Boy Andrew (Owners) v. St. Rognvald (Owners), [1948] A.C. 140; [1948] L.J.R. 768.
- (5) Burrows v. March Gas Co., (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 67; 39 L.J.Ex. 33; 22 L.T. 24; affd., (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 96; 36 Digest 25, 124.
- (6) Mills v. Armstrong, The Bernina, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 1; 57 L.J.P. 65; 58 L.T. 423; 52 J.P. 212; affg., The Bernina (2), (1887), 12 P.D. 58; 36 Digest 121, 807.
- (7) Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; Digest Supp.
- (8) Gee v. Metropolitan Ry. Co., (1873), L.R. 8 Q.B. 161; 42 L.J.Q.B. 105; 28 L.T. 282; 8 Digest 78, 533.

APPEAL by the pursuer from an interlocutor of the Second Division of the Court of Session (LORD COOPER (Lord Justice-Clerk), LORD MACKAY, LORD JAMIESON and LORD STEVENSON), dated Nov. 1, 1946, recalling the interlocutor of LORD KEITH (Lord Ordinary).

The pursuer, a dock labourer, was at work on board the steamship, Empire Impala, berthed at Stobeross Quay, Glasgow, on Feb. 12, 1942, when he fell through an uncovered, unfenced and unlighted hatch and was seriously injured. On the morning of the day in question he was one of a number of labourers who were engaged in shifting cargo on board the ship, which was owned by Sun Shipping Co., Ltd., the first defenders. This cargo consisted of oil drums, which the men were rolling along the 'tween decks from the after end of hatch No. 3, past hatch No. 2, to the forward end of hatch No. 1. It was necessary to light artificially the part of the 'tween decks adjacent to hatches 1 and 2 because the covers of these hatches on the upper deck were in position and shut out the daylight. For this purpose three clusters of electric lights were in use. These clusters were portable and they had been arranged so as to light up the alleyway which ran between the hatches and the starboard side of the ship, along which the drums were being rolled. The LORD ORDINARY held it established "that in the forenoon . . . one cluster was fixed to a beam below the upper deck in the vicinity of No. 3 hatch and on the starboard side of the ship, and that the second cluster was fixed to another beam overhead at the after end of No. 2 hatch, also on the starboard side . . . The third light was fixed on the port side of the ship at the forward end of No. 2 hatch and so arranged as to throw light across the ship over No. 2 hatch and No. 1 hatch to the place at which the drums were being stowed on the starboard side." During the morning, while the pursuer and his fellow labourers were rolling drums, men employed by the second defenders, Alexander Stephen & Sons, Ltd., ship repairers, were at work in the holds securing shoring, so as to strengthen the decks and sides of the ship. They had removed some of the hatch covers of No. 2 hatch at 'tween decks' level in order to make room for wires which were attached to cross beams above the 'tween decks and supported a small scaffolding or staging of one or two planks hanging within the hatch below deck level. At mid-day the pursuer and those working with him left the ship for dinner. The pursuer said that during the morning he heard the ship's third officer telling the repairers' men to see that everything was secure and the hatches on before they left. The third officer in question was called as a witness for the shipowners, and said that he had told the repairers' men that they were to replace the hatch coverings. His view was that "in the ordinary practice of seamen" they should have replaced the hatch covers even though they were shortly to return, and his evidence was that the hatches could have been covered safely, with space left for a wire or rope to pass between the battens. The pursuer and his fellow workmen returned to work at about 1 p.m. The repairers' men had then all departed. The LORD ORDINARY found that their work was finished some time in the morning of the accident, and at latest before the pursuer returned to the ship after the dinner interval, and that they had removed all their gear, which included the staging and the supporting wires. The evidence satisfied the LORD ORDINARY that they had not replaced the covers of the hatch before leaving, and that more hatch covers were off after the dinner interval than had been off before dinner. Further, the LORD ORDINARY found that the repairers' men had taken the light which had been hanging on the port side and left it lying face down, either on the deck or in a barrow that was standing there.

On May 28, 1942, the pursuer raised an action against (i) Sun Shipping Co., Ltd., the shipowners, and (ii) Alexander Stephen & Sons, Ltd., the repairers, in which he alleged that he had suffered his injury by reason of the breach of statutory duty of the shipowners and the negligence at common law of both the defenders. It was difficult in war-time to procure the attendance of witnesses. Evidence had to be heard as and when it became available, without regard to order, and with much delay. In the result, the hearing of evidence, which began on May 1, 1944, was not concluded until Jan. 25, 1946, and, unfortunately, not all the witnesses were heard by the same Lord Ordinary. The hearing of evidence was begun by LORD KEITH, but at an early stage in the proceedings that learned judge had to be replaced temporarily by LORD MAC-KINTOSH who heard a considerable body of important evidence. It was thought that, as LORD KEITH had begun the hearing of evidence, it was desirable, if not essential, that he should continue the proof as soon as he was able to do so, and pronounce judgment. In accordance with this view, LORD KEITH resumed the hearing of evidence in time to hear six witnesses, of whom three were called on behalf of the shipowners and three on behalf of the repairers, and, in the result, he found himself compelled to form an opinion of much of the evidence, including that of the pursuer himself, solely on the written record. The LORD ORDINARY awarded the pursuer the sum of £800, by way of reparation, against the shipowners, and held that the repairers were under no liability to the pursuer. In the Inner House it was held that the pursuer was not entitled to recover because of his own contributory negligence. Against this decision he appealed to the House of Lords, claiming to be entitled to recover reparation from one or other of the defenders or from both. The shipowners contended that the repairers were either solely to blame, or, at least, more gravely to blame than they were themselves. It was agreed on all sides that, if the pursuer was entitled to recover anything, the LORD ORDINARY had justly assessed the reparation to which the pursuer was entitled.

The House * now held that both the shipowners and the repairers were guilty of negligence and a breach of statutory duty, that the pursuer was not guilty of contributory negligence, and, accordingly, that the shipowners and the repairers were both liable to him in damages.

Arthur P. Duffes, K.C., and J. G. Leechman (both of the Scottish Bar) for the pursuer.

Hector M'Kechnie, K.C., and C. J. D. Shaw (both of the Scottish Bar) for the first defenders, the shipping company.

James Walker, K.C., and R. Smith Johnston (both of the Scottish Bar) for the second defenders, the ship repairers.

The House took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, I have had the opportunity of reading the opinion to be delivered by LORD DU PARCQ and agree with him in thinking that this appeal should be allowed. Prima facie, the question whether a pursuer or defender was negligent or not is a matter for the judge who tries the case or the jury, if there be one, provided, of course, that there is some evidence of negligence. In the present case, however, the matter is a little complicated owing to the fact that the LORD ORDINARY did not see the whole of the witnesses and, in particular, did not preside when the pursuer was examined. No doubt, this circumstance was unavoidable, but it is unfortunate as it left him with little better material for judgment than that possessed by an appellate court and compels your Lordships' House, as, I think, it compelled the Second Division, to treat the decision and its ground somewhat more critically than would normally be necessary.

[HIS LORDSHIP set out the facts, and continued:] The pursuer and his mates having returned after the dinner hour, the pursuer himself was the first to resume the work up the alleyway, which was well lit by the screened lights, and he did not notice the absence of the port light. The repairers, however, had gone and he did not see the wires which had previously supported the cradle, though it may be that he did not consciously notice their absence. When, however, he had rolled his first drum up to and alongside No. 2 hatch, he found himself in semi-darkness, shouted to his fellows not to come forward and then, looking round, observed the missing light lying on the deck or on a barrow, apparently below or almost below the position in which it had been slung. Thereupon, without any thought of danger, he stepped on the unlit open hatch and fell into the hold below, seriously injuring himself. For this injury he claims damages and in doing so confronts Your Lordships with three questions: (i) were the shipowners negligent; (ii) were the repairers negligent; and (iii) was he himself guilty of contributory negligence, a circumstance which in the then state of the law would deprive him of all right of recovery?

My Lords, all those who have dealt with the case in the Scottish Courts have, I think, come to the conclusion that both the defenders were negligent, though the LORD ORDINARY came to the conclusion that the repairers' negligence was not a cause of the accident. That the repairers were negligent seems to me to be incontrovertible. LORD DU PARCQ has set out the relevant regulations of the Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), referring, in particular, to reg. 45, which prohibits the removal of any hatch cover or lights, save when authorised or in case of necessity, and ends with the words:

If removed, such things shall be restored at the end of the period during which their removal was necessary by the persons last engaged in the work that necessitated such removal.

But, indeed, unless there was some provision to the contrary, I should consider that, even in the absence of regulations, workmen who had been working on a hatch on which a light was shining, and knew that stevedores had been working in the neighbourhood and would return and yet left the hatch covers off and removed the light were plainly guilty of negligence at common law, none the less so when it is remembered that they had been specially reminded of their duty by the third officer. Whether the shipowners were guilty of negligence appears to me to be a much more difficult question, and I am not sure that, if left to myself, I should have found them guilty either of negligence or of breach of statutory duty. But those of your Lordships who agree with me in thinking that the appeal should be allowed think that some, though not a large measure of, blame for the accident should attach to them, and I am not prepared to differ. In taking the view that the shipowners were in fault, the LORD ORDINARY came to the conclusion that they alone were liable to the pursuer. In his opinion the essential cause of the accident was the failure of the shipowners' servants to inspect the 'tween decks and see that the hatch covers were replaced and lights in their proper position. I agree with my noble and learned friend, LORD DU PARCQ, in thinking that this method of approach fails to give due weight to certain material considerations which should, I think, lead to a different conclusion. I see no break in the chain of causation existing between the negligence of the repairers and the subsequent accident. At the vital moment the hatch covers were off and the light down. That negligence never ceased to operate nor were the repairers entitled to rely on someone afterwards coming to put it right. No doubt, if it be conceded that the shipowners had a separate duty to see that the lights were in position and the hatch covers in place, the consequences of the negligence of the repairers might have been avoided, but it was still their negligence which directly caused or contributed to the accident.

* LORD THANKERTON, who was present at the hearing of the appeal, died on June 13, 1948, before the opinions were delivered.

There remains the question whether the pursuer was himself guilty of contributory negligence. This matter is largely a question of fact and, if there was evidence from which a tribunal could fairly come to the conclusion that the pursuer was not himself negligent, and if the judge or jury before whom the case was tried came to that conclusion, I imagine your Lordships would not interfere with the decision. It is, I think, not in dispute that the decision has to be made in the light of the characteristics of the type of men affected. In this case the pursuer was a stevedore, used to taking the ordinary risks of loading and unloading a ship, no doubt not very ready in describing his mental processes, but plainly by his acts and, indeed, as I think, by his words indicating that it never occurred to him as a possibility that the men who had been working on No. 2 hatch would take down the cluster lighting it and leave the covers off or, indeed, in defiance of their duty, would leave the hatch open after their work was done, more particularly as they knew that stevedores were passing and re-passing the hatch in the course of their work and as they had been reminded by the third officer to leave all in order. In these circumstances he stepped on to the hatch without thinking of danger. It may be that "inadvertently" does not describe the act with complete accuracy, and perhaps "without conscious thought" is more exact—but everyone acts constantly on the instincts gained by a lifetime of experience and I do not think the pursuer can be blamed for so acting. It is, I understand, common ground that the only question which your Lordships have to determine on this part of the case is: Would a prudent stevedore with a lifetime of experience behind him reasonably think that workmen who had both apparently and in fact gone and had taken down the light which had previously shone across the deck instinctively conclude that the hatch covers were on? I myself think he was justified in doing so and hold the view the more strongly in as much as the LORD ORDINARY came to that conclusion and had evidence on which he could do so. I should allow the appeal, and hold the defenders liable for damages and costs. Inter se, however, they should bear both damages and costs in the proportions suggested by LORD DU PARCQ.

LORD UTHWATT: My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in advance the opinion which my noble and learned friend, LORD DU PARCQ, proposes to deliver. I entirely agree with his reasoning and his conclusions. In the circumstances, I do not feel it necessary to do more than express my adherence.

LORD DU PARCQ [having stated the facts as set out above] : It is obvious that, whereas before the mid-day interval the conditions under which the pursuer had worked were safe enough, a new peril had been created by the time it terminated. The pursuer was the first of his gang to re-start work. He was rolling a drum forward. He says that he "came to a darkness" and then "looked and saw the light was away." He shouted a warning to the men who were behind him to come no further, and then "saw the light over on the other side of the ship shining on to the wing of the ship." Taking it for granted (he says) that the hatch covers were on and everything secured, he turned round to go and get the light, "stepped off with one foot and went down the hatch." I need not at this point quote further from his evidence, or comment on it. The pursuer has averred that the repairers were negligent at common law, and the shipowners have further averred against them breaches of statutory duty. I have no doubt that the servants of the repairers owed a duty to the pursuer as one of a body of workmen who, as they well knew, had been working, and were about to resume work, close to No. 2 hatch. Whatever statutory regulations may enjoin, common prudence might suggest that, when it has become necessary to uncover a hatch, the person who has uncovered it should replace the covers at the first reasonable opportunity. If hatches are for some reason left uncovered, at a time when it is known that men will shortly be taking up work near by, it is, I think, plainly negligence of a dangerous kind to leave them in darkness. When once it was established that the repairers were responsible for leaving the hatch uncovered and unlighted, the charge of negligence made against them was fully made out. I will consider whether they were also guilty of a breach, or breaches, of statutory regulations, as the shipowners (but not the pursuer) averred, when dealing with the case of the shipowners, to which I now turn. Their position differs from that of the repairers on whom the duty of replacing the hatch coverings primarily lay. The question is whether the shipowners can justly say that, in the circumstances of this case, they had come under no obligation to the pursuer and were entitled to rely on the repairers to complete their work.

So far as the regulations are concerned the matter stands in this way. The relevant provisions are contained in the Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O., 1934, No. 279), which were made under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and are now continued in force and deemed to have been made under the Factories Act, 1937, by virtue of s. 159 (1) of the latter Act. The regulations are made in respect of certain "processes" which include "moving and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf or quay." The Empire Impala was at the quay side and there can be no doubt, I think, that the pursuer was engaged in moving and handling goods "at" a quay. Regulation 12, in pt. II, with which it was "the duty of the owner, master, or officer in charge of a ship to comply" (see para. (b) under "Duties"), provides :

When the processes are being carried on . . . (c) all parts of the ship to which persons employed may be required to proceed in the course of their employment, shall be efficiently lighted, due regard being had to the safety . . . of all persons employed . . .

which means, under the definition clause, persons employed in the "processes." Regulation 14 requires that :

All hatch coverings shall be kept plainly marked to indicate the deck and hatch to which they belong and their position therein . . .

with a proviso which is applicable when hatch coverings are interchangeable. Regulation 37 begins with the provision :

(a) If any hatch of a hold accessible to any person employed and exceeding 5ft. in depth . . . is not in use for the passage of goods, coal or other material, or for trimming, and the coamings are less than 2ft. 6ins. in height, such hatch shall either be fenced to a height of 3ft. or be securely covered.

This regulation (which admittedly applied to the hatch now in question) contains the proviso :

. . . this requirement shall not apply . . . (ii) to any vessel during meal times or other short interruptions of work during the period of employment.

The regulation further provides, by para. (c), that hatch coverings are to be replaced in the positions indicated by the markings made on them in pursuance of reg. 14.

Regulation 37 is in pt. IV, and, by para. (d) under "Duties," it is :

... the duty of every person who by himself, his agents, or workmen carries on the processes, and of all agents, workmen, and persons employed by him in the processes, to comply with pt. IV of these regulations.

These words are followed by the proviso that :

... where the processes are carried on by a stevedore or other person other than the owner of the ship, it shall be the duty of the owner, master or officer in charge of the ship to comply with reg. 37, so far as it concerns (1) any hatch not taken over by the said stevedore or other person for the purpose of the processes, and (2) any hatch which, after having been taken over by the said stevedore or other person for the purpose of the processes, (i) has been reported by written notice in the prescribed form to the owner, master or officer in charge of the ship, by or on behalf of the said stevedore or other person, as being a hatch at which the processes have been completed or completed for the time being, and (ii) either has been left by the said stevedore or other person fenced or covered as required by reg. 37, or has been taken into use by or on behalf of the owner of the ship, and in either case has been so reported by such written notice as aforesaid.

The last of the relevant regulations is reg. 45, the material words of which are as follows :

No person shall, unless duly authorised or in case of necessity, remove or interfere with any ... hatch covering ... lights ... or other things whatsoever required by these regulations to be provided. If removed, such things shall be restored at the end of the period during which their removal was necessary by the persons last engaged in the work that necessitated such removal.

My Lords, I think that there is no doubt that these regulations imposed on the repairers the duty of replacing the hatch-covering and of leaving in place the light which was necessary for the illumination of that part of the ship in which the pursuer was working. The question was raised in argument whether the words "required by these regulations to be provided," in reg. 45, were to be read as qualifying only the words "other things whatsoever" or as qualifying all the preceding substantives. Little perhaps turns on this, since there was plainly a breach of reg. 37 on the part of the repairers, but I have no doubt that the former construction is correct. No other seems to me to be possible with due regard to the context. One of the preceding words is the general word "gear," and it cannot have been the intention of the Secretary of State to prohibit the removal only of such gear as was required by the regulations to be provided. The shipowners seem, at first sight, to be in better case, and they are certainly in a position to say that the duty of replacing coverings was primarily on the repairers, and that (as is admitted) the repairers never reported to them or to their officers by written notice that the "processes" had been completed. They are, however, shown to have failed in their duty under reg. 12, and, but for that failure, the fact that the hatch coverings had not all been replaced would have been apparent to the pursuer. Even if there were no regulations to be considered, I should have thought the shipowners liable for negligence. The pursuer was an invitee in their ship, and their officers knew that he would be returning to resume work after the dinner interval. It was, therefore, the duty of their officers to see that the place where the pursuer was to work was reasonably safe, and they are not absolved from this duty, as between themselves and the pursuer, by requirements in the regulations which made it incumbent on the repairers to do that which, in fact, they left undone. The officers ought not to have contented themselves with telling the repairers' men to make all secure, but ought to have made sure that the order had been carried out before the pursuer began work in the afternoon. On this view of the case, the importance of the regulations is lessened, but I have dealt with them fully because they throw some light on the most difficult part of this case, namely, the question whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the pursuer. I am leaving this question to the end, chiefly because it is best considered in its setting and in relation to the nature of the fault attributable to the shipowners and the repairers.

On the facts as I have stated them, accurately as I believe, the LORD ORDINARY'S conclusion that liability must rest on the shipowners alone seems to me surprising. It would not, I think, lead to a just result, and I am satisfied that it has no legal foundation. It was said by counsel for the repairers that it was founded on authority, and, in particular, on the authority of two Scottish cases, Macdonald v. Wyllie & Sons (1) and Eccles v. Cross and M'Iwham (2). I do not wish to cast doubt, or, indeed, to express any opinion whatever, on either of these decisions, because, in my opinion, neither of them is of assistance in the present case. The decision in the first of the two cases was that, as between a master and his servant, the master was bound to supply safe plant, and that it could not avail the master to say that he had employed skilled persons to erect the plant. In the latter case the decision was on relevancy, and it was held that the relation between an injured party and the defender was too remote to make the defender liable on the principle established by Donoghue v. Stevenson (3), when his alleged negligence, as a contractor, in fitting an electric installation in a building was said to have caused the death of the pursuer's husband two months after the work had been completed. The decision was founded on the pursuer's own averments that the owners of the building had had an opportunity and duty of inspection.

My Lords, I regard it as a well-settled principle that, when separate and independent acts of negligence on the part of two or more persons have directly contributed to cause injury and damage to another, the person injured may recover damages from any one of the wrongdoers, or from all of them. The LORD ORDINARY's view was that:

... the effect of any negligence of the second defenders was broken by the later negligence of the first defenders.

This reasoning seems to me to be akin to that which has led to frequent and determined attempts to establish the so-called "rule of the last opportunity," of which less will be heard since the decision of Your Lordships' House in Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland etc. Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. (4). I refer especially to the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON ([1947] 2 All E.R. 350, 353). With the greatest respect for the LORD ORDINARY's opinion, I think that his reasoning is fallacious. If the negligence or breach of duty of one person is the cause of injury to another, the wrongdoer cannot in all circumstances escape liability by proving that, though he was to blame, yet but for the negligence of a third person the injured man would not have suffered the damage of which he complains. There is abundant authority for the proposition that the mere fact that a subsequent act of negligence has been the immediate cause of disaster does not exonerate the original offender. In the well-known case of Burrows v. March Gas Co. (5) the defendant company broke a contract with the plaintiff by supplying him with a defective pipe, but the immediate cause of an explosion which caused damage to the plaintiff was the negligence of a third party, a gas-fitter who, having been called in to look for the source of an escape of gas, searched for it with a lighted candle. The company was held liable. Cases in which independent acts of negligence on the part of two drivers cause injury to a third person must be heard almost daily, and they are not, in my experience, decided by considering whose act of negligence was the last link in a chain of causation. As LORD HERSCHELL said (13 A.C. 1, 9) in Your Lordships' House in Mills v. Armstrong, The Bernina (6):

If by a collision between two vehicles a person unconnected with either vehicle were injured, the owner of neither vehicle, when sued, could maintain as a defence, "I am not guilty, because but for the negligence of another person the accident would not have happened."

In the same case LORD ESHER, M.R., in the Court of Appeal, discussed the question (12 P.D. 58, 61):

... what is the law applicable to a transaction in which a plaintiff has been injured by negligence, and in the course of which transaction there have been negligent acts or omissions by more than one person?

The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that on many points as to such a transaction the common law was clear, and stated the first of these points in these words (ibid.):

If no fault can be attributed to the plaintiff, and there is negligence by the defendant and also by another independent person, both negligences partly directly causing the accident, the plaintiff can maintain an action for all the damages occasioned to him against either the defendant or the other wrongdoer.

My Lords, it was truly said by counsel for the defenders that the case now before Your Lordships would in normal times have been one proper for the consideration of a jury. A jury would not have profited by a direction couched in the language of logicians, and expounding theories of causation, with or without the aid of Latin maxims. It would, I think, have been right to instruct them in language similar to that used by LORD ESHER, M.R., in the passage which I have just quoted. For my own part, I have no doubt (leaving aside for the moment the question whether fault can be attributed to the pursuer) that the negligence and breach of statutory duty attributable to each of the defenders "partly" and "directly" caused the pursuer's injuries. Whether or not a cause is a "direct" cause is sometimes a difficult question, but here the precautions which the regulations prescribed and ordinary prudence should have dictated have for their object the prevention of accidents of the very nature of that which befell the pursuer.

I now come to the question whether the pursuer is shown to have been guilty of contributory negligence. I will adopt the formula used by LORD ATKIN ([1939] 3 All E.R. 722, 731) in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (7), and ask myself: "Have the defenders proved that the injury was caused solely or in part by the omission of the pursuer to take the ordinary care that would be expected of him in the circumstances?" This is a question of fact, or, more strictly, of the inference to be drawn from the facts, on which normally an appellate court is properly reluctant to disturb the finding of the judge who tried the case. Here, however, the judge had not the usual advantage of hearing all the evidence, and, in particular, did not hear the evidence of the pursuer, and I think (in agreement with the Second Division) that the reasons which he gave for his decision are not wholly satisfactory. Unless the opinion of the Second Division itself seems unsatisfactory to your Lordships, doubtless it ought to be affirmed. If, on the other hand, the ultimate decision of the LORD ORDINARY on this point was right, though his reasons for it may be unconvincing, the interlocutor appealed from ought not to stand. I must now state my own view of the matter. I accept the evidence of the pursuer as that of a truthful man, and I assume that his memory of the occasion was not gravely impaired as a result of his injuries. It must be remembered, however, that his evidence was given long after the event, and his account of an occurrence which must have been much on his mind while litigation was pending may well have been to some extent a reconstruction of an incident which had itself passed in a flash. It is right, therefore, to test it in the light of the probabilities and the known facts of the case.

One salient fact is that, if the repairers had done their duty, the pursuer could have done what he did without the slightest danger. They had finished their work, and ought to have replaced the hatch-coverings. The pursuer in several of his answers seems to suggest, and, perhaps, impliedly to state, that he knew that the repairers' men had finished and gone, but he nowhere says so in terms, and it was rightly pointed out that the evidence of some of his workmates shows that they, at any rate, had no such knowledge. It is, therefore, right, I think, to deal with the case on the footing that the pursuer knew only, what of course he could not help observing, that the repairers were not at work when he returned. On this assumption they might, for all he knew, be only temporarily absent. If that were so, what would he naturally assume the state of the hatchways to be? The regulations to which I have referred are intended to ensure that hatchways shall normally be covered and shall never be both uncovered and unfenced and also unlighted. If, during short interruptions of work, they are left uncovered, the obligation to keep them sufficiently lighted when men are at work in their neighbourhood provides the necessary protection. It is reasonable to suppose that, even apart from the regulations, the precautions which they enjoin would be taken, as a matter of common prudence, in every well-regulated ship. If this be so, an ordinary workman must get into the habit of thinking that uncovered hatchways are never left unlighted and may argue from this, not I think illogically, that, if a hatchway has been left in darkness, not only by experienced ship repairers but also by the ship's officers, the coverings must be on. This, according to the pursuer, was his own state of mind. He said:

I thought the men would have put on the hatches and left it secure and, if it was them that took the light, that they would not have taken the light away and left a hole. If I am right in thinking that the danger of uncovered hatchways must be a matter of constant concern to those who serve and work in ships and that it is an elementary duty to take the usual precautions against that danger, it cannot be said that the pursuer was to blame for inferring that No. 2 hatch must be covered, and, therefore safe, for his purpose. There is no doubt that he acted quickly and without prolonged thought. He says that he and his mates were dealing with "Red Cross cargo" and were hurrying to get it shifted. This does not necessarily mean, however, that his action was "involuntary" (as the LORD ORDINARY put it) or merely instinctive, or thoughtless. It is right to remember that the human mind can, and often does, take in a second, or a fraction of a second, decisions which can only be taken in the light of past experience and acquired knowledge, and which involve some degree of ratiocination. The LORD ORDINARY thought that the pursuer had suffered a "lapse of memory" and forgotten that some of the hatch coverings were off before dinner-time, and in the Inner House much was made of the fact that the pursuer had known that they were off at that time. In my opinion, the important question is not what he had seen the condition of the hatch to be before dinner-time, but what his years of experience as a dock labourer taught him to expect its condition to be in the circumstances which he found on his return. He was not asked how often (if ever) in his long experience he had been set to work, without warning, in the proximity of an unlighted, unfenced, uncovered hatchway. It is, I hope, safe to assume that so perilous a task is never imposed on a dock labourer.

My own conclusion, therefore, is that the pursuer did not fail to take the ordinary care that would be expected of him in the circumstances. If the standard of the conduct of "an ordinary prudent man" is preferred, I do not think that his own conduct fell below it. Almost every workman constantly, and justifiably, takes risks in the sense that he relies on others to do their duty, and trusts that they have done it. I am far from saying that everyone is entitled to assume, in all circumstances, that other persons will be careful. On the contrary, a prudent man will guard against the possible negligence of others, when experience shows such negligence to be common. Where, however, the negligence is a breach of regulations, made to secure the safety of workmen, which may be presumed to be strictly enforced in the ordinary course of a ship's discipline, I am not prepared to say that a workman is careless if he assumes that there has been compliance with the law. The real complaint of the defenders is that the pursuer reposed an unjustified confidence in them. No doubt, his confidence was not justified in the event, but he is not, I think, to be blamed for that. The courts have long recognised that in some circumstances an omission to make sure for oneself that others have done what they ought to have done is not negligent. Thus, in Gee v. Metropolitan Ry. Co. (8), when a railway passenger who had leant against a carriage door, which he had erroneously supposed to be properly fastened, had fallen through it and suffered injury, it was unanimously held in the Exchequer Chamber that he was entitled to hold a verdict against the company, and three of the judges were of opinion that there had been no evidence of contributory negligence to go to the jury. He had, in the words of KEATING, J. (L.R. 8 Q.B. 161, 174) :

... a right to assume that the company were not negligent, and that all the doors were properly shut ...

My Lords, under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act, 1940, s. 3, it would have been necessary for the LORD ORDINARY, if he had not discharged the second repairers from all liability, to consider in what proportions the defenders ought to contribute inter se to the damages. For myself, I am prepared to agree with the view indicated by LORD MACKAY that 75 per cent. of the agreed figure of £800 (and expenses) should be contributed by the repairers and 25 per cent. by the shipowners, and I suggest to your Lordships that this is a reasonable apportionment. I would allow the appeal. I think that the interlocutor of the Second Division should be set aside, and the interlocutor of the LORD ORDINARY varied so as to make both defenders liable to the pursuer in the proportion which I have mentioned, and that the pursuer should have expenses throughout.

LORD OAKSEY [read by LORD UTHWATT]: My Lords, this is an appeal from a judgment of the Second Division of the Court of Session, reversing the judgment of LORD KEITH, the Lord Ordinary, in an action by the pursuer, a stevedore, against the first defenders, the shipowners, and the second defenders, a company of ship repairers, for damages for injuries sustained by him when he fell through an open hatch into the hold of the first defenders' ship in which he was working. The LORD ORDINARY, who only heard a part of the evidence and did not hear the pursuer give his evidence, decided the case in the pursuer's favour on the view that the pursuer was not guilty of contributory negligence and that the shipowners were alone liable as being the last party at fault. The Second Division allowed the appeal holding that the pursuer was guilty of contributory negligence.

[HIS LORDSHIP stated the facts, and continued:] At about 1.10 p.m. the stevedores returned and the pursuer was the first man to roll an oil drum up the starboard alleyway. When he got to a point near the forward section of No. 2 hatch he found himself in darkness and observed that the port cluster of lights had gone. He stopped and shouted to the men behind him to stop because there was no light. He then looked round and saw a light on the port side and, without looking or feeling in any way with his hands or feet, he stepped on to the hatch coaming, intending to walk across the unlighted hatch covers at the forward end of the hatch to get the light, and fell through the open hatch covers into the hold and was injured. His own explanation of why he took this course was because he had heard one of the ship's officers say to the ship repairers that, when they finished their work, they should see that everything was secure. Neither he nor his foreman nor anyone else knew whether the ship repairers had finished their work. For all that the appellant knew, the ship repairers might have been coming back after their dinner: he did not observe that the staging and its wires had gone. He did not look at the aft section of No. 2 hatch to see if the hatch covers were still on, though he admitted that if he had looked he could have seen.

The pursuer's case before your Lordships was that an ordinarily prudent man would have assumed from what he had heard the ship's officer say to the ship repairers and from seeing the port light removed that the ship repairers had finished their work and replaced the hatch covers. It has also been suggested that a workman is entitled to assume that the Docks Regulations, 1934, have been carried out and that, therefore, the pursuer was entitled to assume that No. 2 hatch must be covered, but, in my opinion, no such inference could reasonably have been drawn from what the pursuer saw, nor is his evidence consistent with his having drawn this inference. He says that he stopped and told the men behind him to stop because there was no light. In such circumstances he could not have thought that the shipowners had performed their duty adequately to light the ship while the stevedores were rolling the oil barrels up the starboard alleyway. He knew that they had not and he stepped across the hatch to remedy the default. The port cluster of lights was found by Breslin, the pursuer's foreman, face downwards in a barrow after the accident and, although the pursuer could not see its exact position, he must have seen that it was in an unusual position and could not, in my opinion, reasonably have drawn the inference from it that the ship repairers had left everything secure. There was no urgency or crisis. Breslin, the foreman, was within earshot and had a torch. The pursuer had only to turn and go round the aft end of No. 2 hatch which, he says, was better lighted, or he could have felt his way round the forward end of No. 2 hatch. He did not try to do either. He neither looked nor felt, but started to walk straight over an unlighted hatch.

It is always a difficult and unpleasant task to decide the issue of contributory negligence in the case of a workman who was doing his duty, but the fact that it is natural to sympathise with such an injured workman makes it all the more necessary to address one's mind solely to the question whether he acted as an ordinary prudent man would have acted in all the circumstances. In my opinion, the pursuer did not, and I entirely concur in the judgments of LORD COOPER (Lord Justice-Clerk) and LORD JAMIESON.

Appeal allowed. Interlocutor of the Second Division of the Court of Session to be set aside, and the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary varied, so as to make both defenders liable to the pursuer, in the proportions of 25 per cent. of the agreed figure (and expenses) in the case of the first defenders, and 75 per cent. in the case of the second defenders. The pursuer to have his expenses throughout.

Solicitors: O. H. Parsons, agent for Herbert Macpherson, S.S.C., Edinburgh, and L. and L. Lawrence, Glasgow (for the pursuer); Botterell & Roche, agents for Montgomerie, Flemings, Fyfe, MacLean & Co., Glasgow, and Beveridge, Sutherland and Smith, W.S., Leith (for the shipping company); Beveridge & Co., agents for Biggart, Lumsden & Co., Glasgow, and Morton, Smart, Macdonald & Prosser, W.S., Edinburgh (for the ship repairers).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Reversed. C.A. [1949] 1 All E.R. 532.

LAVENDER v. DIAMINTS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), June 11, 1948.]

Factory—Safe means of access—Window cleaner—Independent contractor—Invitee—Duty of occupier—Responsibility of independent contractor—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (1).

A window cleaner, working as an independent contractor, having inspected a factory, entered into a contract with the occupiers to clean the factory windows, a task which necessitated climbing on some asbestos roofing which, in the light of technical experience since its construction, but unknown to the occupiers, was not strong enough to bear a man's weight. After cleaning the windows in that part of the building, the window cleaner placed the ladder flat on the roof, walked along it, lost his balance, fell through the roof to the floor, and was injured. In an action for damages at common law and for breach of s. 26 (1) of the Factory Act, 1937:—

HELD: (i) the occupiers had not been guilty of want of reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger of which they knew or ought to have known, and were, therefore, not liable at common law.

(ii) the occupiers were guilty of a breach of s. 26 (1) of the Act, but it was the duty of the window cleaner, as an independent contractor, to provide his own plant and appliances and to lay out the work himself so that it was reasonably safe, and, as he had failed in this duty, his negligence was the decisive cause of the accident and the whole responsibility under s. 1 (1) of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, fell on him, and, consequently, he was not entitled to succeed.

Whitby v. Burt Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 324), applied.

Per cur.: (i) The occupiers, who were toffee manufacturers, could not be expected to know the latest building requirements and to re-construct their factory to make it conform to modern design.

(ii) The duty owed by the occupier of a factory, under s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, to provide and maintain a "safe means of access to every place at which any person has at any time to work" is a duty owed not only to the workmen employed by the occupier of the factory, but to workmen employed by an independent contractor and to the independent contractor himself, and it applies in respect both of the inside and the outside of the factory, but the duty of an employer to a servant is much higher than that of an occupier to an independent contractor.

[AS TO DUTY OF OCCUPIER OF PREMISES TO INVITEE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 604-608, paras. 853-857; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 41-43, Nos. 247-267.]

AS TO SAFE MEANS OF ACCESS, see HALSBURY Supp., Factories; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp., Factories.]

Case referred to:

(1) Whitby v. Burt Boulton & Hayward, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 324; [1947] K.B. 918; [1947] L.J.R. 1280; 177 L.T. 556.

ACTION by the plaintiff, a window cleaner, against the defendants, occupiers of a factory, for damages at common law and for breach of s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, in respect of injuries sustained by him while cleaning the factory windows under a contract between him and the defendants. Judgment was given for the defendants. The facts appear in the judgment.

Quass and G. Simmonds for the plaintiff.

Berryman, K.C., and S. Chapman for the defendants.

DENNING, J. : This case raises the question of the duty of an occupier of premises towards window cleaners. The plaintiff is a window cleaner working on his own account. The defendants are toffee manufacturers. In the autumn of 1946 the plaintiff came to an arrangement with the defendants whereby he, an independent contractor, was to clean the windows of the defendants' factory. The windows were difficult to clean. There was a skylight over part of the ground floor of the factory, and there were upper windows on the first and second floors which did not open and had to be cleaned from outside. The plaintiff agreed to clean the factory windows once a month for 30s. a month, and to clean the office windows for 7s. twice a month. In November, 1946, he cleaned the skylight over the ground floor. Then, to clean the windows on the first and second floors, he climbed up by his ladder to some roofing, which was made of asbestos, over part of the ground floor. He laid a plank on the roofing, and then pulled his ladder up and put it against the wall with its feet on the plank. In that way he got to the upper windows and cleaned them. Then he took down the ladder and laid it along the asbestos roofing, and when he was walking along the ladder preparatory to getting down, his foot slipped or something else caused him to lose his balance and his weight came on the asbestos roofing. It was not strong enough to bear him. He fell through the roof to the floor below and fractured his back and dislocated his wrist. Fortunately, he has now substantially recovered apart from some nervousness at heights. I assess the damage which he has suffered at the sum of £400, but the question is whether in point of law the defendants are liable. That raises questions, first, at common law, and, secondly, under the Factories Act, 1937.

With regard to the claim at common law. No doubt, the plaintiff was invited by the defendants to do work at the factory. He was an invitee, and it was their duty to use reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger of which they knew or ought to have known, he, of course, taking reasonable care for his own safety. In this case there was an unusual danger because the asbestos roofing was not strong enough to bear the weight of a man. The span of each asbestos sheet, from one support to the other, was 4ft. 6ins., which is too long a span for safety. The defendants, however, did not know of that, nor could they reasonably be expected to know of it. The factory was built before the war, and at that time it was very usual to put up asbestos sheeting with spans of 4ft. 6ins. or even 6ft. It was during the war that it was discovered that in the case of asbestos those spans are too long for safety, and the British standard specification now lays down that for sheets of asbestos of this kind the spacing between purlins should not exceed 3ft., and emphasizes that this should be regarded as a maximum under all conditions. The London County Council now adopts the same requirements and adds that when people are called on to go on asbestos roofs, even with a 3ft. span, they should always have planks or cat-walks so as to distribute the weight. The reason is that asbestos is brittle and friable and an unsafe material for any person to go on unless adequate steps are taken for safety. The question at common law, however, is, not whether the roofing complied with modern specifications, but whether the occupiers of the factory were wanting in reasonable care. I cannot hold that they were. There are, I am told, all over the country thousands of factories and buildings, built before the new requirements were specified, with asbestos roofing having spans of more than 3ft. They were passed, as this one was, by the local authority—in this case, the London County Council. Is it a breach of duty for all those occupiers to continue the premises as they are? Are all of them to be expected to know the latest developments in building design and building materials? Are they to be expected to reconstruct their factories to make them conform to modern design? I think not. I cannot hold that these occupiers were guilty of any want of reasonable care in not knowing the modern developments in building design or in not altering their factory roof. So I hold that they are not liable at common law. It was an unusual danger, but not one of which they knew or ought to have known. They were not guilty of any want of reasonable care.

Secondly, there is the claim under the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (1) of which provides :

There shall, so far as reasonably practicable, be provided and maintained safe means of access to every place at which any person has at any time to work.

In my judgment, the duty owed by that section is a duty owed, not only to the workmen employed by the occupiers of the factory, but also to workmen employed by independent contractors and the independent contractors themselves. It applies also both in respect of the inside of the factory and of the outside of it, and, therefore, in respect of the work of cleaning windows. There was a duty on the occupiers, so far as reasonably practicable, to provide and maintain safe means of access to the windows which were the places where the window cleaner had to work. The question is whether that duty was broken, and also, if it was broken, how far the plaintiff was himself responsible for the breach.

I hold that the duty was broken. It should be within the ingenuity of reasonably intelligent persons to devise a means of access to these windows which would be safe. I do not go so far as to suggest that the asbestos roofing should be taken down and reconstructed in accordance with modern specifications. It is not reasonably practicable to require work to that extent, but it seems to me that by using a sufficient number of planks or ladders it should be reasonably practicable to ensure safe means of access to these windows. I hold, therefore, there was a breach for which the occupiers are prima facie responsible.

The next question, however, is : How far is the plaintiff responsible ? He was not a servant of the defendants. He was an independent contractor working on his own account. The duty of an employer to a servant is much higher than that of an occupier to an independent contractor. The employer owes a duty to his servant to use reasonable care in laying out the work to see that it is safe, and he has a duty to use reasonable care to provide proper plant and appliances for his servants. No such duty rests on the occupier of premises who employs a window cleaner as an independent contractor to clean his windows. In such a case it is the duty of the window cleaner to provide his own plant and appliances and to lay out the work himself so that it is reasonably safe. No occupier ever dreams of taking on himself the responsibility of telling the window cleaner how to do the work or what plant or appliances he should use. So here, although this was a factory, it seems to me that it was the plaintiff's responsibility to lay out the work properly and to provide proper plant and appliances, or, in other words, to see that there were safe means of access to the windows. That responsibility of window cleaners is well-known, and insurances are regularly taken out by them on account of it. In this case, therefore, as between the defendants and the plaintiff, it was the plaintiff and not the defendants who was responsible for seeing that there were safe means of access. That is borne out by the evidence. When the work was discussed the plaintiff went and looked at the job, inspected it, decided what was necessary and quoted his price. He could see the nature of the asbestos roofing and the spans it covered, and it was for him to do whatever was necessary to ensure safety. In my judgment, therefore, although there was a breach of duty by the defendants of s. 26 of the Factories Act, 1937, there was also a breach of duty by the plaintiff in failing so to lay out the work and to provide such plant and appliances that there would be safe means of access to the windows. Having regard to the special responsibility of care and skill which is required of a window cleaner, I hold that he was guilty of negligence, and, indeed, of negligence which was the decisive cause of the accident. If he had provided safe means of access—if he had provided more planks, or even if he had walked along this ladder more carefully and had not slipped—there would have been no accident.

The result is that, apart from the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, his claim would be defeated by reason of his own negligence. What is the effect of that Act in this case ? Section 1 (1) provides :

Where any person suffers damage as the result partly of his own fault and partly of the fault of any other person or persons, a claim in respect of that damage shall not be defeated by reason of the fault of the person suffering the damage, but the damages recoverable in respect thereof shall be reduced to such extent as the court thinks just and equitable having regard to the claimant's share in the responsibility for the damage . . .

"Fault" is defined in s. 4 so as to include negligence or breach of statutory duty. The court has the task of deciding what is the claimant's share in the responsibility for the damage. That is a task similar to that imposed by the Law Reform (Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, and Whitby v. Burt Boulton & Hayward, Ltd. (1) is relevant. In that case where the occupiers of the factory were guilty of a breach of the Factories Act, 1937, but the real responsibility rested on independent contractors, I held that the whole of the responsibility should fall on the independent contractors. Applying that to the present matter, if the plaintiff had not been his own master, but had been employed by other persons, that is, by independent contractors, I should have had no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff's remedy would be against the independent contractors and not against the occupiers of the factory, or, at all events, the occupiers of the factory would have a complete indemnity, such as I ordered in Whitby's case (1), but the plaintiff was his own master. The relevant Act is not the Act of 1935 (which expressly contemplates that in some circumstances a complete indemnity may be ordered), but the Act of 1945 which does not say anything about a complete indemnity, but refers to "damages . . . shall be reduced to such extent as the court thinks just and equitable having regard to the claimant's share in the responsibility for the damage." In this case, I think, the claimant's share in the responsibility is, for all practical purposes, the whole responsibility. Although there was a breach of the Factories Act, 1937, he was the person who ought to have provided the plant and appliances and to have laid out the work so that the means of access was safe. Otherwise he ought not to have undertaken the work. As between himself and the occupiers, he was the person responsible. In those circumstances, I think that the shares of the occupiers in the responsibility for the damage is nominal, and that the share of the plaintiff is the whole share. I do not think it is necessary to award a nominal figure. It seems to me I ought to deal with the matter on broader lines. The Act of 1945 should be interpreted on parallel lines with the Act of 1935. Inasmuch as the plaintiff's share in the responsibility for the damage is the whole share, the action is dismissed.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

Solicitors: Silkin & Silkin (for the plaintiff); L. Bingham & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

AMALGAMATED ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD. v. WILDS. SAME v. SAME. SAME v. JEREMIAH.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord du Parc, Lord Normand and Lord Oaksey), May 4, 6, 7, June 23, 1948.]

Workmen's Compensation—Industrial disease—"Notional accident"—Total incapacity—Further "notional accident" during incapacity caused by first "accident"—Nystagmus followed by pneumoconiosis or silicosis—Partial capacity recovered—Right to compensation in respect of second "notional accident"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), ss. 9 (3) (i), 43 (1) (c) (d)—Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931 (S.R. & O., 1931, No. 342), para. 9 (2) (a)—Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943 (S.R. & O., 1943, No. 885), para. 9 (3).

In assessing the amount of compensation to be awarded to a workman who is partially incapacitated by an accident, actual or notional, and afterwards is further incapacitated by an industrial disease or by illness which is the subject of a statutory scheme, the relevant pre-accident wages in the case of the second accident are those which the workman was earning or able to earn after the injury in respect of which he first received compensation and not the wages he was earning before his earlier injury.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1947] 1 All E.R. 551), reversed.

Bacon v. Wills (A. W.) & Sons, Ltd. ([1933] 2 K.B. 493), Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd. (1933) (26 B.W.C.C. 560), and Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd. ([1937] 2 All E.R. 756), approved.

Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. ([1940] 2 All E.R. 201), disapproved.

[AS TO COMPENSATION IN CASES OF MORE THAN ONE ACCIDENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 912, para. 1255, note (e); and FOR CASES, see DIGEST Supp., Master and Servant, No. 3362, a, b. See, also, WILLIS'S WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION, 37th Edn. pp. 288-290.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., [1913] 2 K.B. 158; 82 L.J.K.B. 414; 108 L.T. 283; 6 B.W.C.C. 225; 34 Digest 348, 2803.
- (2) Thompson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., Ltd., [1935] 2 K.B. 90; 104 L.J.K.B. 515; 152 L.T. 571; 28 B.W.C.C. 95; Digest Supp.
- (3) Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 756; [1937] 2 K.B. 426; 106 L.J.K.B. 667; 156 L.T. 490; 30 B.W.C.C. 171; Digest Supp.
- (4) Doudie v. Kinnell, Cannell & Coking Coal Co., Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 6; [1947] A.C. 377; [1947] L.J.R. 395; 176 L.T. 125.
- (5) Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (No. 2), [1940] 2 All E.R. 201; [1940] 1 K.B. 702; 109 L.J.K.B. 493; 164 L.T. 17; 33 B.W.C.C. 122; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., (1933), 26 B.W.C.C. 560; Digest Supp.
- (7) Bacon v. Wills (A. W.) & Sons, Ltd., [1933] 2 K.B. 493; 102 L.J.K.B. 611; 149 L.T. 385; 26 B.W.C.C. 374; Digest Supp.
- (8) Jones v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 1; [1944] A.C. 14; 113 L.J.K.B. 49; 170 L.T. 78; 36 B.W.C.C. 195; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (9) Heathcote v. Haunchwood Collieries, [1918] A.C. 52; 87 L.J.K.B. 226; 117 L.T. 677; 10 B.W.C.C. 647; 34 Digest 395, 3230.
- (10) Richards v. Goskar, [1936] 3 All E.R. 839; [1937] A.C. 304; 106 L.J.K.B. 85; 156 L.T. 52; 29 B.W.C.C. 357; Digest Supp.

APPEALS by the employers, from orders of the Court of Appeal dated Feb. 27, 1947, reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 551, affirming, in the case of the workman Wilds, awards by an arbitrator to the workman of £1 10s. 0d. a week in respect of nystagmus and a further £1 10s. 0d. a week in respect of pneumoconiosis subsequently contracted. The same question of principle arose in the case of the workman, Jeremiah, to whom awards were made in respect both of nystagmus and of silicosis subsequently contracted. The appeals were allowed. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER.

Edmund Davies, K.C., and G. Owen George for the employers.

Paull, K.C., and T. Jenkin Jones for the workman.

The House took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, these three appeals raise the same point. The arbitrations on which they depend were heard successively in the county court and the appeals from the award there given were heard together in the Court of Appeal. The question at issue concerns the amount to be awarded to a workman who is partially incapacitated by an accident, actual or notional, and afterwards is further incapacitated by an industrial disease or by illness which is the subject of a statutory scheme. The problem is to determine whether the pre-accident wages in the case of the second accident are to be considered to be those which the workman was earning before his earlier injury or those which he was earning or able to earn after the injury in respect of which he first received compensation.

In the county court the following facts were established in respect of the workman, Wilds:—(a) He had worked for the employers as an underground worker since 1937. (b) On June 14, 1944, the examining surgeon (Dr. John R. Smith) certified that Wilds, who was then 35 years of age, was suffering from miner's nystagmus and was thereby disabled from earning full wages, and that the disablement commenced on June 13, 1944. (c) He ceased work on June 13, 1944. His average weekly earnings for the twelve months before this date were £7 10s. and he was paid weekly compensation for miner's nystagmus at the rate of 30s. together with supplementary allowances on the basis of total incapacity as from June 13, 1944. (d) On Dec. 8, 1944, Wilds, while still totally disabled by miner's nystagmus and while still receiving full compensation for that incapacity, was examined by the medical board appointed under the Silicosis and Asbestosis (Medical Arrangements) Schemes, 1931-1943, and on Dec. 18, 1944, the medical board certified that he was suffering from pneumoconiosis, a disease coming within the Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943, and s. 47 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, and suspended him as and from Dec. 8, 1944, from all processes specified in para. 2 of the Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943. The medical board further certified that the disease was in an early stage and that he was fit for moderately heavy work. (e) On Jan. 10, 1945, he was examined by Dr. Joseph Harvey, who certified that he had recovered to some extent from miner's nystagmus and that he was fit for light work on the surface as and from Jan. 10, 1945, but the employers, perhaps unaware of his partial recovery, continued to pay full compensation for miner's nystagmus until Nov. 10, 1945. (f) As and from Nov. 11, 1945, he received from the employers compensation on the basis of partial incapacity in respect of the miner's nystagmus at the rate of £1 5s. 6d. per week, plus supplementary allowances. The weekly earnings which he was deemed to be able to earn as a partially disabled workman were agreed at £4 3s. 0d. In respect of his partial incapacity due to miner's nystagmus Wilds was entitled to receive and received by way of compensation half the difference between the said sums of £7 10s. 0d. and £4 3s. 0d., limited to a maximum of 30s. per week, together with supplementary allowances. (g) In respect of his partial incapacity due to pneumoconiosis he did not receive any weekly payment as compensation from the employers, who maintained that, as his earning capacity was not reduced by the second disability, he was entitled to no further sum in compensation.

Had the workman been the victim of two actual successive accidents instead of two notional accidents, for the first of these accidents he would have received half the difference between the wages he was earning before the first accident, when he was of full working capacity, and what he was able to earn as an injured man after it, but limited, of course, to the maximum sum payable. For the second accident he would receive half the difference between the earning capacity as an injured man before the second accident and his diminished capacity to earn as a further injured man after the second accident. If, however, as is the fact in the present case, his earning capacity was not impaired by the second accident he would receive no further compensation in respect of that accident. These results follow from the wording of ss. 1 (1) and 9 (3) (i) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, viz. :—

Section 1 (1): If in any employment personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained . . .

Section 9 (3): The rules for calculating the weekly payment in the case of partial incapacity shall be—(i) if the maximum weekly payment would, had the incapacity been total incapacity, have amounted to 25s. a week or upwards, the weekly payment in case of partial incapacity shall be one-half the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average weekly amount which he is earning or is able to earn in some suitable employment or business after the accident . . .

and are supported by the authority of Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co. (1), Thompson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co. (2) and Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd. (3) approved in your Lordships' House in Doudie v. Kinneil, Cannell and Coking Coal Co., Ltd. (4).

Indeed, the matter is not in issue, but it is said that the position is altogether different in the case of an industrial disease or of disablement by exposure to certain conditions which are the subject of schemes set up under the provisions of the Act. The relevant sections of the Acts are portions of s. 43 and sched. III, and s. 47 (1) (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, and s. 1 (1) and (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943. They read as follows :

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. s. 43 (1) : Where—(i) the certifying surgeon appointed under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for the district in which a workman is employed certifies that the workman is suffering from a disease mentioned in sched. III to this Act and is thereby disabled from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed ; . . . and the disease is due to the nature of any employment in which the workman was employed at any time within the twelve months previous to the date of the disablement or suspension . . . he . . . shall be entitled to compensation under this Act as if the disease or such suspension as aforesaid were a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of that employment, subject to the following modifications :—(a) The disablement or suspension shall be treated as the happening of the accident ; . . . (c) The compensation shall be recoverable from the employer who last employed the workman during the said twelve months in the employment to the nature of which the disease was due ; . . . (d) The amount of the compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer from whom the compensation is recoverable . . .

(2) For the purposes of this section the date of disablement shall be such date as the certifying surgeon certifies as the date on which the disablement commenced, or, if he is unable to certify such a date, the date on which the certificate is given . . .

Third Schedule.

Description of Disease or Injury.

Description of Process

19. The disease known as miner's nystagmus, whether occurring in miners or others, and whether the symptom of oscillation of the eyeballs be present or not.

Mining

Section 47 (1) The Secretary of State may by scheme provide for the payment of compensation by the employers of workmen in any specified industry or process or group of industries or processes involving exposure to silica dust— . . . (b) who, though not totally disabled, are found on medical examination to be suffering from silicosis, or from silicosis accompanied by tuberculosis, to such a degree as to make it dangerous to continue work in the industry or process, and are for that reason suspended from employment.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943, s. 1 (1) : Section 47 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (which as amended by the Workmen's Compensation (Silicosis and Asbestosis) Act, 1930, provides for the making of schemes applying that Act to workmen suffering from fibrosis of the lungs due to silica dust or asbestos dust) shall extend to workmen suffering from any form of pneumoconiosis ; . . . (3) This section shall not affect the validity of any scheme made under the said s. 47 . . . which is in force at the passing of this Act, and any such scheme made under the said s. 47 shall have effect as if it had been made under that section as amended by the schedule to this Act . . .

The two relevant schemes in these appeals are the Various Industries Silicosis Scheme, 1931, and the Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943.

The material provisions of these two schemes are in the form set out below :—

THE VARIOUS INDUSTRIES (SILICOSIS) SCHEME, 1931.

4. Where the medical board certify— . . . (3) that a workman, though not totally disabled, is suffering from silicosis or from silicosis accompanied by tuberculosis to such a degree as to make it dangerous for him to continue work in the processes, and is for that reason suspended from employment ; and where the disease is due to employment in the processes whether under one or more employers, the workman or his dependants, as the case may be, shall be entitled to claim compensation as if the disease as aforesaid were a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of that employment, as provided by the Act, but subject to the modifications hereinafter contained . . . 6. For the purposes of this Scheme the date of the injury shall be deemed to be the date on or from which the workman is certified to be totally disabled or, while not totally disabled, is suspended from employment . . . 8 (1) The compensation shall be claimed and recoverable from the employer who last employed the workman in the processes . . . 9 (2) In cases of suspension due to silicosis or silicosis accompanied by tuberculosis where the workman is not totally disabled—(a) if the medical board certify that the workman's general physical capacity for employment is impaired by reason of the disease, the workman shall be entitled, while impairment continues, to a weekly payment fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Act for fixing the compensation in cases of partial incapacity.

THE COAL MINING INDUSTRY (PNEUMOCONIOSIS) COMPENSATION SCHEME, 1943.

4. Where the medical board certify— . . . (3) that a workman, though not totally disabled, is suffering from pneumoconiosis, or from pneumoconiosis accompanied by tuberculosis to such a degree as to make it dangerous for him to continue work in the industry or in any operation or work in the industry and is for that reason suspended from employment ; and where the disease is due to employment in the industry whether under one or more employers, the workman or his dependants, as the case may be, shall be entitled to claim compensation as if the disease as aforesaid were a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of that employment, as provided by the Acts, but subject to the modifications hereinafter contained . . . 6. For the purposes of this scheme the date of the injury shall be deemed to be the date on or from which the workman . . . is suspended from employment in the industry or in any operation or work in the industry, as the case may be . . . 8 (1) The compensation shall be claimed and recoverable from the employer who last employed the workman in the industry . . . 9 (2) In cases of suspension due to pneumoconiosis or pneumoconiosis accompanied by tuberculosis where the workman is not totally disabled :—(a) if the medical board certify that the workman's general physical capacity for employment is impaired by reason of the disease, the workman shall be entitled, while impairment continues, to a weekly payment fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Acts for fixing the compensation in cases of partial incapacity . . . (3) In the application of the aforesaid provisions of the Acts the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer from whom compensation is recoverable under this scheme . . .

In reliance on the facts established and the legal provisions set out above Wilds made two separate and independent claims. (a) A claim for compensation on the basis of partial incapacity for disablement by miner's nystagmus from Nov. 11, 1945, based on a certificate of the examining surgeon dated June 14, 1944, as to a disablement certified to have commenced on or about June 13, 1944 ; (b) A claim for compensation on the basis of partial incapacity for disablement by pneumoconiosis from Jan. 11, 1945, based on a certificate dated Dec. 18, 1944, by the medical board appointed under the Silicosis and Asbestosis (Medical Arrangements) Schemes, 1931-1943, as to a disablement certified to have commenced on or about Dec. 8, 1944, on which date Wilds was suspended from all processes specified in the Coal Mining Industry (Pneumoconiosis) Compensation Scheme, 1943, on account of pneumoconiosis, a disease coming within the last-mentioned scheme and s. 47 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. On July 23, 1946, the learned judge gave his award and ordered that the employers should pay to Wilds weekly the sum of £1 10s. together with supplementary allowances on the basis of partial incapacity as compensation in respect of miner's nystagmus suffered by him on June 13, 1944, and that the said weekly payment should commence as from Nov. 11, 1945, and continue during the total or partial incapacity of Wilds for work or until the same should be ended, diminished, increased or redeemed in accordance with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Acts, and also that an additional £1 10s. per week together with supplementary allowances should be paid by the employers to Wilds in respect of pneumoconiosis on the basis of partial incapacity from Jan. 11, 1945, and be continued during the said incapacity or until the same should be ended, diminished, increased or redeemed in accordance with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Acts. On appeal the Court of Appeal approved these awards, but so far as two of the Lords Justices were concerned only, I think, because they felt bound by the authority of Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5). From their judgment this appeal is brought before your Lordships' House. Like the Lords Justices I think the principles set out in that case govern the present appeal and your Lordships have, accordingly, to determine whether that decision is right.

While the workman was totally disabled by nystagmus no claim was made for the further injury by pneumoconiosis. He was already totally incapacitated, and there was, therefore, no capacity left which could be taken away by the second injury. Accordingly, the principle adopted in Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd. (3) was accepted and until there was partial recovery from the nystagmus the compensation payable for that disability was not sought to be increased though the workman had suffered a further notional injury by accident as a result of the pneumoconiosis, but once he had recovered from the nystagmus a claim was made to receive compensation for partial loss of earning power brought about by the nystagmus and also compensation for total loss of earning power due to the pneumoconiosis. The argument, as I understood it, was similar to that employed in Evans v.

Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5). The miner, it was said, suffers from nystagmus causing a loss of earning power. That loss, which originally was total, has now become partial, and for it the workman is rightly receiving the appropriate amount of compensation fixed in accordance with the terms of the Act and recoverable so long as the incapacity remains. The employers do not dispute this contention, but part company with the workman on his further argument when he maintained that, as he suffers from pneumoconiosis as well as nystagmus, he is entitled to compensation for both none the less though his earning power has not been reduced.

Admittedly, if the second accident had been what may be described as an actual and not a notional one compensation would be based on his earnings as an injured man, not on the wages he earned when receiving full wages as a miner. These latter would be irrelevant in ascertaining the loss caused by the second accident. His pre-accident earnings would be those paid to him as an injured man, not those obtained while in work as a miner, but where the second disability is a notional one it is contended that, under the provisions of cll. 8 and 9 (3) of the scheme, compensation is to be claimed and recoverable from the employer who last employed the workman in the processes, and in applying the appropriate provisions of the Act—viz., ss. 8 to 11—the amount of compensation is to be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer from whom compensation is recoverable under the scheme. This language is said to mean that, in the case of silicosis or pneumoconiosis or any of the illnesses which are the subject-matter of schemes, the relevant pre-accident wages are those which the workman obtained from his last employer in work to which the scheme applies.

LUXMOORE, L.J., said in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5) [1940] 2 All E.R. 201, 209):

I am unable to find any words, either in the Act or in the scheme, to suggest that in any case the compensation for total disablement by silicosis is to be calculated with reference to any average weekly earnings other than those of the workman under the employer who last employed the workman in the process in which the notional injury by accident caused by contracting silicosis arose, or with reference to any want of capacity other than total incapacity.

The cases of Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd. (6) and Bacon v. Wills (7) both dealt with the circumstances of a single notional accident as to which it was held that, as the employer to be looked to was the last under whom the workman served in the material process and as the workman might recover compensation though he had not been employed in the process at all for three (now five) years before the notional accident, the relevant pre-accident wages must be the average of the twelve months before the last period at which the workman was so employed and, therefore, not the pre-accident wage subsisting after the first accident.

The argument receives its strongest support from the wording which appears in both Act and Scheme, viz. :—"the amount of the compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer from whom compensation is recoverable." Under the provisions of the schemes as they now stand that employer may not have employed the workman for some five years and any number of accidents to the employee may have happened before he is certified or suspended. Accordingly, it is asked, which of the various pre-accident earnings of a man, who has changed his job and whose capacity has been altered by one or more accidents subsequent to his change of employer, is to be taken as the relevant pre-accident wage unless it be that which was paid by the employer on whom the duty to compensate the workman is imposed. Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5) carried the argument a step further and applied the same principle to a case of successive accidents. The question to be determined was what was the pre-accident wage applicable where the workman met with an actual accident and was awarded compensation for it, but later was certified as suffering from silicosis. Was the relevant wage in the case of the silicosis that which the workman was earning before his first accident or that which he was earning after that accident and at the time when he was certified as suffering from silicosis. The former was held to be the material time. SLESSER, L.J., said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 201, 206):

... notwithstanding the actual partial incapacity ... the Various Industries (Silicosis) Scheme, 1931, requires the workman, in the circumstances, to be assumed to be of full capacity ...

and (ibid., 207):

... the legislature ... has ordained that, contrary to natural experience, the injury (the disease) must be regarded as preceding the accident (the certification) ...

LUXMOORE, L.J., said (ibid., 209):

... there is a material difference between the case where a workman is in the first instance partially incapacitated by an injury by accident other than a notional accident by disease, and is then rendered totally incapable by reason of a second accident, which is also not a notional one, and the case where the original partial incapacity is followed by total incapacity arising from a notional accident caused by industrial disease. In the former case, the compensation in respect of the second accident, which resulted in the partial incapacity from the first accident becoming total incapacity, must, on the true construction of the Act be calculated with reference to the average weekly earnings immediately preceding the second accident: Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co. (1) and Thompson v. London and North Eastern Ry. Co. (2) ... Of course, if, as the result of the first accident, the workman suffers total disability, it matters not whether he is subsequently certified to be suffering from an industrial disease, which also has rendered him totally incapacitated, for in such a case there is no capacity for work on which the notional accident can operate: Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton and Joicey Collieries, Ltd. (3). As SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., pointed out in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5) so long as the total incapacity lasted from the first accident, no compensation could be recovered in respect of the second accident, although in respect of the second accident a declaration of liability might properly be obtained.

Having regard to these authorities, and, in particular, to the decision in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5) the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal to them, though all three members of that court described the result at which they arrived as wanting in logic. No doubt, in a case of successive accidents one would have expected "an enquiry with a view to allocating the parts of the total reduction which resulted respectively from the injury caused in each accident" to use LORD THANKERTON'S words in Jones v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd. (8) ([1944] 1 All E.R. 1, 4), but it is for your Lordships to determine whether in a case where a notional accident follows another, actual or notional, the provisions of this Act and scheme compel you to hold otherwise.

My Lords, I am not sure that I should myself describe the conclusion arrived at as illogical. No doubt, in one aspect where an Act prescribes a certain quantum of compensation it is illogical to give it twice over, but the stages by which that result is arrived at are themselves strictly logical if the view be adopted that a man who is incapacitated by an industrial disease or disease dealt with by a scheme is required by the Act to be deemed to be of full capacity whatever his actual circumstances may be when a second and notional accident is met with. So far as the decision in the present case is concerned I am not disposed to quarrel with the judgment in Bacon v. Wills (7) or Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries, Ltd. (6). Each was an instance of a single accident. The workman, in fact, had been of full capacity and had become totally disabled by a notional accident, the only question was whether the pre-accident wage was to be taken to be that immediately preceding that notional accident or that at which he had been remunerated when engaged in working at the "process." No question arose whether compensation awarded for a previous accident should be taken into account. The amount of compensation had to be, and was, calculated with reference to the earnings under the employer from whom compensation was recoverable, but, though the calculation is to be made with reference to those earnings, neither the Act nor the scheme says that other matters may not be taken into consideration. In the two cases referred to there were no other matters. In the present case the workman was already in receipt of a sum sufficient to compensate him for his loss of wages to the extent which the Act allows. In my view, that circumstance should also have been taken into consideration. In no case should the workman receive less than a sum adequate to provide the statutory compensation for his loss, but there is nothing to compel a court to give it twice over. In general, I find myself in agreement with the views held by MORTON and SOMERVELL, L.JJ., and on which I understand they would have acted had they not been bound by the decision in Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5). I should allow the appeal and direct that the workman pay the employers' costs in your Lordships' House and below.

My Lords, in the case of Jeremiah I have not felt it necessary to prepare a separate opinion. The facts so closely resemble those in the case of Wilds that the same result must follow, but it is right, I think, that one should state what the facts are on which the case of Jeremiah depends, and I am taking those facts from the case as presented by the workmen to your Lordships' House.

"(11) The workman Jeremiah was employed by the employers as a coal miner and on May 24, 1943, he was certified to be disabled by miner's nystagmus. He was paid weekly compensation in respect of such disablement, at first on the basis of total incapacity and as from the time when he partially recovered on the basis of partial incapacity. (12) On May 14, 1945, when partially disabled by miner's nystagmus, Jeremiah was certified to be partially disabled by silicosis, being suspended from working in all processes specified in the Various Industries (Silicosis) Schemes, 1931-39, as from Apr. 21, 1945. (13) The average weekly earnings of Jeremiah before his first notional accident were agreed at £6 16s. 8d. The average weekly amount which he was able to earn by reason of his incapacity due to nystagmus was, by agreement, assessed at £4 3s. 0d. The average weekly amount which he was able to earn by reason of his incapacity due to silicosis was, by agreement, assessed at £4 0s. 0d. (14) Jeremiah had not been employed at any time since he was certified to be disabled by miner's nystagmus. (15) Compensation at the rate of 19s. 4d. per week together with supplementary allowances was paid by the employers to Jeremiah in respect of his partial incapacity from miner's nystagmus as from Dec. 26, 1944, and no compensation has been paid in respect of his disablement by silicosis. (16) On Aug. 7, 1946, Jeremiah filed in the Ammanford County Court an application for arbitration claiming increased weekly compensation on the basis of partial incapacity in respect of his disablement by miner's nystagmus, and weekly compensation on the basis of total or in the alternative partial incapacity in respect of his disablement by silicosis."

The case then states that the workman succeeded in the county court and that decision was upheld in the Court of Appeal.

From these facts it is apparent that the same principles must apply in Jeremiah's case as those that apply in Wilds' case. The result will be that it will be necessary to work out the exact figures, but the principle upon which your Lordships determine the case is that he is not entitled to the double compensation.

LORD SIMONDS : My Lords, I have had the opportunity of considering the opinion which my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack has just delivered and also that which my noble and learned friend, LORD NORMAND, is about to deliver. I concur so fully in their reasoning and conclusions that I do not propose to add anything myself.

LORD DU PARCQ : My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in print the opinion which is to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD NORMAND. I agree with it, and join with him in adopting the reasoning of MORTON, L.J., and SOMERVELL, L.J. It may be useful to add that a parallel to that reasoning is to be found in the opinions delivered in this House in Heathcote v. Haunchwood Collieries (9). There it was para. 3 of sched. I to the Act of 1906 which was being considered. That paragraph, like s. 9 of the present Act, used the words "which he" (scilicet, the workman) "is earning," and thus made the injured workman's actual earnings the basis of the calculation which the arbitrator was required to make. The words "which he is earning" were unqualified. Nevertheless, it was held that, if a man chose to earn a much smaller wage than he could earn if he were so disposed, his actual earnings must be ignored. This result was arrived at by following the elementary rule of construction which requires the courts to look at an Act as a whole and to read each section in its context. Section 1 of the Act of 1906 made manifest the intention of the legislature, and a strictly literal construction of the words of para. 3, read without their context, would have defeated that intention.

So, here, the construction of the material words in s. 43 of the Act of 1925 which it is proposed that your Lordships should adopt is necessary in order to carry out the intention of Parliament. That intention plainly appears from s. 1. It is, perhaps, well to emphasize the fact that your Lordships are not amending the statute, but interpreting it according to a well-known canon. I agree with the motion proposed.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, I agree that the appeals should be disposed of as my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack has proposed. In the Court of Appeal MORTON, L.J., and SOMERVELL, L.J., held themselves bound, as they undoubtedly were, by Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5), but they gave reasons which would have caused them, if they had been free, to decide in favour of the employers. Their reasoning is, I think, unanswerable. I respectfully adopt what they have said, and I shall only add some observations which are prompted by the argument addressed to your Lordships for the workman.

Three cardinal rules for construing the Workmen's Compensation Act have been established by decisions of this House:—(1) that the first thing one has to do is to apply one's mind to what is the substantive meaning of the Act; (2) that the right to compensation which is given by s. 1 is not to be enlarged or diminished by the provisions which prescribe the scale of compensation and the mode and conditions of its enjoyment; and (3) that by s. 1 compensation is given for loss of earning power through incapacity for work caused by personal injury by accident. In my opinion, the workmen's claim was supported by reasons which did violence to each one of these cardinal rules. The basis of it was the direction that in the disease cases the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer who last employed him within the twelve months previous to the date of the disablement or suspension in the employment to the nature of which the disease is due. I take these words from s. 43 of the Act, and there are corresponding words in the schemes made under s. 47. Now, this direction is solely for the purpose of reckoning the amount of compensation. It was a necessary direction in a section or scheme which assimilated incapacity caused by a progressive disease to incapacity caused by an injury by accident, for s. 9 of the Act, which provides a suitable mode of calculating compensation for loss of earning power resulting from an injury by accident, does not fit a loss of earning power which may not shew itself till a considerable time after the uncertain date when the disease began. But the substantive intention of the Act in its application to the incapacity caused by disease, as in its application to incapacity caused by injury by accident, is that the compensation is for loss of earning power. The workman's claim, however, (I take Wild's claim for simplicity's sake), is for compensation though there has been no loss of earning power caused by the incapacity resulting from the disease in respect of which the claim is made, for the arbitrator's finding is conclusive of the fact that the incapacity resulting from the pneumoconiosis did not prevent the workman from earning what he was able to earn in an employment suitable to a man already partially incapacitated by nystagmus. Counsel for the workman argued that, though the earning power was not affected by the pneumoconiosis incapacity, the field in which the workman could seek work was narrowed by it. It is true that the range of work is narrower for a man suffering from nystagmus and pneumoconiosis than for a man suffering from nystagmus alone, but I can only repeat that the Act gives compensation, not because the field of employment is narrowed, but because the workman's earning power is diminished.

The direction to calculate the compensation "with reference" to the earnings in the period specified by s. 43 (or by a scheme made under s. 47) does not mean that the ascertained total of wages received in the specified period is to be substituted simpliciter in the upper line of a subtraction sum for the average weekly wage specified in s. 9. The words "with reference to" rather require that the provisions of s. 9 shall be moulded, as LAWRENCE, L.J., said in Bacon v. Wills & Son (7) ([1933] 2 K.B. 493, 504), in order to solve the difficulty which comes from artificially assimilating incapacity caused by disease to incapacity caused by ordinary accidents. This mode of construing the statute, which is, I concede, bolder and more free than is permissible when there are no words such as we have here or no specialties of implication to authorise it, was successfully resorted to in Bacon v. Wills & Son (7), Cole v. Amalgamated Anthracite Collieries (6) and Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd. (3), and in Richards v. Goskar (10) this House found it necessary, in order to make the Act work, to construe s. 43 (1) (a) as if it were subject to limitations not expressed. In my opinion, if the Act is construed as it should be in accordance with the three cardinal rules with which I began and by the method used in the cases which I have just cited the workmen's present claim must fail. I should add that the ratio of Wheatley v. Lambton, Hetton & Joicey Collieries, Ltd. (3), which was, in my view, rightly decided, is irreconcilable with Evans v. Oakdale Navigation Collieries, Ltd. (5) and is decisive of the issue in these appeals.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, my noble and learned friend, LORD OAKSEY, has asked me to say that he concurs in the views which have been expressed.

Appeal allowed with costs in the House of Lords and below.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche, agents for Llewellyn & Hann, Cardiff (for the employers); John T. Lewis & Woods, agents for Randell, Saunders & Randell, Llanelly (for the workmen).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HOOPER'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. BOSMAN AND ANOTHER v. HOOPER AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Jenkins, J.), June 15, 16, 1948.]

Perpetuities—Settlement—Limitation to a class—Introduction of new members into original class of takers—Gift to children who should attain 25—Proviso that, if any son should die under the age of 25 leaving any children who should attain 21, such children should take the share to which the parent would have been entitled, had he attained 25.

By a settlement made on Mar. 19, 1934, the settlor, by cl. 1, directed the trustees to hold the trust fund in trust in equal shares for all his children who should attain 25 (or, being daughters, married) "provided always that if any son . . . shall die before attaining the age of 25 years leaving surviving him a child or children who shall attain the age of 21 years such . . . child or children shall take . . . the share to which his or her or their parent would have become entitled had such parent attained the age of 25 years." By the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 163, references in that clause to attaining the age of 25 were to be construed as reference to attainment of the age of 21. By cl. 3, each child of the settlor was to be entitled, on attaining 21, to receive the whole income of his or her share of the trust fund until the same should become vested or he or she should die, and cl. 4 provided for maintenance out of the expectant share of the child or other beneficiary. By cl. 5, if at any period there should not be any beneficiary who, if of full age, would be entitled to receive the income of the trust fund, the income was to be divided between the persons "who under the trusts hereof would at that date be entitled to the capital of the trust fund if the trusts . . . in favour of the children or other issue of the settlor had then failed . . ." Clause 6 contained the ultimate trust of capital if there should be no child or other issue of the settlor who should attain a vested interest under the trusts in cl. 1. This trust was for the benefit (a) of the employees of a certain company; (b) the directors of that company holding office at the date of the failure of the prior trusts, (c) certain officials and servants of that company; and (d) cousins of the settlor living at the date of the failure of the prior trusts. The question was whether all or any of the trusts contained in the settlement were void as offending the rule against perpetuities. The settlor was still living, and at present had no children. At the date of the settlement he had one child, a son, who died an infant and unmarried.

HELD: (i) the proviso to cl. 1 did not introduce a new gift to a different class, but merely altered the composition of the class previously described by introducing new members into it, and, therefore, since the beneficiaries who were to take under the proviso were not necessarily ascertainable within the permitted period, the trusts in cl. 1 were wholly void as infringing the rule against perpetuities and, consequently, cl. 6 must also wholly fail. Since the children of a son were only to become members of the class in the event of the son himself failing to become a member, there was no divesting of something previously given so as to bring the case within the principle that, where a vested interest was given with the gift over divesting that interest in favour of objects not necessarily ascertainable within the perpetuity period, the gift over was rejected but did not divest the previous vested gift.

Pearks v. Moseley, Re Moseley's Trusts, (1880) (5 App. Cas. 714), applied.
Re Lord's Settlement, Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Lord, ([1947] 2 All E.R. 685), followed.

(ii) the income trusts in cll. 3, 4 and 5 were all ancillary to the trusts of capital and assumed that the capital had been validly settled, and, therefore, since cll. 1 and 6, which contained the essential beneficial trusts of the settlement, had failed, cll. 3, 4 and 5 must also fail.

[AS TO LIMITATION TO A CLASS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 134-141, paras. 229-235; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 98-100, Nos. 342-358.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Pearks v. Moseley, Re Moseley's Trusts, (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714; 50 L.J.Ch. 57; 43 L.T. 449; 37 Digest 68, 98.
- (2) Re Lord's Settlement, Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Lord, [1947] 2 All E.R. 685; [1948] L.J.R. 207.
- (3) Re Williams, Metcalf v. Williams, [1914] 2 Ch. 61; 83 L.J.Ch. 570; 110 L.T. 923; 44 Digest 798, 6540.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether all or any of the trusts contained in a settlement were void as offending the rule against perpetuities.

By cl. 1 of the settlement, the settlor directed the trust funds to be held in trust in equal shares for all his children who had attained 25, or, being daughters, had married, with a proviso that, if any son died under the age of 25 leaving any child or children who should attain 21, such child or children should take the share the parent would have taken had he attained 25. JENKINS, J., held that the provisions of the clause were wholly void, and that, in consequence, the ultimate trust of capital and the income trusts in a later clause of the settlement also failed. The facts and the relevant clauses of the settlement appear in the judgment.

Upjohn, K.C., and J. V. Nesbitt for the trustees.

Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., and Tonge for the first defendant (the settlor).

Neville Gray, K.C., and Jopling for the second, third and fourth defendants (representing the different classes of beneficiaries who might be interested under the ultimate trusts).

JENKINS, J.: The question which I have to decide on this summons is whether, on the true construction of a settlement, dated Mar. 19, 1934, and made between Lewis John Eric Hooper, of the one part, and himself and Alexander Rudolph Forbes Bosman, of the other part, all or any (and, if so, which) of the trusts contained in the settlement are void and inoperative on the ground that they offend the rule against perpetuities or otherwise. The settlement in question was a settlement by Mr. Hooper of 120,000 ordinary shares in Doulton & Co., Ltd. At the date of the settlement he had only one child, an infant son, John Doulton Hooper, who died while still an infant and unmarried. The relevant provisions of the settlement are these. After a recital of the settlor's desire to make provision for his infant son, John Doulton Hooper, and other children (if any) and the transfer to the trustees of the shares to be settled, there follow declarations of the trusts on which the fund is to be held. Clause 1 is the clause which occasions the difficulty, and it is in these terms:

The trustees shall hold the said shares or the investments for the time being representing the same (hereinafter referred to as "the trust fund") in trust for all the children of the settlor who being sons shall attain the age of 25 years or being daughters shall attain that age or marry under that age in equal shares and if there shall be only one such child in trust for that one child provided always that if any son of the settlor shall die before attaining the age of 25 years leaving surviving him a child or children who shall attain the age of 21 years such last mentioned child or children shall take (and if more than one equally between them) the share to which his her or their parent would have become entitled had such parent attained the age of 25 years.

Pausing there, it is not disputed that, by virtue of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 163, references in that clause to attaining the age of 25 years should be construed as references to attainment of the age of 21 years. That statutory provision removes an objection which would otherwise in itself have been fatal to a trust in these terms.

After an administrative provision about retention or sale of the shares, the settlement provides, by cl. 3 :

Each child of the settlor who shall attain the age of 21 years shall be entitled to receive the whole income of his or her expectant share of and in the trust fund until the same shall become vested or he or she shall previously die.

There follows a provision as to maintenance out of the expectant share of the child or other beneficiary, and then, by cl. 5 :

If the said John Doulton Hooper shall not attain the age of 25 years and there shall not at any period or periods be in existence any other beneficiary or beneficiaries who if of full age would be entitled to receive the income of the trust fund the trustees shall during such period or periods pay and divide the income of the trust fund unto and between the person or persons who under the trusts hereof would at that date be entitled to the capital of the trust fund if the trusts hereinbefore declared in favour of the children or other issue of the settlor had then failed and in the same shares and proportions.

Clause 6 contains what may be described as the ultimate trust of capital, and that opens in this way :

If there shall be no child or other issue of the settlor who shall attain a vested interest under the trusts hereinbefore declared the trustees shall as from the failure of such issue hold the trust fund as to both capital and income upon the trusts following that is to say . . .

Then follow a number of objects, (a), (b), (c) and (d), into the details of which I need not enter. The first object, (a), which, according to the terms of the trust, will take one fourth part of the fund, is a trust for the benefit of employees of Doulton & Co., Ltd., the trustees of the settlement creating those trusts being, in fact, the settlor himself and Mr. Bosman, who is one of the plaintiffs in this action in his capacity as a trustee of the settlement of Mar. 19, 1934. In sub-cl. (b) there is a trust with respect to another fourth part for the directors of Doulton & Co., Ltd., holding office at the date of the failure of the prior trusts. The interests of that class of beneficiary are represented by Sir Guy Locock. Sub-clause (c) provides as to another one-fourth part, being a gift for the benefit of certain officials and servants of Doulton & Co., Ltd., of whom the defendant, Mr. Ralph Wackrill, is one. Finally sub-cl. (d) deals with the remaining one-fourth part of the fund :

. . . to pay and transfer the same to the children of the late Orrock Mills Doulton and Alfred Virgoe Buckland [cousins or second cousins of the settlor] or the survivors or survivor of them living [at the date of the failure of the prior trusts] in equal shares (per capita).

Mr. Orrock Sherwood Doulton, as a member of that class, is joined as the last defendant. The other defendant before the court is the settlor himself, who is concerned to argue for the invalidity of the trust and a consequent resulting trust in his own favour. The remaining three defendants whom I have named are joined to argue on behalf of the classes which they respectively represent that the trusts are valid. The plaintiffs are two of the three present trustees of the settlement, the other trustee being the settlor himself.

Turning again to cl. 1 of the settlement, one observes that the objects who may take under the trusts of that clause comprise (i) all the sons of the settlor who shall attain the age of twenty-one years (reading the clause as modified by s. 163 of the Law of Property Act, 1925) ; (ii) the daughters of the settlor who attain the age of twenty-one years or marry under that age ; and (iii) any child or children who attain the age of twenty-one years of any son of the settlor who dies before attaining that age. Those are the possible objects of the trust, and of the three categories I have mentioned it is plain that the first and second, being the first generation—children of the settlor—must fall within the limit allowed by the rule against perpetuities, i.e., a life in being and twenty-one years thereafter—for this purpose, the life of the settlor and twenty-one years thereafter, but it is plain that the third category, namely, the child or children who attain the age of twenty-one years of any son of the settlor dying under that age, need not necessarily be ascertained within the permitted limit. It follows that, if cl. 1 of the settlement, on its true construction, makes a gift to a class of beneficiaries which includes the third category I have mentioned, the gift must be wholly bad on the principle laid down in Pearks v. Moseley, Re Moseley's Trusts (1), which clearly decides that, where there is a gift to a class, that gift is bad as infringing the rule against perpetuities unless the members of the class must necessarily be ascertained within the permitted period.

The question, therefore, is whether, on its true construction, cl. 1 of the settlement does make a gift to such a class. It will be remembered that the gift in Pearks v. Moseley (1) embraced a similar range of objects, but was in a different form, being a gift for all the children of the testator's daughter who should attain the age of twenty-one years and the lawful issue of such of them as should die under that age :

. . . leaving lawful issue at his, her, or their decease, or respective deceases, which issue shall afterwards attain the age of 21 years, or die under that age leaving issue at his, her, or their deceases, respectively, as tenants in common, if more than one, but such issue to take only the share or shares which his, her, or their parent or parents respectively would have taken if living.

The inclusion of what may be described for this purpose as the obnoxious category of objects in the class was thus effected in what I may term the substantive portion of the trust creating the class, whereas in the present case the class is, in the first instance, defined as consisting of :

. . . children of the settlor who being sons shall attain the age of [21] years or being daughters shall attain that age or marry under that age in equal shares . . .

and the interests of the children of a deceased son are introduced by means of a proviso. It has been argued before me by counsel for those interested in the ultimate trusts in default of children or other issue of the settlor that this difference in form has a vital effect on the result. It is said that on its true construction this clause does not operate simply as one gift to a class including members who need not be ascertained within the permitted limit as in Pearks v. Moseley (1). It is contended that this is a gift to a class ascertainable within the permitted limit and consisting exclusively of children of the settlor, with a proviso substituting in a certain event—namely, the death of any son of the settlor under twenty-one years leaving a child or children who attain that age—a separate and distinct gift to a different class, which is admittedly a gift exceeding the permitted limit on the Pearks v. Moseley (1) principle. Therefore, it is said that the court can give effect to cl. 1 on its true construction without infringing the rule, by holding that quoad children of the settlor the gift is good, although, as I understand it, in the event of there being a son of the settlor who dies under twenty-one years leaving children, the alternative and obnoxious gift would supervene and thus destroy the validity of the settlement. I have endeavoured to understand how the construction of the clause that I am invited by counsel for those interested in the ultimate trusts to adopt can be made to work, and what is the real character of the interest which the children are said to take under that construction, and I must confess that I have failed to do so. It seems to me to be reasonably plain, looking at this clause simply for the purpose of construing it and without regard to the rule against perpetuities, that there is here a gift to one class and one class only. The proviso does not introduce a new gift to a different class. It introduces new members into the class previously described. It qualifies the composition of that class, and it does so in effect by saying that, if any son of the settlor dies before becoming a member of the class, leaving a child or children who shall attain the age of twenty-one, then the child or those children shall become a member or members of the class in respect of the share which the parent would have taken if he had lived to become a member. In my view, the proviso qualifies the composition of the class and introduces the grandchildren in such a case as members of the class of which their father would have become a member if he had attained the age of twenty-one, but of which he never became a member because he failed ex hypothesi to attain that age.

A That being the construction I place on the gift, it is, as it appears to me, plainly within the principle of Pearks v. Moseley (1), and it cannot be compared with (and is wholly different from) a case in which vested interests are given with a gift over divesting those interests in certain events in favour of objects not necessarily ascertainable within the perpetuity limit. In a case of that kind the vested interest remains, and the offending gift over is rejected because, being offensive to the rule against perpetuities, it is void, and being void it cannot divest the previous vested gift. In this case, as far as I can see, there is no room for the application of any such principle. No interest vests in any son of the settlor until he attains the age of twenty-one years, so it cannot be said that the proviso divests the interest previously vested in the son so as to allow the son's interest to take effect on the proviso being held invalid. The son never becomes a member of the class, which by definition includes only sons who attain the age of twenty-one years, but, in the event of his failing to become a member, his children, not necessarily ascertainable within due limits, are to become members. There is no divesting of something previously given, but an alteration, before the gift takes effect, in the composition of the class to which the gift is made. Looking at the substance of cl. 1, it seems quite plain that it would by no means necessarily be possible to ascertain the beneficiaries who were going to take under the clause, or the shares in which they were going to take, within the permitted period of the life of the settlor and twenty-one years thereafter, because there would always be the possibility of a son being born to the settlor who, before attaining the age of twenty-one years, and after the death of the settlor, married and then died leaving a child who ultimately would or might attain twenty-one years, and would or might, therefore, qualify for admission to the class, and thus become a beneficiary under that clause. That, as it seems to me, is quite clearly the substance of the trust, and, that being the substance of it, my view is that the trust does infringe this technical rule.

C The conclusion to which I have come as regards the construction of cl. 1 accords with the decision of ROMER, J., in Re Lord's Settlement, Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Lord (2). In that case, ROMER, J., had to consider whether a clause in terms in all material respects precisely the same as cl. 1 of this settlement infringed the rule against perpetuities, and in order to decide that question he had to determine what was the effect of the proviso in that case corresponding to the proviso in cl. 1 in the present case. He held, aided thereunto by what was said by COZENS-HARDY, M.R. ([1914] 2 Ch. 61, 64) in Re Williams, Metcalf v. Williams (3), that the effect of the proviso was to introduce new members into the original class of takers which had been partly described by the earlier part of cl. 3 in the document before him. Thus, the view of ROMER, J., accords with the view which I have endeavoured to express in my own words as regards cl. 1 in the present case. I was invited by counsel for those interested in the ultimate trusts to decline to follow Re Lord's Settlement (2) which, it is suggested, was based on a misapprehension of the observations of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS in Re Williams (3). Whatever view I myself might hold on the question, I would certainly consider it my duty as a judge of first instance on a point of this kind to follow the decision of ROMER, J., in Re Lord's Settlement (2), leaving it to the parties to take the matter further, if so advised. But, quite apart from that, for the reasons I have endeavoured to state, it seems to me that the conclusion reached in Re Lord's Settlement (2) (which is the conclusion which I have myself arrived at in the present case) is the right conclusion. In my judgment, therefore, the trusts declared by cl. 1 of the settlement are wholly void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. It follows, and is, indeed, conceded, that on the footing that cl. 1 is bad, cl. 6 also must wholly fail, for it then becomes a limitation in remainder after, dependent on, and taking effect on the failure of the earlier clause.

H It remains to consider the effect of the income clauses, cls. 3, 4 and 5. Clause 3 provides :

Each child of the settlor who shall attain the age of 21 years shall be entitled to receive the whole income of his or her expectant share of and in the trust fund until the same shall become vested or he or she shall previously die.

In my view, that clause is purely ancillary to cl. 1 and postulates that a child on attaining the age of twenty-one years has an expectant share, but, if the trusts of cl. 1 are void, no child can have an expectant share at all, and it seems to me that the failure of cl. 1 necessarily involves the failure of cl. 3 as well. For similar reasons, I do not see how any validity can be attached to the amount of maintenance contained in cl. 4. That leaves cl. 5:

If the said John Doulton Hooper shall not attain the age of 25 years and there shall not at any period or periods be in existence any other beneficiary or beneficiaries who if of full age would be entitled to receive the income of the trust fund the trustees shall during such period or periods pay and divide the income of the trust fund unto and between the person or persons who under the trusts hereof would at that date be entitled to the capital of the trust fund if the trusts hereinbefore declared in favour of the children or other issue of the settlor had then failed and in the same shares and proportions.

That clause is appropriate since the son, John Doulton Hooper, did not attain the age of twenty-five (or twenty-one) years and there is not in existence any other beneficiary or beneficiaries who, if of full age, would be entitled to receive the income of the trust fund. I am, therefore, invited to hold that during the remainder of the life of the settlor, the income of the trust fund is divisible among the persons who would be entitled under the ultimate trust contained in cl. 6 if the prior trusts had then failed, and in the same shares and proportions. I find myself quite unable to accede to that contention. Of course, there being no children of the settlor, there is no beneficiary who, if of full age, would be entitled to receive the income of the trust fund, but, even if there was a child or other issue of the settlor, still there would be no one entitled to receive the income of the trust fund, for ex hypothesi there is no valid trust of the income or of the capital of the trust fund. It does not seem to me, therefore, that the events in which the clause was intended to operate have ever happened or could ever happen. Assuming, however, that the failure by infringement of the rule against perpetuities of the trust in favour of the children and the remoter issue of the settlor was an event apt to bring cl. 5 into operation, then the objects to whom the income is payable under that clause are expressed to be "the person or persons who under the trusts hereof would" at the date in question be entitled to the capital of the trust fund "if the trusts hereinbefore declared . . . had then failed." I find it impossible to hold that, the trusts being void—the invalidity extending, as I have said, to cl. 6 as well as to cl. 1—there will ever be any person who would be:

. . . entitled to the capital of the trust fund if the trusts hereinbefore declared in favour of the children or other issue of the settlor had then failed . . .

There could, so far as I can see, never be any such person except the settlor himself under the resulting trust consequent on the invalidity of the trusts declared by cll. 1 and 6 of the settlement. In truth, these income trusts, as it seems to me, are all of them ancillary to the trusts of capital, and assume that the capital has been validly settled, and, cll. 1 and 6 which contain the essential beneficial trusts of the settlement having failed, I think that cll. 3, 4 and 5 must necessarily share the same fate.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the question raised by the summons should be answered in the sense that, on the true construction of the settlement, all the trusts contained in the settlement of Mar. 19, 1934, are void and inoperative on the ground that they offend the rule against perpetuities, and, accordingly, there is a resulting trust in favour of the settlor.

Declaration accordingly. Representation order made. Costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, to be paid out of the trust fund.

Solicitors: Vandercom, Stanton & Co. (for all parties.)

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILSON v. PIKE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.JJ.), June 10, 23, 1948.]

Sale of Goods—Note or memorandum in writing—Signature of auctioneers' employee on behalf of purchaser—Whether sufficient to bind purchaser in action by auctioneer—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 4 (1).

At an auction sale conducted by T., a licensed auctioneer employed by the plaintiffs, a firm of auctioneers, goods were sold for £20 to the defendant as a result of a bid made by M., the defendant's agent. In answer to T.'s inquiry as to the purchaser, M. supplied him with the defendant's name, which T. entered in the catalogue against the item in question. The plaintiffs, as auctioneers, having accounted to the vendors for the £20 bid, now claimed that amount from the defendant, who pleaded that there was no sufficient memorandum for the purposes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4. It was admitted that the marked catalogue would be a sufficient memorandum in an action between vendor and purchaser, but the defendant contended that the plaintiffs could not rely on a memorandum made by them as agents for the defendant for the purpose of enforcing a contract to which they were themselves parties.

HELD: although one party to a contract cannot be the agent of the other to make and sign a memorandum on his behalf, the signature of T. as the purchaser's agent (he being a licensed auctioneer as distinct from an auctioneer's clerk) was not invalidated on this account, since the other party to the contract was T.'s employers and not T. himself.

Farebrother v. Simmons, (1822) (5 B. & Ald. 333), distinguished.

Quære: whether an auctioneer sues for the price of the goods sold, not by virtue of the contract of sale, but by virtue of his special property and his lien, and also by virtue of his contract with the buyer that the price shall be paid into his hands.

[AS TO AGENCY FOR SIGNATURE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 37-42, paras. 39-48; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 1, pp. 277, 278, Nos. 91-100.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Farebrother v. Simmons, (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 333; 106 E.R. 1213; 1 Digest 277, 95.
- (2) Wright v. Dannah, (1809), 2 Camp. 203; 1 Digest 277, 92.
- (3) Bell v. Balls, [1897] 1 Ch. 663; 66 L.J.Ch. 397; 76 L.T. 254; 3 Digest 7, 43.
- (4) Williams v. Millington, (1788), 1 Hy. Bl. 81; 3 Digest 35, 255.
- (5) Benton v. Campbell, Parker & Co., Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 410; 94 L.J.K.B. 881; 134 L.T. 60; 89 J.P. 187; Digest Supp.
- (6) Sharman v. Brandt, (1871), L.R. 6 Q.B. 720; 40 L.J.Q.B. 312; 19 W.R. 936, Ex. Ch.; 1 Digest 277, 94.
- (7) Bird v. Boulter, (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 443; 1 Nev. & M. 313; 110 E.R. 522; 1 Digest 277, 93.
- (8) Murphy v. Boese, (1875), L.R. 10 Exch. 126; 44 L.J.Ex. 40; 32 L.T. 122; 3 Digest 8, 51.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of His Honour JUDGE BURGIS, at Birkenhead County Court, dated Nov. 17, 1947. The learned county court judge held that the signature of the plaintiffs' employee on behalf of the defendant was sufficient to constitute a memorandum for the purposes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4 (1), and gave judgment against the defendant. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Bingham for the defendant.

Vaines for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 23. TUCKER, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. This appeal from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE BURGIS raises a question as to the sufficiency for the purposes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4, of a note or memorandum made by an auctioneer on the sale of a Georgian mahogany side-board which formed one of the lots sold at an auction sale held by the plaintiffs on Dec. 19, 1946, in an action brought by the plaintiffs as auctioneers against the defendant as purchaser, the plaintiffs having accounted to the vendors for the price of £20 bid at the auction on behalf of the defendant. The learned judge decided in favour of the plaintiffs and rejected the defendant's plea under s. 4 of the statute.

The plaintiffs, J. J. and G. D. Wilson, carry on business as auctioneers under the style of Wilson & Sons. Neither of them took part in the auction sale in question, which was conducted on their behalf by one Thackeray, a licensed auctioneer in their employ. In the course of the sale the lot in question was knocked down to the defendant at the price of £20 as a result of a bid made on his behalf by a Mrs. McCullick, an employee of the plaintiffs, who—as the judge has found—had the defendant's authority to bid on his behalf. As a result of the bid the auctioneer, Thackeray, having been supplied by Mrs. McCullick with the defendant's name as the buyer, entered his name in the catalogue against the item in question. It has been admitted throughout that there was in existence a sufficient note or memorandum to satisfy s. 4 of the statute in an action between vendor and purchaser, but it was contended on behalf of the defendant, on the authority of Farebrother v. Simmons (1), that in an action brought by the plaintiffs as auctioneers they could not rely on a note or memorandum made by them as agents for the defendant for the purpose of enforcing a contract to which they were themselves parties. The headnote to that case reads (5 B. & Ald. 333):

The agent contemplated by the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, who is to bind a defendant by his signature, must be a third person, and not the other contracting party; and therefore, where an auctioneer wrote down the defendant's name by his authority opposite to the lot purchased: Held, that in an action brought in the name of the auctioneer, the entry in such book was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute.

The material passage in the judgment of ABBOTT, C.J., is as follows (ibid., 334):

The most favourable way for the plaintiff is to treat the question as a case of goods sold and delivered; and then, the goods being above the price of £10, the case will fall within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, which requires some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain, to be made and signed by the parties to be charged by it, or their agents, thereunto lawfully authorised. Now, the question is, whether the writing down the defendant's name by the plaintiff, with the authority of the defendant, be in law a signing by the defendant's agent. In general, an auctioneer may be considered as the agent and witness of both parties. But the difficulty arises, in this case, from the auctioneer suing as one of the contracting parties. The case of Wright v. Dannah (2) seems to me to be in point, and fortifies the conclusion at which I have arrived, viz., that the agent contemplated by the legislature, who is to bind a defendant by his signature, must be some third person, and not the other contracting party upon the record.

The learned county court judge, in his notes of judgment, dealt with the defendant's contention in these words:

The defendant put forward a further point in regard to lot 864, namely, that no note or memorandum had been signed by the defendant which would satisfy the requirements of the Sale of Goods Act. I found the following facts: 1. That Mrs. McCullick was the person who actually made the bid on behalf of the defendant and that she was duly authorised by him to bid. 2. That Mrs. McCullick gave the defendant's name to the auctioneer when asked by him for the name of the buyer. 3. That Thackeray was the person actually conducting the auction. 4. That the name of the buyer was entered in the catalogue by Thackeray. I held that an auctioneer's clerk has prima facie no authority to sign a note or memorandum on behalf of the buyer: Bell v. Balls (3); but that there were special circumstances from which I could and ought to infer that the auctioneer was specially authorised to sign a memorandum. These circumstances were the request by the auctioneer to be supplied with the name of the buyer, and the supplying of the name of the buyer by his agent, Mrs. McCullick. It was contended by Mr. Bingham in reliance on Farebrother v. Simmons (1), that in an action brought in the name of the auctioneer the entry in the catalogue was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. I differentiated the case before me from Farebrother's case (1) on the ground that in the case before me the memorandum was not signed by the plaintiff to the action, but by a third party, namely, the auctioneer, Thackeray. I, therefore, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sum of £20.

The case was argued in the court below and on appeal on the assumption that in an action of this nature the auctioneer is suing on the contract of sale, and, accordingly, the absence of a sufficient note or memorandum to satisfy

A the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4, will afford a defence to the purchaser. There can be no doubt that the auctioneer, for the purpose of enforcing his right to receive the purchase price, can sue in his own name as for goods sold and delivered or bargained and sold, and this is so even where he has sold for a disclosed principal: see Williams v. Millington (4). None the less, we desire to reserve the question whether the true position is not as stated by SALTER, J., in his judgment in Benton v. Campbell, Parker & Co., Ltd. (5), where, after a review of the authorities he expresses the opinion that the auctioneer sues for the price, not by virtue of the contract of sale, but by virtue of his special property and his lien, and also, in most cases, by virtue of his contract with the buyer that the price shall be paid into his hands.

B We will, however, assume for the purposes of this judgment that the plaintiffs must be taken as suing on the contract of sale made between the vendor and the purchaser. On this basis the parties to the contract must be the plaintiffs, J. J. Wilson and G. D. Wilson carrying on business as Wilson & Sons, of the one part, and the defendant Pike, of the other. This contract was made by Thackeray as agent for the plaintiffs offering the lot for sale by auction and knocking it down to the bid of £20 offered by Mrs. McCullick on behalf of the defendant. After the fall of the hammer Thackeray, pursuant to his authority so to do on behalf of the defendant, signed a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s. 4 as between vendor and purchaser. Thackeray is not suing on a contract made by him as principal. He is not a party on the record. If he were, he would be met with the defence that one party to a contract cannot be the agent of the other to make and sign a memorandum on his behalf: see Farebrother v. Simmons (1) and Sharman v. Brandt (6). But one party to a contract can confer authority on the agent of the other party so to do: see Bird v. Boulter (7) and Murphy v. Boese (8), and it frequently happens that one C and the same person is authorised by each party to act as his agent for this purpose. Such is often the case where sales are made by brokers, and a sale by an auctioneer on behalf of the vendor followed by his signature on behalf of the purchaser is only another instance.

D In this case Wilson & Sons, who are the plaintiffs on the record, authorise their agent, Thackeray, to sell by auction, and the defendant, Pike, the purchaser, authorises Thackeray to sign on his behalf. It being conceded that the memorandum is otherwise sufficient, we can see no reason why Wilson & Sons cannot sue on this contract and rely on the memorandum signed by Thackeray as agent for the defendant. It seems to us that, on a true analysis of the facts of this case, the decision in Farebrother v. Simmons (1), limited, as it is, to the case of a contracting party who is also a party on the record, does not preclude them from recovering. We reach this conclusion irrespective of the learned judge's finding that Thackeray was specially authorised to sign as a result of his request to be supplied with the name of the buyer and the supplying of the name of the buyer by his agent, Mrs. McCullick. Thackeray, being a licensed auctioneer conducting a sale by auction—as distinct from an auctioneer's clerk—did not require any express authorisation to sign on ascertaining the identity of the buyer. For these reasons, and assuming that the plaintiffs must be taken as suing on the contract of sale, we are of opinion that this appeal E fails and should be dismissed.

G Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Berkson and Berkson, Birkenhead (for the defendant); Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for Latin & Masheder, Liverpool (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

*Re O'CONNOR'S WILL TRUSTS. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD.
v. O'CONNOR AND OTHERS.*

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), June 17, 18, 1948.]

Will—Legacy—General or specific—“To my son 10,000 preference shares” in private company—Testator holding only 9,000 shares—No words indicating testator’s ownership of shares bequeathed—Legacy not included in pecuniary legacies to be satisfied out of residue.

By cl. 5 of his will, dated Aug. 5, 1942, a testator, who died on Nov. 20, 1946, provided: “I bequeath to my . . . son (free of duty) 10,000 preference shares of £1 each fully paid in the capital of J. & K. Connor, Ltd.” By cl. 6 a number of pecuniary legacies, described as such, were given, and by cl. 7 and cl. 8 the residuary estate was given on trust for sale, with a direction to the executor to pay out of the proceeds the pecuniary legacies. The will contained no other general direction for the payment out of residue of legacies. At the date of his will and at the date of his death the testator held only 9,000 preference shares of the company, of which he was manager and governing director. The remainder of the company’s 45,000 preference shares were at the date of his death held as to 25,000 by the trustees of a family settlement and as to 11,000 by a subsidiary of the company. The articles of association of the company provided that a member wishing to transfer his shares must first offer them to the other shareholders, who would have a right to purchase them at a price to be determined by arbitration of the company’s auditors in default of agreement between the parties. Among the questions for determination by the court were (i) whether the gift of 10,000 preference shares was a specific or general legacy, and (ii) if it were general, the manner in which the executor was to discharge the legacy.

HELD: (i) the court leant strongly in favour of a general legacy and the bequest must be construed as general.

(ii) an inquiry would be directed whether or not it had been possible to purchase the additional 1,000 preference shares within twelve months of the testator’s death; if it had not been possible, the legatee was entitled to such a sum as at the expiration of that period would have been required to purchase the shares, with interest at 4 per cent. thereafter, such sum to be ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the company’s articles of association as to the sale price of shares; if it had been possible to make the purchase, further consideration as to the rights of the legatee would be necessary.

Robinson v. Addison, (1840) (2 Beav. 515), applied.

[AS TO SPECIFIC AND GENERAL LEGACIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 337, 338, para. 629; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 384-388, Nos. 4546-4584.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Willcocks, Warwick v. Willcocks, [1921] 2 Ch. 327; 91 L.J.Ch. 27; 126 L.T. 86; sub nom., Re Willcocks, Warwick v. Willcocks, 65 Sol. Jo. 793; 44 Digest 296, 1276.
- (2) Robinson v. Addison, (1840), 2 Beav. 515; 9 L.J.Ch. 369; 4 Jur. 647; 48 E.R. 1281; 44 Digest 298, 1299.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, inter alia, whether on the construction of the testator’s will a bequest of “10,000 preference shares” was a specific or a general legacy, and, if general, how it was to be satisfied. The facts appear in the judgment.

Rink for the executor.

C. A. Settle for the first defendant (the son to whom the bequest was made).

J. A. Brightman for the second defendant (the testator’s widow, one of the residuary legatees).

A. G. N. Cross for the third defendant (representing the other residuary legatees).

ROXBURGH, J.: This summons raises a question on the construction of the will of Austin O'Connor who died on Nov. 20, 1946. The first question

I have to decide is: "Whether the legacy of 10,000 preference shares of £1 each in the capital of J. & K. Connor, Ltd., is a specific legacy or a general legacy." The second question asked by the summons is:

(a) If the said legacy is a general legacy, then whether the plaintiff, as executor of the said will, ought to purchase (at the proper price to be determined by the company's auditors in accordance with art. 31 of the company's articles) 1,000 such shares with a view to causing them to be transferred to . . . Austin Henry O'Connor. (b) Alternatively, whether the plaintiff ought out of the testator's residuary estate to pay to the said Austin Henry O'Connor an amount equal to the proper value of 1,000 such shares such value being determined as aforesaid or in some (and what) other manner.

By his will of Aug. 5, 1942, the testator provided:

5. I bequeath to my said son [Austin Henry O'Connor] (free of duty) 10,000 preference shares of £1 each fully paid in the capital of J. & K. Connor, Ltd. . . . 7. I devise and bequeath all my real estate of every tenure and all my personal estate and effects whatsoever and whosoever not hereby otherwise disposed of (including as well real as personal estate over which I may have any general power of appointment or disposition by will) unto the bank upon trust that the bank shall sell call in collect and convert into money the said real and personal estate and premises at such time or times and in such manner as it shall think fit but as to reversionary property not until it falls into possession unless it shall appear to the bank that an earlier sale would be beneficial. 8. The bank shall out of the moneys to arise from the sale calling in and conversion of or forming part of my said real and personal estate pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and the pecuniary legacies hereinbefore bequeathed and all duties whatsoever payable upon my property at my decease and shall invest the residue of the said moneys . . .

The testator was the manager and governing director of J. & K. Connor, Ltd., which carried on the business of wholesale and export manufacturing milliners and hat manufacturers. The capital of the company was £150,000 divided into 105,000 ordinary shares of £1 each and 45,000 preference shares of £1 each carrying a cumulative preference dividend of 7 per cent. per annum. The company's articles contain usual provisions under which a member wishing to transfer his shares must, in effect, offer them to the other shareholders. If the other shareholders between them desire to purchase more shares than are to be sold, the shares offered are to be divided between them rateably according to their respective holdings. If only one shareholder desires to purchase the shares offered he may purchase all of them. Under art. 31 the purchase price is to be determined, in default of agreement of the parties, by arbitration of the company's auditors. At the testator's death, the preference shares were held as follows:—(a) 9,000 were held by the testator; (b) 25,000 were held by the testator and Algernon Lionel Collins as trustees of a trust deed dated Oct. 8, 1931, under which the beneficiaries were the testator's children and their issue; (c) the remaining 11,000 shares were held by J. & K. Connor (Luton), Ltd., a subsidiary of the company. At the date of his death, the testator held 85,000 ordinary shares of the company. After the death of the testator the bank approached the subsidiary company to inquire whether they would be prepared to sell to the bank 1,000 preference shares of the company, and if so, at what price. J. & K. Connor (Luton), Ltd., stated that it would be willing to sell such shares at the proper value thereof to be ascertained under art. 31. The bank also asked the two trustees of the trust deed to which I have referred whether they would be prepared to sell to the bank 1,000 preference shares in the company. They declined to do so, but stated in writing that they would not wish to exercise any right which they might have to buy part of the 1,000 preference shares which J. & K. Connor (Luton), Ltd., would be prepared to sell to the bank.

The question which I have to determine is whether this legacy of 10,000 preference shares of £1 each is a general legacy or a specific legacy, and there are two points in favour of either view. In favour of it being a general legacy is the fact that there is nothing in the language of cl. 5 of the will to indicate that the testator is describing specific property of his. For example, the testator does not use the word "my" or any possessive word at all. The second point, a very strong one, in favour of the legacy being general, is that the testator never had 10,000 preference shares either at the date of his will or at the date of his death, but only 9,000, and, accordingly, if he did intend by this clause to make a specific disposition of his own property, he must have been misinformed as to the extent of that property. The two points in favour of the legacy being specific are, first, the circumstance that the bequest deals with a private company of which the testator was the manager and governing director and in which the shares were subject to the restrictions usual in the case of a private company, and, secondly—and this is very important—the testator clearly did not include the disposition in cl. 5 of the preference shares among the dispositions which his executors and trustees were to satisfy out of residue. It will be remembered that the direction to the trustees in cl. 8 was that out of the moneys arising from the sale, calling in and conversion they were to pay the pecuniary legacies thereinbefore bequeathed. The property devised and bequeathed in the trust for sale was the property “not hereby otherwise disposed of.” Seeing that the testator introduces cl. 6 by the words, “I bequeath the following pecuniary legacies,” I cannot, as a matter of construction of the will, hold that the testator was treating this bequest of the preference shares as included in the phrase “pecuniary legacy” and as one which was to be satisfied out of residue. I should reach that conclusion notwithstanding that “pecuniary legacy” is so defined in the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, as to include a general legacy. Though it is so defined for the purposes of that Act, as a matter of construction I do not think that that phrase “pecuniary legacy” was intended to include a general legacy in this will.

In the circumstances, what ought I to hold? There is no doubt that the court leans strongly in favour of a general legacy. How strongly is apparent from Re Willcocks (1). If the testator, instead of referring to 10,000 preference shares, had referred to 9,000 or less preference shares in cl. 5, I should have held that there was sufficient context here to carry me to the other side of the line, notwithstanding the leaning of the court to which I have referred, but it is impossible to construe this will without doing some violence to some of its language. If the argument of counsel for the second defendant that this is a specific legacy is right, I must treat the 10,000 as a falsa demonstratio. If the argument advanced by counsel for the first defendant is right, I must treat the testator as having forgotten to include the bequest in cl. 5 within the description of “pecuniary legacy,” another falsa demonstratio. Having regard to the leaning of the court in these matters, between these two falsae demonstrationes I decide in favour of the first defendant that this is a general legacy, and that the falsa demonstratio lies in the use of the word “pecuniary” and not in the use of the word “ten.”

That brings me to another difficult question. In Robinson v. Addison (2) the facts were (2 Beav. 515):

A testator having fifteen and a half Leeds and Liverpool canal shares, which by Act of Parliament were to be deemed personal estate, bequeathed five and a half such canal shares to A, five such shares to B, and five such shares to C. There was no description or reference in the will to show that the testator intended to give the particular shares which he held at the date of his will. At his death he possessed no Leeds and Liverpool canal shares: HELD, that the legacies were general, and not specific.

It is important to observe what was prayed in that case (ibid., 517):

The plaintiffs by this bill insisted, that the bequests of the canal shares were general and not specific legacies; the bill prayed a declaration to that effect, and that they were entitled to have so much money as at the end of one year from the testator's decease would have been sufficient for the purchase of fifteen and a half shares, according to the current market price, with interest thereon.

LORD LANGDALE, M.R., decided that it was a general legacy and he said (ibid., 520):

As to the nature of the property, the canal and lands are vested in a corporation. The lands were purchased, and the canal constructed by means of money raised by subscriptions. The capital so raised is divided into 2,600 shares, which are to be deemed personal estate, and to be transmissible as such; and the shares, though not frequently sold, are nevertheless occasionally bought and sold, and may be had for money, and the question is, whether the legacy, if it be not otherwise specific, is made so by reason of the nature of this property. . . . The testator had no share in the canal at the time of his death, though he had the means by which the shares might have been obtained; and conceiving that the words of his will are not such as to indicate that he meant to give the particular shares at the date of his will, it is to be considered what he did give. He intended his legatees to have so many canal shares, but not giving the specific shares that he had, he gave nothing which was distinguished or severed from the rest of the testator's estate, but in effect gave such an indefinite sum of money as would suffice to purchase so many shares as he had given, those shares being any such shares as could be purchased, and not certain particular and defined shares.

A Counsel for the third defendant, with the most laudable industry, has obtained from the Record Office the order in that case. It is as follows :

The court declares that the several persons entitled to the legacy are entitled to have so much money paid out of the general estate and effects of the testator as, at the end of the twelve calendar months next after the decease of the testator, would have been sufficient to purchase the said shares.

B That case, and the order made, seem to make it quite clear that the material date for this purpose is twelve calendar months from the death of the testator. The evidence before me indicates the possibility, though not the certainty, that the additional 1,000 shares could have been acquired before the expiration of twelve months, and if it were possible to do so it may be—I do not decide that today—that the legatee is still entitled to say: "I want the shares whatever they cost today." That is a point I reserve for future consideration if it arises. C If, on the other hand, it was not possible to purchase the shares before the end of twelve calendar months after the death of the testator, then it appears to me that the legatee was entitled to such a sum as at that date would have been required to purchase the shares in question with interest at 4 per cent. per annum from that date. I do not think that in the present case there is any difficulty in ascertaining the value of the shares at the date in question because the articles contain a provision which regulates the ascertainment of the price of the shares at any particular date on the footing that D there is a willing vendor and a willing purchaser, but that they are in disagreement as to the price. It seems to me that that machinery is clearly the proper machinery to use to ascertain the price at the appropriate date. It may be that the parties would be able to obviate this difficulty by agreement, but it appears to me that I am really bound to direct an inquiry whether or not it was possible to obtain these shares before twelve months after the death of the testator, E because, if it was, there will arise the difficult question which I reserve for future consideration, whereas, if it was not, that question will not arise. Accordingly, I propose to direct an inquiry whether it was possible to obtain 1,000 shares within twelve months. The testator's estate already includes 9,000 shares and there would be no difficulty in transferring them. I direct an inquiry whether it would have been possible to obtain 1,000 preference shares F within twelve calendar months from the death of the testator and, if so, at what price, and, if it was not possible to obtain the shares in the period aforesaid, what would have been the price which would at the expiration of the said period have had to be paid under the articles of association of the company on the footing that there was a willing vendor and a willing purchaser who were, however, unable to agree as to the price.

G Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client payable out of the estate.

Solicitors: Wild, Collins & Crosse (for the plaintiff); Downer & Lewis (for the defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PEARSON v. COLEMAN BROTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Evershed, L.JJ.),
June 17, 18, 21, 22, 1948.]

Animal—Liability of persons keeping dangerous animals—Lion—Injury to child—Invitee—Child visiting circus—Entering adjoining “zoo” by unauthorised way—Need to relieve herself—No lavatory provided—Child acting reasonably—Insufficient indication of prohibited area.

The plaintiff, a girl aged 7, was visiting a travelling circus owned by the defendants. The circus tent was pitched in an open field and the entrance money was taken, not at the field gate entrance, but at the entrance to the circus tent. In the same field and adjoining the circus, but having its own entrance, was a “zoo” which was an enclosure formed by the waggons belonging to the circus being placed around in a lager, the gaps between the waggons being filled with canvas strips. A lorry, on which there was a lions’ cage, stood in the “zoo” enclosure, close to the circus tent, so that the lions could be brought from the cage into the arena of the circus when they were on show, and, for this purpose, a runway, protected by bars, was provided, leading from an opening in the cage, down an inclined plane into the circus tent. At the lorry end of the runway there was a considerable space underneath it. On the door of the lions’ cage was written in large letters: “Lions, danger.” The cage was faced with bars, but there was a space between, or underneath, the bars, through which the lions could put their paws and claw anyone within reach. While watching the circus, the plaintiff wished to relieve herself and, since no lavatory accommodation was provided, she slipped out of the circus tent, under the canvas behind her seat, to find a quiet corner to which she could retire. Apparently, she went round the circus tent, entered the “zoo” enclosure, not by the authorised entrance, but by crawling under the canvas or fencing, and came to the runway, which she tried to crawl under. As she was passing under the runway, near the lions’ cage, a lion put out his paw from the cage and mauled her. In an action by the plaintiff claiming damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendants, the defendants contended that they were not liable because the plaintiff was a trespasser when she received the injuries:—

HELD: the proper inference from the evidence was that the only persons whom the defendants were inviting or licensing to enter the “zoo” were persons who entered through the authorised entrance, and, therefore, a person who entered by some other entrance could not, in general, be regarded as an invitee or licensee, but the plaintiff had entered the defendants’ property as an invitee, and, as (a) she was a little girl anxious to relieve herself, (b) no lavatory accommodation was provided, (c) the particular place to which she went was a suitable one for her purpose, and (d) vis-a-vis a child in those circumstances, the prohibited area had not been adequately marked off from the area into which she was entitled to go, she must be regarded as an invitee at the time and place that she was injured, and, therefore, the defendants, as keepers of a dangerous animal, were liable to her in damages.

Gould v. McAuliffe ([1941] 2 All E.R. 527), applied.

R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck ([1929] A.C. 358), distinguished.

[AS TO LIABILITY FOR INJURIES BY DANGEROUS ANIMALS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 543, 544, paras. 933, 934; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 2, pp. 236-238, Nos. 238-244.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) May v. Burdett, (1846), 9 Q.B. 101; 16 L.J.Q.B. 64; 7 L.T.O.S. 253; 2 Digest 237, 240.
- (2) Glasgow Corpn. v. Taylor, [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 36 Digest 70 453.
- (3) Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck, [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; Digest Supp.
- (4) Gould v. McAuliffe, [1941] 2 All E.R. 527; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order of His Honour DEPUTY JUDGE ELLISTON, at Clacton County Court, dated Oct. 15, 1947, in an action for damages for personal injuries.

The plaintiff, a girl of 7, was mauled by a lion belonging to the defendants, circus proprietors. The defendants were served with the summons, but did not appear at the hearing of the action. The county court judge held that the plaintiff was a trespasser at the time she received the injuries, and dismissed the action. On the appeal by the plaintiff to the Court of Appeal, the defendants applied for a new trial, but their application was refused. The Court of Appeal now held that the plaintiff was an invitee when she received the injuries, and allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R.

Jukes and Caulfield for the plaintiff.

Rees-Davies and J. F. E. Stephenson for the defendants.

LORD GREENE, M.R. : This is a most unusual case and it is important, for its correct decision, to scrutinise the facts very carefully, because there is here a combination of facts which, in my opinion, together lead inevitably to a certain legal conclusion. The result might be different if some of those facts were missing. The infant plaintiff, being then of the age of 7 years, went with her elder sister, aged 12, to visit a travelling circus owned by the defendants, Coleman Brothers, which is the trade name in which the proprietors, a Major and Mrs. Fawset, carry on business as circus proprietors. The circus was at Clacton-on-Sea in June, 1947, when the plaintiff was mauled by a lion belonging to the defendants, and her claim in the action against them was for damages. [The MASTER OF THE ROLLS dealt with an application by the defendants for a new trial, said that to order a new trial now would be to inflict great injustice on the infant plaintiff, and continued :] At the material time the circus was located in an open field at Clacton-on-Sea. There was a gate entrance to the field in which the circus tent was pitched and a "zoo" laid out. From that entrance gate there was a way—whether it was hedged, fenced, roped, or open, I do not know—leading to the entrance of the circus tent. The entrance money was taken at the entrance to the circus tent. The plaintiff and her sister were each in possession of 1s., which they paid at the entrance to the circus. The circus proprietors did not insist on small children being accompanied by adults, but in the ordinary way of the circus business the admission of small children without adults would be a perfectly proper thing. What was called the "zoo" was an enclosure of a rough and ready kind, made up of a sort of lager, in which the waggons belonging to the show were put round, the intervals between them being filled by canvas strips. On the south side of this enclosure, there was a more or less continuous barrier of a rough and ready kind formed by canvas strips, caravans and waggons put close together, and a runged fence. The north side of the "zoo" enclosure, which appears to be called the pony enclosure, was backed with canvas, and contained a large lions' den, faced with bars and protected (as, at any rate, to part of it) by a rope on posts designed to keep the public at some distance from the actual bars of the cage. There was a definite entrance to the "zoo" enclosure, but access to the enclosure was also possible by persons agile enough to crawl under the canvas or under the caravans and waggons. Nevertheless, it is clear that the proper licensed entrance to the "zoo" was the one I have mentioned, and any person who got into the "zoo" by crawling underneath the canvas or the caravans would be doing something that was not authorised by the proprietors. The lions' cage was carried on, or, possibly, built on to the chassis of, a lorry, and, on the east side of the den or cage, there was a door (apparently made of wood) on which was written in large letters "Lions, danger." The lorry on which the lions' cage stood was parked close to the circus tent, the object being to enable the lions to be brought from the cage into the arena of the circus when they were going to be on show. In order that it might be possible to bring them from the cage to the arena, what has been called a runway was provided, leading from an opening in the den itself, down an inclined plane, into the circus tent. This runway was protected by bars. It was inclined at an angle of something like twenty degrees, and at one end there was a considerable space underneath it, the eastern end of the runway leaning on the top of the chassis of the lorry.

Some questions arose in the hearing before us as to the exact area under the control and management of the circus proprietors in connection with the circus and "zoo." It was suggested that control did not extend to the whole of the open field in which the circus and the "zoo" were pitched. That point was mentioned by the learned deputy judge in his judgment, where he said: "There was no evidence that the defendants had any control beyond the confines of their show." That leaves open what the judge held the confines to be. The phrase is obviously a vague one. The circus tent itself was held in position by a number of guy ropes in the usual fashion fastened to pegs put in the ground a considerable distance away from the tent, leaving ample passage for anyone to walk underneath them. The whole of the area covered by that apparatus must have been under the control of the defendants. Photographs also show a lorry parked outside the lions' cage and close to the circus tent, obviously within the area of control of the defendants. It appears to me, therefore, and this is material in my view of the argument, that a person walking round the tent within an area covered by the guy ropes, was within the area which was controlled by the circus proprietors. In my view, when the learned county court judge used the phrase "the confines of their show," he intended to include the area surrounding the "zoo" and the tent which it was necessary for the proprietors to control in order effectively to set up their show.

The plaintiff gave evidence at the trial but she was not able to do so in any great detail, and she could not explain how it was that the accident happened. It did emerge, however, and the judge found, that the actual place where the lion clawed the plaintiff was close to the point where the runway left the lions' cage. There was no question of the plaintiff getting into the cage or into an area where the lions were loose. The accident happened because there was a space between the bars of the lions' cage or underneath the row of bars through which the lions could put their paws and claw anyone within reach. It is said, and I am prepared to believe it, that in the ordinary way the rope surround, to which I have referred, would be sufficient to keep the public from the risk of danger through any such action by the lions. That may well be, but it is perfectly clear that the plaintiff, at the point where the lion struck her, had not the benefit of any adequate protection against the lions which were quite able to reach out with their paws and claw her. From the evidence of the plaintiff's father, who was called on behalf of the plaintiff, it is clear that the plaintiff crawled, or tried to crawl, under the runway, and we must take it that she obtained access to the point near the lions' cage where she was mauled, not by the regular entrance to the "zoo" enclosure, but by crawling in some way to that point through some other orifice. That matter is important in view of a suggestion by counsel for the plaintiff that she may have entered the "zoo" by the authorised entrance.

I now come to another and, in my opinion, most important circumstance in this case. In obtaining access to the point where she was injured, the plaintiff was not merely wandering about or actuated by curiosity. While sitting watching the circus, she had a need to relieve herself, and to do so she got out of the circus tent, very likely by crawling under the canvas body of the tent. Before I read the judge's finding as to how she got to the point where she was, I must say one more word about the lay-out. The "zoo" was laid out to the west of the circus tent. I have mentioned the runway leading from the lions' cage and the piece of fence which, together with the waggons and the canvas strips, formed one side of the "zoo" enclosure. That piece of fence was at the runway end of the enclosure. It was a runged fence, and at one point next to the runway the rungs had either been taken away or, at any rate, had disappeared. The facts, as found by the judge, on the question of how the plaintiff got there are as follows:

During the show she desired to relieve herself and left her place to seek a quiet corner to which she could retire. Apparently, she got out of the circus tent through the canvas at the back of her seat. At any rate, in the course of her search she appears to have followed round the circus tent and the "zoo" lager till she came to a fence which extended up to the runway.

I will pause there for a moment. That hypothesis, which the judge accepts as the probable one, means that she passed round the north of the circus tent, round the north of the "zoo" enclosure, rounded the south side of the "zoo" enclosure, and approached the runway by means of the runged fence, which is what the judge referred to as the "fence which extended up to the runway." Now comes the second possible view, which he states :

It may be that she did not, in fact, complete the whole outer circuit of the "zoo" lager, but that she approached the runway from the other side, from the back of the lions' cage.

A That would mean that she came in on the north side of the runway, not on the south side as she would have done if she had approached through the runged fence. The judge appears to regard this as the less probable of the two views. The judge then refers to the fact that on the end of the lions' cage "Lions, danger," was painted in conspicuous lettering, and he says :

The difference of approach appears to me immaterial, as in either case she came to the runway through some sort of fencing from one side or the other and attempted to crawl under it.

B I find the judge's reference to "some sort of fencing" on the north side of the runway difficult to follow, because there is, at any rate, no suggestion of it in the evidence. The only fencing which appears, so far as the evidence is concerned, is the runged fence which leads up to the runway on the south, more or less at right-angles.

C As she was passing under the runway, the caged lion put out his paw from the cage front at the side of which the plaintiff was attempting to pass, and she received the injuries for which she is claiming damages.

It is clear, therefore, that she was mauled by the lion at a point which is really the south-eastern corner of the cage, and either when she was trying to get under the runway from the south, or, if she got in from the north, just after she had passed under the runway—the learned judge says it matters not which it was.

D Before I read further, I want to say something about the notice on the lions' cage, because a good deal of argument was based on it. It is clear that, if the hypothesis as to the line of approach which the learned judge preferred was the right one, the plaintiff would not have read that notice, even if she could read. If, on the other hand, she approached not from the south but from the north and had seen the notice, which would have been high up above her head, and could read and understand it, it is right to say that the notice was clearly intended only as a warning to persons who might be minded to open the doors that they would find lions inside. It is clear that it was not intended as a warning to persons that lions in the cage might get their paws through the bars and injure people. In the circumstances of this case, I myself attach no importance to that notice. To read it as a warning to herself, the plaintiff, assuming that she could read it, must have interpreted it as indicating that anywhere near the cage she would be in danger, whether she opened the doors or not. It would have to indicate to her that there were lions there who could get their paws through what, to a child, I should have thought, would have seemed to be an adequate barrier, and, further, it would have meant that she must form a just estimate of the reach of the lion's paw and the extent to which she would be in danger if she passed near it. The notice was not put up for any such purpose, it was not put up to warn people of any such danger, and, in my opinion, it could not have been so interpreted by the plaintiff, even assuming that she went in by the north and even assuming that she could look up and read it.

G I think I have mentioned all the necessary facts except one. Nowhere in the evidence is there any suggestion that the proprietors of the circus had provided any lavatory accommodation for their patrons. The little girl says she looked for a lavatory and could not find one. It is true that the judge does not, in terms, find there was not a lavatory, but the fact that there was no lavatory available for the little girl to go to is implicit in the whole of his judgment. Had there been a lavatory provided, it would, very likely, have afforded a short answer to the whole case.

H The arguments put before us by counsel for the plaintiff were three. First, it was said that this was a case of a dangerous animal, and the fact that the plaintiff was mauled by that animal was sufficient to throw on the defendants the burden of proving that they were not to be held liable for the injury, and if, in fact, the plaintiff was a trespasser, it was for the defendants to prove it.

That argument, in my opinion, does not succeed on the facts, because we have sufficient evidence to enable us to determine whether the plaintiff was or was not a trespasser at that point. The judge held that she was, and, if the true conclusion is that she was a trespasser, the question of onus of proof appears to me to be irrelevant. If facts established by the plaintiff herself show her to be a trespasser, then the obligation of the defendants must be treated on that footing, and it is impossible to put on them a greater obligation than the law insists they should be under, with regard to trespassers on their land.

Next it was said: "Here is a 'zoo' enclosure. This little girl was in it. No matter how she got there, when she was in the enclosure she was entitled to be there, because it was a place to which the public was invited, or, at any rate, licensed, to go." It was said that there was no evidence that a separate charge was exacted for persons visiting the "zoo," but that the evidence was consistent with the view that a person who had paid his shilling to go to the circus thereby became entitled to go to the "zoo," and that, therefore, the plaintiff, being in the "zoo," was in a place where she was entitled to be in any circumstances. I do not myself think that that argument can be sustained, and for these reasons. Assuming either that entrance to the "zoo" was free or that the shilling paid for entrance to the circus also secured admission to the "zoo," the proper inference from the plan appears to be that the only persons whom the proprietors were inviting or licensing to enter the "zoo" were persons who entered through the authorised entrance. Therefore, a person who, to visit the "zoo," entered by some other entrance, could not, in general, be regarded as an invitee or a licensee. That is a sensible conclusion, it appears to me, having regard to the lay-out of the "zoo," in which pains have obviously been taken, in a rough and ready way, to stop persons getting into the "zoo" otherwise than by the authorised entrance. It must be remembered, in dealing with a concern of this kind, and, possibly, with a crowd of people, that it is very important that the proprietors should have some entrance where they can station somebody to control the entrants.

The third argument is one on which, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. It is of this nature. Whatever would have been the position of the plaintiff if she had arrived at that point by the route she took merely out of curiosity or if she were simply wandering, the explanation of her presence at that point is of a very different character. There was no place provided by the defendants where she could relieve herself, and, therefore, it was said, whatever her status would have been in other circumstances, on the facts of this case she must be regarded as being rightfully there by implied licence or invitation, having regard to the facts which I have mentioned, viz., that she was looking for a quiet place in which to relieve herself, that she had sought for one and could not find one, and that the particular place was obviously such a quiet place as one would expect a little girl of seven with ordinary delicacy of feeling to select. There was one argument put forward by counsel for the defendants which attempted to meet that argument half way. He said that there was no evidence that when she was at the point where she was mauled—crawling either under the runway from the north, or through the fence from the south—she had not already done what she left the tent to do. It appears to me that the learned judge entirely destroys that argument by his findings. He makes it clear that she had not done what she wanted to do and that she went to the point where she was injured for the very purpose of performing that act. The judge refers to her coming up to the fence on the south "in the course of her search." The "search" was for a quiet corner to which she could retire, and there is not a particle of suggestion anywhere in the judgment that that search was satisfactorily concluded before she came to the place where she was injured.

This is not a case similar to the common class of case where children, being on A's land or on the public highway, go on to B's land in circumstances where normally they would be trespassers. In that class of case the facts may lead the court to infer an invitation or a licence by the owner of the land to go on to his land. Such an inference is much more easily drawn where, with the knowledge of the landlord, children have been in the habit of trespassing on his land. In cases of that kind, the problem is to find out the point in place or time at which the children become trespassers. Here it seems to me that the problem is entirely different. The problem is not to find out when the little girl became a trespasser, but to find out when she ceased to be an invitee. She began as an invitee. She paid her shilling. She was invited to a place where anyone would know that among the spectators in a circus of that kind there would be bound, from time to time, to be people who would find it necessary to go outside somewhere and relieve themselves. No place was provided for that purpose. It does not surprise me to suppose that, at a country circus put down in a field, the patrons are expected to look after themselves and find some place where they can satisfy their needs. This is not a London cinema, and the rustic and primitive method of dealing with such an emergency would be perfectly natural and one could well understand that that was what the proprietors contemplated. That being so, we have got the case, not of an adult, but of a little girl, confronted with such a necessity, doing what was the natural thing for her to do. Going outside the circus tent, she looks, as the judge says, for a quiet place, and she does not find one until she comes to the runway, either from the north or from the south. What does she find when she gets there? She finds what would to a little girl of seven be the ideal place for her purpose, a little space into which she could crawl, do what she wanted to do, and then come out without being seen. I have mentioned what seems to me to be the crucial fact, that she starts by being an invitee, and the argument was that at a certain point she ceased to be an invitee and became a trespasser. That such a thing can happen, of course, is manifest, but the question is: Did it happen in this case?

The learned deputy judge dealt with the first two arguments that I have mentioned. He rejected the first one, viz., that it was sufficient for the plaintiff to prove damage, and he referred to May v. Burdett (1) and Glasgow Corpn. v. Taylor (2), where the child ate some poisonous berries in a public park. He found that neither of those cases assisted the plaintiff on the first branch of her argument. Then comes what I read as his ground for rejecting the second argument, which he describes in this way:

It was further contended that the plaintiff was an invitee to the whole of the circus and "zoo" outlay.

That second argument was that the child was entitled to be in the "zoo" enclosure because she had paid to go into the circus, quite irrespective of the purpose that led her there. He read R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck (3) which he said was not referred to in argument, and held, following the well-known words of LORD HAILSHAM, L.C. ([1929] A.C. 358, 364) in that case: "that there was no 'invitation, express or implied' for the plaintiff to approach or pass under the runway." He was finding, really, on the authority of R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck (3) that the plaintiff must be regarded as a trespasser when she was in the place where she was. R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck (3) was a case of a quite different character. It was a case of the class to which I referred a little while ago of children, not starting as invitees on the defendant's land, but coming in from outside, at any rate prima facie, as mere trespassers. The problem there was that of finding out at what point in time or place they ceased to be trespassers. The problem here is to find out at what point in time or place the plaintiff ceased to be what she started by being, an invitee on the defendants' land. I cannot help thinking that, with all the care which the deputy county court judge obviously paid to this case, he misdirected himself in thinking that R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck (3) was an authority which, on the facts, justified or compelled him to find that the plaintiff was a trespasser at the material stage of her search. The deputy county court judge said:

There was no invitation express or implied to the plaintiff to approach or pass under the runway. I hold that the plaintiff was not, at the point where the injury occurred, present there with the leave and licence of the defendants. I further hold that, at the time she approached and endeavoured to pass under the runway, the plaintiff became a trespasser and disentitled from recovering damages.

I read that as meaning that, down to the point when she was close to the runway, she was acting in accordance with the original invitation, but, whether or not that is what the learned judge meant, that appears to me to be the only possible conclusion from the facts. She was invited to a place where there was no lavatory, and, seeking for one and moving within the part controlled by the defendants and not finding any place, she arrived near the runway. It seems to me impossible to say from that that she was a trespasser the moment she got out of the circus tent. What was she to do? Counsel for the defendants could only suggest that she might have found an attendant. We do not know what attendants were there, where they were located, and whether it was possible for a little child to get hold of one in a crowded circus tent. She could not remain where she was, and, therefore, it seems to me that the only proper inference was (and, I think, the judge is drawing it) that, at any rate up to the crucial point when she decided to crawl under the runway, she was there pursuant to the original invitation.

Now there comes what, to my mind, is the really important point and, from the legal point of view, the most interesting part of this case. The defendants occupied two adjoining pieces of land, the circus and the "zoo." There was an invitation to these children to go to the circus. A person who has two pieces of land and invites the public to come to one of them can, if he chooses, limit the invitation to that one, but, if the other is contiguous to that piece and he does not indicate to his invitees that his invitation is confined to the one piece of land, he cannot be surprised if they treat his invitation as pertaining to both pieces. In my opinion, if a land owner is minded to mark out part of his land as a prohibited area, he must indicate to his invitees by appropriate means that it is a prohibited area. It is no good his coming afterwards and saying: "You were not allowed to go on that piece," if, in point of fact, he had done nothing adequate to show that the second piece of land was a prohibited area. Whether or not proper and sufficient steps have been taken to delimit the prohibited area must depend on the facts of individual cases. Looking at the "zoo," which in this case is said to be a prohibited area, I find what I have described as a rough and ready manner of marking it off and indicating that nobody ought to go in there unless he goes through the proper entrance. To an adult it might well be regarded as sufficient indication that the area of the "zoo" is a prohibited area and is not to be accessible to anyone who does not go through the proper entrance. We are, however, not dealing here with an adult, nor are we dealing with a child who is moving about out of mere curiosity or without any reason. We are dealing with a child in a condition which must have been contemplated as reasonably possible by the proprietors of the circus, namely, the condition of being under an urgent necessity to find a quiet place in which to relieve herself. I ask myself, having regard to the fact that among the invitees of the defendants there were likely to be children needing to relieve themselves, whether, in relation to that class of person, the steps taken at the point in question to delimit the prohibited area of the "zoo" were or were not adequate. In my opinion, the facts speak for themselves. So far from indicating sufficiently to a child bent on such an errand that she must not go in, there is displayed before her what is clearly not a prohibition, but a temptation. It is obvious that, to a little girl seeking for a quiet place, here is the ideal quiet place. It seems to me quite impossible to say that the prohibited area had, vis-a-vis a child of that kind in those circumstances, been adequately marked off by the defendants from the area into which the child was entitled to go. On the evidence, however the matter might have stood with regard to someone who merely came on the field as a trespasser and chose to go into that place, the position, in view of the fact that the plaintiff started as an invitee, can only lead to the conclusion that the invitation must be taken as extending impliedly to a place of this kind to which she would reasonably go in the need in which she was.

It will be observed that I have been careful to consider all the relevant facts of the case as they appear to me—the fact of her need, the fact of her age, the fact that no lavatory was provided, the fact that she made a circuit round the tent and found nothing, and the fact that she did find a very attractive place in the end. The combination of all those facts is what leads me inevitably to the conclusion that the defendants cannot succeed. I say nothing of what the position would have been in the case of an adult who had found himself in a similar need. If he had followed the same route as this girl and had crawled through the fence or under the runway, he might very well have been met with the answer: "To you, an adult, it was quite indicated that this was a prohibited area." In the case of adults it can scarcely be necessary to stop up every hole through which they could possibly crawl. Adults are not expected to crawl.

That might have been the answer, but I say nothing about it. I merely refer to it as showing the importance of paying due regard to all the facts of the case. Again, I say nothing about what would have happened if this little girl, being bored with the circus performance, had chosen to go out for no particular reason except curiosity and wandered into the "zoo." In the circumstances, she being under a compelling need, for the satisfaction of which a convenient and inviting aperture was left in what was intended to be an enclosure of the "zoo," she is, in my opinion, justified in saying that the invitation must be taken, in her case, to have extended to this point. I think I have said sufficient to explain why, in my opinion, the appeal is entitled to succeed. The conclusion that I have come to is based on what seems to me to be the only possible inference in law on the facts of this case. Accordingly, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed and to have judgment for the amount which the judge found for damages for what she suffered.

WROTTESELEY, L.J. : I agree. In two respects this case differs from the facts usually to be found in the cases which have been decided relating to children who are prima facie trespassers and in the course of their trespass get hurt. We start with a child who was clearly invited, on terms of paying, to an entertainment provided for children and others by the defendants. At the other end of the story, there was within the general lay-out of the premises where the entertainment was provided a dangerous animal, a lion. If the child was lawfully at the point where she was when she was clawed by the lion, it is not necessary to prove that the injuries were due to negligence on the part of the defendants. To that case the defendants were responsible. Those who keep such animals do so, in that sense, at their peril. On the facts narrated by my Lord, I also have come to the conclusion that the learned county court judge, in finding that there was no invitation express or implied, did not apply his mind to the true test in the peculiar circumstances of this case, the true test being : Did this child, having been invited on to these premises, behave like a normal child and reasonably ? We know that she tried to find what she called a lavatory, and we know that she could not find one. We also know that in the search she came within range of a lion's paw and that she got there either after walking round the north of the circus tent and on round the "zoo" lager (in which case she would come to a hole in the fence, a fence which was a skeleton of a fence without rungs, and that was what the learned judge thought was the more probable course in the circumstances of the case), or else, having gone round the tent, she came to a place by which she could pass under the runway and so reach the spot where she was hurt. In any event, it does not matter, as the learned county court judge said, which route she took. It is clear that she came on what she was looking for, a secluded corner, to which she went, as I think everyone must agree, naturally and reasonably, and there she was mauled.

Of the various cases cited to the court, the one which appears to me to come nearest to the facts of this case is Gould v. McAuliffe (4), a decision of this court. That was the case of an adult, while the case which we have before us is the case of a child, and in that sense an a fortiori case. If the plaintiff in that case could be said to have behaved reasonably, it seems to me this child must be admitted to have behaved reasonably. Something was said, although I cannot find anything about it in the evidence, about the fact that the plaintiff had with her an elder sister, aged about 12 years. In my view, it does not seem to have affected the judge's mind, but, even if she had an elder sister with her, acting as what is often called a "little mother," there is no reason to suppose that the elder sister would have guided the plaintiff to any spot other than that to which the plaintiff guided herself. Thus, the result was—in the words of SCOTT, L.J., ([1941] 2 All E.R. 527, 528) in Gould v. McAuliffe (4)—that "by implication the plaintiff was invited to do what, in fact, she did do," and, if not invited, she was at least licensed to wander and find, if she could, a secluded place. Another argument used by counsel for the defendants was that there was no duty, and none could be found in this case, imposed on the defendants to supply lavatory accommodation. I agree with him, but, with such accommodation failing, owners must expect their patrons to wander and look for a suitable secluded place. It is to be noted that the learned county court judge did not find that the plaintiff became a trespasser in the course of her search. In fact, he found that she did not become a trespasser until the time at which she approached and intended to pass under the runway. She was, therefore, even on the learned county court judge's view, not a trespasser but an invitee, or, at least, she had a licensed right up to that time. It appears to me clear that the mere fact that the plaintiff passed through the hole in the fence could not render her a trespasser in the circumstances of this case, engaged as she was in the search for a secluded spot. Still less was she a trespasser if she crept under the runway, as she did if she came from the north side of the plan.

EVERSHED, L.J.: I also agree. This case must be decided on its own special and particular facts. Those facts are rendered all the more special and particular by reason of the neglect on the part of the defendants to defend the action or to appear at its trial. The only witnesses, therefore, were the plaintiff, a small child of seven, whose recollection of the incident was not, perhaps naturally enough, very extensive, and her father, not present at the time, who had a sketch plan of the premises. The case must be decided on these limited facts. The questions of fact have been fully stated by the MASTER of THE ROLLS and I do not desire to repeat what he has said. There is no question here of any issue or dispute as to the facts, or of our being asked to depart in any way from a finding of fact by the county court judge. As I follow his judgment, having carefully stated the matters of fact, he decided, as a question of law, that the plaintiff was disentitled to relief by reason of the inference he drew that, at the point where this incident occurred, she was a trespasser. He arrived at that conclusion after stating the classification of LORD HAILSHAM, L.C. ([1929] A.C. 358, 364), of persons visiting premises, in R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck (3). Having noted the lay-out of the "zoo," the county court judge thought that any person being in there for any purpose must be a trespasser at the point where this accident occurred. If, for example, an adult had crept under the canvas screen to view the lions' cage without going through the proper entrance, so avoiding paying an entrance fee, and had been found to be a trespasser, then it must follow that all persons, whatever their age or purpose, must also be trespassers. In my view, that was an erroneous conclusion of law, with all respect to the county court judge. It seems to me that, if I invite persons on to my land, I cannot say that an invitee becomes a trespasser at some part of that land if he has entered that part in the reasonable and natural course of events, having regard to all the circumstances, including the age of the invitee and the purpose for which he goes to that part of the land. If I take steps clearly to mark off and distinguish that part of my place as what the MASTER of THE ROLLS has called a "prohibited area," then it may well be that any person found thereon would be a trespasser, because it would not be reasonable or natural for that person to have gone there. In this case, however, there was manifestly no such delimitation of a prohibited area as such, and it seems to me, therefore, that the plaintiff, going to this place for the purpose which she did and getting there by means of access which was perfectly natural for a child, and beginning as an invitee, did not become a trespasser. It follows, therefore, in my judgment, that the defendants are liable, as keepers of a dangerous beast, for a breach of their duty to the plaintiff to keep that beast so confined as to be incapable of doing damage.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Beaumont, Son & Rigden, agents for Charles E. White, Reynolds & Beecroft, Clacton-on-Sea (for the plaintiff); Vivash Robinson & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CLIFTON SECURITIES, LTD. v. HUNTLEY AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Denning, J.), June 14, 15, 1948.]

Execution—Stay—Effect—Lease determined by notice to quit—Judgment for possession stayed pending appeal as to validity of notice—Subsequent valid notice while stay still in operation—Rights of landlord.

The lessees of a workshop which formed part of a factory had a right of way to it through the factory and received their electricity, gas and water supplies through pipes laid in the factory. On Jan. 13, 1947, the lessors, the owners of the factory, obtained judgment for possession of the premises in the High Court on a notice to quit, the validity of which was disputed, a stay of execution being granted pending an appeal. The lessees did not give up possession. Early in May, 1947, before the Court of Appeal had given judgment affirming the judgment of the court below and while the stay of execution was still in force, the lessors cut off the supply of electricity, gas and water and shortly after barricaded the right of way. The plaintiffs brought an action for mesne profits. The defendants counter-claimed on the ground that they were entitled to undisturbed possession while the stay was in force, and sought damages for the cutting off of the supplies of electricity, gas and water :—

HELD : (i) the stay of execution only prevented the lessors from putting into operation the legal processes of execution on the judgment and did not affect the exercise of any rights and remedies they might have independent of the process of the court.

(ii) the lessees were trespassers and were not entitled to the rights conferred by the lease, and, therefore, they were not entitled to damages for the cutting off of the supplies of electricity, gas and water.

[AS TO STAY OF EXECUTION, see HALSBURY, Vol. 14, p. 31, para. 61; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 442-454, Nos. 252-363.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club, [1920] 1 K.B. 720; 89 L.J.K.B. 744; 122 L.T. 479; 31 Digest 548, 6945.
- (2) Jones v. Foley, [1891] 1 Q.B. 730; 60 L.J.Q.B. 464; 64 L.T. 538; 55 J.P. 521; 31 Digest 548, 6946.

ACTION for mesne profits, and counter-claim for damages for cutting off supplies of electricity, gas and water after a stay of execution of a judgment for possession had been granted pending appeal on the validity of a notice to quit and a second indisputably valid notice had been served. Judgment was given to the plaintiffs on both claim and counter-claim. The facts appear in the headnote and in the judgment.

Scarman for the plaintiffs.

Rees-Davies for the defendants.

DENNING, J. : On May 14, 1935, the plaintiffs let to the defendants a workshop at Leyton, which was part of their own factory premises. They gave the defendants a right of way to the workshop, and the electricity, gas and water for it came through pipes on the plaintiffs' own premises. There was a provision that the plaintiffs could, at the end of seven years or at any time after the seven years determine the lease by three calendar months' notice in writing. On Apr. 21, 1945, the plaintiffs served a notice to quit on the defendants, giving them three months' notice. The defendants did not quit. They made a claim under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for compensation, or, alternatively, for a new lease. That was heard and compensation in the sum of £150 was granted, but they did not go out. In November, 1946, the plaintiffs brought an action claiming possession and mesne profits. The action was heard before HENN COLLINS, J., on Jan. 13, 1947. He decided that the notice to quit was valid and the lease had been duly determined, and gave judgment for possession forthwith and for mesne profits at the rate of £150 a year up to date. The defendants asked for a stay of execution pending an appeal, which HENN COLLINS, J., granted. In the course of his judgment, however, HENN COLLINS, J., had said that, even if the original notice to quit had been invalid, the plaintiffs were in a position to give another three months' notice at any time, and so, in order to meet the possibility that the original notice to quit might be held by the Court of Appeal to be invalid, on Jan. 29, 1947, the plaintiffs gave another three months' notice to expire on May 1, 1947. It was then plain beyond doubt that the lease would come to an end on May 1, 1947. The case was not reached in the Court of Appeal by May 1, 1947. It is plain that after that date the defendants had no right to continue in occupation, but they did not quit. They remained in occupation although they had no possible colour of right to do so. Early in May, 1947, therefore, the plaintiffs cut off the gas, electricity and water supplies. Later in the same month they put up barricades across the right of way so that the defendants could not get to the workshop, but about the middle of May the defendants managed to get themselves re-instated in occupation and continued there until the end of June, 1947. The Court of Appeal then heard the appeal from the decision of HENN COLLINS, J., and it was affirmed. It was, therefore, again plain that the defendants had no colour of right to be where they were, but still they stayed. The Court of Appeal ordered them to be out in fourteen days, but they did not quit even then, and a warrant for possession had to be issued on July 15, 1947. Under the due process of the law, the defendants did eventually go from the premises they had occupied wrongly for so long.

The claim in this action is for mesne profits from Jan. 13, 1947—which was the date up to which HENN COLLINS, J., had given mesne profits—until the date when the defendants quitted in July, 1947. There is no doubt that in point of law the defendants were trespassers for that time, and that they can have no answer to this claim for mesne profits up to July 15, 1947. At what rate are the mesne profits to be assessed? When the rent represents the fair value of the premises, mesne profits are assessed at the amount of the rent, but, if the real value is higher than the rent, then the mesne profits must be assessed at the higher value. In this case, the real value of the premises at the material time was £300 a year and the mesne profits are to be taken at that rate. In their counter-claim the defendants say that the action of the plaintiffs in cutting off the gas, electricity and water and in putting up barricades was unlawful and gives them a right to damages. They say that they were entitled under the stay of execution ordered by HENN COLLINS, J., “to remain in undisturbed possession of the premises.” That is a complete misconception of the effect of a stay. A stay of execution only prevents the plaintiffs from putting into operation the machinery of law—the legal processes of warrants of execution and so forth—in order to regain possession. It does not take away any other rights which they have. It does not prevent their exercising any right or remedy which they have apart from the process of the court. In this case, there was no reason why the plaintiffs should not peaceably regain possession if they could. After all, the defendants were trespassers. The plaintiffs must not enter by a strong hand with a multitude of people so as to be guilty of a criminal offence, but, even if they do, it does not give the defendants a civil action for damages: see Hemmings v. Stoke Poges Golf Club (1). The plaintiffs are only liable in damages if they used more force than was reasonably necessary for the purpose. The plaintiffs did no wrong by cutting off gas, electricity and water supplies. The defendants had no right to have gas, electricity and water through pipes or cables on the plaintiffs' land. The defendants were not tenants. They were only trespassers. They could only claim a right of passage for gas, electricity and water by reason of the lease, and that had already been determined. If a right to a supply of anything only exists by virtue of a contract and that contract comes to an end, then the supply can be cut off. The plaintiffs did no wrong by putting up the barricades. There was no right of way. That had come to an end when the lease came to an end. There was no reason why the plaintiffs should not put up a barrier to prevent the defendants getting into the premises. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs' claim succeeds and there must be judgment for mesne profits at the rate of £300 a year from Jan 13, 1947, to July 15, 1947. The counter-claim I dismiss with costs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs on the claim and counter-claim with costs.

Solicitors: Lucien A. Isaacs (for the plaintiffs); James H. Fellowes (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CAVENDISH-BENTINCK v. CAVENDISH-BENTINCK.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker and Bucknill, L.JJ., and Pilcher, J.), June 24, 25, 1948.]

Divorce—Alimony pendente lite—Termination of lis by final decree—Revival of lis by appeal—Effect on order for alimony pendente lite—Proper tribunal to extend order for alimony pendente lite—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 27 (1), 190 (3).

By the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 190 (3): "On any petition for divorce or nullity of marriage the court shall have the same power to make interim orders for the payment of money by way of alimony or otherwise to the wife as the court has in proceedings for judicial separation." By s. 27 (1): "Subject as otherwise provided in this Act and to rules of court, the Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order of the High Court, and for all the purposes of and incidental to the hearing and determination of any appeal, and the amendment, execution and enforcement of any judgment or order made thereon, the Court of Appeal shall have all the power, authority and jurisdiction of the High Court."

A wife petitioned for judicial separation on the grounds of her husband's adultery and desertion, and the husband prayed in answer for a decree of divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery. The court granted the wife a decree, and dismissed the husband's cross-prayer. The Court of Appeal, in the exercise of its discretion, reversed the decision of the court below and granted a decree to the husband. The wife, with leave of the court, gave notice of appeal to the House of Lords. Before the hearing of the petition in the court of first instance, an order for alimony pendente lite was made. After the making of the decree in favour of the wife in that court, the husband made voluntary payments to the wife pending the hearing of the appeal. On the granting of the decree in the husband's favour by the Court of Appeal, he stopped the voluntary payments. The wife thereupon took out a summons for permanent maintenance, but the summons was adjourned pending the hearing of the appeal by the House of Lords. The wife then applied to the Court of Appeal for an extension of the original order for alimony pendente lite.

HELD: (i) the original order for alimony pendente lite came to an end on the decree of the court of first instance, because that was a final decree, and there was no lis then pending. The notice of appeal revived the lis, but did not revive the order for alimony pendente lite.

(ii) the decree of the Court of Appeal in the husband's favour did not revive the order for alimony pendente lite, because that order was made on the assumption that the wife was an innocent wife, whereas the Court of Appeal had found her guilty of adultery.

(iii) the Court of Appeal had no power to make an order for alimony pendente lite, since the court referred to in s. 190 (3) of the Judicature Act, 1925, was the High Court, and the matter of alimony pendente lite was not incidental to the hearing and determination of the appeal from the decree and order of the court of first instance within the meaning of s. 27 of the Act. The proper remedy of the wife was to apply to the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court for an order for alimony pendente lite.

Quaere: whether the husband himself, having committed adultery, was entitled to repudiate his liability to maintain his wife on the ground of her adultery.

[AS TO ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 714-720, paras. 1086-1100; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 406-418, Nos. 4057-4231.]

APPLICATION by the wife to the Court of Appeal to extend an order for alimony pendente lite made on a petition heard by Hodson, J., in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division. The decree and order of Hodson, J., were reversed by the Court of Appeal, and the wife, who had obtained leave to appeal to the House of Lords,* contended that the Court of Appeal had power to make an order for alimony pendente lite, but the Court of Appeal held that it had no power to do so, either under s. 190 (3) of the Judicature Act, 1925, conferring power on the "court," or under s. 27 of the same Act as being incidental to the hearing and determination of an appeal.

Karminski, K.C., and Victor Russell for the wife.

Beyfus, K.C., and Geoffrey Lawrence for the husband.

TUCKER, L.J. : I will ask BUCKNILL, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : This is an application by the wife to extend an order for alimony pendente lite which was made on Nov. 1, 1946. On Mar. 27, 1947, HODSON, J., gave judgment in favour of the wife's prayer for a judicial separation on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion, and he dismissed the prayer in the husband's answer that he should be granted a decree on the ground of his wife's adultery. It seems to me that the original order for alimony pendente lite then came to an end, because that was a final decree and thereafter there was no lis which was pending. It was open to the wife then to apply to the court for a permanent allowance under s. 190 (1), of the Judicature Act, 1925. I understand that no application was made because on Apr. 21, 1947, the husband gave notice of appeal. That notice, I think, revived the lis, but I do not think it revived the order for alimony pendente lite. That had come to an end. The wife could have applied for an order for alimony, but the husband made a voluntary payment to his wife pending the hearing of the appeal. The appeal came on for hearing on Nov. 6, 1947. The court allowed the appeal, reversed the decision of HODSON, J., and granted the husband a decree in the exercise of the discretion of the court. Leave was given to the wife to appeal to the House of Lords, and liberty was given to the wife to apply for an order for maintenance. The order of the Court of Appeal was based on a reversal of the decision of HODSON, J., that the wife had not committed adultery, the Court of Appeal coming to the conclusion on the evidence that she had committed adultery. The husband, having got a finding of the court that the wife had committed adultery, decided to stop the allowance which he had been making. I express no views on the point whether the husband, having himself committed adultery, is entitled to repudiate his liability to maintain his wife on the ground of her adultery. That is a point which has not been argued before us, and will probably have to be considered at some time. The wife then took out a summons for a sum to be fixed by way of permanent maintenance. The hearing of the summons was adjourned pending the hearing of the wife's appeal to the House of Lords.

The question now arises whether this court has power to make an order for alimony pendente lite. It has been suggested in the course of argument that this court, having reversed the finding of the learned judge and the grant of a judicial separation to the wife, has in some way revived the order for alimony pendente lite which came to an end with the judge's decree of judicial separation. In my view, that is not so, because the order for alimony pendente lite was made on the assumption that the wife was an innocent wife. The decree of this court is that she is a guilty wife. Therefore, I think it would be wrong to say that a decree of this court which was based on a finding of the adultery by the wife, revived an order which was made under quite different conditions. It seems to me that at present there is no order in existence for alimony pendente lite for the wife. That being so, this court has no power, in my view, to make an order for alimony pendente lite, unless it comes within the words of sub-s. (3) of s. 190 of the Judicature Act, 1925, which is as follows :

On any petition for divorce or nullity of marriage the court shall have the same power to make interim orders for the payment of money by way of alimony or otherwise to the wife as the court has in proceedings for judicial separation.

* On July 5, 1948, the wife's appeal to the House of Lords was dismissed by consent, without any order as to costs.

I may point out that the words there are a repetition of the last sentence of s. 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1867. Is this court "the court" under sub-s. (3)? Prima facie I think it is not, because s. 176, which deals with matrimonial causes and matters, starts off by saying "A petition for divorce may be presented to the High Court (in this part of this Act referred to as 'the court')." Section 1 of the Act of 1925 sets out the constitution of the Supreme Court and says that it consists "of His Majesty's High Court of Justice (in this Act referred to as 'the High Court') and His Majesty's Court of Appeal (in this Act referred to as 'the Court of Appeal')." Therefore, I think the words "the court" in s. 190 (3) refer, prima facie, not to the Court of Appeal, but to the High Court, in this case, of course, the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division.

Then it is said that, although the words "the court" may not include the Court of Appeal, nevertheless under s. 32 of the Judicature Act, 1925, the Court of Appeal has power to make an order for alimony pendente lite in a case of this kind. Section 32 is as follows:

The jurisdiction vested in the High Court and the Court of Appeal respectively shall, so far as regards procedure and practice, be exercised in the manner provided by this Act or by rules of court, and where no special provision is contained in this Act or in rules of court with reference thereto, any such jurisdiction shall be exercised as nearly as may be in the same manner as that in which it might have been exercised by the court to which it formerly appertained.

Section 27 (1), which deals specifically with the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, says this:

Subject as otherwise provided in this Act and to rules of court, the Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order of the High Court, and for all the purposes of and incidental to the hearing and determination of any appeal, and the amendment, execution and enforcement of any judgment or order made thereon, the Court of Appeal shall have all the power, authority and jurisdiction of the High Court.

It is argued on behalf of the wife that this matter of alimony pendente lite is one which is incidental to the hearing and determination of this appeal. I myself think that that is not so, because the decree and order of HODSON, J., from which the appeal lies to this court makes no reference to the question of alimony pendente lite. It is not a matter which is incidental to the hearing of the appeal and the determination of it.

The proper remedy for the wife, in my view, is to apply to "the court," which, in my opinion, means the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, for an order for alimony pendente lite. In my view, the Court of Appeal has no power in this case to make such an order.

TUCKER, L.J.: I agree. I only desire to add that I am expressing no view at all whether on the merits an order for alimony pendente lite should be made if and when the case comes before the registrar for that purpose.

PILCHER, J.: I agree.

Application dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the wife); Gordon, Dadds & Co. (for the husband.)

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

*Re HATCH (deceased). PUBLIC TRUSTEE v.
HATCH AND OTHERS.*

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), June 4, 9, 10, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Absolute gift cut down by engrafted trusts—Defeasance clause—“Any event whereby any [person] entitled to any life interest would if such life interest belonged to him absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof”—Beneficiary in German occupied territory against his will—Whether an “enemy.”—Operation of defeasance clause—Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (c. 89), s. 2 (1) (b).

By his will, dated Jan. 27, 1905, a testator, who died on Nov. 10, 1907, gave his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees on trust for sale with power to postpone such sale and out of the moneys so produced to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies. He directed his trustees to divide the residue into as many equal shares as the number of his sons, A., E., D., and W., who should survive him or should have died in his lifetime leaving issue surviving the testator, and the trustees “shall appropriate one of such shares to each such son who shall survive me or shall have died leaving issue as aforesaid . . . but so nevertheless that such respective shares shall be held by my trustees upon the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions hereinafter declared . . . my trustees shall hold the share appropriated to each such son of mine from and after such division and appropriation and shall during the life of each such son pay the income of his share to him and shall after the death of any such son (if such son shall by will so direct) pay the income of such share to any wife whom he may leave surviving him during the life of such wife.” Subject thereto the trustees were directed to hold each share for the issue of the respective sons. By cl. 15 of the will the testator provided: “I hereby declare that in case any event whatever shall happen in my lifetime or after my decease whereby any male or any female not under coverture entitled to any life interest in personal estate or to any annuity under any of the trusts or dispositions hereinbefore contained would if such life interest or annuity belonged to him or her absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or any part thereof then such life interest or annuity shall cease as if he or she were dead. And in the case of a life interest so ceasing the income which shall be so forfeited shall during the remainder of the life of the person incurring the forfeiture thereof be held upon the trusts upon which the same would for the time being be held if such person were dead. Provided also and I declare that in case any event whatever shall happen whether in my lifetime or afterwards before the time hereby appointed for the vesting in possession of any legacy or share of personal estate hereby given to or in trust for a male or a female not under coverture (other than a settlement of such legacy or share or some part thereof made before or after the marriage of the legatee with the consent in writing of my trustees) whereby the person entitled thereto under the trusts or provisions hereinbefore contained would if the said legacy or share belonged to him or her absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or any part thereof then such legacy shall sink into my residuary estate and such share shall be disposed of as if the legatee incurring such forfeiture had died in my lifetime without leaving issue.” On Sept. 18, 1909, D. had married, but had no child capable of benefiting under the will. On Apr. 12, 1916, D. made a voluntary settlement (to which the trustees of the will did not give consent in writing) whereby he purported to settle, inter alia, all property coming to him “absolutely under any settlement made by or under the will of his father [the testator] or under the will of his mother.” In 1940, D. was on a visit to Jersey, having no intention of settling there, when the island was occupied by the Germans. He was forced to remain in Jersey, and returned to England in 1946. It was conceded that if D. became an “enemy” within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, his interest under the will ceased.

Held: (i) the rule in Hancock v. Watson ([1902] A.C. 14) applied to the will to bestow on D. the whole beneficial interest in the share of residue appropriated to him, except in so far as it was cut down by effective engrafted trusts, and it was not so cut down by a gift of a life interest in favour of D.

A.-G. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. ([1935] A.C. 382), applied.

(ii) the phrase "deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof" in cl. 15 meant "deprived of the right to receive it and hold it for his own purposes" and involved a sufficient degree of certainty, and, therefore, cl. 15 was not void for uncertainty.

Clavering v. Ellison (1859) (7 H.L. Cas. 707) and Clayton v. Ramsden ([1943] 1 All E.R. 16), applied.

(iii) in view of the fact that the testator had plainly been of the view that each son had been given a life interest only, the defeasance clause (cl. 15) must be construed on that basis, and, therefore, at the time of the execution of the voluntary settlement, any interest which D. had, other than a life interest, must have been one which had not vested in possession within the meaning of the proviso to that clause, which, accordingly, was brought into operation by the execution of the settlement.

(iv) D. was resident in enemy territory, and, therefore, an "enemy" within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, s. 2 (1) (b) as from the time of the German occupation of Jersey, and thereupon, under the terms of cl. 15, his share should for the remainder of his life be held on the trusts on which it would be held if he were dead. Having regard to the operation of cl. 15 consequent on the execution of the settlement, and to the facts that D. had no issue capable of benefiting and that no appointment to a wife was possible until D.'s will, if any, were operative, the income of D.'s share should, during the remainder of his life and pending the birth of issue, fall back into residue.

Vandyke v. Adams ([1942] 1 All E.R. 139), distinguished.

[AS TO CUTTING DOWN AN ABSOLUTE INTEREST, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 327-329, para. 377; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 554-556, Nos. 3714-3724.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A.C. 14; 71 L.J.Ch. 149; 85 L.T. 729; 50 W.R. 321, H.L.; affg., S.C. sub nom., Re Hancock, Watson v. Watson, [1901] 1 Ch. 482, C.A.; 43 Digest 644, 792.
- (2) A.-G. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd., [1935] A.C. 382; 104 L.J.K.B. 523; 152 L.T. 577, H.L.; Digest Supp.
- (3) Clavering v. Ellison, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282; H.L.; affg., (1857), 8 De G.M. & G. 662, L.J.J.; affg., (1856), 3 Drew. 451; 44 Digest 440, 2667.
- (4) Clayton v. Ramsden, [1943] 1 All E.R. 16; [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 86 Sol. Jo. 384, H.L.; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Vandyke v. Adams, [1942] 1 All E.R. 139; [1942] 1 Ch. 155; 111 L.J.Ch. 110; 166 L.T. 117; 86 Sol. Jo. 56; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the nature and extent of the interest bequeathed to Andrew Dreweatt Hatch by the will of a testator of the same name; whether a defeasance clause in the will had come into operation so as to destroy the interest so bequeathed, by reason of his de facto residence in enemy-occupied territory; and, if so, what trusts took effect on the cesser of his interest. The facts appear in the judgment.

Wilfrid Hunt for the Public Trustee.

Milner Holland, K.C., for the first defendant, Andrew Dreweatt Hatch, a son of the testator interested in residue.

G. A. Rink for the second defendant, one of the trustees of a voluntary settlement made by the first defendant.

M. J. Albery for the third defendant, the executrix of Andrew Basil Hatch, a deceased son of the testator.

Denys B. Buckley for the fourth defendant, the executor of the executrix of Edgar Clifton Heath, another deceased son of the testator.

Winterbotham for the fifth and sixth defendants, William Hatch, also a son of the testator, and his son, Stephen Hatch-Barwell.

ROXBURGH, J.: The testator, Andrew Dreweatt Hatch, by his will, dated Jan. 27, 1905, appointed Clara Hatch and Frank Howard Hatch executors and trustees thereof. By cl. 11 he bequeathed his residuary estate to his trustees on trust for sale and conversion and directed them to divide it into as many equal shares as the number of his sons, Andrew Basil Hatch, Edgar Clifton Hatch, the defendant Andrew Dreweatt Hatch (hereinafter referred to as "the first defendant"), and the defendant William Hatch, who should survive him or should have died in his lifetime leaving issue surviving him, and to appropriate one of such shares to each such son so that any reference thereafter contained to the shares of his respective sons in the said trust premises should be deemed to apply to the shares thereinbefore directed to be appropriated to them respectively, but so, nevertheless, that such respective shares should be held by his trustees on the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions thereafter declared and concerning the same respectively, that is to say, his trustees should hold the share appropriated to each son and should pay the income of his share to him during his life, and after his death (if such son should by will so direct) pay the income of such share to any wife whom he might leave surviving him during her life, and subject thereto they should hold such share and the future income thereof on trust for the children or remoter issue of such son as he should by will or codicil appoint, and, subject to any such appointment, on trust for the child or children of such son who should be living at his death or born at any time afterwards, who, being male should attain the age of 24 years before the expiration of 21 years from the death of the survivor of the testator and his said sons, or being female should attain the age of 24 years or marry before the expiration of the said 21 years, or whether male or female be living at the expiration of the said period of 21 years, and if more than one in equal shares. By cl. 15 of the will—and this is an important clause—the testator declared that, in case any event whatever should happen in his lifetime or after his decease whereby any male or female not under coverture entitled to any life interest in personal estate would, if such life interest belonged to him or her absolutely, be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or of any part thereof, then such life interest should cease as if he or she were dead, and the income which should be so forfeited should during the remainder of the life of the person incurring the forfeiture be held on the trusts on which the same would for the time being be held if such person were dead, provided also that, in case any event whatever should happen before the time thereby appointed for the vesting in possession of any share of personal estate thereby given (other than a settlement of such share or some part thereof made before or after the marriage of the legatee with the consent in writing of his trustees) whereby the person entitled thereto under the trusts or provisions thereinbefore contained would, if the said share belonged to him or her absolutely, be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or any part thereof, then such share should be disposed of as if the legatee incurring such forfeiture had died in his lifetime without leaving issue.

The testator died on Nov. 10, 1907, and the Public Trustee is now sole trustee of his will. The testator's wife, Laura Hatch, and his sons, Andrew Basil and Edgar Clifton, survived him, but are now dead. Any part of the estate of the testator undisposed of by his will falls into and forms part of their respective estates. The said Andrew Basil Hatch died on Oct. 10, 1914, and the defendant, Laura Eveline Gertrude D'Arcy Irvine Hatch, is his executrix. The said Edgar Clifton Hatch died on Oct. 11, 1915, and his will, dated Aug. 5, 1915, was proved by his mother, the said Laura Hatch, the sole executrix therein named. Laura Hatch died on June 5, 1921, and her will was proved by the defendant, Ernest Green, the sole executor therein named. The defendant, William Hatch, has so far had three children, namely, the defendant, Stephen Hatch-Barwell, Tony Hatch-Barwell, and Dawn Margery Hatch-Barwell, all of whom have attained 21. The first defendant, Andrew Dreweatt Hatch, married Violet Wilson, on Sept. 18, 1909, and has not up to the present had any child who is capable of benefiting under the will of the testator. On Apr. 12, 1916, the first defendant made a voluntary settlement, but the trustees of the will of the testator did not give the consent in writing required by cl. 15 of the will. The first defendant and the second defendant, Rose Beizley, are the present trustees of that voluntary settlement.

The first question for decision relates to the nature and the extent of the interest bequeathed to the first defendant in the testator's residuary estate. Here I have guidance from an order of SARGANT, J., dated June 7, 1916, which declared :

A . . . that in the events which have happened of the testator's sons Andrew Basil Hatch and Edgar Clifton Hatch having respectively died without issue the one equal quarter part or share of and in the testator's residuary estate directed to be appropriated to his son Andrew Basil Hatch now belongs to the defendant Laura Eveline Gertrude D'Arcy Irvine Hatch as executrix of the will of the testator's said son Andrew Basil Hatch absolutely and one other equal quarter part or share of and in the testator's residuary estate directed to be appropriated to the testator's son Edgar Clifton Hatch . . .

B This order can only have been made on the footing that the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) applies to this will. Counsel for the third defendant has pointed out that a share is here directed to be appropriated to any member of the class who predeceased the testator leaving issue, and, as it would have been impossible to apply the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) to two members of that class in that particular event—because two of the sons were illegitimate, C and, accordingly, any gift to them would lapse if they predeceased the testator—he submits that the rule ought not to be applied in any event to any member of the class under this will. This is an important submission. It certainly raises a doubt, but I am not prepared to hold that it is so clearly right as to justify me in disregarding the decision of SARGANT, J., and I feel that I ought to follow it. It is a decision of a judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction on this very will. D The consequences of holding that the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) applies is to bestow on the first defendant the whole beneficial interest in the share of residue appropriated to him, except in so far as it is cut down by effective engrafted trusts. What is the first effective engrafted trust? I venture to think that even an instructed reader who read the will before making a prolonged study of the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) and the case of A.-G. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. (2) would immediately reply that the first effective E engrafted trust was a life interest in favour of the first defendant himself subject to a provision for defeasance, but I am inclined to think that that is not the true position in law. It seems to me that the reasoning in A.-G. v. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. (2) would compel me to hold that the entire F beneficial interest bestowed on the first defendant by the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) could not be cut down by any lesser disposition in favour of the first defendant himself, and that, accordingly, during the period during which he received the income of his share—before the happening of the events to which I will refer later—he received it not by virtue of the express life interest, subject to defeasance, which the will purported to confer on him, but by virtue of the entire beneficial ownership which he acquired under the rule in Hancock v. Watson (1) and which, up to that time, had not been cut down by any effective engrafted trust. But, although that is my view of the legal position, G it is plainly not the view which the testator had in mind. Clearly be thought that the effect of the will was to confer on his son a life interest subject to defeasance with divers remainders over, and I am satisfied that I ought to construe the defeasance clause on that footing.

The next question which arises is whether the defeasance clause is void for uncertainty. Here I must apply the principles enunciated in Clavering v. Ellison (3) and Clayton v. Ramsden (4). To do this I must first construe the H clause in its context and then I must see whether any phrase, when so construed, embodies a concept which lacks a sufficient degree of certainty. In my judgment, the relevant phrase “deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof” in its context in cl. 15 means, in substance, deprived of the right to receive it and hold it or spend it for his own purposes, and I think that such a concept involves a sufficient degree of certainty. Indeed, I think that the concept involved in the phrase is clear and distinct. It is true that cases can be propounded which to one mind may seem to fall within the ambit of the phrase and to another mind may seem to fall outside it. Several such cases have been propounded during the argument, but, on analysis, they all seem to me merely to raise doubts which can be resolved by properly applying the ordinary principles of construction to the phrase employed in the circumstances supposed. I do not think they point to any inherent uncertainty in the phrase itself. Accordingly, in my judgment, the defeasance clause is not void for uncertainty.

The next question is whether the defeasance clause has come into operation so as to destroy the interest which the first defendant was enjoying at the time of the events to which I am now about to refer. I have already indicated that, although that interest was not in law a life interest, I ought to treat the first defendant, for the purpose of applying the first part of cl. 15, as having an express life interest subject to defeasance with certain remainders over.

On Apr. 9, 1940, the first defendant went on a visit to the island of Jersey. He was then aged 61 years, and for some time he had been in indifferent health and his visit was made in the hope that the change would be beneficial to him. His visit was intended to be only temporary, and he had no intention of settling permanently in Jersey. Soon after his arrival, a Volunteer Defence Corps was formed in Jersey, which he joined, and he was appointed a section leader. This force undertook certain patrolling activities and was, in fact, armed, but no resistance was made to the German invasion when it came, and the force was dissolved when the Germans occupied Jersey. He was at no time required by the Germans, during their occupation, to work for them in any way, nor did he, in fact, work for them or render any assistance of any nature to the German occupation forces. In fact, his name was placed on a list for deportation to a concentration camp in Germany, but, owing to the state of his health, this was not done. For a substantial part of the German occupation he was under medical treatment in a nursing home since he had been taken seriously ill in December, 1940. In April, 1946, he was once more fit to travel and he returned to this country.

It has been conceded that if the first defendant became an enemy within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy legislation, what I will call his life interest—I have already described its nature fully—ceased. The question is whether he was an enemy within that legislation. "Enemy" is defined (by the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, s. 2), for that purpose, as "any individual resident in enemy territory," and it has been submitted that in the circumstances aforesaid he was not resident in Jersey. As the Trading with the Enemy legislation has to be applied and acted on during war and under warlike conditions it would be surprising if "residence" meant anything more complicated than de facto residence irrespective of circumstances, for it would, in most cases, be impossible to investigate the circumstances during a war. The first defendant naturally relies on the decision of FARWELL, J., in Vandyke v. Adams (5), in which the defendant, an officer in the army, was taken prisoner by the Germans, and at the date of the summons was detained by them either in Germany or in German-occupied territory. FARWELL, J., said ([1942] Ch. 157):

... the question arises whether the defendant is an "enemy" within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939. At first sight, it sounds fantastic to suggest that a soldier in His Majesty's army who has been taken prisoner and is detained in Germany or German-occupied territory is an enemy, but it is argued that the defendant is resident in enemy territory, although against his will, and that the terms of s. 2 (1) of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, which defines "enemy," are so wide that he comes within it, and so r. 14B (1), applies and service of the writ on him should be dispensed with. No doubt, it is true in one sense that the defendant is resident in enemy territory, but he is so resident only under force majeure. If the language of the definition in the Act alone fell to be considered, it might be thought wide enough to include a soldier who is detained as a prisoner of war in enemy territory, but when the whole scope of the Act and the purposes for which it was passed are regarded it appears plain that such a person does not fall within the definition and is not to be deemed to be an "enemy," for the purposes of the Act. In my judgment, a soldier in His Majesty's army who has been taken prisoner during war and is detained in enemy territory, is not an enemy in any sense of the word.

Though the facts in Vandyke v. Adams (5) are somewhat obscure, it seems plain that the defendant was embodied in the armed forces before his capture. Nothing is said as to where he was captured, but after capture he was taken as a prisoner of war either to Germany or to German-occupied territory. FARWELL, J., I think, arrived at his conclusion, not because he thought that such a person could not be "resident" within the meaning of the definition clause, but because such a person did not come within the scope and purpose of the Act. I do not find it possible to apply this reasoning by analogy to persons in the different position in which the first defendant found himself. To extend the decision in Vandyke v. Adams (5) so far, would, in my judgment, sap the very foundation of that legislation, and I cannot see my way to make that extension. In my judgment, the first defendant was resident in enemy territory within the meaning of the Act as from the time of the German occupation of Jersey. Accordingly, the first part of the clause comes into question, and during the remainder of his life his share had to be held on the trusts on which the same would be held if he were dead. I have reached the conclusion that this is not at the moment an ineffective trust, although I cannot yet explain my reasons. I will revert to it at the last. After the death of the first defendant, subject to any appointment which may be made by his will in favour of a widow and in default of issue, there would be no further effective engrafted trust and, accordingly, his beneficial interest would no longer be defeasible.

This brings me to the voluntary settlement which the first defendant made on Apr. 12, 1916. It is made between him, of the one part, and himself and two other persons thereafter called the trustees, of the other part, and it recites, among other things: "That the said Andrew Dreweatt Hatch"—that is the first defendant—"may be or become entitled to other property as mentioned in part 3 of the said first schedule." The description of that property is significant and I will read it:

All other property (except estates for life) coming to the said Andrew Dreweatt Hatch absolutely under any settlement made by or under the will of his father Andrew Dréweatt Hatch, or under the will of his mother Clara Hatch.

After the recitals the deed continues:

... the said Andrew Dreweatt Hatch as beneficial owner doth hereby grant convey and assign unto the trustees their heirs and assigns ... all other the property (except life estates) to which he is entitled at the present time or may hereafter become entitled to under any settlement or will as mentioned in part 3 of the said First Schedule.

Clearly this document would operate to assign any absolute interest which the first defendant had under the will of his father. I must now consider more closely the further provisions of the forfeiture clause in the will which are as follows:

Provided also and I declare that in case any event whatever shall happen whether in my lifetime or afterwards before the time hereby appointed for the vesting in possession of any legacy or share of personal estate hereby given to or in trust for a male or a female not under coverture ... whereby the person entitled thereto under the trusts or provisions hereinbefore contained would if the said legacy or share belonged to him or her absolutely be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or of any part thereof ...

I think I am bound to construe the words "before the time hereby appointed for the vesting in possession" on the footing that the testator regarded the first defendant as having a life estate, though I have given reasons for thinking that was not the true position, and if the testator so regarded him he would, of course, regard any other estates or interests as estates or interests in remainder. Accordingly, I think I am bound to hold that any interest which the first defendant had at the date when he executed the voluntary settlement—other than his supposed life interest—must have been, at that date, an interest which had not yet vested in possession within the meaning of the second part of the forfeiture clause. Accordingly, the execution of the voluntary settlement was an event which happened before the vesting in possession of that interest whereby if it had been an absolute interest it would have been assigned to the trustees and, of course, that would have resulted in depriving the first defendant of the personal enjoyment thereof or some part thereof. Accordingly, I must hold that the voluntary settlement brought this part of the forfeiture clause into operation. The result of that conclusion is that, as from the death of the first defendant, by reason of the operation of the forfeiture clause, but subject always to such interest as he may appoint in favour of the widow, and subject always to the rights of issue (if there are any), his share would sink back into the residuary estate, and thus become an accretion to the other three shares.

That, I think, brings me to the point to which I promised to return, namely, what is to happen during the rest of the life of the first defendant? There is, as I have already indicated, an express trust to deal with that situation. His share is to be held on the trusts on which the same would for the time being be held if he were dead. As events stand now, that is to say, as the first defendant cannot appoint to his wife except by will and as he has as yet no issue, by virtue of the operation of the forfeiture clause, if he were dead, his share would sink into the residuary estate and become an accretion to the other three shares. Accordingly, it appears to me that during the remainder of the life of the first defendant, and pending the birth of issue, the income of his share must sink back into the residuary estate and be re-divided in thirds as I have indicated.

Order accordingly. Costs as between solicitor and client payable out of the estate.

Solicitors: Smiles & Co. (for the plaintiffs and the second defendant); Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills (for the first defendant); Reid Sharman & Co. (for the third defendant); Bennett, Ferris & Bennett (for the fourth defendant); Barton and Hanning (for the fifth and sixth defendants).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BAIN v. MOSS HUTCHISON LINE, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Birkett, J.), June 29, 1948.]

Evidence—Admissibility—Statement in document—"Person interested"—Officers of ship—Action for negligence against shipowners, "their servants or agents"—Evidence Act, 1938 (c. 28), s. 1 (3).

By the Evidence Act, 1938, s. 1 (1), a court may in the circumstances specified order that a written statement shall be admissible as evidence notwithstanding that the maker thereof is not called as a witness, but by sub-s. (3) nothing in the section shall render admissible as evidence any statement made by a person interested at a time when proceedings were pending or anticipated involving a dispute as to any fact which the statement might tend to establish.

In an action for negligence brought against shipowners in which allegations were made, inter alia, of a faulty system under which men were compelled to work on board a ship, it was sought to put in as evidence for the defence under s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1938 the proofs of evidence of the master, second officer and third officer of the ship taken after the issue of the writ:

HELD: "person interested" in sub-s. (3) was not confined to a person who was pecuniarily interested in the action, but included a person who, like the officers in question, had an interest in the result of the action in view of the allegations made, and, therefore, the statements were inadmissible.

[FOR THE EVIDENCE ACT, 1938, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 31, p. 145.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Friend v. Wallman, [1946] 2 All E.R. 237; [1946] K.B. 493; 175 L.T. 147; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Plomien Fuel Economiser Co., Ltd. v. National Marketing Co., [1941] 1 All E.R. 311; [1941] Ch. 248; 110 L.J.Ch. 180; 165 L.T. 119; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) The Atlantic, The Baltyk, (1946), 62 T.L.R. 461; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Holton v. Holton, [1946] 2 All E.R. 534; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION for damages by the widow of a purser employed by the defendants in one of their ships, who, in the course of his employment, was asphyxiated when a fire broke out in the ship and as a result died. The plaintiff alleged that death was due to the breach of duty and/or negligence of the defendants, their servants or agents, in providing a faulty system under which the men were compelled to work on board and in failing, inter alia, to take adequate precautions and to provide adequate fire appliances. Counsel for the defendants tendered for admission, under the Evidence Act, 1938, s. 1 (1), proofs of evidence of the master and the second and third officers of the ship on the ground that they were beyond the seas and it was not reasonably practicable to secure their attendance, but BIRKETT, J., ruled that the documents were not admissible.

A Gradwell for the plaintiff.

Berryman, K.C., and H. Salter Nichols for the defendants.

BIRKETT, J. : Counsel for the defendants is unable to call three of his witnesses, namely, the master of the ship and the second and third officers. He, therefore, submits that proofs of the evidence which it was hoped they would have given had they been called are admissible in evidence under the Evidence Act, 1938. It is said that these witnesses had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by their statements and one may, no doubt, accept that as being proved. It is also said that they cannot be called because they are beyond the seas and it is not reasonably practicable to call them. For the purpose of my judgment on this submission I will assume all these things to be established.

C The relevant section of the Act is s. 1, which, in so far as material, reads as follows :

(1) In any civil proceedings where direct oral evidence of a fact would be admissible, any statement made by a person in a document and tending to establish that fact shall, on production of the original document, be admissible as evidence of that fact if the following conditions are satisfied, that is to say—(i) if the maker of the statement . . . (a) had personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement . . .

D (ii) if the maker of the statement is called as a witness in the proceedings : Provided that the condition that the maker of the statement shall be called as a witness need not be satisfied if . . . he is beyond the seas and it is not reasonably practicable to secure his attendance . . . (2) In any civil proceedings, the court may at any stage of the proceedings, if having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is satisfied that undue delay or expense would otherwise be caused, order that such a statement as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) of this section shall be admissible as evidence or may, without any such order having been made, admit such a statement in evidence—(a)

E notwithstanding that the maker of the statement is available but is not called as a witness . . . (3) Nothing in this section shall render admissible as evidence any statement made by a person interested at a time when proceedings were pending or anticipated involving a dispute as to any fact which the statement might tend to establish.

F The only point before me is that which comes under sub-s. (3). It is clear that these three statements were made after the issue of the writ in this action and while proceedings were pending. I have not seen the statements, but it is reasonable to assume that those statements, which the witnesses would have made had they gone into the box, would establish a fact or facts which have been and are in dispute. Therefore, am I to hold that the master, the second officer, and the third officer, are “persons interested” as mentioned in this sub-section ?

G I need not discuss the pleadings in detail. It is manifest that the allegations which are made on behalf of the plaintiff, if established, would not reflect very favourably on those who were in charge of this ship. Among other allegations, it is said that there was here a faulty system under which the men were compelled to work. The question which I have to decide has been considered by the Court of Appeal on one occasion only, and that was in Friend v. Wallman (1). That case dealt with many points under the Evidence Act, 1938, with which I am not concerned, and, so far as relates to the one point with which I am concerned, the only sentence that seems to be germane is a sentence of SOMERVELL, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court, in which he says ([1946] 2 All E.R. 237, 240) :

H Counsel also submitted that the soldiers were “interested persons” within s. 1 (3) of the Act. We can find no evidence of this. “Interested” clearly means personally interested in the result of the proceedings.

The report does not tell us the nature of the statements made by the soldiers, but, as the action was one for damages for negligence, presumably the soldiers were witnesses of the accident. The Court of Appeal decided that they were not persons interested.

I must determine whether the three witnesses in this case were "personally interested." The view which has been suggested that the words must be limited to financial interest is one which I would find difficulty in accepting. I do not think it carries the matter much further, but among the observations which were made by MORTON, J., in Plomien Fuel Economiser Co., Ltd. v. National Marketing Co. (2), he said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 311, 314):

It may be that there are circumstances in which it might be said that a servant of the company was not a person interested. As to that, I express no opinion. However, I think that the general intention of the section is that, if a statement is put in as evidence, to which, of course, no cross-examination can be directed, it should be either a statement made at a time when proceedings are not pending or anticipated involving a dispute as to any fact which the statement might tend to establish or a statement made by what I may perhaps conveniently describe as an independent person. By an independent person the learned judge meant a person not personally interested, in the sense that the Court of Appeal has laid down.

I need not deal at length with the other cases which were cited to me, but I must refer to the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., in The Atlantic, The Baltyk (3). In that case there was a collision between two ships, and certain statements had been made before a notary public in New York about a month after the collision had taken place. The statements had been made by the master, two engineers and the look-out man in one of the ships involved. Objection was taken, and BUCKNILL, L.J., ruled that the statements made by the engineers and the look-out man were admissible, under s. 1 (2) of the Evidence Act, 1938, and that they were not interested persons within s. 1 (3), but he ruled that when the master made the statement he was a person interested because he might be personally liable. In Holton v. Holton (4), which was argued before BARNARD, J., judgment on the facts was short, but the argument by counsel for the petitioner is set out, a full, careful and most helpful argument. BARNARD, J., said ([1946] 2 All E.R. 534, 535):

Those words must mean a person who has a pecuniary or other material interest in the result of the proceedings—a person whose interest is affected by the result of the proceedings, and, therefore, would have a temptation to pervert the truth . . . It does not mean an interest in the sense of intellectual observation or an interest purely due to sympathy. It means an interest in the legal sense, which imports something to be gained or lost.

The learned judge admitted the statement with which he was there concerned without giving any detailed reasons. The only other matter to which I need refer is the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 470 (1), which reads as follows:

The certificate of a master, mate, or engineer may be cancelled or suspended (a) by a court holding a formal investigation into a shipping casualty under this Part of this Act, or by a naval court constituted under this Act, if the court find that the loss or abandonment of, or serious damage to, any ship, or loss of life, has been caused by his wrongful act or default . . . (b) by a court holding an inquiry under this Part of this Act into the conduct of a master, mate, or engineer, if they find that he is incompetent, or has been guilty of any gross act of misconduct, drunkenness, or tyranny, or that in a case of collision he has failed to render such assistance . . .

I must, of course, consider all the facts before me, but I think it is open for me to say that I can very well concede that anybody in the position of master, or second officer, or third officer in this ship would be personally interested in the result of this action. Although it is manifest that these three witnesses have no financial or pecuniary interest in the direct sense at all, I think they are "personally interested" in the result of this action because of its nature and because of the allegations made. Therefore, I shall reject the three statements which are sought to be admitted by counsel for the defendants.

Admission of the statements refused.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Neville, Piercy & Co., Liverpool (for the plaintiff); Botterell & Roche (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PEEK v. PEEK.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Bucknill and Somervell, L.JJ.), June 28, 29, 1948.]

Divorce—Appeal—Court of Appeal—Appeal from Divisional Court—Jurisdiction to entertain—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 27.

Divorce—Practice—Divisional Court—Interlocutory order—Order setting aside decree nisi and directing new trial—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 15—“Error of court at hearing”—Evidence withheld from court—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36.

The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 27, to hear an appeal from an order of the Divisional Court of the Probate and Divorce Division setting aside a decree nisi of divorce and ordering a re-hearing.

An order of the Divisional Court setting aside a decree nisi of divorce and directing a new trial is an interlocutory order within R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 15.

Isaacs & Sons v. Salbstein ([1916] 2 K.B. 139), applied.

A husband petitioned for divorce on the ground of his wife's desertion. The wife was in Australia and did not appear to defend the action, but she sent certain letters to the registrar of the court, indicating that the husband had deserted her and not she the husband. The evidence of the husband, was that in 1920 he had left Australia to work in South Africa, and he had made his permanent home in England. His wife refused to accompany him, and in 1924 he began to cohabit with a woman with whom he had lived ever since. In respect of his adultery with this woman he asked the court to exercise its discretion. On June 18, 1947, a decree nisi was granted, and on that date the wife's application for a poor person's certificate was pending. On July 22, 1947, the certificate was granted to the wife. She applied to the Divisional Court for a re-hearing under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, r. 36, which provides: “(1) An application for re-hearing of a cause heard by a judge alone where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged shall be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate Division.” In her affidavit in support of her application she alleged that she had in her possession a number of letters which would show that the husband had at all material times deserted her. The Divisional Court ordered a re-hearing, and from that order the husband appealed on the ground that an error of the court at the hearing was alleged or involved in the application made to the Divisional Court, which, therefore, had no jurisdiction.

HELD: the application for re-hearing was not based on a suggested error of the court in dealing with the material before it, but raised the point that the court had not been given the opportunity of considering certain material which, had it not been concealed, might have led it to come to a different decision, and, therefore, there had been alleged “no error of the court at the hearing” within r. 36.

Petty v. Petty ([1943] 2 All E.R. 511), distinguished.

Decision of the Divisional Court ([1947] 2 All E.R. 578), affirmed.

[AS TO APPLICATIONS FOR RE-HEARING, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 779, para. 1233; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 490, Nos. 5220-5233.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Westhead v. Westhead, (1876), 2 P.D. 1.

(2) Isaacs & Sons v. Salbstein, [1916] 2 K.B. 139; 85 L.J.K.B. 1433; 114 L.T. 924; 30 Digest 136, 141.

(3) Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council, [1903] 1 K.B. 547; 72 L.J.K.B. 271; 67 J.P. 397; 30 Digest 135, 137.

(4) Shubbrook v. Tufnell, (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 621; 46 L.T. 749; 30 Digest 129, 71.

(5) Salaman v. Warner, [1891] 1 Q.B. 734; 60 L.J.Q.B. 624; 30 Digest 135, 136.

(6) Herod v. Herod, [1938] 3 All E.R. 722; [1939] P. 11; 108 L.J.P. 27; 159 L.T. 530; Digest Supp.

(7) Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the husband from an order of the Divisional Court of the Probate Division ([1947] 2 All E.R. 578), ordering a re-hearing of a petition by the husband for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of the wife's desertion. A decree nisi had been granted to the husband by BARNARD, J. The Court of Appeal decided that it had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and, after disposing of the preliminary point that the husband's notice of appeal was out of time, dismissed the appeal, holding that the Divisional Court had jurisdiction to order a re-hearing. The facts appear in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

E. Holroyd Pearce, K.C., Fairweather and Travers for the husband.

J. Montgomerie for the wife.

THEIR LORDSHIPS delivered the following judgments on the preliminary point.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal by a husband from an order of the Divisional Court of the Probate and Divorce Division setting aside a decree nisi which had been made by BARNARD, J., in favour of the husband, who was petitioning for divorce on the ground of his wife's desertion.

Preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that notice of appeal had not been given within the time required by R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 15, namely, within 14 days of the making of the order. In discussing this point we have been taken through the history of the jurisdiction of this court in dealing with appeals from the Divisional Court on such orders as this, and with regard to the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court to entertain these applications. I do not propose to go through the matter in detail because it is not now in controversy between the parties that this court derives its jurisdiction in a matter such as that with which we are now dealing from the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 27, which provides:

(1) Subject as otherwise provided in this Act and to rules of court, the Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order of the High Court, and for all the purposes of and incidental to the hearing and determination of any appeal, and the amendment, execution and enforcement of any judgment or order made thereon, the Court of Appeal shall have all the power, authority and jurisdiction of the High Court.

In this connection I might refer to s. 30, which provides:

(1) Every motion for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, finding or judgment, in any cause or matter in the High Court in which there has been a trial thereof or of any issue therein with a jury, shall be heard and determined by the Court of Appeal.

In 1857 applications for the re-hearing of a trial without a jury were made to the judge ordinary and a right of appeal from his decision was given to the full court. In 1873, the whole of the jurisdiction with regard to these matters was transferred to the High Court, and the Judicature Act, 1875, provided that all existing rules of the Divorce Court should apply until altered or annulled by rules of the Supreme Court. By the Judicature Act, 1881, s. 9, it was provided that appeals which had previously gone to the full court should go to the Court of Appeal, an enactment necessitated by the decision in Westhead v. Westhead (1). The Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, contained a rule which is the equivalent of the present r. 36 in the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, which reads as follows:

An application for re-hearing of a cause heard by a judge alone where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged shall be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate Division.

The jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Appeal by the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 27, was subject to rules of court, and that Act finally repealed the provisions of the Act of 1857 giving the right of appeal to the full court. The result, as it appears to me, is that this court has jurisdiction to entertain this appeal from the Divisional Court, and, as it is not contended that r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, is ultra vires, it also appears clear that an application for the re-hearing of a cause heard by a judge alone, where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged, should properly be made to the Divisional Court.

The only matter which remains in doubt is as to the time within which notice of appeal must be given. That depends on whether the order appealed from is an interlocutory order within the meaning of Ord. 58, r. 15, or whether it is an "other" appeal within the meaning of those words in that rule. We have been referred to Isaacs & Sons v. Salbstein (2), which was a decision of this court. The headnote is as follows, so far as is material ([1916] 2 K.B. 139) :

The test of whether an appeal is final or interlocutory is the nature of the order immediately under appeal. Where, therefore, on appeal from a final judgment of a county court, a Divisional Court made an order for a new trial : HELD, that an appeal from the Divisional Court to the Court of Appeal was an appeal from an interlocutory order and was rightly entered in the interlocutory list.

A SWINFEN EADY, L.J., in his judgment said (ibid., 146), quoting from the judgments in Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council (3) :

THE EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C., said ([1903] 1 K.B. 548) : " I think the order appealed from was a final order, and the appeal is therefore brought within the prescribed time." LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., said (ibid.) : " It seems to me that the real test for determining this question ought to be this : Does the judgment or order, as made, finally dispose of the rights of the parties ? If it does, then I think it ought to be treated as a final order ; but if it does not, it is then, in my opinion, an interlocutory order." Applying the test there so clearly laid down, the order in the present case is an interlocutory order. In my opinion this settles the case.

PICKFORD, L.J., in agreeing, said (ibid., 148) :

C It was decided in Shubrook v. Tufnell (4) that if the decision of the Court of Appeal was a final decision it made the order under appeal a final order. But Salaman v. Warner (5) decided that it was only final if it put an end to the litigation, whichever way it was decided. In Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council (3) the Court of Appeal declined to follow Salaman v. Warner (5), and said they preferred Shubrook v. Tufnell (4), but although LORD HALSBURY, L.C., said he preferred it I do not think he altogether followed it. He followed it so far as to say that Salaman v. Warner (5) was not right in saying that an order was final if it would, whichever side won, finally determine the litigation ; he further said that the thing to be looked at was the order appealed from. In the present case the order appealed from does not put a final end to the action, and this is an appeal from an interlocutory, and not from a final, order.

D In my view, that decision governs this case, unless counsel for the husband is right in saying that a distinction should be drawn between it and the present proceedings. His contention was that the order setting aside the judgment which had pronounced a decree nisi altered the status of the parties, and was, therefore, final, that is to say, it restored the husband to the status which he had had before he started his divorce proceedings, which status had been altered by the pronouncement of the decree nisi. I do not think that argument is sound. The status of the parties in a divorce suit is not altered until a decree absolute is made, but, none the less, the decree nisi is a final order because it disposes of the issues between the parties. On the authority of the case that I have just cited, I think it is clear that the order of the Divisional Court setting aside the decree nisi and ordering a new trial was an interlocutory order within the meaning of Ord. 58, r. 15, but having regard to the fact that the provisions with regard to this matter are by no means clear—in fact, they are wrapped in a considerable degree of obscurity—and, furthermore, having regard, as I think we are entitled to do, to the note which appears in RAYDEN ON DIVORCE, 4th ed., p. 389, para. 15, note (a), which I think tends to make the matter appear even more obscure than it already is, in all the circumstances of the case it is proper that we should extend the time for giving this notice of appeal, and I think the time should be extended by a period of two weeks, which would cover the date at which this notice was given.

F BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree. It seems to me that this is an appeal from a judgment or order of the High Court, and, therefore, comes within the words of s. 27 of the Act of 1925, which gives the Court of Appeal jurisdiction over the matter. I also agree with what my Lord has said about the judgment being interlocutory.

G SOMERVELL, L.J. : I agree.

H Their Lordships delivered the following judgments on the appeal.

TUCKER, L.J. : This is an appeal from a decision of the Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division in which they ordered a rehearing of a petition by the husband against his wife, founded on desertion, in which BARNARD, J., had granted the husband a decree nisi. The application to the Divisional Court was made pursuant to r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944, which, so far as material, reads as follows :

An application for re-hearing of a cause heard by a judge alone where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged shall be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate Division.

The husband's appeal from the decision of the Divisional Court is based on the submission that the Divisional Court had no jurisdiction to order a re-hearing under this rule because, it is said, on investigation it is apparent that error of the court at the hearing was alleged or necessarily involved in the application which had been made for the re-hearing. A

The parties were married in Australia in 1905, and two children of the marriage were born in 1906 and 1907. The husband at that time was serving in Australia with a British company as an engineer. In 1920 he got an offer of employment in Nigeria which necessitated his making his permanent home in England. B His evidence before BARNARD, J., was that he had asked his wife to come and make her home in England with him, but she had refused. Accordingly, he came alone. His home was in England, which he visited on his periods of leave, and his work was in Nigeria. His case was that, having been deserted by his wife until 1924, in that year he met a woman with whom he committed adultery and with whom he had continued to live. With regard to her, he asked the court to exercise its discretion in his favour. His evidence was that in 1923 he had asked mutual friends to intervene on his behalf with his wife, and there was evidence that in 1927 a friend of his had visited the wife and asked when she was coming over to her husband and that she said she would not come. C During the trial, two letters were brought to the notice of the court by learned counsel for the husband in the performance of his duty to place all relevant material before the court. One dated Aug. 1, 1926, from the wife in which she complained of having received "an insulting letter from that woman and also to send back the photo of our children with a child of shame," and saying : "There will come a time when you both will have to pay. I do not want the divorce, but you are making me get one, and I will only do it on two conditions." She demanded payment of a capital sum of money, and said : D

I am putting letters sent by you and also letters sent by that woman together ready to go into the Home Secretary's hands. I have been advised to do so. I will give this letter time to get to you and a reply by cable before I do so, and remember never come to Brisbane with that woman because she will never leave here again. I can promise you that somebody must pay and why not her. Remember, life makes its claim but exacts its penalty. E

At the top of the letter there is a postscript : "I am still willing to forgive and forget." The other letter is from the husband to his wife dated Jan. 29, 1945, which says : F

Some years ago you wrote me that you would not divorce me so long as my mother was alive. As she has been dead for some years, there is no reason why if you feel so disposed, you should not now do so. You can, I understand, divorce me in Queensland, on the ground of desertion. We have been separated for 25 years, and you have known for a great portion of that time, that I have no intention of returning to live with you.

Those two letters, put before BARNARD, J., clearly called for an explanation. G In addition to that the learned judge had before him a letter which had been addressed to the registrar by the wife in Queensland. It said :

You have a divorce for desertion in your High Court the petitioner being Mr. F. J. Peek and the respondent being Jennie Peek. I am the respondent in this case. If this case is allowed to go through the court it will be on perjury ; the evidence I am enclosing will explain this better than I as I am no good at letter writing and I hope you will be able to follow this. I was 35 years old when deserted and have devoted my life to the welfare of my children. H

She is in substance alleging that her husband had deserted her and she had not deserted him. There is one sentence in the letter in which she says :

Mr. Peek never at any time definitely said to come to England but was always complaining about the place and said he hated it and was only longing to get back to Australia. The letters I am sending you are only the last two as I am sending this by airmail and have to get my daughter to pay it ; it would cost too much to send more. I am enclosing a money order to pay for the fee and also enough to post this evidence back to me by service mail. I have enclosed a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Peek's solicitor showing them they was telling them lies when I had proof that Mr. Peek was the deserter.

The learned judge, having this letter before him, made known to learned counsel that he had it, and he appears to have directed some questions to the husband with a view to clearing up the position.

A The husband on his own showing having been guilty of adultery, it was the duty of the court to be satisfied that the wife's refusal to join him was irrespective altogether of the question of his adultery. In Herod v. Herod (6) SIR BOYD MERRIMAN, P., said ([1938] 3 All E.R. 732) :

B If it is left in doubt whether the respondent knew of the adultery, or, if known, whether his or her conduct was affected by it, the petitioner would fail to discharge the burden of proof. If, on the other hand, it were established that the respondent's intention to withdraw from co-habitation was formed entirely independently of the petitioner's misconduct, the offence would be proved. The question is to be determined according to the circumstances of each case.

C In this case the husband, having said that his wife had definitely and permanently refused to come to England with him at the start, and that her decision had remained unaltered throughout, there was, I think, material on which the learned judge could come to the decision that in all the circumstances the desertion had continued down to the date of the petition and that it was not affected by the husband's adultery. The case was one which was clearly not free from difficulty and required investigation. Furthermore, the learned judge had to be satisfied that it was the wife who had deserted the husband and not the husband who had deserted the wife. The letter from the wife contains sufficient material to put him on his guard with regard to that matter. D He had before him the sworn testimony of the husband that he had asked his wife to come to England, and she, on her part, had definitely refused to do so. Therefore, I think it is impossible to say on the material before him that there was any error on the part of the learned judge. It is quite true that he might have thought fit to adjourn the case for investigation by the King's Proctor, but that is a matter entirely within his discretion. I think it is impossible to say that on this material he should have dismissed the petition, and I do not think E there was anything erroneous in what he did.

The trial took place on June 18, 1947. The previous material dates are as follows. On Dec. 10, 1946, the wife was served with the petition. On Jan. 14, 1947, she wrote a letter to the registrar. On Mar. 26 of that year she received a reply. On Apr. 1 she wrote to the King's Proctor. On Apr. 28 she applied to the Poor Persons' Committee and was refused. On June 17 she again wrote to the Committee and on July 22 she was given a poor persons' certificate. F So, on June 18, 1947, when the decree nisi was made, her second application for a poor persons' certificate was pending, and it was actually granted a month or so after the decree. Her affidavit in support of the application for re-hearing is based on her allegation that she had in her possession a number of letters which will show clearly that her husband was at all times deserting her. That is summed up in the concluding paragraph in which she says :

G I have always been willing to reside with my husband either in England, Africa or Australia, and am still in love with my husband. I have never refused to set up home with him and in point of fact he has never made any effort for me to live and cohabit with him in England. He has deserted me without cause and lived separate and apart from me since early in the year 1920.

In the preceding paragraph of the affidavit she refers to and exhibits correspondence which on the face of it, if accepted and unexplained, would appear H to lend strong support to the statement which she makes in the concluding paragraph. After perusal of this new material, which was not brought to the notice of BARNARD, J., the Divisional Court came to the conclusion that this was a proper case in which to order a re-hearing. They also came to the conclusion that this was not a case in which error was disclosed on the part of the court.

In the Divisional Court LORD MERRIMAN, P., dealt with the matter very thoroughly, and I only desire to refer to those passages in his judgment where he states his conclusion. He indicates, I think, that, if he had had to deal with the matter as it presented itself to BARNARD, J., he would have been disposed to invite inquiry into the matter by the King's Proctor, but he comes to the conclusion that there had been no error. After dealing with the matters with which it was incumbent on the learned judge to deal, he says ([1947] 2 All E.R. 585) :

It seems to me that the real point, bearing in mind that the question whether error is alleged is a question of substance and not a question of form, as I said earlier in this judgment, is this : Is the allegation which is made against the decision an allegation that the court went wrong on the materials before it, or is it an allegation that the court went wrong because evidence on a vital matter was concealed from the court ? To my mind, it cannot make the slightest difference, logically, whether that question falls to be decided in an undefended or a defended case. To bring the thing to a point, can there be any true distinction between cases, both of them undefended, in the first of which the petitioner says : " I assert desertion, but I ask for the discretion of the court," and a case in which the petitioner presents a case of desertion without confessing any adultery ?

In a later part of his judgment, he says (ibid.) :

I reject altogether the argument that this matter depends solely on the question whether the case is defended or undefended, and I come back to what I said just now, for, in my opinion, this case is an illustration, not of a case in which the court went wrong on the materials before it, but rather of a case in which it is alleged that the court went wrong because evidence on a vital point was concealed from it. I repeat and desire to emphasise that every case coming within this rule must be considered on its own merits, and, in my opinion, when one analyses this case, the only thing which can be said to be error on the learned judge's part is a failure to appreciate, in the light of the documents which were not produced before him, the full possible implications of those which were produced before him. But, when one has said that, it still remains that it was the husband's concealment of those documents, of the existence of which we are now aware, which may induce some other tribunal to come to a different conclusion.

WALLINGTON, J., in the course of his judgment, said (ibid.) :

The effect of the rule, as I understand it, is this : If a party to a motion comes to this court and, either expressly or by necessary implication, alleges that the judge who heard the case to which the motion relates made such a mistake or error as resulted in a wrong conclusion, then the matter is not one for this court but is one that must go to the Court of Appeal in the ordinary way. On the other hand, where the applicant on the motion comes to this court and says in effect, e.g., " There was no error on the part of the court below in dealing with the material then before it, or any other error of the court, but I was not able to attend at the trial, I had much material in my hands that I would have put before the court, and I desire an opportunity of having the real case tried," and if, added to that, as in this case, it is plain that the petitioner has concealed from the judge who tried the case very material—indeed, vital—facts affecting the real case between the parties, it seems to me to be plain that this court has both the jurisdiction and the duty to deal with the matter.

I find myself entirely in agreement with what was said in the Divisional Court both by the learned PRESIDENT and by WALLINGTON, J. We have been referred to Petty v. Petty (7), but I do not get much assistance from that authority. That had been a contested suit and a re-trial was granted based on fresh evidence which had been obtained. It was held ([1943] P. 101) :

... that the application was not one in which " no error of the court at the hearing " was alleged; that it did not fall within r. 36 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1937; and, therefore, that it could not be dealt with by the Divisional Court.

The basis of the decision was that, if the fresh evidence were accepted, it followed that there had been error on the part of the court in believing the evidence adduced by the petitioner in preference to that adduced by the respondent. I do not think there is anything in that case which assists in the decision of the present appeal.

There is only one other matter to which I desire to refer for the purpose of keeping it open. I have up to now dealt with this case on the basis that no error of the court appears after careful investigation of the course the trial took. I should desire to keep open the question whether or not it may be immaterial to consider what, in fact, happened before the court, provided the applicant who is seeking a re-hearing is basing his whole case on something quite irrespective of the course the case in fact took on the material before the court. I think there may be a good deal to be said for the proposition that, in a case like the present, the application is really founded on the suppression of evidence and that the re-hearing might have been granted on that ground, irrespective of whether or not the learned judge took the right course on the material which was presented to him. I am not to be taken as suggesting that the mere allegation that the applicant makes is conclusive. It is always necessary to investigate the reality of the case that he is putting forward, but, if the case that he is putting forward is one which would lead the court to grant a re-hearing irrespective of the course which the case took at the trial on the then available material, I think it may be that he could bring himself within r. 36 in any event. As I say, I merely mention that in order to preserve consideration of the point if it should arise. For these reasons I think this appeal fails.

BUCKNILL, L.J. : I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J. : I only wish to add that I entirely agree with the construction which the learned PRESIDENT and WALLINGTON, J., applied to this rule. It seems to me that the highest that counsel for the husband could put the alleged error here is that another judge might not have been satisfied that the husband had discharged the onus, or another judge might have thought it a proper case to refer to the King's Proctor. I agree with the learned PRESIDENT's final conclusion where he says the real point is whether the allegation which is made against the decision is an allegation that the court went wrong on the material before it or is an allegation that the court went wrong because evidence on a vital matter was concealed from it. I entirely agree with the court below that this was a case which could be dealt with under r. 36, and I also agree with the order which, under that rule, the court made. I would like to say one word on the last point to which TUCKER, L.J., referred. I associate myself with him in his references to the desirability of keeping the point open. I think there is certainly something to be said for the view that, giving the proper meaning to the word "alleged," the rule should be applicable where the applicant both in form and in substance is seeking to succeed irrespective of any examination of the question whether the judge went wrong in accepting one set of witnesses and not accepting another. That matter can be dealt with when it arises, and I should like to keep it open.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors : Enever & Co. (for the husband) ; G. Parry Jones, Services Divorce Department (for the wife).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS. HICKMAN AND OTHERS v. HICKMAN AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), June 29, 1948.]

Will—Construction—Presumption of early vesting—Gift of necklace "to the wife of my grandson," A. E. H., subject to prior life interest of M.W.H.—Gift over "in the event of my grandson not marrying"—Grandson unmarried at date of will and at death of testatrix—Subsequently married twice—First marriage dissolved—Second marriage during lifetime of M.W.H.—Gift to first person answering description of being wife of grandson.

By a codicil to her will, dated July 12, 1914, the testatrix, who died on Sept. 13, 1914, gave a pearl necklace to her daughter-in-law, M.W.H., "so that she may have the use and enjoyment thereof for her life and at her death I bequeath the same to the wife of my grandson," A.E.H., "absolutely or in the event of my . . . grandson not marrying then and in that case I bequeath the same" to a grand-daughter. A.E.H. was not married at the date of the codicil or at the death of the testatrix. His first marriage, which took place in 1919, was dissolved, and in 1940 he married again. M.W.H. died in 1946, and A.E.H. died on Mar. 11, 1947. The question was whether the former wife of A.E.H. or his widow was entitled to the necklace :—

HELD : on the true construction of the codicil, the gift was to the first person who answered the description of being the wife of the grandson, since there was no controlling context to displace the presumption in favour of early vesting, and, accordingly, the former wife of A.E.H. was entitled to the necklace.

Principle in Radford v. Willis (1871) (7 Ch. App. 7), applied.

[AS TO GIFT TO "WIFE" OF PERSON, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, p. 326, para. 375, and pp. 265, 266, paras. 314, 315; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 872-875, Nos. 7283-7310.]

Case referred to :

- (1) Radford v. Willis, (1871), 7 Ch. App. 7; 41 L.J.Ch. 19; 25 L.T. 720; 44 Digest 875, 7313.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the former wife or the widow of the grandson of the testatrix was entitled to a pearl necklace given by the testatrix, subject to a prior life interest therein, to "the wife of my grandson . . . absolutely." HARMAN, J., held that the former wife was entitled to the necklace. The facts appear in the judgment.

Jopling for the trustees.

A. C. Nesbitt for the first defendant (the widow).

Wigan for the second defendant (the former wife).

HARMAN, J. : By a second codicil to her will, Dame Lucy Owen Hickman, who died on Sept. 13, 1914, bequeathed a valuable necklace, and the question which arises now on the death of the person to whom it was given for life is : To whom does it devolve, having regard to the terms of the codicil ? With the will, which was made in 1913, I am not concerned except to say that the plaintiffs are trustees (by representation) by virtue of an appointment contained in it. Nor need I trouble with the first codicil, which was made on Jan. 15, 1914. By the second codicil, made on July 12, 1914, the testatrix expressed herself in these terms :

I revoke the bequest of the following pearls and pearl ornaments to my daughter Lilian Hickman : pearl necklace with diamond clasps pearl rope and pearl collar. I bequeath my pearl necklace with diamond clasps to my daughter-in-law Mary Whitby Hickman so that she may have the use and enjoyment thereof for her life and at her death I bequeath the same to the wife of my grandson Sir Alfred Edward Hickman Baronet absolutely or in the event of my said grandson not marrying then and in that case I bequeath the same to my grand-daughter Phyllis Deane.

When the testatrix died, her grandson, Sir Alfred Hickman, was unmarried. There was not, either at the date of the codicil or at the date of the death of the testatrix, a person answering the description of "the wife of my grandson, Sir Alfred Edward Hickman." Mary Whitby Hickman was the holder until her death on Oct. 19, 1946, but in the meanwhile the following events had happened. Sir Alfred married twice, first on Jan. 16, 1919, the second defendant, now Lilian Brenda Williams, and that marriage was dissolved. Sir Alfred married again in 1940 the first defendant, now his widow, Dame Nancy Beryl Hickman. He himself survived the tenant for life and died on Mar. 11, 1947. The contest is between the former wife and the widow.

Counsel for the widow submits that the whole object of the bequest in this case was to give the necklace to someone who could use and enjoy it as an adornment ; it was not meant, he says, to maintain anyone nor was it an investment which would produce any benefit other than pleasure to a person who could hang it round her neck ; and, therefore, it was extremely unlikely that it was intended to be given to anyone except a person who could say at the relevant date—which, counsel says, was the date of the death of the tenant for life—"I am the wife of Sir Alfred Hickman and it is my neck, and no one else's, which this necklace was intended to adorn." This is a forcible argument, and, when one first looks at the codicil, it seems that, if the testatrix could have been asked in 1946 what she wished, her answer would have been : "I mean the wife of my grandson, Alfred, now." He adds, I think, a fortiori that the necklace was not meant to be stretched round the collective neck of personal representatives. The testatrix, however, did not live until 1946 and it is most unlikely that she contemplated the series of events which has happened, or that she attempted to provide for all of them. Counsel for the former wife argued that one must not look at what would have been the intention of the testatrix if she had been able to foresee the future, as that is mere speculation, but one must consider the established principles in these matters and decide in favour of an early vesting, which the law has always favoured. He said that the former wife was the person who first answered the description in the codicil, and, therefore, acquired an indefeasible interest which nothing could divest, neither divorce, nor death, nor the death of her former husband. He pointed particularly to the gift over, which in terms is expressed to operate only in the event of the grandson not marrying, with the result that directly the grandson married the gift over was extinguished, and, therefore, the person to whom he was married and whose marriage to him caused the gift over to cease to be operative must be the person to take the indefeasible interest, because only thus could one marry the gift over to the primary gift. The retort to that is that the phrase, "in the event of my grandson not marrying," is an inaccurate expression. All it means to indicate is a failure of the former trust "in the event of my grandson not being a married man at the relevant date." Even that leaves out the possible event of the grandson being unmarried at the death of the life owner, but marrying after that date.

The principle to be applied is not in doubt. It is stated in JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., p. 374, where, after dealing with persons who would satisfy the description of wife at the date of the will, or at the date of the death, the author continues :

... thirdly, if there be no such person either at the date of the will, or at the death of the testator, it [i.e., the description of "wife"] applies to the woman who shall first answer the description of wife, at any subsequent period.

Counsel for the former wife relies on the illustration of that principle to be found in Radford v. Willis (1), the leading case on this subject. This principle was relied on by both sides, counsel for the widow arguing that a context would displace that which was in doubt. In Radford v. Willis (1) SIR W. M. JAMES, L.J., said (7 Ch. App. 7, 10) :

I have no hesitation in saying that, in the absence of a controlling context, a gift to an unmarried woman for life, with remainder to her husband in fee, vests an indefeasible estate of inheritance in the person who first answers the description of her husband. The case is one in which the broad general principle that the court favours vesting more than contingency seems to me to be eminently applicable.

There were before him in that case circumstances which made improbable the result thus reached. SIR W. M. JAMES, L.J., asked himself (ibid.) whether there was a sufficient controlling context, and decided that there was not. So, here, it is not, I think, really in dispute that, in the absence of a controlling context, the early vesting principle would apply and the first person to answer the description would take an indefeasible interest. Counsel for the widow recognises that, but says that the context lies in two things. First, this is not an estate of inheritance or anything of that kind, but an article meant for adornment, to support the dignity of the wife of the testatrix's grandson. Secondly, he says that, if one could ask the testatrix what she meant, could one doubt but that she would have said "the wife of her grandson at the time when the jewels became free?" I recognise that those would be matters of context, if one could extract them from the codicil. I do not know whether the words, "so that she may have the use and enjoyment thereof," which is the description of the way in which the first taker is to have this string of pearls, apply also to "the wife of my grandson." But it seems to me that, if I follow counsel for the widow down that attractive path, I end in a bed of nettles, which I can avoid by staying on the sure ground of principle. There are many difficulties into which one is led, if one leaves the construction which favours early vesting, and I do not feel that I am able to do so in this case. I think the principle must apply that the first person who answers the description of being the wife of the grandson is the one who takes the jewels and that there is nothing that can divest her of them. In saying that, I am impressed by the terms of the gift over which, if they are to be made to fit at all, can only mean that, as soon as the grandson marries, the testatrix regards the necklace as being, as it were, at home, and it is not necessary to provide further for its possible destination. I, therefore, decide in favour of the former wife and propose to declare that the pearl necklace with diamond clasps is a gift to her.

Declaration accordingly. The costs of the plaintiffs and the first defendants, as between solicitor and client, to be awarded on taxation (if not agreed), the second defendant submitting to pay the costs.

Solicitors : Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Fowler, Langley & Wright, Wolverhampton (for the trustees and first defendant); Wigan & Co. (for the second defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SMITH v. LONDON TRANSPORT EXECUTIVE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), June 29, 30, July 1, 1948.]

Street Traffic—Omnibus service—Powers of Transport Executive—Service started by Executive in competition with private transport operator—Power of Executive to provide service where London Passenger Transport Board not so empowered—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 72 (1)—Transport Act, 1947 (c. 49), ss. 2 (1); 3 (1); 65 (1).

By the Transport Act, 1947, s. 1, there was set up a public authority called the British Transport Commission with power, under s. 2, inter alia, to carry goods and passengers by road within Great Britain. By s. 3, the duty was imposed on the Commission of providing or securing an efficient, adequate, economical and properly integrated system of public inland transport. Section 5 provided that there should be public authorities, known as "Executives," to assist the Commission, and that each Executive should, as agents for the Commission, exercise such functions of the Commission "as are for the time being delegated to them by or under a scheme made by the Commission and approved by the Minister" of Transport. As respects matters falling within the scope of any such delegation, any rights, powers and liabilities of the Commission should be treated as rights, powers and liabilities of the Executive only, and every Executive was to have power at the request of the Commission to do, as agent for the Commission, anything which the Commission had power to do.

The defendants, the London Transport Executive, were an Executive constituted under the Act of 1947. On Jan. 1, 1948, under s. 12 of the Act and sched. III thereto, the undertaking of the London Passenger Transport Board vested in the Commission, which, under s. 14 (2), had thenceforward all the rights and was subject to all the liabilities of the Board. The Board had been set up under the London Passenger Transport Act, 1933, with power to provide road services in specified areas, to one of which, known as "the special area," the Road Traffic Act, 1930, ss. 72-76 did not apply. Section 72 of the Act of 1930 provided: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this section the [Traffic] Commissioners may grant to any person applying therefor a licence . . . to provide such a road service as may be specified therein, and a vehicle shall not be used as a stage carriage . . . except under such a licence." The plaintiff held a licence under s. 72 and ran a motor omnibus service between H. and W., a route not within "the special area." The defendants began to run a service of omnibuses in competition with the plaintiff's service, and the plaintiff claimed to restrain them from so doing, or a declaration that in so doing they were acting ultra vires. Section 65 (1) of the Act of 1947 provides: "Sections 72 to 76 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, . . . shall not apply to any passenger road transport service provided, whether under a scheme under . . . this Act or otherwise, by the Commission or by any person acting as agent for the Commission, but neither the Commission nor any such person as aforesaid shall use any public service vehicle for the conveyance of passengers for hire or reward at separate fares except— (a) on a route approved, as respects so much thereof as falls within any traffic area, by the licensing authority for public service vehicles for that area; and (b) in accordance with such restrictions as may be imposed by that authority . . ." with regard to certain matters. Route approval under s. 65 had been secured by the defendants. The British Transport Commission in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 5 of the Act of 1947, made a Scheme of Delegation of Functions which provided: "(1) . . . 'the Executive' means the London Transport Executive . . . (2) This Scheme applies to . . . (a) activities which the Commission are empowered to carry on by virtue of the transfer to them . . . of the undertaking of the London Passenger Transport Board; (b) activities which the Commission are empowered to carry on by virtue only of the powers conferred upon them by s. 2 (1) of the Act so far as those activities are carried on in connection with the activities referred to in sub-para. (a) of this paragraph or are ancillary to such activities; . . . (3) Subject to the provisions of this Scheme, the Commission hereby delegate to the Executive the functions of the Commission in relation to their activities set out in sub-para. (a) and (b) of para. 2 of this Scheme to the intent that . . . all the rights, powers and liabilities of the Commission in connection with those activities shall be exercisable and dischargeable by the Executive . . .”

A HELD: the provision of road services between H. and W. was within the powers of the British Transport Commission, and, having regard particularly to para. (2) (b) of the Scheme, those powers were effectively delegated under para. 3 by the Commission to the defendants.

ACTION.

B The plaintiff sought an injunction to restrain the defendants, the London Transport Executive, from operating an omnibus service in competition with the plaintiff's service, or a declaration that such operation was ultra vires, with consequential claims for damages and costs. No witnesses were called and by agreement between the parties affidavit evidence was read. VAISEY, J., dismissed the action. The facts appear in the judgment.

G. R. F. Morris for the plaintiff.

Fox-Andrews, K.C., and J. P. Ashworth for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

C July 1. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff in this action, Mr. Wilfrid Herbert Smith, carries on business as a road transport operator at Buntingford, in the county of Hertford, and runs a service of motor omnibuses between Hitchin and Weston in that county. He holds the necessary licence to do so from the appropriate licensing authority, namely, the Licensing Authority for Public Service Vehicles (Metropolitan Area) acting under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 72. That Act, (to which I will refer as the Act of 1930) is the first of three Acts to which I shall have to refer in this judgment. The two others are the London Passenger Transport Act, 1933, (which I will call the Act of 1933), and the Transport Act, 1947, (which I will call the Act of 1947), and through the tortuosities of those three statutes I have to find, or, perhaps, grope, my way to a solution of the issues raised in this action. The defendants are the London Transport Executive, which is a public authority constituted as one of the agents for another public authority called the British Transport Commission under the provisions of the Act of 1947, to which I must later more particularly refer. The defendants are running another service of motor omnibuses between Hitchin and Weston in competition with the plaintiff's service, and the plaintiff's claims are to restrain them from so doing or to have it declared that they are acting ultra vires in so doing, with consequential claims for damages and costs. No witnesses were called at the trial, and by agreement between the parties I read or treated as read the affidavits which were filed on the motion which came before me on Apr. 6, 1948, together with a further affidavit sworn on June 29.

D The facts are not really in dispute. What I have to decide is the question of ultra vires. If the plaintiff is to succeed he must establish that what the defendants are doing is unauthorised, either because the necessary powers were not vested in and available to the British Transport Commission itself, and could not, therefore, be delegated to the defendants, or, alternatively, that such powers, although vested in, available to, and capable of being delegated by the British Transport Commission, have not, in fact, been so delegated to the defendants.

E I turn to the Act of 1947, and will read so much of its title as is relevant to the present case, that is to say, it is described as :

F An Act to provide for the establishment of a British Transport Commission concerned with transport and certain other related matters, to specify their powers and duties, to provide for the transfer to them of undertakings, parts of undertakings, property, rights, obligations and liabilities, to amend the law relating to transport, . . . and for purposes connected with the matters aforesaid.

Section 1 (1) is as follows :

G For the purposes of this Act, there shall be a public authority to be called the British Transport Commission (in this Act referred to as “the Commission.”)

Section 2 provides :

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Commission shall have power—(a) to carry goods and passengers by rail, road and inland waterway, within Great Britain . . . (f) to provide in Great Britain such other amenities and facilities for passengers and other persons making use of the services provided by them as it may appear to them requisite or expedient to provide.

Section 3 (1) is important. It reads as follows :

It shall be the general duty of the Commission so to exercise their powers under this Act as to provide, or secure or promote the provision of, an efficient, adequate, economical and properly integrated system of public inland transport and port facilities within Great Britain for passengers and goods with due regard to safety of operation ; and for that purpose it shall be the duty of the Commission to take such steps as they consider necessary for extending and improving the transport and port facilities within Great Britain in such manner as to provide most efficiently and conveniently for the needs of the public, agriculture, commerce and industry.

Section 4 deals with the powers of the Minister (that is, the Minister of Transport) in relation to the Commission. Section 5 (1) says this : " There shall be public authorities known as Executives to assist the Commission in the discharge of their functions in the manner specified in this section," and in sub-s. (3) it is provided that one of the Executives is the London Transport Executive, the defendants to this action. Section 5 proceeds :

(4) Each Executive shall, as agents for the Commission, exercise such functions of the Commission as are for the time being delegated to them by or under a scheme made by the Commission and approved by the Minister . . . (6) Any delegation effected by or under such a scheme may be expressed by the scheme or by the relevant instrument issued thereunder to be subject to conditions and limitations, and, whether or not the relevant delegation is expressed to be subject to any conditions or limitations, every Executive shall, in the exercise of their functions, give effect to any directions which may from time to time be given to them by the Commission . . .

(9) As respects matters for the time being falling within the scope of any such delegation, the following provisions shall have effect except as between the Executive and the Commission, that is to say—(a) any rights, powers and liabilities of the Commission shall be treated as rights, powers and liabilities of the Executive, and the Executive only . . . (10) In addition to the powers exercisable by an Executive by virtue of any such delegation, every Executive shall, except so far as the Commission may otherwise direct, have power, at the request of the Commission or of any other Executive, to do, as agent for the Commission or that other Executive, anything which the Commission or that other Executive have power to do.

Section 12 provides :

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the whole of the undertakings of the bodies of persons specified in sched. III to this Act, being the bodies who fall within the class described in the next succeeding section, shall, on Jan. 1, 1948 . . . vest by virtue of this Act in the Commission.

One of the bodies specified in sched. III to the Act is the London Passenger Transport Board.

Section 14, of which the marginal heading is " General effect of vesting of undertakings," is as follows :

(1) The provisions of this section shall, subject to the other provisions of this Act, have effect where, under the preceding provisions of this Part of this Act, the whole of the undertaking of any body is to vest in the Commission. (2) Subject to the provisions of this section, all the property of the body immediately before the date of transfer shall vest in the Commission and, as from the date of transfer, the Commission shall, to the exclusion of the body, have all rights and be subject to all liabilities which the body had or to which the body were subject immediately before the date of transfer.

At this point I think I may conveniently turn to the Act of 1933, which contains many provisions comparable to the provisions of the Act of 1947. Thus, s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1933, enacts : " For the purposes of this Act there shall . . . be established a public authority to be called the London Passenger Transport Board." Section 3 describes the general duty of the Board as to passenger transport, and s. 15, of which the marginal heading is : " Power of Board to run public service vehicles " reads, so far as is material, as follows :

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, it shall be lawful for the Board to provide road services of stage and express carriages on any of the following roads, but not otherwise, that is to say—(a) on any road within the area described in pt. I of sched. VII to this Act (in this Act referred to as the “London Passenger Transport Area”); (b) on any road outside that area, being a road specified in pt. II or pt. III of that schedule.

and there are further directions, including a proviso that the Board shall not both pick up and set down a passenger on any road specified in pt. III of the schedule or within the borough of Luton. Section 15 further provides :

- A (3) Sections 72 to 76, both inclusive, of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, shall not apply to a road service provided by the Board wholly within such portion of the London Passenger Transport Area as lies within the London Traffic Area (which portion is in this Act referred to as “the special area”) and, in the case of a road service provided by the Board partly within and partly without the special area shall not apply to that service in so far as it is within the special area. (4) The Traffic Commissioners appointed under the said Act, in considering whether they will grant or back a road service licence to the Board in respect of any route or part of a route which is outside the special area shall, in addition to the matters to which they are required to have regard by virtue of s. 72 of the said Act, have regard to the general duty imposed on the Board by this Act of securing the provision of an adequate and properly co-ordinated system of passenger transport for the London Passenger Transport Area.

- B The Hitchin-Weston road is admittedly not within the special area, and, therefore, any road service provided by the London Passenger Transport Board along that route prior to Jan. 1, 1948, would have been subject to the provisions of ss. 72 to 76 of the Act of 1930, to which I will now briefly refer. The Act of 1930 contains a number of sections, all of which are still in force, and which I can pass over quite shortly by reading their marginal headings. For example, s. 62 : “Constitution of traffic areas”; and s. 63 : “Traffic commissioners.” Section 67 provides :

- D (1) No person shall cause or permit a motor vehicle to be used on any road as a stage carriage an express carriage or a contract carriage unless he is the holder of a licence (in this Act referred to as “a public service vehicle licence”) to use it as a vehicle of that class in accordance with the provisions of this Part of this Act.

Section 72 provides :

- E (1) Subject to the provisions of this section the commissioners may grant to any person applying therefor a licence (in this Act referred to as a “road service licence”) to provide such a road service as may be specified therein, and a vehicle shall not be used as a stage carriage or an express carriage except under such a licence.

I need not, I think, trouble to refer to the definition section dealing with the expression “stage carriage or as an express carriage” which has no relevance to the present case. Section 72 further provides :

- F (3) The commissioners shall not grant a road service licence in respect of any route if it appears to them from the particulars furnished in pursuance of sub-s. (5) of this section that the provisions of pt. I of this Act relating to the speed of motor vehicles are likely to be contravened, and . . . shall . . . take into consideration any representations which may be made by persons who are already providing transport facilities along or near to the routes or any part thereof or by any local authority in whose area any of the routes or any part of any of the routes is situate.

- G I need not, I think, refer in detail to sub-ss. (4) and (5), which relate to the particulars which have to be supplied and the considerations which have to be taken into account in connection with the grant of a road service licence. Section 73 of the same Act of 1930 provides for the validity of licences in other areas and backing licences. Section 74 gives power to revoke or suspend licences for non-compliance with conditions, and there are other provisions in the same fasciculus of sections which relate to the granting or withholding or withdrawing of road service licences.

- H I must now return to the Act of 1947. Section 63 provides :

(1) The Commission may, at any time, prepare and submit to the Minister a scheme as to the passenger road transport services serving such area as may be specified in the scheme, being a scheme devised for the purpose of promoting or facilitating the promotion of the co-ordination of the passenger transport services serving the area, whether by road or by rail, and the provision of adequate, suitable and efficient passenger road transport services to meet the needs of the area, and the Commission shall as soon as may be review the passenger road transport services operating in Great Britain with a view to determining the areas with respect to which schemes shall be prepared and submitted as aforesaid. (2) The Commission, in considering what scheme to submit to the Minister with respect to any area, shall consider any representations which have been made to them by any local authority whose area or any part of whose area is within the area to which the scheme will relate, and, without prejudice to the preceding provisions of this sub-section, before submitting a scheme to the Minister, the Commission shall consult every local authority whose area or any part of whose area is within the area to which the scheme relates . . . and any other person providing passenger transport services who, in the opinion of the Commission, is likely to be affected by the scheme.

Section 64 (4) of the Act provides for the payment of compensation in certain cases to any person who was at the date of the passing of the Act, that is to say, I suppose, on Aug. 6, 1947 :

. . . carrying on an undertaking the activities of which consisted wholly or partly of operating passenger road transport services within or partly within the area to which the scheme relates.

I now come to s. 65 of the Act of 1947 which in sub-s. (1) provides :

Sections 72 to 76 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, (which relate to road service licences), shall not apply to any passenger road transport service provided, whether under a scheme under the preceding provisions of this Part of this Act or otherwise, by the Commission or by any person acting as agent for the Commission, but neither the Commission nor any such person as aforesaid shall use any public service vehicle for the conveyance of passengers for hire or reward at separate fares except—(a) on a route approved, as respects so much thereof as falls within any traffic area, by the licensing authority for public service vehicles for that area ; and (b) in accordance with such restrictions as may be imposed by that authority as to the class or description of vehicles which may be used on the route and as to the portions of the route on which, and the points at which, passengers may be taken up or set down.

Then there is a proviso for an appeal to the Minister against the refusal of the authority to give their approval—that is approval of the route and so forth—or against any restrictions as to the matters aforesaid, and the decision of the Minister is to be final.

It is under s. 65 of the Act of 1947, combined, no doubt, with the provisions of s. 2 (1) and s. 3 (1) of the Act of 1947, that the defendants say that what they are doing is lawful. I was at one time doubtful whether a letter dated Feb. 5, 1948, from the clerk to the licensing authority was, in view of its rather conditional terms, a sufficient route approval to satisfy the requirements of s. 65. On the whole, I think that it was, and that the plaintiff cannot avail himself of that particular objection, which I hold to be unfounded. I am by no means prepared to say that the British Transport Commission has no right to run road services outside the special area except by acquisition of undertakings by agreement (under s. 7 of the Act of 1947) or by means of a vesting of undertakings (s. 12) or under a road transport scheme (s. 63), and I think that they—that is, the Commission—have such a right, namely, under s. 2 (1) and s. 3 (1) and s. 65. The effect of s. 65, as it seems to me, is to substitute a different measure of control from that to which the London Passenger Transport Board was formerly subject. I confess to thinking it somewhat strange that the plaintiffs and others in a similar position should have no possibility of claiming compensation when persons similarly affected by the operation of an area road transport scheme possess it, and no satisfactory explanation justifying such a differentiation was given me. But there it is, the Act seems to provide for the payment of compensation in the one case and not in the other.

On the whole, if the action had been brought against the British Transport Commission and the London Transport Executive as co-defendants, I should, I think, have been prepared to hold without question that one of those bodies was entitled to do that of which the plaintiff complains, without deciding which of them was so entitled, but that is not the position. The London Transport Executive are the only defendants, and the issue is not as to the powers of the British Transport Commission, but as to the powers of the defendants. That question depends on the terms of the relevant Scheme of Delegation of Functions which was sealed by the British Transport Commission on Dec. 5, 1947, and approved by the Minister on Dec. 11, 1947. To that document I must now refer. It says that :

The British Transport Commission in exercise of the powers conferred upon them by s. 5 of the Transport Act, 1947, and of all other powers enabling them in that behalf, hereby make the following Scheme: (1) In this Scheme the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say "the Minister" means the Minister of Transport; "the Commission" means the British Transport Commission; "the Executive" means the London Transport Executive; "the other Executives" means the Railway Executive, the Docks and Inland Waterways Executive, the Road Transport Executive, and, as from the appointed day, the Hotels Executive; "the Act" means the Transport Act, 1947; and, except where the context otherwise requires, other expressions have the same meanings as in the Act. (2) This Scheme applies to the following activities of the Commission: (a) activities which the Commission are empowered to carry on by virtue of the transfer to them under pt. II of the Act of the undertaking of the London Passenger Transport Board; (b) activities which the Commission are empowered to carry on by virtue only of the powers conferred upon them by s. 2 (1) of the Act so far as those activities are carried on in connection with the activities referred to in sub-para. (a) of this paragraph or are ancillary to such activities; . . . (3) Subject to the provisions of this Scheme, the Commission hereby delegate to the Executive the functions of the Commission in relation to their activities set out in sub-paras. (a) and (b) of para. 2 of this Scheme to the intent that, subject as aforesaid, all the rights, powers and liabilities of the Commission in connection with those activities shall be exercisable and dischargeable by the Executive; and the Executive shall have power to perform any of the functions delegated to them through agents.

I do not think there is anything very much in the rest of the Scheme, which bears the seal of the British Transport Commission authenticated by the chairman and chief secretary, and is also sealed as approved by the Minister of Transport.

It is said on behalf of the defendants that the effect of the Scheme was to transfer to the defendants the powers or activities which could have been exercised by the London Passenger Transport Board freed (by s. 65 of the Act of 1947) from the restrictions (under s. 72 of the Act of 1930) to which the London Passenger Transport Board was previously subject, but subject to the substituted "route approval" restrictions imposed by s. 65 of the Act of 1947. The plaintiff, on the other hand, says that nothing in the Act of 1947 extends the power of a vested undertaking, that the running of omnibuses on the route in question would not have been within the powers of the London Passenger Transport Board except subject to the restrictions (that is to say, under s. 72 of the Act of 1930) which would have given the plaintiff at least a right to be heard, and that the powers of the British Transport Commission to run a road service on the route in question are not derived from the London Passenger Transport Board at all, but arise (if they exist) from another source altogether, and that there is nothing in the Scheme of Delegation in which alone the defendants' powers are contained to transfer those powers to the defendants.

The choice between these conflicting submissions is, in my judgment, difficult to make. If the defendants' view is right, why did not the British Transport Commission delegate in comprehensive language the whole of their powers so far as exercisable in and over one of the many areas to which statutory meanings are attached, such as the London Passenger Transport Area, the London Traffic Area, or the Metropolitan Traffic Area? The language of the Scheme is, in my judgment, obscure and confusing when it might easily have been made clear and plain. For instance, if, at the end of para. 2 (a) of the Scheme, there had been added some such words as "by the combined operation of the transfer and the provisions of the Act" the meaning would have been at least somewhat clearer than it is. It is easy to be critical of the obscurities in Acts of Parliament, but it is only fair to remember the difficult circumstances of debate and discussion in which those Acts have passed into law. No such excuse can be offered for the Scheme of Delegation which I am now considering. I am sure that the Ministry of Transport could have enlisted the services of some person, whether calling himself a draftsman or not, who was capable of achieving something better than this clumsy and confused production. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the provision of road services along the Hitchin-Weston Road is within the powers of the British Transport Commission, and regard being had in particular to the terms of para. 2 (b) of the Scheme I have come (though with considerable hesitation) to the further conclusion that those powers were effectively delegated by the British Transport Commission to the defendants by para. 3 of the Scheme. I must, therefore, dismiss the action. It is unusual to deprive successful defendants of their costs, but in all the circumstances of the present case I shall dismiss the action without costs.

Action dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts (for the plaintiff); Solicitor to the London Transport Executive.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] A

BOSTEL BROTHERS, LTD. v. HURLOCK.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Cohen, L.J.J.), June 4, 7, 8, 29, 1948.] B

Building—Control—Permitted cost of work exceeded—Defences open to alleged offender—Cost of supplying article—Inclusion in permitted cost—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939 (S.R. & O., 1939, No. 927, as amended by S.R. & O., 1941, Nos. 1596 and 2011, 1945, No. 502), reg. 56A (2), (6), (8).

By an oversight in failing to apply for a supplementary licence, the plaintiffs supplied material and did repair work on the defendant's house in excess of the cost covered by licences from the Minister of Works. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover the balance due for the additional work:—

HELD: (i) if a licence is granted to do certain work at a specified cost and the cost is exceeded, that is prima facie a contravention of reg. 56A, para. 2, of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, and the defences provided by provisos (a) and (b) of para. 6 of the regulation are available to the alleged offender, and it matters not that there is also an offence under para. 8 of the regulation as for a breach of a condition of the licence; in the circumstances there had been a contravention of the regulations; and the defendants could not bring themselves within proviso (a) or proviso (b), and, therefore, the plaintiffs' action must fail. C

Dictum of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Langton v. Hughes (1813) (1 M. & S. 593, 596); Brightman & Co. v. Tate ([1919] 1 K.B. 463); and Re Mahmoud & Ispahani ([1921] 2 K.B. 716), applied. D

(ii) if the cost of the work for which a licence was obtained included the cost of providing and fixing an article and the licensed cost was exceeded, it was not permissible to deduct the actual cost of the article from the excess and seek to reduce the apparent excess to that extent. E

Quaere: whether, if a builder already has an article, or if the article is obtainable without a licence, the building licence must cover its cost as well as the cost of fitting it. F

[AS TO CONTRACTS MADE VOID OR ILLEGAL BY STATUTE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 164-169, paras. 235-239; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 269-274, Nos. 2200-2244.]

FOR DEFENCE (GENERAL) REGULATIONS, 1939, reg. 56A, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, p. 1001.] G

Cases referred to:

- (1) Langton v. Hughes, (1813), 1 M. & S. 593; 12 Digest 270, 2214.
- (2) Brightman & Co. v. Tate, [1919] 1 K.B. 463; 88 L.J.K.B. 921; 120 L.T. 512; 12 Digest 271, 2217.
- (3) Re Mahmoud and Ispahani, [1921] 2 K.B. 716; 90 L.J.K.B. 821; 125 L.T. 161; 12 Digest 271, 2220.

APPEAL, by the defendant, from an order of His Honour JUDGE ARCHER, K.C., made at Brighton County Court, and dated Aug. 1, 1947, allowing the plaintiffs' claim for the balance for work done and materials supplied, the work in respect of which the claim was made being in excess of the cost covered by licences from the Minister of Works. The appeal was allowed. The facts appear in the judgment of the court. H

Gardiner, K.C., and W. Gumbel for the defendant.

Beney, K.C., and Dutton Briant for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 29. SOMERVELL, L.J., read the following judgment of the court. By a writ issued in the High Court the plaintiffs claimed a sum of £203 2s. 5d., as the balance due for work done and materials supplied. The account submitted by the plaintiffs to the defendant on which the claim was based showed £260 covered by an estimate and further itemised sums making up a total of £408 12s. 5d. The defendant, as appeared from the writ, had paid £200, and there was an agreed credit of £5 10s. 0d. Application was made for judgment under R.S.C., Ord. 14. The defendant filed an affidavit. He alleged a tender of, and admitted liability for, £60, the balance of the estimate. He admitted that there might be some further sum due, but in respect of any amount over £260, or substantially all of it, his first defence was that the extras claimed for over and above the work covered by the estimate had never been ordered by him. Alternatively, in respect of such extras, he alleged that the work was done "without any licence from the Minister of Works being in force in respect thereof and that such additional work was unlawful," and the plaintiffs could not recover. The master gave the plaintiffs liberty to sign judgment for £104 18s. 4d. with leave to defend as to the residue and remitted the action to the county court. The licences in fact issued, which are referred to later, covered £293. We were told which items in addition to the £60 made up the £104 18s. 4d. It would seem that these were items as to which the defendant did not sustain or withdrew his allegation that they had not been ordered, and in respect of the balance over the £293 the question of illegality was not raised. The learned county court judge held that the defence that the extras were not ordered failed, and the defendant before us accepted this finding. The learned judge found that the defence of illegality was not made out, and from this part of his judgment the defendant appeals.

Before referring to the statutory provisions as to the necessity for licences it will be convenient to recapitulate the main facts, and the principle of law which has to be applied. All the work in question was work on a house called "Hay Tor," at Saltdean, near Brighton. This house had been bought by the defendant, and the plaintiffs were instructed by the defendant to prepare an estimate for putting it into habitable condition. It had been vacant for some time, and was to be inhabited by a Mr. and Mrs. Pierson who were friends of the defendant. The estimate dated Mar. 15, 1945, was for £260. It covered the ordinary items that one would expect. The electric light and power installation was to be inspected and defects made good. In respect of this item a provisional sum of £10 was referred to which was to be deducted from the estimate if no defects were found. The estimate was accepted and a licence was applied for on Apr. 4, 1945. On May 2 a licence was issued to Mrs. Pierson to carry out repairs and decorations and overhaul the electrical installation at a total cost not exceeding £278. The application form and the specification accompanying it have been lost. The work was carried out between June and September. The electric light installation was found to be considerably defective, and from time to time, as often happens in these circumstances, further work on other matters was found to be necessary and was ordered and done. On July 5 a further licence was applied for and was granted on Aug. 7, covering the repair of a fence and gate and the overhaul of electric light installation at a cost not exceeding £15. The total cost of the electrical work according to the plaintiffs' bill was about £50.

The principle of law relied on was stated concisely and in a form appropriate to the present issue by ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Langton v. Hughes (1) (1 M. & S. 593, 596): "What is done in contravention of the provisions of an Act of Parliament, cannot be made the subject-matter of an action." We are concerned with a defence regulation which has the same force as an Act of Parliament. In Brightman & Co. v. Tate (2), the general subject-matter was similar to that in the present appeal. The plaintiff, a builder, claimed for the balance of an account. There was a prohibition of the carrying on of building work above a certain cost without a licence. The defendants asserted that as from a certain date the work done by the plaintiff was outside the licence granted and was illegally performed. It was held that the work in respect of which the claim was made was outside the licence, and having regard to the terms of the Order was illegal, and the sum could not be recovered. The same principle was considered and applied by this court in Re Mahmoud and Ispahani (3). In that case the plaintiff had sold the defendant a certain quantity of linseed oil. There was an Order, the effect of which was that buyers and sellers of linseed oil must be licenced. The plaintiff had a licence and the defendant had not, though he had, in fact, told the plaintiff that he had a licence. It was held that the contract was prohibited by the Order and the plaintiff could not recover. In Brightman & Co. v. Tate (2) ([1919] 1 K.B. 463, 472), McCARDIE, J., had expressed some doubt whether the principle applied if the plaintiff had reason to believe there was no illegality. The decision in Re Mahmoud & Ispahani (3) made it clear that any such doubt was not well founded. The principle is, of course, only applicable if the contract or the work done under the contract is illegal.

I will now turn to the relevant provisions of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939. The regulation with which we are concerned is reg. 56A, which was substituted by Order No. 1596 of 1941, amended later by Order No. 2011 of 1941, and continued in force up to July 1, 1945, when further amendments came into force under Order No. 502 of 1945. As will be seen under the code which we have to apply there were certain provisions authorising work to be done without a licence. The learned county court judge held that the work sued for was covered by these provisions, and the main issue is whether there was any evidence on which he could so find. Paragraph (2) of reg. 56A in its original form is as follows :

Subject to the provisions of this regulation, the execution in the United Kingdom of any operation begun at any time on or after Jan. 1, 1942, which involves the doing of any description of any work specified in pt. III of sched. VI to these regulations, not being an operation executed for a purpose specified in the first column of the table set out in pt. I of that schedule, shall be unlawful except in so far as there is in force in respect thereof a licence granted by the Minister : Provided that no licence shall be required by virtue of this paragraph if the total cost of the work of that description involved in the operation does not exceed such sum as may be prescribed by order of the Minister in relation to work of that description involved in an operation begun at that time.

The relevant words of pt. III of sched. VI are :

Work done in the construction, re-construction, alteration, demolition, repair, or decoration of a building or of any such works as are mentioned in pt. II of this schedule . . .

The relevant words of pt. II are :

. . . works required for the purpose of providing water, light, heating or other services for a building . . .

The next relevant paragraph is para. (6) which I will read as amended by Order No. 2011 of 1941, which substituted a new para. (b) in the proviso :

If any operation is executed or work is carried out in contravention of any of the first three paragraphs of this regulation the person at whose expense the operation is executed or the work is carried out, and (where he is not the same person) the person undertaking the execution of the operation or the carrying out of the work, and (in either case) any architect, engineer or other person employed in an advisory or supervisory capacity in connection with the execution of the operation or the carrying out of the work shall each be guilty of an offence against this regulation : Provided that— (a) where it would be a defence for a person charged with an offence against this regulation to prove that the cost of an operation or of any relevant work did not exceed a particular amount, it shall also be a defence for him to prove that at the time when the operation in respect of which he is charged was begun or the work in respect of which he is charged was carried out he had reasonable grounds for believing that the said cost would not exceed that amount ; (b) it shall be a defence for a person charged with a contravention of any of the first three paragraphs of this regulation to prove that the acts done without authorisation or licence were urgently necessary and were done in circumstances of emergency which rendered it impracticable to obtain authorisation thereof or a licence therefor.

The next relevant paragraph is para. (8) :

If any condition attached to an authorisation or licence granted for the purposes of this regulation is contravened or not complied with, then, whether or not the authorisation or licence is revoked, the person undertaking the execution of the operation, or the carrying out of the work, in respect of which the authorisation or licence was granted and any architect, engineer or other person employed in an advisory or supervisory capacity in connection with the execution of the operation or the carrying out of the work shall each be guilty of an offence against this regulation.

The relevant amendments made by Order No. 502 of 1945 are as follows :

1. For paras. (2) and (3) of reg. 56A of the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, there shall be substituted the following paragraph : “ (2) Subject to the provisions of this regulation, the carrying out in the United Kingdom, except for a purpose specified in the first column of the table set out in pt. I of sched. VI to these regulations, of any work specified in pt. III of that schedule or of any maintenance work on a building or on any such works as are mentioned in pt. II of that schedule, shall be unlawful except in so far as there is in force in respect thereof a licence granted by the Minister :
A Provided that the Minister may by order authorise the carrying out of such work without a licence within such limits of cost as may be specified in the order, and may prescribe different limits of cost for different classes of work or for different classes of property or for different areas, and any such order may, without prejudice to the generality of this provision, limit the cost of the work, or of the work of any class, that may be carried out in any period specified in the order on any single property as defined in the order.” 2. Any licence granted by the Minister of Works under para.
B (2) or para. (3) of the said regulation as it had effect before the date on which this Order comes into operation, being a licence in force immediately before the said date, shall continue in force and shall have effect as if it had been granted under para. (2) of the said regulation as amended by this Order.

By para. (4) of Order No. 502 of 1945 :

In para. (8) of the said regulation after the word “ revoked ” there shall be inserted
C the words “ the person at whose expense the operation is executed or the work is carried out in respect of which the authorisation or licence was granted and (where he is not the same person), ” and the words “ in respect of which the authorisation or licence was granted ” shall be omitted.

So far as para. (8) is concerned it will be seen that the amendment adds to the offenders the person at whose expense the work is carried out. The work contemplated was, in our view, work for which, under the regulation, a licence
D was necessary. It has been thought right to set out these amendments, but, in our opinion, if the work done was an offence under the original or amended code the principle referred to in the earlier part of this judgment is plainly applicable. There was no material alteration, so far as this case is concerned, by the amendments made in 1945. If the work in respect of which the claim is made was, as it clearly was, in excess of the cost covered by the licences, and cannot be brought within the proviso of para. (6) if applicable, then, in E our opinion, it was illegal, the principle referred to applies, and the plaintiffs cannot recover.

The first licence issued is as follows :

Subject to the conditions hereafter set out licence is hereby granted to carry out repairs and decoration, also overhaul electrical installation in accordance with application dated Apr. 4, 1945, and relative specification lodged with the Ministry at “ Hay F Tor,” Arundel Drive, Saltdean, Sussex, at a total cost not exceeding £278.

Then there are conditions, of which the fifth condition is :

In the carrying out of the work authorised by this licence the total cost specified above shall not be exceeded and no work shall be carried out in purported exercise of the authority conferred by this licence except as specified above.

The second licence was as follows :

Subject to the conditions hereafter set out licence is hereby granted to incur additional expenditure to that authorised under Licence No. 0/12/45/4181 to repair fence and gate and overhaul electric light installation in accordance with application dated July 5, 1945, lodged with the Ministry at “ Hay Tor,” Arundel Drive, Saltdean, Sussex, at a total cost not exceeding £15.

and there was a similar condition to that which I have already read.

If a licence is granted to do certain work at a certain cost and the cost is H exceeded, is this prima facie a contravention of para. (2) of the regulation, and, therefore, within para. (6), or is there no contravention of para. (2), the matter falling to be dealt with solely under para. (8) as a breach of a condition attached to the licence ? The importance of this is that para. (8) contains no exception. If, therefore, the matter had to be considered solely under para. (8) the question whether the plaintiffs can justify not obtaining a further licence does not arise. In our opinion, it is prima facie a breach of para. (2). The proviso to that paragraph shows that the licensing system operates on cost. If the cost covered by a licence is exceeded there is, we think, no licence in force in respect of the work covered by the excess. The words of para. (6) including the provisos apply to such a case. It may be that there has also been a breach of a condition within para. (8). It is unnecessary to analyse this point further, as we think the defendant succeeds on the assumption more favourable to the plaintiffs, viz., that the proviso to para. (6) is applicable.

The learned county court judge proceeded on the basis that there was no illegality if the case can be brought within the provisos or one of them. We think this is plainly right. Paragraph (2) begins with the words "Subject to the provisions of this regulation," and the regulation must be read as a whole to find out what is prohibited. Some time in 1946 the fact that the amounts stated in the licences had been exceeded was brought to the attention of the authorities, and on Aug. 13, 1946, the following letter was written to the plaintiffs:

Dear Sir, Defence Regulation 56A, Hay Tor, Saltdean. With reference to work carried out by your firm on the above property under licence from the Brighton Corporation, I am informed that the cost of the work exceeded the permitted sum under the licence by £130. The circumstances under which you came to do this work have been fully discussed with the local authority. It would seem that there was a genuine oversight on your part in your failure to make an application for a supplementary licence. This department is prepared to accept your explanation and take no further action on the contravention of the regulation.

At the trial the learned judge, with the approval of both parties, heard counsel instructed by the Ministry, and a Mr. Cooper from the regional office of the Ministry gave evidence. Unfortunately, the file dealing with the matter had been lost, but Mr. Cooper stated that the matter had been fully investigated. There is, obviously, a question as to the admissibility of the letter and of this evidence and its effect assuming the parties took no objection to its being before the judge. It is desirable to read certain paragraphs from the judgment. After referring to the letter of Aug. 13 the learned judge says:

To me this means that, though the papers are missing from the file, a matter left to the department had been fully investigated and considered to be within the provisos of the regulations. The letter ends by saying that "no further action will be taken." That seems to be a necessary corollary to what appears before it. This case is not at all as if there might or might not have been a doubtful prosecution. The explanation was accepted. The courts have, no doubt, always construed the regulations themselves, and are on the watch to see that they are not departed from by the department itself. Except for the loss of the file I see no failure. The details of the investigation I do not know. I would much rather have seen the file, but there is no reason for doubting what Mr. Cooper says, and, if what he says was done was done, it seems to me it was exactly what the regulations require. Whether the form of letters might be more satisfactory from the point of view of the man who wants to be paid is another matter. It was strongly urged on me that the letter was a mere intimation that no proceedings would be taken by the Ministry to prosecute for an offence. I cannot so read it. The Ministry afforded me the assistance of counsel, for which I am very grateful. What Mr. Bristowe did was to draw my attention to the clauses of the regulations which are relevant and he then stated what the practice of the Minister is and has been under them, leaving me to hear the arguments of counsel for the parties as to the construction of the regulations. He very properly did not state the Minister's view of the regulations, their construction being a matter entirely for this and the higher courts. He gave me a very clear statement of the practice of the Minister, and the following is the substance of it. The Minister recognises that in some circumstances it is impossible for either the builder or owner to give a firm estimate of the cost. He recognises that strictly the builder should stop whenever he sees that the costs will be exceeded. This would not be practicable because of the loss of time. In practice, therefore, the Minister expects the builder to report as soon as possible; and if, in the process of work, to get a fresh licence. If, however, the builder reports excess the circumstances are fully investigated and, if the Minister is satisfied that the conduct of the builder and those concerned is bona fide, and that the excess is due to some sufficient cause, such as fluctuation or discovery of unexpected circumstances, then instead of prosecuting the Minister takes the view that it would be wrong to take proceedings and causes to be written a letter such as that exhibited in the present case. The view is acted on that proviso (b) covers excess of operations and permits (a) excess of costs. In a case when the Minister comes to the conclusion that the facts are within the provisos how can he reasonably act otherwise? It, then, is my duty for me to say whether that conclusion of his is right. I hold that I have no evidence to the contrary, that I have some evidence which is affirmative, and that in a matter such as this the maxim omnia esse rite acta presumuntur should have one of its rather rare applications.

In the first place, we find it impossible to construe the letter in this way. The reference to a genuine oversight and the reference to a contravention of the regulations are, as it seems to us, quite inappropriate if the writer intended to say that the authorities were satisfied that an application was unnecessary by reason of the proviso. There was a reasonable explanation of an "oversight" in that Mr. Bostel senior became ill while the work was in progress and the business was taken over by his son who had just returned from the

A Forces. The natural construction of the letter, in our view, is that there had been a breach, that it was due to an innocent oversight, and that it was, therefore, proper not to take criminal proceedings. The view of the writer of the letter is, of course, irrelevant, but the learned judge's mind was clearly influenced by the construction which he put on it, and which, in our view, was a wrong construction. The learned judge does not find any specific facts to support his conclusion either that at the time the work was done the plaintiffs had
B reasonable grounds for believing that the cost would not exceed the amount of the licence, or that the works were urgently necessary for the purpose for which the operation was undertaken and were done in circumstances of emergency which rendered it impracticable to obtain authorisation. It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether on the evidence the learned judge's conclusion can be justified. [HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the evidence.] In our opinion,
C there is no evidence which justifies a finding that the case falls within either proviso (a) or proviso (b).

Counsel for the plaintiffs made a final submission based on an argument that, if in the original estimate or in the extras an article was to be supplied and fixed, the cost of supplying the article did not have to be covered by the licence. In the present case the estimate which was the basis of the application for the first licence covered two new grates which were to be supplied and fixed. From the D account delivered it appears that these were estimated to cost £30. The account also shows that the grates were bought at a total cost of £31 10s. 0d. This, however, is irrelevant. If the cost of the work for which a licence is obtained includes the cost of providing and fixing an article and the licensed cost is exceeded it is not, in our view, permissible to deduct the actual cost of the article from the excess and seek to reduce the apparent excess to that extent. Therefore, in the present case it is not permissible to deduct the £30. A somewhat different
E issue may arise with regard to the extras. This point was never raised and investigated below, but counsel for the plaintiffs is, of course, entitled to support the judgment on any point which is open to him on the facts found. In the present case the relevant facts are not found in that counsel for the plaintiffs has to ask us to estimate what proportion of a composite figure, e.g., for supplying and fixing a cistern, should be regarded as the cost of the cistern. There
F are other difficulties. If a builder already has an article, must the building licence cover its cost as well as the cost of fixing it? If he has not the article, it certainly is not at all clear that the cost should not be covered by the licence.

We express no opinion on the question, obviously an important one, whether the cost of all articles to be used in the work in respect of which a licence is applied for must, as a matter of law, be included even if, in fact, apart from this
G regulation, the article has been already obtained or is obtainable without a licence. It may depend on what the article is. If the point had been raised below, this could have been gone into and the plaintiffs could themselves have given evidence as to the circumstances in which these articles were obtained. In our opinion, even assuming the point could have been maintained as to the cost of one or more of the articles in question—a boiler, a cistern and some roofing felt—it is too late to seek to raise it at this stage. For these reasons,
H the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors : Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the defendant) ; R. L. Mason, agent for Gates & Co., Brighton (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DIPLOCK'S ESTATE, DIPLOCK AND OTHERS v.
WINTLE AND OTHERS (AND ASSOCIATED ACTIONS).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Greene, M.R., Wrottesley and Evershed, L.JJ.),
February 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, March 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, July 9, 1948.]

Mistake—Mistake of law—Money paid under mistake—Recovery—Money had and received—Personal claim in equity—Construction of will—Residue of testator's estate paid to charitable institutions by executors—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under intestacy to recover from institutions sums paid.

Limitation of Action—Recovery of sums paid under invalid residuary bequest—Action by next of kin—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 20.

Money—How far money can be followed—Money paid to charitable institutions by executors under a mistake as to the construction of a will—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Right of those entitled under an intestacy to trace.

By his will, dated Nov. 3, 1919, a testator, who died on Mar. 23, 1936, directed his executors to apply his residuary estate "for such charitable institution or institutions or other charitable or benevolent object or objects in England" as they in their absolute discretion should select. By 1939, pursuant to that direction the executors had paid over £200,000 to 139 charitable institutions, and in that year certain of the testator's next of kin challenged the validity of the direction. Accordingly, on Oct. 18, 1939, the executor's solicitors wrote to each of the said charitable institutions informing them of the challenge and calling on them not to deal with the distributed sums until they had further heard from them. In 1944 the House of Lords held that the residuary bequest was void for uncertainty. In actions begun by the testator's next of kin in 1940 and 1945 to recover the sums paid to the charitable institutions:—

HELD: (i) it was impossible to contend that a disposition which, according to the general law, was held to be invalid could yet confer on those who, ex hypothesi, had improperly participated under the disposition some moral or equitable right to retain what they had received against those whom the law declared to be properly entitled.

(ii) the next of kin had an equitable right to recover the money paid by mistake by the executors to the charities, and a claim thereunder was not liable to be defeated merely (a) in the absence of administration by the court, or (b) because the mistake under which the original payment was made was one of law rather than fact, or (c) because the charity concerned in any particular claim had no title and was a stranger to the estate. In the first instance the right was against the executors, and the extent of the claim against the charities was limited to the amount not recovered from the executors.

David v. Frowd (1833) (1 My. & K. 200), considered.

Re Hatch, Hatch v. Hatch ([1919] 1 Ch. 351), criticised.

Re Mason ([1929] 1 Ch. 1), explained.

Per cur: the absence or exhaustion of the beneficiary's right to go against the wrongdoing executor or administrator ought properly to be regarded as the justification for calling on equity to come to the aid of the law by providing a remedy which would otherwise be denied to the party who has been deprived of that which was justly his.

(iii) the actions were "in respect of" claims to personal estate within the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 20, and, therefore, the limitation period applicable to the equitable claims in personam was 12 years, and the claims were not barred.

Re Blake, Re Minahan's Petition of Right ([1932] 1 Ch. 54), considered.

(iv) equity recognised the right of the next of kin to the money as a proprietary interest, and when once that proprietary interest had been created as a result of the wrongful dealing with the funds by the executors, it would persist and be operative against an innocent third party who was a volunteer provided only that means of identification in or disentanglement from a mixed fund remained. There could be no difference in principle between a case where the mixing had been done by the volunteer and one where the mixing had been done previously by the fiduciary agent.

Sinclair v. Brougham ([1914] A.C. 398), applied.

(v) where a defendant institution had mixed with its own money money received from the executors and employed the mixed fund in the purchase of property (e.g., land or stock), the next of kin would be entitled to a charge on the property, but where the money from the executors had been used in the alteration or improvement of assets which the institution already owned, the money could not be traced in any true sense and a declaration of charge would not produce an equitable result and was, therefore, inapplicable. The position was similar where the money had been given for the purpose of the payment off of an existing incumbrance on land.

(vi) where moneys from the executors had been mixed in an active banking account by a defendant institution, withdrawals thereout should not be attributed rateably to the "Diplock money" and the charity money. The rule in Clayton's case (1816) (1 Mer. 529, 572) should be applied, but that rule should not be applied by analogy to the purchaser and sale of war stock.

Decision of WYNN-PARRY, J. ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522) reversed in part.

[AS TO MISTAKE OF LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 131, 132, paras. 181, 182; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 91-95, Nos. 9-44.

AS TO RIGHT TO FOLLOW ASSETS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 200-202, paras. 192, 193; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 1017-1023, Nos. 4580-4624.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson, [1944] 2 All E.R. 60; [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallett, (1880), 13 Ch.D. 696; sub nom., Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallett, Cotterell v. Hallett, 49 L.J.Ch. 415; 42 L.T. 421; 43 Digest 1021, 4614.
- (3) Sinclair v. Brougham, [1914] A.C. 398; 83 L.J.Ch. 465; 111 L.T. 1; varying S.C. sub nom., Re Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society, [1912] 2 Ch. 183; 35 Digest 167, 8.
- (4) Gillespie v. Alexander, (1827), 3 Russ. 130; 23 Digest 432, 5035.
- (5) David v. Frowd, (1833), 1 My. & K. 200; 2 L.J.Ch. 68; 24 Digest 793, 8240.
- (6) Mohan v. Broughton, [1900] P. 56; 69 L.J.P. 20; 82 L.T. 29; 23 Digest 248, 3035.
- (7) Nelthrop v. Hill, (1669), 1 Cas. in Ch. 135; 22 E.R. 730; 23 Digest 428, 4983.
- (8) Grove v. Banson, (1669), 1 Cas. in Ch. 148; 22 E.R. 736; 44 Digest 291, 1229.
- (9) Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, (1675), 1 Cas. in Ch. 256; Freem. Ch. 141; 22 E.R. 788; 25 Digest 161, 103.
- (10) Noel v. Robinson, (1682), 1 Vern. 90; 2 Vent. 358; 23 E.R. 334; 23 Digest 428, 4988.
- (11) Anon., (1683), 1 Vern. 162; 23 E.R. 388; 23 Digest 432, 5031.
- (12) Newman v. Barton, (1690), 2 Vern. 205; 23 E.R. 733; 23 Digest 428, 4989.
- (13) Anon., (1718), 1 P. Wms. 495; 24 E.R. 487; 23 Digest 430, 5010.
- (14) Orr v. Kaines, (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 194; 28 E.R. 125; 23 Digest 430, 5013.
- (15) Walcott v. Hall, (1788), 2 Bro. C.C. 305; 23 Digest 430, 5015.
- (16) Greig v. Somerville, (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 338; 23 Digest 432, 5036.
- (17) Sawyer v. Birchmore, (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 611; 1 Keen, 825; 6 L.J.Ch. 277; 24 Digest 794, 8241.
- (18) Thomas v. Griffith, (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 555; 30 L.J.Ch. 465; 3 L.T. 761; 20 Digest 268, 287.
- (19) Davies v. Nicolson, (1858), 2 De G. & J. 693; 27 L.J.Ch. 719; 31 L.T.O.S. 374; 23 Digest 432, 5038.
- (20) Re Rivers, Pullen v. Rivers, [1920] 1 Ch. 320; 88 L.J.Ch. 462; 121 L.T. 57; 24 Digest 596, 6298.
- (21) Fenwick v. Clarke, (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 240; 31 L.J.Ch. 728; 6 L.T. 593; 23 Digest 329, 3957.
- (22) Peterson v. Peterson, (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 111; 36 L.J.Ch. 101; 23 Digest 431, 5025.
- (23) Hilliard v. Fulford, (1876), 4 Ch.D. 389; 46 L.J.Ch. 43; 35 L.T. 750; 23 Digest 431, 5020.

- (24) Re Robinson, McLaren v. Public Trustee, [1911] 1 Ch. 502; 104 L.T. 331; sub nom., Re Robinson, McLaren v. Robinson, 80 L.J.Ch. 381; 43 Digest 960, 4002.
- (25) Re Hatch, Hatch v. Hatch, [1919] 1 Ch. 351; 88 L.J.Ch. 147; 120 L.T. 694; 35 Digest 95, 36.
- (26) Rogers v. Ingham, (1876), 3 Ch.D. 351; 35 L.T. 677; 35 Digest 93, 25.
- (27) Re Mason, [1929] 1 Ch. 1; 97 L.J.Ch. 321; 139 L.T. 477; Digest Supp.; affg., [1928] Ch. 385.
- (28) Re Blake, Re Minahan's Petition of Right, [1932] 1 Ch. 54; 100 L.J.Ch. 251; 145 L.T. 42; Digest Supp.
- (29) Hodges v. Waddington, (1683), 2 Vent. 360; 23 Digest 430, 5011.
- (30) Gittins v. Steele, (1818), 1 Swan. 199; 23 Digest 429, 4998.
- (31) Re Johnson, Sly v. Blake, (1885), 29 Ch.D. 964; 52 L.T. 682; 32 Digest 402, 808.
- (32) Banque Belge Pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck, [1921] 1 K.B. 321; 90 L.J.K.B. 322; 35 Digest 168, 9.
- (33) Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; 53 L.J.Ch. 745; 51 L.T. 462; revsg., S.C., sub nom., Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (The Crace-Calvert Case), (1882), 23 Ch.D. 440; 7 Digest 515, 367.
- (34) Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's Case, (1816), 1 Mer. 529, 572; 12 Digest 483, 3961.
- (35) Re Stenning, Wood v. Stenning, [1895] 2 Ch. 433; 73 L.T. 207; 43 Digest 1022, 4616.

APPEALS from a judgment of WYNN-PARRY, J., delivered on Mar. 11, 1947 and reported, [1947] 1 All E.R. 522.

The actions were brought by persons entitled to share in such part of an estate as to which the testator died intestate to recover certain sums of money paid to the defendants, various charitable institutions, by the executors of the testator's will under a direction which was subsequently declared by the House of Lords to be void for uncertainty (Chichester Diocesan Fund v. Simpson ([1944] 2 All E.R. 60)). WYNN-PARRY, J., held, inter alia, that the rule that money paid under a mistake of law was irrecoverable was of general application and that the plaintiffs could not maintain a claim for the return of the money as money had and received. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeals on the general grounds: (i) that the plaintiffs had a right in personam in equity against the recipients which was not liable to be defeated by the fact that the payment to them had been made under a mistake of law by the executors, and (ii) that the plaintiffs had a right in rem to the money recognised by equity which would enable them to trace the money, providing only that it was possible to identify or disentangle it where it had been mixed with assets of the recipients.

Pascoe Hayward, K.C., J. L. Arnold and Cockle for next of kin.

John Monckton for the judicial trustee.

Neville Gray, K.C., and Dunbar for the National Institute for the Deaf and Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Gerald Upjohn, K.C., and Dunbar for Prince of Wales' Hospital, Plymouth, and Leaf Homeopathic Hospital.

Pennycuik, K.C., and J. F. Bowyer for St. George's Hospital.

Pennycuik, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for Westminster Hospital, Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes, Guy's Hospital and the Heritage Craft Schools.

R. W. Goff for the Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home.

Danckwerts (D. H. McMullen with him) for the Attorney-General.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 9. LORD GREENE, M.R.: We do not propose to deliver this judgment. It would take too long and would unduly occupy the time of the court. We shall, therefore, hand down copies of the judgment, keeping for the court one authenticated copy.

The judgment of the court was as follows.

LORD GREENE, M.R.: These appeals, ten in number, which have been heard together, are from a reserved judgment of WYNN-PARRY, J., delivered on Mar. 11, 1947, in those actions together with nine others (all of which were also tried by him together), and from orders made in the actions on Apr. 1, 1947, following further discussion on that day before the learned judge pursuant to his judgment. It will be necessary at a later stage to refer in some detail to the facts of the several cases. At this stage it will be convenient and sufficient to refer in general terms to the circumstances, common to all of them, which have given rise to these actions, and to state briefly the nature of the claims made in the present appeals (which amount together to some £54,760) and to the effect of the orders appealed from.

The considerable litigation, of which these appeals form but a part, arises out of the will, dated Nov. 3, 1919, and proved on May 16, 1936, of Caleb Diplock who died on Mar. 23, 1936. By the terms of this will the testator's executors were directed to apply his residuary estate :

A . . . for such charitable institution or institutions or other charitable or benevolent object or objects in England as my acting executors or executor may in their or his absolute discretion select and to be paid to or for such institutions and objects if more than one in such proportion as my executors or executor may think proper.

B The total amount of the residuary estate proved, we were told, to be approximately £263,000, but, notwithstanding the size of the estate and the trap which, at least to a lawyer, might have been discerned in the testator's language, the executors proceeded, without any application to the court, to distribute during 1936, 1937 and 1938 £203,067 10s. among 139 charitable institutions of their choice. All payments were made by cheque and in each case a letter was sent to the recipient of the testator's money which emanated from an address in Eastbourne and had printed at the top left-hand corner the words "Wintle & Hodgson, Solicitors." The letter was in the following form ;

C Dear Sir, Estate of Caleb Diplock deceased. Grants to London and other charities. The above named deceased by his will bequeathed his residuary estate for distribution amongst such hospitals and institutions or other charitable or benevolent objects in England as his executors might in their absolute discretion select, and in such proportion as they might think proper. The executors have decided to allocate a grant of £— to ——. We have pleasure in enclosing you herewith a cheque for this amount. We shall be obliged if you will sign and return us the enclosed form of receipt. Yours faithfully, (sd.) Wintle & Hodgson.

D Nothing turns on the form of the enclosed receipt. There is no doubt that when the executors made these distributions they bona fide believed that the testator's directions in regard to his residuary estate were valid and effectual. The letter quoted above did not, as will be observed, exactly transcribe the relevant part of the will, though its language did comprehend the ill-omened disjunctive—"charitable or benevolent objects." It is, however, also clear and conceded by the plaintiffs that each of the defendants in these appeals accepted their respective cheques in the full faith and belief that the executors were properly entitled so to distribute the residuary estate.

E In 1939 certain persons claiming to be next of kin of the testator, having learnt of the contents of his will, challenged the validity of the residuary bequest and intimated their challenge to the executors. Accordingly, on Oct. 18, 1939, the executors' solicitors wrote to each of the institutions who had participated in the distribution of Mr. Diplock's residuary estate (including the defendants in the present cases), informing them of the challenge and calling on them not to deal with the distributed sums in their hands until they had further heard from the executors' solicitors. Whatever be the effect as regards notice of the formal letters which accompanied the distribution, it is conceded by all the defendants that from the time of the receipt by them of the so-called "warning letter" of Oct. 18, 1939, they must be treated as having had notice of the invalidity of the testator's residuary bequest and that, accordingly, his residuary estate had from the date of his death properly been distributable among the persons entitled as his next of kin by virtue of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925.

G On Jan. 3, 1940, the writ was issued in the first of the actions (1940—D.—14) the subject of these appeals. This action has been referred to as "the main action." Originally, the sole plaintiff was John Henry Diplock, one of the claimants as next of kin. He died in 1940. As a result of amendments, the parties to this action (which was intituled "In the matter of the estate of Caleb Diplock deceased") later consisted of the following : as plaintiffs, three persons (in addition to J. H. Diplock) all of whom were subsequently found (by certificate made in the action) to be of the number of those (48 in all) entitled as next of kin to the residuary estate, and as defendants, the three surviving and proving executors, Messrs. Wintle, Handson (both of whom have died) and Thomas, one Johnson (who, with the defendant, Thomas, was trustee of a certain piece of land and a sum of consols formerly part of the residuary estate). St. George's Hospital and three other charitable institutions. H.M. Attorney-General, Mrs. Handson (the widow and personal representative of the defendant, Handson) and one C. G. Connolly who had (by an order in the main action dated Dec. 8, 1943) been appointed judicial trustee of the estate. Of these defendants only St. George's Hospital (against whom the plaintiffs' claim is for the sum of £8,000 received by it from the executors), the Attorney-General and Mr. Connolly are before this court. The claim against St. George's Hospital was wholly rejected by WYNN-PARRY, J., who ordered the plaintiffs to pay the hospital's costs of the action. A

In all the other nine actions which are the subject of these appeals, the writs were issued on July 28, 1945. All were entitled: "In the matter of the statutory trusts affecting the residuary estate of Caleb Diplock deceased by virtue of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925." In each case there are four plaintiffs, namely, the three claimants as next of kin who with J. H. Diplock are plaintiffs in the main action, together with Mr. Connolly. In each there is but one defendant. The following catalogue of the actions (referred to by their respective appellations used in the appeals) identifies the several defendants and states the amounts of the respective claims and the effect of the relevant orders made in regard to them by the learned judge. In action I.E the plaintiffs claimed the sum of £3,000 paid by the executors to Dr. Barnardo's Homes. This action was dismissed with costs. In action I.F the plaintiffs claimed from G. W. Lilburn, acting secretary of the National Institute for the Deaf, the sum of £1,500 paid to that institution by the executors. This action was dismissed with costs. In action II.A the plaintiffs claimed the sum of £1,000 paid by the executors to the Prince of Wales' Hospital, Plymouth. This action was dismissed with costs. In action II.C the plaintiffs claimed from Sir R. J. S. Dodd, as chairman, and E. Haigh, as honorary secretary, of the Leaf Homeopathic Hospital, the sum of £7,500 paid by the executors to that hospital. In this case WYNN-PARRY, J., ordered the defendants to pay to the plaintiff Connolly (the judicial trustee) the agreed sum of £250, rejected the rest of the claim and ordered the plaintiffs to pay one-half of the defendants' costs. In action III.C the plaintiffs claimed from F. R. D'O. Monro, the secretary of the Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, the sum of £2,000 paid by the executors to that institution. This action was dismissed with costs. In action IV.A the plaintiffs claimed from the president, vice-presidents, treasurer and governors of the Westminster Hospital the sum of £4,000 paid to that hospital by the executors. This action was dismissed with costs. In action IV.B the plaintiffs claimed from Col. J. R. Warren, the chairman, and two deputy chairmen of the Heritage Craft Schools the sum of £2,000 paid by the executors to that institution. This action was dismissed with costs. In action IV.D the plaintiffs claimed from J. C. Smith and others, as the committee of management of Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes, the sum of £4,760 paid by the executors to that institution. In this case the learned judge ordered payment by the defendants to Mr. Connolly of the sum of £1,035 12s. (being the proceeds of redemption of a like nominal amount of 3 per cent. local loans purchased for the sum of £1,000, part of the sum of £4,760), together with interest earned thereon from Jan. 6, 1939, to the date of payment, but he rejected the balance of the claim and ordered the plaintiffs to pay to the defendants 5 6ths of their costs. Finally, in action IV.E the plaintiffs claimed the sum of £21,000 paid by the executors to Guy's Hospital. In this case the learned judge ordered the defendants to pay to Mr. Connolly the sum of £5,052 19s. together with £70 6s. 3d. for interest. He rejected the rest of the plaintiffs' claim, but held the plaintiffs entitled to recover 3 4ths of their costs of the action less those costs relating to the application to speak to the minutes of the judgment, the defendants' costs of that application to be paid by the plaintiffs with the usual provision for set-off. Against all the orders thus briefly described (so far as they are not in their favour) the plaintiffs have appealed to this court. There are no cross-appeals. B
C
D
E
F
G
H

When the main action was instituted, there had been no determination by the court on the question of the validity of the testator's residuary dispositions, but, pursuant to a direction given by BENNETT, J., in the main action, an originating summons was, in June, 1940, issued by the executors for the purpose of obtaining the court's determination whether or no those dispositions were valid. This summons (1940—D.—1041) came before FARWELL, J., who decided the question in favour of the validity of the bequest, but his decision was reversed by this court in 1941, and the House of Lords (LORD WRIGHT dissentiente) in 1944 (sub nom., Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson (1)), affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, finally held the dispositions to be wholly invalidated by the uncertainty introduced by the use of the disjunctive "or benevolent."

A To complete this general statement of facts, reference must be made to an order made by SIMONDS, J., in the main action on Apr. 5, 1944, whereby certain terms of compromise were approved of all claims by the plaintiffs as next of kin of the testator against the estates of the two deceased executors, Messrs. Wintle and Handson, and also against the surviving executor, Mr. Thomas, and against Mrs. Handson, as personal representative of her late husband. The precise terms of the compromise are not material to be here set
B out but the learned judge ordered that such compromise should be binding on all the persons beneficially entitled to any property of the testator as to which he died intestate other than the then surviving plaintiffs (who were parties to the compromise), and he further ordered that all further proceedings should be stayed against the defendants, Thomas and Mrs. Handson. It follows that, from the date of the order of Apr. 5, 1944, no right remained in any person claiming as next of kin of the testator to claim against any of the executors
C of the testator or against any of the estates of any of the executors in respect of devastavit or other misapplication of the testator's residuary estate.

Against this general background of fact it is now possible to state the nature of the plaintiffs' claims in these appeals. These claims fall broadly under two heads which have been compendiously described as claims in personam and claims in rem. The former (which, as will be seen, must be sub-divided) are
D personal claims which, it is said, the plaintiffs are able to make in equity against each of the defendants. If it be held that, in accordance with this argument, there is a good foundation for such equitable claims, then further questions will arise whether, and to what extent, the Statutes of Limitation—particularly the Limitation Act, 1939—directly or by analogy apply to defeat such claims, but, save possibly for the bearing of the dates of the several payments and of E certain other dates upon these statutory defences, the special facts relating to the application by the several defendants of the sums respectively paid to them have no relevance to the claims in personam. In other words, since it is conceded for the purposes of the appeals that all the respondents must be treated as solvent, they will each of them be bound, if the personal claims are made good on the part of all the next of kin, to repay or account for the full amount of the sums received by them (less a due proportion of what has already been F recovered from the executors or their estates by virtue of the order of Apr. 5, 1944), with or without interest, subject only to the defence of limitation. It is to be noted that WYNN-PARRY, J., wholly rejected the claims of the plaintiffs in personam. In so far as the learned judge ordered any of the defendants to pay any sum to the judicial trustee (as appears from the recital already made), those orders were based on the plaintiffs' claims in rem. The claims
G in rem rest on the application of the principles alleged to underlie the well-known case of Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallett (2), explained and expanded (as it is said) in Sinclair v. Brougham (3), so as to enable the plaintiffs to "follow" or "trace" the moneys paid to the several defendants into the various assets held by such defendants wholly or partly attributable to those moneys. In considering these claims in rem (as distinct from the claims in personam) it will be necessary to examine in detail the facts relating to the disposal by each of the defendants of the several sums paid to them by the H executors. As regard these facts, there is, fortunately, no dispute, and in every case except the main action agreed statements of facts have been prepared for the use and convenience of the court.

We turn, however, first to the claims in personam. Before analysing the nature of those claims it is convenient to deal with one general matter of defence raised by Mr. Neville Gray, on behalf of the defendants. It was said by him that the formulation of any equitable claim against any of the defendants must at least postulate that the consciences of the defendants must in some degree be affected by their retention of the moneys paid to them which should properly have been paid to the plaintiffs and other next of kin of the testator. Mr. Neville Gray sought to defeat these claims, as it were, in limine, by denying altogether the postulate, for, said he, notwithstanding the formal invalidity of the bequest, at least it must be taken that Mr. Caleb Diplock intended the defendants, or similar institutions, to enjoy the residuary estate in preference to his blood relations, and it does not lie, accordingly, in the mouths of the next of kin to allege any unconscientiousness on the part of those whose claim is in accordance with the wishes that the testator had expressed, albeit ineffectually. This argument appears to us to be wholly untenable. It is, in our opinion, impossible to contend that a disposition which, according to the general law of the land, is held to be entirely invalid can yet confer on those who, ex hypothesi, have improperly participated under the disposition some moral or equitable right to retain what they have received against those whom the law declares to be properly entitled. We add also that, in determining the difficult questions which the appeals have raised, it is immaterial that the defendants are charitable institutions of the most deserving character. In considering the application of the principles of equity, it does not seem to us that there is any different standard of conscientiousness for charitable or other corporations from that appropriate to an individual.

As already indicated, the plaintiffs' claims in personam must be sub-divided and fall under two quite distinct heads. First, it is argued that by the terms of the letters which accompanied all the executors' payments the defendants were given notice of the invalidity of the trusts declared of the testator's residuary estate, or, at least, were put on inquiry as regards their validity, so that the defendants (who were, in any event, pure volunteers) were subjected to a constructive trust of the moneys they received in favour of the next of kin. Secondly, it is argued that, apart from any notice which the defendants may have had of the true effect of the testator's will, they had in truth no right to receive any of the moneys paid to them, and that, in the circumstances of the case already set forth, the unpaid next of kin have a direct claim, recognised and established by the courts of equity, to recover from the defendants the sums improperly paid to the defendants and properly belonging to the next of kin.

The first of these claims was not argued in the court below and has been somewhat faintly argued in this court. As already observed, the form of letter on which the plaintiffs rely for this part of their case does not purport to quote, and does not, in fact, accurately reflect, the exact language of the will, but it does in its paraphrase retain the essential vice of the original in its use of the disjunctive formula "charitable or benevolent objects." It is conceded by the defendants that, from the moment that they received, by the later letter of Oct. 18, 1939, notification of the plaintiffs' challenge, they must be taken to have been so affected with notice of the claim of the next of kin as to be accountable in respect of any balance of the sums originally paid to them which remained in their hands unexpended or undisposed of. It is said by the plaintiffs that a corresponding liability attached to them from the moment of the original receipt by them of the sums paid by the executors since, even without any actual challenge, they cannot be heard to allege ignorance of the invalidity which, by the general law, attached to the words used in the letter no less than to the words used in the will, and, alternatively, that the defendants, having received letters which purported to state the substance of the material part of the will, and being volunteers and unable to plead lack of knowledge that the substance, so stated to them, was without legal effect, were put on inquiry and, not having inquired, took what they received subject to the risk of having to account and repay, if it turned out that they had been improperly paid. The argument has, it must be confessed, some attraction. For to the eye of the lawyer, particularly one made wise after the event of the decision of the House of Lords in Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorporated) v. Simpson (1), it may seem plain enough that the executors had embarked on an entirely irregular execution of their duties, but we have come to the conclusion that this branch of the plaintiffs' claim ought not to succeed. As we have already stated, each of the defendants, in fact, accepted the moneys paid to them in good faith and in the belief that they were properly entitled to receive what the executors handed to them. As a matter of general principle, the plaintiffs' argument would, indeed, lead to startling results, for, if the defendants can be said to be

A put on inquiry, then they must have been under some duty to inquire. What, on the basis of this contention on the part of the plaintiffs (which is, of course, wholly distinct from the other branch of their personal claim, later dealt with), would be the duty of one who is told by executors that he is a legatee under a testator's will and paid that which he is told he has been given? Must he call for and examine the will to satisfy himself of its validity? Must he inquire whether all claims ranking in priority to his own have been satisfied? In the present case it is to be noted that the letter which the defendants received came, on the face of it, from the executors' solicitors. Moreover, even though the language used in the letter might be said to convey to the tutored mind some suspicion of the validity of the disposition, it would not follow that such language, though taken verbatim from the will, would necessarily in its context result in invalidity. In our judgment, persons in the position of the defendants, themselves unversed in the law, are entitled in such circumstances as existed in the present case to assume that the executors are properly administering their estate, and if, as is admitted in this case, they took the money bona fide believing themselves to be entitled to it, they should not have imposed on them the heavy obligations of trusteeship. We do not think it necessary or desirable to attempt an exhaustive formulation of the law applicable as regards notice in case of payments to legatees, save to say that every case of this kind will depend on its own facts and that the principles applicable to such cases are not the same as the principles in regard to notice of defects in title applicable to transfers of land, where regular machinery has long since been established for inquiry and investigation. For these reasons we reject this part of the plaintiffs' claim.

D The second branch of the plaintiffs' personal claim, however, is one of far greater difficulty and complexity. It has involved considerable research into cases over a period of more than 250 years and we have been much indebted to counsel for the help which their industry and argument have given to the court. It is to be noted that WYNN-PARRY, J., in the court below did not have the advantage, afforded to this court, of an examination of the cases prior to 1800. It will be convenient at this stage not to attempt any formulation of the plaintiffs' argument under this head beyond that already indicated, viz., that, in the circumstances and having regard to the facts of the present case, the plaintiffs have a direct claim in equity against the defendants to recover the sums improperly paid to the defendants, or to recover such proportion of such sums as may be required to make good to the plaintiffs and the other persons entitled as next of kin, after bringing into account what has been recovered from the executors or their estates by virtue of the compromise order of Apr. 5, 1944, what should have been received by them from the testators' residuary estate. F According to the judgment of the learned judge, the point was put before him in somewhat wider and more general terms (see [1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 527), but, however the proposition be restricted by reference to the particular facts of the case, the reasoning of the learned judge in rejecting the proposition will, if well founded, be necessarily fatal to it. For after an examination of the various cases relied on before him, beginning with Gillespie v. Alexander (4) G in 1826 (the earlier 17th and 18th century cases, as we have already observed, not having been cited to him), the learned judge concluded that an unpaid beneficiary could only sue the wrongly-paid recipient of the testator's money in equity in the same circumstances as those which would enable him in the name of or by joining the personal representative to sue at law, i.e., when the wrong payment had been made under a mistake of fact. He said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 533):

H In my judgment, the authorities establish that, so far as a mere money demand is concerned (and I am, as regards this part of the matter, dealing only with a money demand) where the executor or administrator has paid money or transferred property, part of the estate of the deceased, to a person not entitled thereto in such circumstances as not to make the recipient an express trustee, the only remedy open to the legatee or next of kin rightfully entitled against the recipient is either to pursue a common law claim for money had and received in the name of the executor or administrator or to pursue in equity a claim analogous to the common law action for money had and received in which it would be unnecessary to join the executor or administrator as plaintiff. In either case, however, as I have shown, it would be essential to demonstrate that the money was paid under a mistake of fact and not a mistake of law, a mistake in construing a will being regarded for this purpose as a mistake of law.

On the question whether the mistake here made was one of fact or of law we think the learned judge was clearly right in deciding that it was the latter, and we cannot usefully add anything to what fell from him on that point. Equally we agree with him that, as regards common law claims for money had and received, the action will not lie where the money has been paid under a mistake of law. It may, we think, be taken to be clearly established that the common law claim is founded on an implied promise to pay and that—whether by an application of the principle ignorantia juris non excusat, or on other grounds—no such promise will be implied where the payment was made under mistake of the general law. It is, no doubt, true that for certain purposes (e.g., the purposes of the application of the Statutes of Limitation) the direct equitable claim by the unpaid beneficiary against the wrongly paid, or overpaid recipient of part of the testator's estate—for it is conceded that in certain circumstances such direct claims will lie—has hitherto been regarded as analogous to the common law claim for money had and received. Both are, after all, money claims. But the common law claim, as may now be taken to be established, is in no sense derived from equity but has a lineage altogether independent of it. Moreover, as the plaintiffs forcibly pressed on us in argument, in other respects there are marked and important differences between the claim here put forward on the part of the plaintiffs and a claim at common law for money had and received. In the latter, the proper claimant is normally the person who originally made the payment, or is that person's principal or representative, and the claim is made against him who received the money or his representative. It is, indeed, difficult to see how, save between the parties to the original transaction, or between parties linked by a relationship such as that of principal and agent, any implied promise to repay could be imported. In the present case, the payments were originally made by the executors, and it is, in our judgment, impossible to say that in making the payments the executors were acting as agents or in any way on behalf of the next of kin, of whose rights and existence the executors were entirely ignorant. Plainly, nothing that the next of kin have done can be said to have involved any ratification or acceptance on their part of the executors' acts. Further, whatever may have been the nature of the mistakes made by the executors, the next of kin have never made any mistake at all, whether of law or of fact.

For these reasons it seems to us that, in approaching the question of the existence and characteristics of the direct equitable cause of action, there is not, unless the authorities otherwise establish, any necessity in logic for regarding the claim as being clothed, as it were, with all the attributes or limitations appropriate to the common law action for money had and received. Nor, on similar grounds, does it appear that there is any conflict involved between law and equity. Equity here, as in other places, comes in, as MAITLAND ON EQUITY (1936 ed., p. 17) has observed, "not to destroy the common law, but to fulfil it." Since (for so runs the plaintiffs' argument) the common law can only recognise the two parties to the transaction, payer and payee, or, at most, third parties asserting the rights of one or other of them, the common law does not, to borrow again from the language of MAITLAND (ibid., 18) comprehend "the whole truth." For the payers in the present case (viz., the executors) were handling, not their own money, but the money of others who had a proprietary interest unknown to and unrecognised by the executors and who from the moment when they became aware of their own rights and the transactions of the executors immediately challenged and repudiated what the executors had done. Nevertheless, if the claim in equity exists, it must be shown to have an ancestry founded in history and in the practice and precedents of the courts administering equity jurisdiction. It is not sufficient that because we may think that the "justice" of the present case requires it, we should invent such a jurisdiction for the first time. It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine carefully the numerous decided cases from the days of BRIDGMAN, Lord Keeper, and FINCH, Lord Keeper (afterwards LORD NOTTINGHAM, L.C.), and to see what principle has been established by them. As we have already observed, that such a jurisdiction does exist in some circumstances and in some cases is clearly established and, indeed, conceded. But it is said on the part of the defendants that the jurisdiction is subject to the limiting principle that equity acts on the conscience of the defendant which is affected where (and only where) the defendant has the necessary knowledge or the necessary knowledge can be imputed to him, and that the necessary knowledge can be imputed in cases of the administration of an estate from the fact that in all of them the recipient of the money knows or ought to know that he takes it under a title which is in its very nature defeasible in favour of other interested persons. Thus, according to the defendants' argument, every beneficiary takes subject to the rights of creditors, every residuary legatee takes subject to the rights of pecuniary legatees and other residuary legatees, and a next of kin takes subject to the rights of other relatives of equal or nearer degree. But it is contended that the present case is outside the ambit of the jurisdiction on the ground that the defendants (who were paid on the footing of their being entitled as residuary legatees) cannot in their assumed capacity as residuary legatees be said to have taken subject to the rights of the next of kin. It would appear, therefore, to follow from the defendants' argument that the equity will apply and fasten, as it were, on the conscience of a recipient who has some legitimate interest in or right to the estate in question (however remote), but will have no application to and will not affect the conscience of one who, as it later turns out, had no interest in and was a stranger to the estate some part of which was nevertheless paid to him. There may be thought to be some lack of logic in such a result, and the formulation of the defendants' case differs widely, it is plain, from the conclusion on this part of the case of the learned judge. The question remains: What do the authorities establish?

Reference to the text-books has not proved of very great assistance. The matter is however dealt with at some length in ROPER ON LEGACIES, 4th ed. (1847), vol. I, chap. VII, s. III (p. 456). Under the general title "Of the Refunding of Legacies" it is stated as follows:

In the last section was considered the right of legatees to follow the assets in the possession of strangers under titles derived from the executor by sales or pledges. It remains to consider the rights of executors, creditors, and unsatisfied legatees, to call back parts of the estate, which have been overpaid to one or more of the legatees, by reason of a defect of assets.

There follow then two sub-sections, sub-s. 1 dealing with the executor's right to oblige a legatee to refund, sub-s. 2 dealing with the equity of creditors to oblige legatees to refund. Sub-section 3 (pp. 459, 460) may be quoted more fully:

With respect to the equity of one legatee to make another refund, it may be stated as a general rule, that an unsatisfied legatee cannot maintain a suit against another who has been paid by the executor; because the remedy in the first instance, is against the executor; who, by discharging one legacy, has admitted assets for the payment of all. But an exception to this rule occurs, when the executor is in insolvent circumstances; for since the unsatisfied legatee can have no redress against him, he would be without a remedy, unless permitted to call upon the other legatee to refund. Still this permission is qualified, and subject to the following distinctions. If the assets be originally sufficient to satisfy all the legacies, and one of the legatees procure from the executor, either by or without suit, payment of his legacy; and then the executor wastes the estates, so as to render it deficient to discharge the remaining bequests, those legatees cannot oblige the satisfied legatee to refund: 1st, because the payment was not a devastavit in the executor; and 2dly, because the legatee is protected by the principle, that vigilantibus, non dormientibus jura subveniunt. But—if the assets be originally deficient to answer all the legacies, and a legatee receive from the executor his legacy in full; in that case, as the payment was a devastavit by the executor, and it is a rule in equity, that upon a deficiency of assets, all general legatees shall proportionally abate, the court will entertain a suit by the unsatisfied legatees, to compel the one so paid, to refund. The distinctions upon the present subject are thus stated by SIR JOSEPH Jekyll [in Anon (13)] . . . "That as all legatees are, upon a deficiency of assets, to be paid in proportion, so, if the executor paid one of them, the rest should make him refund in proportion; and if one of the legatees obtained a decree for his legacy, and was paid, and afterwards a deficiency happened, the legatee who recovered should refund notwithstanding, in imitation of the Spiritual Court, where a legatee recovering his legacy was made to give security to refund in proportion. But that if the executor had at first enough to pay all the legacies, and afterwards by his wasting the assets occasioned the deficiency; the legatee, who had recovered his legacy, should not be compelled to refund, but should retain the advantage of his legal diligence, which the other legatees neglected, in not bringing their bill in time, before the devastavit of the executor; whereas, if they had commenced their suit before the commission of the waste, they might have obtained the same success."

Many of the early cases to which we shall presently refer are cited in support of the passages quoted from ROPER. It will be observed that there is no suggestion in the text of any such underlying principle as that contended for by the defendants nor any suggestion that the action—by analogy to the common law action for money had and received or otherwise—will lie only where the mistake made is a mistake of fact. The limitation, according to ROPER, in the case of an unpaid legatee is the absence or exhaustion of any remedy against the executor or administrator. On the other hand, there is in ROPER no reference in terms to a claim by a next of kin against other wrongly paid or overpaid next of kin or legatees, nor (oddly enough) is there any reference to the important case of David v. Frowd (5), which had been before SIR JOHN LEACH in 1833. That case is, together with a modern decision of this court in Mohan v. Broughton (6), cited in the notes to SETON'S JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, 7th ed., vol. II, p. 1595, in support of the proposition:

Though the estate has been distributed among those found to be next of kin, they are liable in general to refund to the real next of kin . . . and an action may be brought by such real next of kin for that purpose . . .

The earliest cases cited to us in which there is found any reference to the right of an unpaid creditor or legatee to go direct against a legatee already paid were Nelthrop v. Hill (7) in 1669, before BRIDGMAN, Lord Keeper, WINDHAM, J., and TURNER, B.; Grove v. Banson (8) in the same year, before BRIDGMAN, Lord Keeper, and WYLD, J.; and Chamberlain v. Chamberlain (9) in 1675, before FINCH, Lord Keeper. It is not necessary to refer further to these three cases. All were cited to LORD NOTTINGHAM, L.C., in Noel v. Robinson (10). This case may be regarded as having laid the foundation for the later exercise of the equity jurisdiction for which the historical justification was the rivalry in regard to the administration of the estate of deceased persons between the Courts of Chancery and the Spiritual Courts. According to SIR WILLIAM HOLDSWORTH, HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW, vol. VI, pp. 652, 653, the Court of Chancery:

. . . had practically taken over the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts over suits for legacies, and suits for the distribution of residue. In theory, it is true, the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts over these matters lasted till 1857; but it was generally ignored by the court of Chancery, on the grounds . . . that the ecclesiastical courts could not do complete justice in these cases—they could not give any indemnity to an executor paying a legacy under an order of the court, they could not order the legatees to refund if other debts subsequently appeared . . .

Noel v. Robinson (10) was cited in support. In the Ecclesiastical Courts it was the practice that:

To guard himself against latent debts, the executor is entitled to demand security of the legatee, before paying his legacy, to refund in case the amount is required in discharge of [debts].

(See COOTE, THE PRACTICE OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS (1847), p. 641.) But at least from the time of Noel v. Robinson (10) it appears that the Court of Chancery resorted to no such practice, and the reason, we think, was that, in the case supposed, the creditor would be treated as entitled to claim a refund direct from the legatee.

Having regard to its importance as a starting point and as showing the reason and justification for the jurisdiction, it is desirable to refer somewhat fully to Noel v. Robinson (10). The plaintiffs in the case were specific legatees of a moiety of the testator's American plantation. The defendant Robinson was the testator's executor who, after granting a lease of the plantation, had later sold it to the second defendant, Falconer. The plaintiffs alleged that Robinson, by granting the lease, must be taken to have assented to the specific bequest, and their claim against both defendants was for the property and for an account. Robinson, by his answer, denied that he had assented to the bequest and said that the sale to Falconer was required to pay the testator's debts, the deficiency of the estate having arisen since the date of the lease as a result of adverse trading conditions. He further said that, even if the lease must be taken as an assent, nevertheless he (Robinson), having in fact paid the testator's debts, could stand in the shoes of the creditors and claim in effect a refund from the legatees. LORD NOTTINGHAM, L.C., after referring to the practice of the Spiritual Court in regard to the giving of security proceeded (1 Vern. 90, 93, 94) :

... but in this court, though there be no provision made for refunding, yet the common justice of this court will compel a legatee to refund. It is certain that a creditor shall compel the legatee to refund, and so shall one legatee compel the other, where the assets become deficient : but whether the executor himself, after he has once voluntarily assented unto a legacy, shall compel the legatee to refund is causa primae impressionis : and it must be allowed that there is a great difference between a voluntary assent, and where the executor was compelled to assent.

According to the report in VERNON the plaintiffs' bill was dismissed, but, as pointed out in the notes in the ENGLISH REPORTS (23 E.R. 334, 336), the decree was, in fact, in the plaintiffs' favour.

The next case is Anon. (11), dated 1683. It was a claim by a creditor of A. against the executor of A.'s executor and legatees under the will of A.'s executor. It was decreed that the legatees should refund. Next is Newman v. Barton (12), decided in 1690, which also appears to have been a case of a claim by an unpaid creditor against a legatee. It was, however, observed by the court (2 Vern. 205) :

A creditor shall follow the assets in equity, into whosoever hands they may come. But where the executor had voluntarily paid the full legacy, and afterwards assets proved deficient to pay the other legacies, they conceived neither the executor, nor any of the other legatees should compel him to refund ; but if the payment had not been voluntary, but he had recovered his legacy by decree, there he should have refunded.

From this observation, we understand that the assets were not deficient when the legacy was paid. If we have rightly interpreted the observations of the court in Newman v. Barton (12) they indicate a qualification to the unpaid legatee's right to sue, which is not to be found in the report of the judgment of LORD NOTTINGHAM, L.C., in Noel v. Robinson (10), namely, that, at least where the original payment was made voluntarily, there is no right of recovery unless there was originally a deficiency of assets. The foundation for the qualification is that in the absence of an original deficiency the first paid legatee got no more than what he was properly entitled to receive, and so, it may be added, there was nothing in respect of which equity could affect his conscience.

The point is brought out more clearly in the judgment (cited by ROPER in the passage we have quoted above) of SIR J. JEKYLL, M.R., in Anon. (13) in 1718 (the first of the 18th century cases). It was there laid down that a legatee paid in full was bound to refund to other legatees, whether the original payment had been made voluntarily or under compulsion, provided that there was an original deficiency of assets, but that where the deficiency arose from later waste by the executor then, on the principle of vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt, there would be no right to refund. It is further to be noted that the right to claim a refund was stated by SIR J. JEKYLL to be "in imitation of the Spiritual Court"—a reference to the practice already mentioned of requiring security before payment of a legacy.

The point is still further expanded in Orr v. Kaines (14). That was, in fact, a case of a claim by unpaid legatees against a solvent executor, but in the course of his judgment SIR JOHN STRANGE, M.R., observed (2 Ves. Sen. 194) that the voluntary payment (in full) of a legacy by an executor amounts to an admission by him of assets sufficient for all so that he will be compelled, if solvent, to pay all other legacies in full, whatever the state of the assets. But if the executor is insolvent then because "there is no other way" the unpaid or underpaid legatees can directly compel the fully paid legatee to refund. It is, however, stated in a note in the ENGLISH REPORTS (28 E.R. 125) (correctly, having regard to the previous decisions) that the direct claim against the legatee is inapplicable where the deficiency arises after the payment to him, i.e., by reason of subsequent waste by the executor. The second part of the judgment of SIR JOHN STRANGE, M.R., marks a second step in the development of the equitable jurisdiction since Noel v. Robinson (10)—the appearance of a condition to the legatee's right to claim direct against the legatee that there should be "no other way" whereby the wrong to the former can be remedied—"because," as observed by ROPER in the passage we have already quoted, "the remedy in the first instance, is against the executor."

The last of the 18th century cases is Walcott v. Hall (15). That was a case where the executor, having paid all the legacies save one for £50 which he retained for an infant, subsequently was made bankrupt. It was held, following the reasoning of the three previous decisions, that in the circumstances, the fully paid legatees never having received more than they had been properly entitled to receive, there was no room for any claim in equity against them for a refund.

Before dealing with the later cases which were cited to the learned judge below, it may be convenient to make some observations on the effect of the authorities to which we have referred from Noel v. Robinson (10) in 1682 to Walcott v. Hall (15) in 1788. First, it is, in our judgment, impossible to find in any of them any trace of such an underlying principle or ratio decidendi as that contended for by the defendants in this court. It is, no doubt, true that an equitable claim predicates that the conscience of the defendant must be affected, but we have failed to observe any justification, in the judgments cited, for the suggestion that the state of the defendant's conscience depends on his knowledge or assumed knowledge that his title to the money paid to him may or may not be defeasible in favour of other interested persons. The test as regards conscience seems rather to be whether at the time when the payment was made the legatee received anything more than, at the time, he was properly entitled to receive. Secondly, there is equally, in our judgment, no trace of any such limitation to the right of action as WYNN-PARRY, J., thought to be discernible from the later cases, viz., that there must be or have been administration of the estate by the court and that the mistake made by the executor in paying the first legatee in full must be a mistake of fact. As regards the latter, it is no doubt true that, so far as can be gathered from the reports, the overpayments that had been made arose from nothing more than a miscalculation of the assets available and might, therefore, fairly be regarded as due to mistakes of fact, but so far from suggesting that the nature of the mistake made was a relevant consideration, the reports do not for the most part even indicate how it came about that the payments were made in fact. As regards the suggested qualification that there was or had been an administration by the court of the estate of the testator, the reports of the cited cases seem to us wholly to negative any such requirement. There are frequent references to the effect of payment by the executor voluntarily, i.e., in the absence of any decree sanctioning or ordering the payment. It is nowhere suggested that the right of the unpaid legatee to claim from the fully or overpaid legatee depends on there being or having been an administration of the estate by the court. Thirdly, it is, in our view, of the first importance to bear in mind the circumstances in which the equitable cause of action arose and the reason for which it came into existence, viz., the aim and desire of the Chancery Court, in the course of its struggle with the Spiritual Court, to provide some means of relief which would render unnecessary and take the place of the requirement of the Spiritual Court for the giving of security by the first paid legatee. On the other hand, it is, finally, to be noted that, so far, no case had arisen in which the plaintiffs were, not legatees under a will, but next of kin, either claiming to share in the distribution with other next of kin, or claiming to be entitled to the estate against other persons in whose favour distribution had been made as the persons supposedly entitled under the terms of a will or under an intestacy.

We come now to the cases cited by WYNN-PARRY, J., in the court below. Of the first five, viz., Gillespie v. Alexander (4), Greig v. Somerville (16), David v. Frowd (5), Sawyer v. Birchmore (17), and Thomas v. Griffith (18), the learned judge observed that in each case there was or had been an administration action. He said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 529):

An analysis of these cases discloses two points of significance. In the first place, the distribution had in each case been made pursuant to an order of the court in an administration action, and, in the second place, the mistake, pursuant to which in each case the money had been paid, was a mistake of fact.

As we have already stated, in the light of the earlier decisions, the fact of there being or having been an administration suit and a distribution pursuant to an order of the court cannot be regarded as a condition of, or even as a material consideration for, the existence or exercise of the jurisdiction, and the same

A appears hardly less true of the character of the mistake made. On that ground, no doubt, the answer of the defendants to this part of the plaintiffs' claim has in this court, as already noticed, been put on a different and more elaborate basis. Of the five cases referred to, the first two and the last were cases of claims by creditors, and the same is true of Davies v. Nicolson (19), which came before KNIGHT-BRUCE and TURNER, L.JJ. There can, however, be no doubt, in our judgment, that, whether the claimant be a creditor or a beneficiary, the cause of action both in its history and its essential character is the same.

B We now come to the important case of David v. Frowd (5). It is true, as stated by the learned judge, that there had in that case been administration by the court of the estate of the deceased, one David Williams, and that the estate had been distributed pursuant to an order of the court among the persons who had been found by certificate of the master to be entitled as the next of kin. But there is nothing in the judgment of SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., which gives any support to the view that these were material circumstances to the plaintiff's right of action. Nor is there anything in the judgment to indicate that the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS regarded it as relevant that the assumed error made—though made, not by the personal representatives making the payment, but by the master in his certificate—was one of fact, viz., as regards the identity of the next of kin. But the main significance of the case for present purposes lies in this, that the claim of the plaintiff was that she was the sole next of kin and in that capacity entitled to recover back from those who had received the estate the whole of what they had been paid—and, on the basis of the validity of the plaintiff's claim, wrongly paid. It should be stated that the intestate's personal representatives were included among the defendants in the action, but it is plain on an examination of the pleadings (which we obtained from the Public Record Office) that they were joined as recipients of part of the estate in their capacity as supposed members of the class of next of kin. Indeed, having regard to the administration decree and the orders made thereunder the personal representatives as such were obviously immune from attack. For the purposes of the hearing before SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., it was agreed at the Bar that the title of the plaintiff as sole next of kin should be admitted. On that footing the question for the court was whether she was precluded by the administration decree from making her claim. That question the MASTER OF THE ROLLS answered in the negative. By his order he referred it to the master to inquire whether the plaintiff was sole next of kin or one of the next of kin, and he added a declaration (1833) (1 My. & K. 200, 211) :

E . . . that if the plaintiff be established as the sole next of kin of the intestate, the defendants are bound to refund to the plaintiff the several sums which they have received under the order of the court [in the administration action].

F Having regard to the importance of the case we caused the records to be searched with a view to discovering what was the exact order made and what was the outcome of the order. No trace of the formal order could be discovered and (whether the matter was afterwards settled or for other reasons) no record was found of any later order or proceeding. However that may be, David v. Frowd (5) was, on the proved or assumed facts of the case and having regard to the declaration made, a case in which the defendants were held liable to refund, not merely so as to let in some person found to be entitled to participate with them in the distribution, but to the full extent of what they had received and on the basis, accordingly, that they had, in truth, from the start been total strangers to the estate, without any title to what had been paid to them. Counsel for the plaintiffs placed, naturally, great reliance on the case, providing, as it does, at least a close analogy to the present. On the face of it, the principle sought to be formulated by the defendants (which we have earlier quoted) cannot be satisfactorily applied, for it cannot, as it seems to us, be seriously contended that the defendants in David v. Frowd (5), when they received their payments pursuant to the court's order following the master's certificate, must have known or be taken to have known that their title was wholly defeasible in favour of some other outside party so as to render their consciences susceptible to be acted on by equity, or, if such knowledge can be imputed to them, then one may ask : Why should there not equally have been imputed to the defendants in the present case knowledge that their title as residuary legatees was liable to be defeated in favour of one who successfully challenged the validity of the residuary bequest itself? It was, therefore, not surprising that the defendants sought to explain away the case by suggesting, e.g., that it should be regarded as specially dependent on its own facts, or that SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., applied to it per incuriam (as Mr. Neville Gray, on behalf of the defendants, argued) the principle of the earlier cases. In our view, all these attempts fail. An examination of the judgment makes it, we think, clear that the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS, after argument on the point, deliberately treated as applicable the principles of the earlier cases, and, though David v. Frowd (5) has since been frequently cited, no doubt has ever been cast on its correctness or on the appropriateness of its place in the chain of decisions from Noel v. Robinson (10) onwards. After a full reference to Gillespie v. Alexander (4), SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., said (1 My. & K. 200, 210):

It is argued that there is a distinction between a creditor, and a person claiming as next of kin, because a creditor, it is said, has a legal title; the right being equal, there is no distinction in a court of equity between a legal and an equitable title. It is not, however, accurate to say that a creditor continues to have a legal title, after the fund has been administered in this court; he has, under such circumstances, lost that title by the administration of the court, and his only remedy is in a court of equity.

There then follows the passage (ibid., 211) quoted in his judgment by WYNN-PARRY, J., (see [1947] 1 Ch. 716, 731). So far as concerns the conscience of the recipient wrongly paid, the passage seems to us to support the view that that fact of itself—the fact that he has received something to which in truth he was never entitled—may well sufficiently affect his conscience for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the court of equity:

A party claiming under such circumstances has no great reason to complain that he is called upon to replace what he has received against his right: complaints of hardship come with little force from the party who seeks to support a wrong.

It is convenient to refer next to Mohan v. Broughton (6), a case not referred to in the argument before us, but cited with David v. Frowd (5) in support of the note in SETON'S JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, which we have earlier quoted. That was a case in which the plaintiff sought, on the footing that she was one of the next of kin of an intestate, to revoke letters of administration previously granted to another. The matter came originally before the court of first instance on an application by the defendant to stay the proceedings under the court's inherent jurisdiction. In the Court of Appeal, by consent, every question of substance was agreed to be tried on the assumption that the plaintiff's title was established. Reference was made in the argument to David v. Frowd (5) and also to Sawyer v. Birchmore (17), one of the five cases cited to WYNN-PARRY, J., previously mentioned, and also a case of a claim by a next of kin, though only for a partial refund so as to allow the claimant to participate with those already paid. LINDLEY, M.R., in his judgment (with which VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., agreed) said ([1900] P. 56, 57, 58):

Now, what is it that this lady wants? She does not want to revoke the letters of administration for nothing . . . she says that in an administration action which was commenced some few years ago the estate of the intestate has been distributed amongst the wrong persons . . . Therefore she wants this revocation for the purpose of asserting her right. In other words, she wants to follow the assets into the hands of the persons who have got them. I do not myself see any difficulty in her commencing an action for that purpose in the Chancery Division . . .

The learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS spoke of "following the assets," but in the light of the argument and the reference to David v. Frowd (5) and Sawyer v. Birchmore (17), it is, in our view, clear that he had in mind the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction which those cases illustrated.

Two more cases directly bearing on this part of the case may usefully be referred to, before we come to Re Rivers, Pullen v. Rivers (20). They are Fenwick v. Clarke (21) and Peterson v. Peterson (22). Neither appears to have been cited in the court below. In Fenwick v. Clarke (21) a claim by an unpaid legatee to recover from legatees who had been paid in full came before KNIGHT BRUCE and TURNER, L.JJ. The claim failed on the ground that there had been at the time of the payment to the defendants a sufficiency of assets. Walcott v. Hall (15) was cited and followed, and in the course of his judgment TURNER,

L.J., (4 De G. F. & J. 240 245), quoted and approved part of the passage in ROPER ON LEGACIES (p. 459), which is cited earlier in this judgment :

If the assets be originally sufficient to satisfy all the legacies, and one of the legatees procures from the executor, either by means of or without a suit, payment of his legacy ; and afterwards the executor wastes the estate so as to render it deficient to discharge the remaining bequests, those legatees cannot oblige the satisfied legatee to refund. First, because the payment was not a devastavit by the executor, and secondly, because the executor is protected by the principle that vigilantibus, non dormientibus jura subveniunt.

The first paragraph of the headnote in Peterson v. Peterson (22) is as follows :

Where one of several residuary legatees or next of kin has received his share of the estate of a testator or an intestate, the others cannot call upon him to refund if the estate is subsequently wasted ; secus, if the wasting has taken place before such share was received.

The claim in the case was by a next of kin of an intestate against other next of kin and was dismissed because the plaintiff failed to satisfy the court that there had been an insufficiency of assets when the defendants were paid. It is to be noted that (as appears from the recited facts) the administrator had been made bankrupt. Many of the earlier cases were reviewed in the course of the argument : Anon (13), Walcott v. Hall (15), Orr v. Kaines (14), David v. Frowd (5) and Sawyer v. Birchmore (17). LORD ROMILLY, M.R., said (L.R. 3 Eq. 111, 114) :

The rule is, that if one of the residuary legatees has received only his share, the subsequent wasting of the assets by the executor will not entitle the other residuary legatees to call upon him to refund ; and there is obvious good sense in that rule ; for, if the executor renders his accounts to a residuary legatee, and pays him his share, what right or business has the residuary legatee further to interfere in the matter of the administration of the estate ? He cannot file a bill for the administration of it, and, were he to do so, he would probably have to pay the costs. If so, why is he to suffer for the laches and neglect of the other residuary legatees, who have not required the executor to account to them, or to pay over the balance in his hands, or due from him ? The case, however, is materially altered if the executor has dissipated a portion of the assets before any residuary legatees call upon him to account ; and, it would seem, the rule ought to be that what is available at that time should be equally divisible among the whole of the residuary legatees ; but, where one residuary legatee calls upon another to refund, upon the ground of being overpaid, then, in my opinion, the burden of proof lies upon the person requiring the money to be refunded, to show that the payment was made in excess.

We come, accordingly, to the last of the long line of cases—Re Rivers, Pullen v. Rivers (20) before EVE, J. The importance of the case lies plainly in its modernity and in the fact that its decision followed chronologically certain other cases—particularly Hilliard v. Fulford (23), Re Robinson, McLaren v. Public Trustee (24), and Re Hatch, Hatch v. Hatch (25)—to which we presently refer and which, in the view of WYNN-PARRY, J., tended to negative the existence today in such a case as the present of the equitable right of action contended for by the plaintiffs. Having regard to the significance of the case, we were supplied by the plaintiffs with copies from the Public Record Office of the pleadings and the order made by EVE, J., in the action. The plaintiff in the action claimed to be entitled to a share in a reversionary legacy of £200 payable under the will of William Rivers on the death of the plaintiff's mother which occurred in 1917. The defendants were the personal representatives of one of the residuary legatees under the will. They admitted assets for the purposes of the action. The testator had died in 1863. A grant of letters of administration with the will annexed was made to the life tenant of residue who died in 1885. An administration action had been instituted in 1868 and in the course of that action an order was made for the carrying over of a sum of £266 13s. 4d. 3 per cent. annuities to a separate account entitled "The Annuity Account" of the plaintiff's mother. It had, no doubt, been the intention of the testator that the fund retained to answer the annuity given to the lady—which was in amount £8 per annum—should, on her death, provide the legacy of £200 bequeathed in that event to the plaintiff and her brothers and sisters. But, as appears from the statement of claim, no provision was, in fact, made in the administration action for the reversionary legacy—the relevant order providing that, on the death of the plaintiff's mother, the fund of annuities carried over to the separate account should fall into and become part of the testator's general residue. In the event, the proceeds of the sale in 1917 of the £266 13s. 4d. annuities after providing for certain duties and costs fell far short of £200. The whole of the rest of the estate had been distributed. In these circumstances the plaintiff claimed direct against the defendants, as overpaid residuary legatees, the difference between what she had in fact received and what she should have received, viz., £19 10s. 1d.: and the order of EVE, J., was, simpliciter, A an order for payment of that sum by the defendants to the plaintiffs.

On the face of it the case appears entirely in line with those we have cited, but WYNN-PARRY, J., did not so interpret it. He said ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 531):

In my judgment, Re Rivers (20), when examined, does not help the plaintiffs. It is, I think, a simple example of a person receiving a payment otherwise than in due course of administration and being compelled to submit to an adjustment. It was for that reason, I think, that counsel for the defendants in that case was constrained to admit that he could not rely on the Statutes of Limitation. So regarded, the case falls within, and is but a further illustration of the principle emerging from, the five cases to which I have referred. I would add that, in so far as it may be necessary to do so, I take the view that in this case a mistake of fact was involved. B

With all respect to the learned judge, we do not think that so limited an interpretation can fairly be put on the case. Having regard particularly to the nature of the argument and the citation of authorities to the judge, including Anon. (13), Walcott v. Hall (15), Gillespie v. Alexander (4), David v. Frowd (5), Sawyer v. Birchmore (17), Fenwick v. Clarke (21) and Peterson v. Peterson (22), we do not think it open to doubt that EVE, J., purported to exercise the equitable jurisdiction to order an overpaid beneficiary to refund direct to an underpaid beneficiary and that there was no question of making an adjustment in due course of administration. As regards the statutes of limitation, it would appear to have been a sufficient answer to any defence under the statutes that the plaintiff's cause of action did not arise until her mother's death in 1917. It is to be noted that the plaintiff appears to have recovered the full amount of her deficit from the defendants though, as pleaded by them, they in fact represented one only of the residuary legatees. C

Re Rivers (20) is the last of the direct authorities, the last of a long line of cases which appear to us to illustrate a coherent and continuous development of an equitable jurisdiction of which the foundation was firmly laid by LORD NOTTINGHAM, L.C., in 1682 in the course of and as a move, as it were, in the struggle between the Court of Equity and the Spiritual Court. It has been necessary to examine the cases in no little detail in order that the shape of the development may be traced, but, before stating the conclusions we draw, it is necessary to refer to certain other cases cited before WYNN-PARRY, J. These cases have, at best, an indirect bearing on the main point and, save that Re Rivers (20) was cited in the last of them, the authorities directly relevant to the main point were not cited. Appeal was, however, made by both plaintiffs and defendants to passages in the judgments and the learned judge relied on them—or, at least, on certain of them—as “militating against the existence of the principle for which the” plaintiffs contended. We are in this respect unable to share the learned judge's view. The first is Rogers v. Ingham (26). The plaintiffs had relied on certain statements in the judgments, particularly of MELLISH, L.J., and BAGGALLAY, J.A., in support generally of their contention that it was no answer to the plaintiffs that the mistake which had been made was one of law, not of fact. We agree with the learned judge in thinking that the plaintiffs can derive little or no help from the case, which arose out of the circumstance that the trustee of a certain will had with the full knowledge, and, indeed, at the time, the assent, of the plaintiff made certain payments to the defendant to which, on the true construction of the will, the defendant had not been entitled. In these circumstances the court held that the plaintiff must be treated as having herself, though by the hands of the trustees, made the payment, and, consequently, as being in no different position from that of trustees making a payment under a mistake as to the legal position. It is convenient to refer next to Re Robinson (24) before WARRINGTON, J. In that D
E
F
G
H

case, a grant of annuities having been made by King Charles II, the persons entitled in 1886 purported to execute a disentailing assurance. The trustees had from 1886 to 1900 paid the annuities to the person entitled on the basis of the validity of this assurance. The court having held (in other proceedings) that the attempt to disentail was ineffectual under the general law, the plaintiff in 1911 sought to recover from the defendant what had been wrongly paid from 1886 to 1900. At an early stage in the argument the learned judge asked what statute of limitation was applicable to the case and counsel for the defendant is reported to have answered that the claim being one for money had and received the relevant statute was that of James I (Limitation Act, 1623). Thenceforward, the case appears to have proceeded entirely on the basis of its being one for money had and received and the learned judge held on that footing that the claim was barred under the Act of 1623. As we have stated, no reference was at any stage made to the Noel v. Robinson (10) line of cases, and the plaintiff's counsel did not attempt to contend that the plaintiff's right of action lay in equity on the authority of those cases, as distinct from the claim at common law. We agree with WYNN-PARRY, J., in thinking that the case does not assist the plaintiffs. We do not think that it assists the defendants either.

Hilliard v. Fulford (23) was somewhat strongly relied on by the learned judge. In that case the executor-trustees of a will, erroneously construing its effect, treated the testator's residue (amounting to £3,750) as divisible into fifths. Four of the shares they had paid out. The fifth sum of £750 had been paid into court on behalf of an infant. In the subsequent proceedings, the plaintiff had established (i) that on the true construction of the will he was entitled to participate with the other five residuary legatees, i.e., that the residue had been divisible into sixths and not fifths, and (ii) that the trustees had improperly spent out of residue £1,095 on repairs to certain real property and were accountable to residue accordingly for that sum—in other words that the true residue consisted, not of £3,750 divisible into five shares of £750, but of £4,845 divisible into six shares of £807 10s. The question and the sole question before JESSEL, M.R., on the application which forms the subject of the report was how, in the circumstances, certain costs which the trustees had been ordered to pay and the trustees' own costs, charges and expenses should be borne. It is true that certain observations of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS (4 Ch.D. 389, 394), quoted by WYNN-PARRY, J., appear, on the face of them, to be of more general import :

Of course you cannot make those other residuary legatees pay back anything. There is no pretence for saying that they can be compelled to come in and contribute.

But it is, in fact, quite clear, not only from the last sentence in the report before the judgment and the second sentence of the judgment, but also from the order made, which is set out in the end of the report, that the sole question was that of costs. In order to give effect to the decision of the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, the executor-trustees were to be put in the position as if no distribution had been made, i.e., as though they still retained in their hands the whole residue of £4,845. From that notional sum the costs were to be deducted and then the amount of the sixth shares ascertained. To the extent that the shares of the residuary legatees who had been paid worked out at a figure below £750 the executor-trustees, as the parties responsible for the blunders, were made, in effect, to pay the difference out of their own pockets. As clearly appears when the matter is translated into figures, no question whatever arose of any claim by the plaintiff or the infant defendant to obtain a refund from the other four residuary legatees. They each in the end all received their full shares and, if the other legatees were left in the position of having had more than their full shares, they retained the surplus at the expense of the executors. Had the question of a refund to the plaintiff and the infant defendant arisen, the Noel v. Robinson (10) line of cases (which were irrelevant and not mentioned) would, no doubt, have been referred to.

The second case relied on by WYNN-PARRY, J., was Re Hatch (25) before SARGANT, J. There, following a decree for judicial separation, a husband had entered into a covenant to pay his wife a certain annual sum. After his death his estate (subject to the covenant) became divisible among his children, one of whom died, having appointed his mother (the wife) as his personal representative and universal legatee. The husband during his life and his executors after his death having wrongly paid to the wife her annuity without deduction for income tax, it was sought in administration proceedings relating to the husband's estate to make the wife recoup out of her share in the estate (derived from the deceased child) the overpayments she had received as a creditor. SARGANT, J., rejected the claim on the ground that, the overpayments having been made under a mistake of law, they never were a "debt" due from the wife, so that there was nothing properly liable to be recouped. He went, indeed, somewhat further. He said ([1919] 1 Ch. 351, 356, 357):

Assume . . . that by a mistake of law the annuitant as a creditor had been paid too little so that the residuary legatees had received too much, would it be open to the annuitant to stop the distribution of the estate until the sums by which the residuary legatees had been overpaid had been deducted? To ask that question is in my opinion to answer it.

It is unnecessary in the present case for us to express any view on the correctness of the decision in Re Hatch (25). It is sufficient to observe that once again no reference was made to any of the Noel v. Robinson (10) line of authorities and that, had such reference been made, it is at least possible that some of the observations of SARGANT, J., would have been subject to qualification. In our view, the case cannot in the circumstances be regarded as any authority against the existence of the principle of equity jurisdiction for which the plaintiffs contend.

There remain the two recent cases, somewhat similar in character, of Re Mason (27) (before ROMER, J., and the Court of Appeal) and Re Blake (28) (before MAUGHAM, J.). Both cases were petitions of right against the Crown presented by persons claiming as next of kin of intestates, in effect, to recover moneys received many years previously by the Crown on the footing of the intestates having left no next of kin. It will be necessary to refer again to these cases, or, at least, to Re Blake (28), in regard to the question of the application to the present case of the relevant statutes of limitation, but the sole question determined in both cases, material for present purposes, was whether the claims were barred by the application of the Limitation Act, 1623. In Mason's case (27) the intestate, Maria L'Epine, had died as long ago as 1798, and for the purpose of his judgment ROMER, J., assumed that moneys which in fact belonged to her next of kin represented by the plaintiff had been wrongly paid over by the administrators to King George III. The learned judge said ([1928] Ch. 385, 391):

It is, in other words, a claim by a cestui que trust to recover from a third party money which his trustee has by mistake paid to that third party. Such a claim is one for money had and received . . . it may be a matter of some doubt whether, in strictness, the cestui que trust in such a case could maintain an action against the third party for money had and received, though he could at all events maintain a suit in equity for it, making the trustee a party. But in such a suit the cestui que trust would have no better right than the trustee would have in an action brought by himself, and, if the claim of the trustee would be barred in an action at law by any Statute of Limitations, the claim of the cestui que trust, so far as it was one for money had and received, would be equally barred.

On that ground the learned judge held the plaintiff's action to be barred. Now, again, there was no reference whatever made to the Noel v. Robinson (10) line of cases. Had there been, we do not think that ROMER, J., would or could have used exactly the language that he did. We do not intend to cast any doubt on the correctness of the decision of ROMER, J.,—and it would not, indeed, be open to us so to do, for the decision was affirmed in this court—but it is, we think, not accurate to say—particularly in the light of the Noel v. Robinson (10) line of cases—that the claim of the plaintiff was an action for money had and received. As we have earlier pointed out, there are essential differences between the common law action and the equitable action which is the subject of the present case, and we note that in the Court of Appeal in Re Mason (27) more guarded language was used, e.g., by LAWRENCE, L.J., who said ([1929] 1 Ch. 1, 12):

. . . these proceedings are in effect proceedings for money had and received . . . Though, therefore, Re Mason (27) is, undoubtedly, an authority binding on this court for the application at that date to such a case as was there considered of the Limitation Act, 1623, we cannot regard it as an authority for the view that an action in equity by an unpaid next of kin to recover direct from an overpaid or wrongly paid recipient of an intestate's estate will be liable to be defeated, like an action at common law for money had and received, unless the payment wrongly made was made under a mistake of fact.

In our judgment, the result of Re Blake (28) is the same. In Re Blake (28) the decision of EVE, J., in Re Rivers (20) was cited—though none of the earlier cases on which Re Rivers (20) was founded. But—whether having regard to the citation of Re Rivers (20) or otherwise—MAUGHAM, J., expressed himself in more precise language (if we may venture to say so) than had been used in Re Mason (27) and clearly intimated his appreciation of the existence of an equitable cause of action to recover money wrongly paid away by an executor or administrator, distinct in character from the common law action for money had and received. The relevant passages from the judgment of MAUGHAM, J., are cited by WYNN-PARRY, J., ([1947] 1 Ch. 741, 742) and we need not repeat them. It is true that MAUGHAM, J., did not in terms refer to an equitable claim independent of a mistake of fact or of any mistake, but the mistake which had been, or was assumed to have been, made in Re Blake (28) was a mistake of fact and no further consideration of the attributes or qualifications of the equitable cause of action was necessary for the decision in the case.

What, then, is the conclusion to be drawn on this part of the plaintiffs' claim from what, we fear, has been a long citation of the authorities? It is not, we think, necessary or desirable that we should attempt any exhaustive formulation of the nature of the equity invoked which will be applicable to every class of case, but it seems to us, first, to be established that the equity may be available equally to an unpaid or underpaid creditor, legatee or next of kin. Secondly, it seems to us that a claim by a next of kin will not be liable to be defeated merely (a) in the absence of administration by the court, or (b) because the mistake under which the original payment was made was one of law rather than fact, or (c) because the original recipient, as things turn out, had no title at all and was a stranger to the estate, though the effect of the refund in the last case will be to dispossess the original recipient altogether rather than to produce equality between him and the claimant and other persons having a like title to that of the recipient. In our judgment, there is no authority either in logic or in the decided cases for such limitations to the equitable right of action. In our judgment, also, there is no justification for such limitations to be found in the circumstances which gave rise to the equity. As regards the conscience of the defendant on which in this, as in other jurisdictions, equity is said to act, it is prima facie, at least, a sufficient circumstance that the defendant, as events have proved, has received some share of the estate to which he was not entitled. In David v. Frowd (5) SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., said (1 My. & K. 200, 211):

A party claiming under such circumstances has no great reason to complain that he is called upon to replace what he has received against his right.

On the other hand, to such a claim by an unpaid beneficiary, there is, in our judgment, at least in circumstances such as the present, one important qualification. Since the original wrong payment was attributable to the blunder of the personal representatives, the right of the unpaid beneficiary is in the first instance against the wrongdoing executor or administrator, and the beneficiary's direct claim in equity against those overpaid or wrongly paid should be limited to the amount which he cannot recover from the party responsible. In some cases the amount will be the whole amount of the payment wrongly made, e.g., where the executor or administrator is shown to be wholly without assets or is protected from attack by having acted under an order of the court. Authority for this qualification is to be found in the judgment of SIR JOHN STRANGE, M.R., in Orr v. Kaines (14) where he observed (2 Ves. Sen. 194) that, if the executor is insolvent, an unpaid legatee is admitted to claim direct from the wrongly paid recipient because "there is no other way." See also the note to Hodges v. Waddington (29) (2 Ventris 360):

. . . the principal case went upon the insolvency of the executor.

It is true that no direct authority for the qualification is to be found in any of the other decided cases, but in none of those cases where the direct claim was allowed did it appear in fact that there was an executor or administrator against whom a claim might have been made or successfully made. ROPER ON LEGACIES, in the passage which we have cited, treats the qualification as established by the authority of Orr v. Kaines (14), where the unpaid legatee "can have no redress against" the personal representative the direct claim is justified, since otherwise "he would be without a remedy." In our judgment, the absence or exhaustion of the beneficiary's right to go against the wrongdoing executor or administrator ought properly to be regarded as the justification for calling on equity to come to the aid of the law by providing a remedy which would otherwise be denied to the party who has been deprived of that which justly is his. A

In the present case the order of April, 1944, put an end, on the terms recited in the order, to any claim which any of the next of kin of Caleb Diplock might otherwise have had against his executors or their estates or any of them. Though we have not been told of the exact circumstance in which that order came to be made, it must, in our view, be assumed that the compromise sanctioned by the order represented a fair estimation of what might have been recovered from the executors or their estates in the course of proceedings brought against them. And it must also, in our judgment, necessarily be assumed that in no circumstances could the full total of the sums wrongly paid away—which amounted to over £200,000—have been recovered from the executors or their estates. We have not been informed of the exact sum recovered under the compromise, but it follows, in our judgment, that the sum recovered ought to be credited rateably to all the 139 charities, so that the maximum amount which in equity can be recovered by the next of kin from any defendant is thus limited to the same proportion of the sum paid to that defendant as the balance of the total sum paid away by the executors to the 139 charities less the total amount recovered from the executors and their estates bears to the total sum paid away. For example, if the amount so recovered is one fourth of the total sum paid away, then the maximum liability of any defendant to refund direct to the next of kin would be three-fourths of that which such defendant received. B C D

It is to be noted that the writ in the main action (against St. George's Hospital and others) was issued in January, 1940—more than four years before the date of the compromise order. It does not, however, follow, in our judgment, that at the date of the issue of the writ the plaintiffs had no cause of action in equity for recoupment. The point has an important bearing on the further question of the application of the relevant Statutes of Limitation. If our view is right, the beneficiary's cause of action does not, or does not necessarily, arise for the first time after exhaustion of any remedy he may have against the personal representative. If it did only so arise for the first time, the overpaid recipient might have the possibility of such proceedings hanging over him for a very great length of time and the commencement of the running of the Statutes of Limitation might be similarly postponed. In our judgment, the cause of action is for recoupment of such amounts as are, in fact, irrecoverable from the party primarily responsible—viz., the personal representative—and it will be sufficient in any case at the trial to show that at the date of the writ the whole of the sums wrongly paid away were not recoverable from the personal representative. In the present case, the extent of the executors' contribution has been determined, and there is, therefore, no difficulty in fixing the amounts which, if they are otherwise liable, the defendants must refund. In cases where the total recoverable from the personal representative has not been finally determined at the date of the trial of the action against the recipient, any order would have to make appropriate provision for the plaintiff duly prosecuting his claim against the personal representative and bringing into account all sums then or thereafter recovered from him. It is also to be noted that in the main action the plaintiffs were J. H. Diplock (who died in 1940) and three other members of the class of next of kin, and in the other nine actions the plaintiffs are those three other individuals plus Mr. Connolly. We understand that there has been some collaboration both among the 48 persons who together constitute the whole class of next of kin, on the one side, and between the 139 charities to whom the £200,000 odd of residue was wrongly paid, on the other, with a view to limiting the litigation E F G H between them. It does not, however, appear that in any of the actions the plaintiffs have sued in representative capacities, though in the main action (alone of all of them) the plaintiffs have asked for a representation order and in all the actions the relief sought includes general administration or execution of the trusts. It is further to be observed that in all the actions the prayer under this branch of the claim is for payment of the sums received by the defendants to the judicial trustee—in no case do the plaintiffs ask for payment direct to themselves of what is alleged to be due to them. We have in mind also that counsel for the plaintiffs in regard to the question of limitation conceded that, even if the plaintiffs sued in a representative capacity, it would not follow that the claims of some of the class represented were not barred if, in fact, those persons had been aware of their rights for the requisite period of time, and we further have in mind that the present appeals relate to 10 actions only of a total of 123 commenced at one time or another of which 20 actions were brought to trial.

It may become necessary to discuss with counsel the proper extent and form of relief on the basis of this judgment. We notice, however, that in those of the learned judge's orders which required payment by any of the defendants, such defendants were directed to pay the sums ordered to Mr. Connolly, the judicial trustee—for the purpose of being administered by him, as we assume, on behalf of the whole class of next of kin generally. No suggestion was made before us that, assuming liability under this head of the plaintiffs' argument on the part of any defendant, this form of order was not in the circumstances correct, i.e., it was not suggested that the liability of any defendant should be limited by reference to the individual interest of any next of kin or by reference to the proportion which the sum originally paid to that defendant bore to the total amount wrongly distributed. Subject to discussion on the precise form of order, it appears to us in the light of the submissions made to this court that each defendant should be ordered to repay to the judicial trustee the sums originally paid over to that defendant, but, subject to the limitation already mentioned, that the total amount recovered by or on behalf of the next of kin by virtue of the compromise order of April, 1944, should be treated as having been credited rateably to and among all the 139 charities (including the defendants) in proportion to the original sums paid over to them. Any sums in fact recovered from any of the charities other than the defendants would, on the other hand, not have to be credited rateably to and among all the charities. There is, of course, the further limitation that no member of the class of next of kin can be entitled to recover more than the sum which he would have received, had the estate been properly administered, but it seems clear that this further limitation can have no practical significance. We should add that, as already indicated, in our judgment, the defendants are liable under this head of their claim for the principal claimed only and not for any interest. This last result appears to follow from Gittins v. Steele (30), cited in ROPER ON LEGACIES, p. 461, where the language of LORD ELDON, L.C., in the case (1 Swans., 199, 200) is cited :

If a legacy has been erroneously paid to a legatee who has no farther property in the estate, in recalling that payment I apprehend that the rule of the court is not to charge interest ; but if the legatee is entitled to another fund making interest in the hands of the court, justice must be done out of his share.

We turn, accordingly, to the defence of limitation. On this question we have not the advantage of the judgment of WYNN-PARRY, J., since, on the view he took, the question of limitation did not arise. It will be convenient to recall one or two material facts and to add to them a few more. Caleb Diplock died on Mar. 23, 1936. The several payments to the defendants were made at various dates from Nov. 28, 1936, to Mar. 10, 1938. On the view that we take, however, these dates of payment are not material. The main action was instituted on Jan. 3, 1940, and it seems clear, therefore, that on no view can the defence of limitation be available to St. George's Hospital. The remaining 9 actions were instituted on July 28, 1945. It has, however, been admitted for the purpose of the appeals that these actions should be treated as having been initiated at an earlier date, viz., Mar. 22, 1945, so that, if the proper period of limitation be six years (as the defendants contend), time would not in any case have begun to run effectively in the defendants' favour later than Mar. 22, 1939. It has also been conceded for the purposes of these appeals that of the three next of kin who are plaintiffs in all the actions, one, Cornelius Simpson, was aware of the death of Mr. Diplock early in 1939, but that the other two did not become aware of the death until after Mar. 22, 1939. If, therefore, the date on which the claimant discovered or ought with reasonable diligence to have discovered the mistake made by the executors is the material date for determining when the period of limitation began to run, it is obvious that, in the case of the latter two plaintiffs, their claim prima facie cannot be barred, for, unless it can be shown that there was some lack of reasonable diligence, they cannot have discovered the mistake made before they knew that Mr. Diplock was dead. In the case of the plaintiff, Cornelius Simpson, the matter may be otherwise, though it cannot, of course, be assumed that knowledge of Mr. Diplock's death involved any knowledge of the terms of his will or of the executors' mistake.

It is admitted on both sides that the only statute now applicable is the Limitation Act, 1939, which came into operation on July 1, 1940, for, by the effect of s. 34 (4) and the schedule to that Act, all relevant subsisting statutory provisions for limitation were repealed, including ss. 3, 4 and 7 of the Act of 1623, the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874, and the Trustee Act, 1888. On the basis, therefore, that the defence of limitation must rest on the application, direct or by analogy, of the Act of 1939, the two questions to be answered, are: (i) What (if any) is the relevant period; and (ii) (in so far as necessary) from what date does the period begin to run?

Counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the answer to the first question is 12 years. Having regard to the dates, it is plain that, if 12 years is the appropriate period, the second question need not be considered. The period of 12 years will carry the time back from Mar. 22, 1945, to a date long before Mr. Diplock's death. Counsel for the plaintiffs founded his contention on the terms of s. 20 of the Act of 1939, which, he says, is the section by its language applicable to the present case. Section 20 is as follows:

Subject to the provisions of sub-s. (1) of the last foregoing section no action in respect of any claim to the personal estate of a deceased person or to any share or interest in such estate, whether under a will or on intestacy, shall be brought after the expiration of 12 years from the date when the right to receive the share or interest accrued, and no action to recover arrears of interest in respect of any legacy, or damages in respect of such arrears, shall be brought after the expiration of six years from the date on which the interest became due.

Section 19 (1) excepts from any period of limitation "an action by a beneficiary against a trustee where the trustee has been party to fraud or to recover trust property in the trustee's hands or converted by him to his use. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that, according to the ordinary acceptation of the language used, this branch of the plaintiffs' claim is "an action in respect of" a "claim to . . . [a] share or interest in" the personal estate of a deceased person. Mr. Upjohn, on behalf of the defendants, has argued that on its proper construction the section relates only to claims of the character mentioned against a personal representative, and, bearing in mind that the Act is in its heading described as "An Act to consolidate with amendments certain enactments relating to the limitation of actions," he prayed in aid (as he was entitled to do) the terms of the consolidated statutes, as interpreted by the courts. Indeed, both Mr. Upjohn and counsel for the plaintiffs invoked the language of the earlier Acts in support of their arguments, and it is, therefore, necessary to make some reference to them.

As regards actions by legatees (which had been held to include residuary legatees) to obtain payment of their legacies or shares of residue, the period of limitation had been fixed by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 8, as 12 years:

. . . after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge . . .

the period of 12 years having been substituted for 20 years prescribed by s. 40 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833. Neither s. 40 of the Act of 1833 nor s. 8 of the Act of 1874 was expressly confined to actions against the personal representative, but the formula used in both was "no action . . . to recover . . .

[any] legacy," and, having regard to the formula, it appears (and it was not, as we understood, disputed) that the two sections related only to actions to "recover" from the estate, i.e., in effect, to actions against personal representatives: see, e.g., Re Johnson, Sly v. Blake (31) per CHITTY, J. (29 Ch.D. 964, 971). It having been held that the Act of 1833 did not cover claims on an intestacy by a next of kin, the gap was filled by s. 13 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860, which fixed the relevant period at 20 years—the same as the period then applicable in the case of a legacy. The formula used in the Act of 1860 followed that of the 1833 Act:

... no ... suit ... to recover the personal estate, or any share of the personal estate, of any person dying intestate ...

to which in this case were added the words:

... possessed by the legal personal representative of such intestate ...

The terminus from which the period began to run was the same as that applicable to a claim for a legacy. The Act of 1874 (which reduced the statutory period from 20 to 12 years in the case of a legacy) left untouched the period applicable to a claim by a next of kin.

Prior to the coming into operation of the property legislation of 1925 the position, therefore, as regards claims by unpaid next of kin under an intestacy was as follows. If the claim was against the personal representative, the relevant period of limitation was 20 years from the accrual of a present right to receive the share claimed by some person capable of giving a discharge. If, however, the claim was a claim in equity direct against some third party wrongly paid or overpaid—i.e., David v. Frowd (5) form of action—neither the Act of 1860 nor any other statute of limitation had any direct application. In such case the Limitation Act, 1623, was applied, treating the action as analogous in this respect to a common law action for money had and received. That this was so is illustrated by the decision of MAUGHAM, J., in 1932 in Re Blake (28). In that case, the material facts of which have already been stated, the third party sued was the Crown. The liability of the Crown in such proceedings and the application by analogy of the statute of 1623 arose from s. 3 of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884. That section provided (inter alia) that a petition of right should not be presented:

... in respect of the personal estate of any deceased person or any part or share thereof ... except within the same time and subject to the same rules of law and equity in and subject to which ...

a like proceeding might be instituted against a subject. MAUGHAM, J., accordingly, held that, applying the period of limitation which would have been appropriate in the case of a similar claim against the subject, the claim had become barred six years after the date of the payment: see also Re Mason (27). In the course of his judgment MAUGHAM, J., pointed out ([1932] 1 Ch. 54, 59) that, having regard to the nature of the cause of action, the relevant section of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884, was s. 3 and not s. 2. The latter section provided that, where the administration of the personal estate of any deceased person had been granted to a nominee of the Crown, any proceeding against that nominee:

... for the recovery of the personal estate of such deceased person, or any share thereof [should] be of the same character, and ... subject to the same rules of law and equity (including the rules of limitation under the statutes of limitation ...) ...

as if the administration had been granted to the nominee as one of the next of kin. As observed by MAUGHAM, J., therefore, had the action been one brought against a nominee of the Crown in his capacity of personal representative, the effect of s. 2 of the Act of 1884 would—or would but for the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1924—have been to make applicable the 20 years' period prescribed by s. 13 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860. But (as the learned judge pointed out) one of the effects of the 1925 property legislation had been the repeal by s. 10 and sched. X of the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1924, of s. 13 of the Act of 1860 without (apparently, per incuriam) any reservation of the cases of persons dying before the coming into operation on January 1, 1926, of the Property Acts of 1925. In the case of persons dying on or after January 1, 1926, the effect of s. 46 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (which made the administrator of an intestate a trustee for the next of kin) would appear to have been to make applicable the provisions of s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, to claims by the next of kin against the administrator. It should be added that another effect of the property legislation of 1925 was (by virtue of s. 56 and sched. II, pt. I, of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925) to repeal ss. 2 and 3 of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884, in the case of deaths occurring on or after Jan. 1, 1926. Those sections were, however, reproduced—as extended to real estate also—by s. 30 (1) and (2) of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, which, so far as material to the present appeals, made use of the same wording, as that used in s. 2 (“for the recovery of”) and s. 3 (“in respect of”) of the Act of 1884. A

The position, therefore, immediately prior to the coming into operation of the Limitation Act, 1939, as regards claims by unpaid next of kin, was substantially the same as that which obtained prior to the coming into operation of the property legislation of 1925—the provision of s. 30 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, in the case of persons dying after the coming into operation of that Act, having replaced, as regards proceedings against the Crown, the similar provisions of ss. 2 and 3 of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884—save that, as regards claims by the next of kin of a person dying on or after Jan. 1, 1926, against his personal representative, the relevant period of limitation would (apparently) have been that governed by s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, i.e., save in the excepted cases of fraud, etc., prima facie 6 years from the accrual of the cause of action. B C

Counsel for the plaintiffs, in support of his argument for the application to the present case of s. 20 of the Act of 1939, relied strongly on the contrast in the language used, on the one hand, in s. 2 of the Intestates Estates Act, 1884, and s. 30 (1) of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, in reference to actions “for the recovery of” the personal estate of an intestate, and, on the other hand, in s. 3 of the Act of 1884 and s. 30 (2) of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, in reference to actions “in respect of” the personal estate of an intestate. The first formula is (he says) that appropriate to claims against the personal representative and, accordingly, follows the formula found in the Acts of 1833, 1860 and 1874 in reference to actions “to recover” a legacy or a share of residue. The second is that appropriate to a David v. Froud (5) type of action. By its use, therefore, of the second formula—“no action in respect of any claim to the personal estate”—s. 20 of the Act of 1939 must (according to counsel for the plaintiffs) necessarily be taken to apply, if not to apply primarily, to an action of the character here in question. Having regard to the repeal of the Acts of 1833 and 1874, it seems to us plain that s. 20 of the Act of 1939 must apply to claims by an unpaid beneficiary against the executor or administrator—in other words, to claims by a beneficiary “to recover” his legacy or share. On the other hand, we cannot see that, according to ordinary usage of the English language, the section does not equally apply to a claim by an unpaid beneficiary direct against one overpaid or wrongly paid. In our judgment, counsel for the plaintiffs is right in saying that such an action is fairly and properly described as an action “in respect of” a claim to the personal estate of a deceased person or to a share therein. The examination we have made into the previous history of the legislation does not, in our judgment, provide any valid reason for rejecting this interpretation of the language. On the contrary, the references on which counsel for the plaintiffs relies seem to us strongly to support it. It is a well established canon of the construction of Acts of Parliament (and particularly of consolidating statutes) that phrases used therein which have been the subject of judicial interpretation are used in the sense in which they have been so interpreted. It seems to us, therefore, particularly in the light of the decision of MAUGHAM, J., in Re Blake (28), that the adoption in s. 20 of the Act of 1939 of the formula “in respect of” by way of contrast to the formula “for the recovery of,” which had appeared in the Acts of 1833, 1860 and 1874 and also in s. 2 of the Act of 1884 and s. 30 (1) of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, must have been deliberate, and that it is impossible to resist the conclusion that by its use Parliament intended to bring within the ambit of s. 20 of the Act of 1939 claims of the David v. Froud (5) type, as well as claims directly against a personal representative. It is true that, if our construction is right, there is some awkward- D E F G H ness as regards the date from which, in the case of a David v. Frowd (5) claim, the period of limitation begins to run, for that date must be "the date when the right to receive the share or interest accrued," i.e., the same date as that from which the statute runs in the case of a claim against a personal representative and without regard to the time when the moneys belonging to the claimant were, in fact, wrongly paid to the recipient, but, in our view, the awkwardness (if such it be) is insufficient to override the effect which we think must be given to the earlier part of the section. It is also true that, if this interpretation is correct, the effect of the new Act will have been to increase the statutory period applicable to causes of actions of the kind here in question. Such a result, no doubt, appears contrary to the general trend of the legislation of the last 100 years. The question, however, depends on the language Parliament has thought fit to use, and there is at least substantial ground for supposing that the increase was not accidental. Section 33 (a), the saving section, provides that nothing in the Act is to enable an action to be brought which was barred before the commencement of the Act by an enactment repealed by the Act. An example of such a case might well be provided by a claim on the part of a next of kin against an administrator. According to the defendants' own argument (with which we agree), such a claim would now by virtue of s. 20 be subject to the limitation period of 12 years from the accrual of the right to receive the share of the estate. Before the coming into operation of the Act of 1939, such a claim would have been liable to be barred in 6 years by virtue of the repealed provisions of s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888. Again, in the case of an action at common law for repayment of money paid under a mistake of fact, time formerly ran from the date of payment. Section 26 of the Act of 1939 postpones the commencement of the running of time until the mistake is, or with reasonable diligence should be, discovered. Further, it does not seem to us surprising or unreasonable that the period of limitation applicable to a claim by a beneficiary against a personal representative should be the same as that applicable to a claim by him direct against one overpaid or wrongly paid out of an estate.

We, therefore, conclude that the period of limitation applicable to this branch of the plaintiffs' claim is, by virtue of s. 20 of the Act of 1939, 12 years from the date when their rights accrued, with the result that the defences of limitation necessarily fail. We add, however, that, if we are wrong in this view, it is by no means clear that the defendants are substantially in any better position. If s. 20 of the Act of 1939 does not apply, then it is conceded that there is no section of the Act which expressly does apply to the case. In that event Mr. Upjohn relies on s. 2 (1) (a) and (7) of the Act, which are as follows :

(1) The following actions shall not be brought after the expiration of 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued, that is to say : (a) actions founded on simple contract . . . (7) This section shall not apply to any claim for . . . equitable relief, except in so far as any provision thereof may be applied by the court by analogy in like manner as the corresponding enactment repealed by this Act has heretofore been applied.

Mr. Upjohn says that the effect of these two sub-sections is to preserve and perpetuate, as it were, the analogous application to causes of action of this character of the repealed Limitation Act, 1623. We assume in favour of counsel for the defendants that the words "actions founded on simple contract" must be taken to cover actions for money had and received, formerly actions on the case, and, as such, covered in express terms by the Limitation Act, 1623. The assumption must, we think, be made, though the words used cannot be regarded as felicitous. Even so, however, we are unable to agree with counsel for the defendants that the language of s. 2 (7) is sufficient, as regards what we have called David v. Frowd (5) claims, to override what we have felt compelled to conclude is the natural and inevitable meaning of the express terms of s. 20. It is to be noted that the opening words of s. 2 (7) are negative in form :

This section shall not apply to any claim for . . . equitable relief . . .

The sub-section proceeds :

. . . except in so far as any provision thereof may be applied by the court by analogy . . .

In our view, the effect of this somewhat diffident language must be to limit the analogous (in the present case, the doubly analogous) application of s. 2 of the Act to claims of a kind for which no express provision is to be found elsewhere in the statute.

Assuming, however, that, contrary to our view, s. 2 of the Act does apply, by analogy, to the present case, what is the result? We have already given our reasons for thinking, on the hypothesis put forward by Mr. Upjohn, that the "accrual of the cause of action" cannot be postponed until the right of the next of kin against the executors and their estates have been exhausted. But the provisions (inter alia) of s. 2 are, by s. 1, expressed to be subject to the provisions of pt. II of the Act :

. . . which provide for the extension of the periods of limitation in the case of . . . mistake.

They are, therefore, subject to the provisions of s. 26 of the Act. By para. (c) of s. 26, where :

. . . the action is for relief from the consequences of a mistake, the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the plaintiff has discovered . . . the mistake . . . or could with reasonable diligence have discovered it.

In order to avoid any difficulty created for him by s. 26, Mr. Upjohn discerns in the hands of the plaintiffs on this part of their case a double edged sword, for he says that it is an essential part of their main argument that the plaintiffs themselves made no mistake and are not in any way prejudiced or affected by the mistake of the executors. But, in truth, this dangerous weapon is, in our view, in the defendants' hands, for, if they seek to bring the case, for the purposes of the defence of limitation, within s. 2 of the Act and to rely on the reasoning in Re Blake (28), they must do so by averring that the cause of action is analogous to the common law action for money had and received, and, if they assert the analogy, they must take it with its attributes and consequences. Beyond doubt, it would appear that in the case of an action at common law to recover money paid under a mistake of fact, s. 26 would now operate to postpone the running of time. It is true that no such action would lie where the mistake is one of law, but, for reasons which we have already given, we do not accept the defendants' contention that the "analogous" claim in equity will also lie only where the mistake made was one of fact. In our judgment, therefore, assuming the analogy (as it must be assumed, if s. 2 is to apply at all) the action is one for the recovery of money paid away by mistake—albeit by the mistake of other persons and by a mistake of law—and, in our judgment, on this assumption, is an action for relief from the consequences of mistake no less than would be an action at common law to recover money paid away under a mistake of fact. If, therefore, contrary to our view, s. 2 is applicable (subject to s. 26), the proper order would be to direct an inquiry to ascertain when each of the plaintiff next of kin—and each of the remaining next of kin, if the appeals are to enure for their benefit—discovered, or ought with reasonable diligence to have discovered, the mistake. As we have already stated, it would appear almost certain, as regards two of the plaintiff next of kin, and not improbable as regards the third, that the relevant dates would be found to be after Mar. 22, 1939, and we cannot help thinking it likely that similar answers would be given in regard to the other beneficiaries. The result would, therefore, not, as it seems to us, be likely to be of assistance to the defendants. In our judgment, however, the answer to the defences of limitation is that by virtue of s. 20 of the Act the relevant period is 12 years. That answer is fatal to the defences.

If the views we have expressed on the validity of the claims in personam, on the defence of the statutes of limitation, and on the orders to which the plaintiffs are entitled, are correct, the plaintiffs have said that they do not need to rely on their alternative claims in rem. It might, therefore, be thought to be strictly unnecessary for us to express any views in regard to those claims, but the claims—including, particularly, the very difficult question of the effect of Sinclair v. Brougham (3)—have been the subject of elaborate arguments before us and they are fully dealt with by WYNN-PARRY, J., in his careful judgment. With much of that part of the learned judge's judgment (as later appears) we agree, though we venture to differ from him in certain important respects. We also bear in mind that, though they have all been heard together, there are before us ten appeals, and it was clear from the arguments that, having regard to the special facts relating to each defendant, the success or partial success of the plaintiffs' claims in rem against one defendant would by no means necessarily involve a corresponding success against all or any of the others. It appears to us, therefore, that our views in regard to these claims, as they might affect each defendant, would be a material consideration affecting any application by any defendant for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. Further, if on any such appeal it were held that we were wrong in our conclusions either on the substance of the personal claims or on the defence of limitation or on the orders to which the plaintiffs are entitled, the plaintiffs would certainly seek to rely on their proprietary claims either in substitution for or as supplementary to their personal claims. In all the circumstances, therefore, of this remarkable case, it has not seemed to us that it would in any case be satisfactory for us to express no view on the claims in rem. We think, too, that such a course would lack proper respect to the learned judge's judgment and the arguments of counsel. There is, moreover, one point in regard to which, as it seems to us, success by the plaintiffs on their personal claims would not, or would not necessarily, exhaust their rights. We have already stated our view that on their personal claims the plaintiffs are not entitled to any interest. The same may not, however, be true as regards the claims in rem, at least where the plaintiffs are able to "trace" their proprietary interest into some specific investment. It is to be noted that in two out of the three cases in which WYNN-PARRY, J., ordered payment to the judicial trustee (viz., in action IV.D against the committee of management of Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes and in action IV.E against Guy's Hospital) those orders included payments in respect of interest. As we have already stated, there is no cross-appeal by the defendants concerned in either of those cases. Prima facie, therefore, it appears to us that, where the plaintiffs can make good their claim in rem against any defendant and can also in the circumstances make good a claim for interest (including the two cases in which orders to that effect have been made by the learned judge), the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover on their claim in rem (so far as it went) together with interest and to limit their recovery on their personal claim to the balance of the principle sum paid to the defendant less the principal amount recovered on their claim in rem. We think it right, therefore, to state fully our own conclusions on this branch of the case and our reasons for them. It will be seen that the only claims which, in our view, can be supported on the basis of the so-called equitable doctrine of tracing are of a strictly limited character.

We shall endeavour to explain our views as to the basis on which the doctrine must now be taken to rest. In this connection we regard Sinclair v. Brougham (3) as of fundamental importance. That decision, in our view, did not so much extend as explain the doctrine of Hallett's case (2), which now must be regarded not, so to speak, as a genus but as a species in a genus where equity works on the same basic principles but selects what on the particular case is the equitable method of applying them in practice. It will be found that our views as to the meaning and effect of the speeches in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) differ from those expressed by WYNN-PARRY, J. We should, however, be lacking in candour rather than showing respect if we refrained from saying that we find the opinions in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) in many respects not only difficult to follow but difficult to reconcile with one another. Before passing to a consideration of Sinclair v. Brougham (3), we may usefully make some observations of our own as to the distinction between the attitude of the common law and that of equity to these questions. The common law approached them in a strictly materialistic way. It could only appreciate what might almost be called the "physical" identity of one thing with another. It could treat a person's money as identifiable so long as it had not become mixed with other money. It could treat as identifiable with the money other kinds of property acquired by means of it, provided that there was no admixture of other money. It is noticeable that in this latter case the common law did not base itself on any known theory of tracing such as that adopted in equity. It proceeded on the basis that the unauthorised act of purchasing was one capable of ratification by the owner of the money: see per LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON ([1914] A.C. 398, 441) in Sinclair v. Brougham (3). Certain words of VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C. (ibid., 419), in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) may appear to suggest a further limitation, i.e., that "money" as we have used that word was not regarded at common law as identifiable once it had been paid into a banking account. We do not, however, think it necessary to discuss this point at length. We agree with the comments of WYNN-PARRY, J., on it ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 534, 535) and those of ATKIN, L.J. ([1921] 1 K.B. 321, 335) in Banque Belge Pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck (32). If it is possible to identify a principal's money with an asset purchased exclusively by means of it, we see no reason for drawing a distinction between a chose in action such as a banker's debt to his customer and any other asset. If the principal can ratify the acquisition of the one, we see no reason for supposing that he cannot ratify the acquisition of the other.

We may mention three several matters which we think are helpful in understanding the limitation of the common law doctrine and the reasons why equity was able to take a more liberal view. They are as follows. (i) The common law did not recognise equitable claims to property, whether money or any other form of property. Sovereigns in A.'s pocket either belonged in law to A. or they belonged in law to B. The idea that they could belong in law to A. and that they should, nevertheless, be treated as belonging to B. was entirely foreign to the common law. This is the reason why the common law doctrine finds its typical exemplification in cases of principal and agent. If B., a principal, hands cash to A., his agent, in order that it may be applied in a particular manner, the cash, in the eyes of the common law, remains the property of B. If, therefore, A., instead of applying it in the authorised manner, buries it in a sack in his garden or uses it for an unauthorised purchase, B. can, in the former case, recover the cash as being still his own property, and, in the latter case, affirm the purchase of something bought with his money by his agent. If, however, the relationship of A. and B. was not one which left the property in the cash in B., but merely constituted a relationship of debtor and creditor between them, there could, of course, have been no remedy at law under this head since the property in the cash would have passed out of B. into A. (ii) The narrowness of the limits within which the common law operated may be linked with the limited nature of the remedies available to it. Specific relief, as distinct from damages (the normal remedy at common law), was confined to a very limited range of claims as compared with the extensive uses of specific relief developed by equity. In particular, the device of a declaration of charge was unknown to the common law and it was the availability of that device which enabled equity to give effect to its wider conception of equitable rights. (iii) It was the materialistic approach of the common law coupled with and encouraged by the limited range of remedies available to it that prevented the common law from identifying money in a mixed fund. Once the money of B. became mixed with the money of A., its identification in a physical sense became impossible. Owing to the fact of mixture there could be no question of ratification of an unauthorised act, and the only remedy of B., if any, lay in a claim for damages. Equity adopted a more metaphysical approach. It found no difficulty in regarding a composite fund as an amalgam constituted by the mixture of two or more funds, each of which could be regarded as having, for certain purposes, a continued separate existence. Putting it in another way, equity regarded the amalgam as capable, in proper circumstances, of being resolved into its component parts. Adapting, for the sake of contrast, the phraseology which we have used in relation to the common law, it was the metaphysical approach of equity, coupled with and encouraged by the far-reaching remedy of a declaration of charge, that enabled equity to identify money in a mixed fund. Equity, so to speak, is able to draw up a balance sheet, on the right hand side of which appears the composite fund, and on its left hand side the two or more funds of which it is to be deemed to be made up.

Regarded as a pure piece of machinery for the purpose of tracing money into a mixed fund or into property acquired by means of a mixed fund, a declaration of charge might be thought to be a suitable means of dealing with any case where one person has, without legal title, acquired some benefit by the use of the money of another—in other words, any case of what is often called “unjust enrichment.” The opinion of LORD DUNEDIN ([1914] A.C. 398, 437) in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) appears to us to come very nearly to this, for he appears to treat the equitable remedy as applicable in any case where a superfluity, expressed or capable of being expressed in terms of money, is found to exist. Such a view would dispense with the necessity of establishing as a starting point the existence of a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relationship or of a continuing right of property recognised in equity. We may say at once that, apart from the possible case of LORD DUNEDIN'S speech, we cannot find that any principle so wide in its operation is to be found enunciated in English law. The conditions which must exist before the equitable form of relief becomes available will be considered later in this judgment. But one truism may be stated here in order to get it out of the way. The equitable form of relief, whether it takes the form of an order to restore an unmixed sum of money (or property acquired by means of such a sum) or a declaration of charge on a mixed fund (or on property acquired by means of such a fund) is, of course, personal in the sense that its efficacy is founded on the jurisdiction of equity to enforce its rules by acting on the individual. It is, however, not personal in the sense that the person against whom an order of this nature is sought can be made personally liable to repay the amount claimed to have belonged to the claimant. The equitable remedies presuppose the continued existence of the money either as a separate fund or as part of a mixed fund or as latent in property acquired by means of such a fund. If, on the facts of any individual case, such continued existence is not established, equity is as helpless as the common law itself. If the fund, mixed or unmixed, was spent on a dinner, equity, which only dealt in specific relief and not in damages, could do nothing. If the case was one which at common law involved breach of contract, the common law could, of course, award damages, but specific relief would be out of the question. It is, therefore, a necessary matter for consideration, in each case where it is sought to trace money in equity, whether it has such a continued existence, actual or notional, as will enable equity to grant specific relief.

To turn to another preliminary matter, we do not think that confusion can be avoided unless the meaning of the word "money" as used in connection with this class of question is kept in mind. It is tempting to use the illustration of sovereigns in a bag or, to use an expression of LORD DUNEDIN'S, a strong box, but this must not blind us to the fact that such an illustration has little or no likeness to actual facts in present day conditions. We can explain what we mean by a reference to the present cases. The plaintiffs claim that "money" forming part of the residuary estate of the testator and, therefore, divisible among his next of kin has been improperly paid to a charity. This "money" when "paid" was in the form of a cheque on the executorship account, i.e., a negotiable instrument. This negotiable instrument at the moment preceding its delivery to the charity belonged to the residuary estate of the testator, and any of the next of kin, if he had known of the situation, could have secured an injunction restraining the executors from delivering it to the charity. As in that event the cheque would never have been presented for payment, the "money" representing the relevant portion of the residuary estate would have remained in its existing state, i.e., as part of the chose in action constituted by the banker's debt to the executors in respect of the executorship account. The charity accepted the cheque, and, on the assumption that it was not a purchaser for value and is not to be charged with such notice as to make it a constructive trustee, it accepted the cheque as a volunteer. The first stage, therefore, was that the charity had in its possession a negotiable instrument, which in origin belonged to the residuary estate and in which the next of kin were, in the eyes of equity, interested. If the next of kin had been in a position to interfere at that stage, they could, in our view, clearly (and the contrary was not argued) have recovered the cheque from the charity whom, as a volunteer, equity would have compelled to recognise the equitable interest of the next of kin in it, but the cheque was, in fact, paid into a banking account in the name of the charity. The next of kin claim to follow their "money." What really happened was that, when the cheque was cleared, a credit was passed by the paying bank to the collecting bank for the benefit of the charity who thus, without handling any "money" in the sense of cash, became possessed of "money" in the sense of credit in its banking account, i.e., a chose in action. Now, if the "money" in the form of the cheque was "paid in" to a separate account so that the "money" in the form of a chose in action which resulted from the operation remained "unmixed" (i.e., was identifiable as a chose in action having a separate existence), it is not disputed that the "money" will be specifically recoverable from the charity. It is not suggested in that case that the title to the "money" of the charity as a volunteer can defeat the claim of the next of kin to recover it for the benefit of the estate. The appropriate equitable relief would be by way of specific order for restoration of what, in the eyes of equity, never ceased to belong in equity to the estate, the reason, of course, being that the charity, which took the cheque, not as a purchaser for value without notice, but merely as a volunteer, could not set up a title adverse to the estate in respect of "money" (i.e., on those facts a separate and identifiable chose in action) obtained by means of "money" in the form of a cheque, i.e., an order by the executors on their bankers to transfer from "money" belonging to the estate in the form of a chose in action an aliquot sum of "money" in the form of a credit in favour of the charity, as payee of the cheque, in its account with its bankers. When the various senses in which the word "money" is used are appreciated, the conceptions of "purchaser for value without notice" and of "volunteer" which are common currency in the language of equity, do not appear inappropriate, as they might, perhaps, have done (at any rate, at first sight) in the case of current coins which pass by delivery, and one of the apparent difficulties in the way of tracing, identifying and locating "money" does, we think, disappear.

The first question which appears to us to fall for decision on this part of the present appeals may, we think, be thus formulated:—Did the power of equity to treat Diplock "money" as recoverable from the charity, which, undoubtedly, existed down to the moment when the cheque was paid by the bank on which it was drawn, cease the moment that the "money" by the process of "mixture" came to be represented by an accretion to, or an enlargement of, the chose in action consisting of a debt already owing to the charity by its own bankers? WYNN-PARRY, J., in effect, decided that it did. His reason for taking this view, shortly stated, was as follows. The principle applicable was to be extracted from the decision in Hallett's case (2), and that principle was in no way extended by the decision in Sinclair v. Brougham (3); the principle can only operate in cases where the mixing takes place in breach of a trust, actual or constructive, or in breach of some other fiduciary relationship, and in proceedings against the trustee or fiduciary agent; here the mixing was not of this character since it was effected by an innocent volunteer; there is no ground on which, according to principle, the conscience of such a volunteer can be held in equity to be precluded from setting up a title adverse to the claim; in every case, therefore, where a "mixture" has been carried out by the charity, the claim, whether it be against a mixed monetary fund or against investments made by means of such a mixed fund, must fail in limine. We may say at once that this view of the inability of equity to deal with the case of the volunteer appears to us, with all respect to WYNN-PARRY, J., to be in conflict with the principles expounded, particularly by LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON, in Sinclair v. Brougham (3). If LORD PARKER meant what we think he meant, and if what he said is to be accepted as a correct statement of the law, Mr. Pennycuick, who argued this part of the case on behalf of the charities, admittedly felt great difficulty in supporting this part of the reasoning of the learned judge. We shall deal further with LORD PARKER's observations on this topic when we come to them in our examination of Sinclair v. Brougham (3), but here we may conveniently summarise what we consider to be the effect of them as follows. Where an innocent volunteer (as distinct from a purchaser for value without notice) mixes "money" of his own with "money" which in equity belongs to another person, or is found in possession of such a mixture, although that other person cannot claim a charge on the mass superior to the claim of the volunteer, he is entitled, nevertheless, to a charge ranking pari passu with the claim of the volunteer. LORD PARKER's reasons for taking this view appear to have been on the following lines. Equity regards the rights of the equitable owner as being "in effect rights of property," though not recognised as such by the common law. Just as a volunteer is not allowed by equity in the case, e.g., of a conveyance of the legal estate in land, to set up his legal title adversely to the claim of a person having an equitable interest in the land, so in the case of a mixed fund of money the volunteer must give such recognition as equity considers him in conscience (as a volunteer) bound to give to the interest of the equitable owner of the money which has been mixed with the volunteer's own. But this burden on

A the conscience of the volunteer is not such as to compel him to treat the claim of the equitable owner as paramount. That would be to treat the volunteer as strictly as if he himself stood in a fiduciary relationship to the equitable owner which ex hypothesi he does not. The volunteer is under no greater duty of conscience to recognise the interest of the equitable owner than that which lies on a person having an equitable interest in one of two trust funds of "money" which have become mixed towards the equitable owner of the other. Such a person is not in conscience bound to give precedence to the equitable owner of the other of the two funds.

B We may enlarge on the implications which appear to us to be contained in LORD PARKER'S reasoning. First, it appears to us to be wrong to treat the principle which underlies Hallett's case (2) as only coming into operation where the person who does the mixing is not only in a fiduciary position but is also a party to the tracing action. If he is a party to the action, he is, of course, precluded from setting up a case inconsistent with the obligations of his fiduciary position. But supposing that he is not a party? The result cannot surely depend on what equity would or would not have allowed him to say if he had been a party. Suppose that the sole trustee of (say) five separate trusts draws £100 out of each of the trust banking accounts, pays the resulting £500 into an account which he opens in his own name, draws a cheque for £500 on that account and gives it as a present to his son. A claim by the five sets of beneficiaries to follow the money of their respective trusts would be a claim against the son. He would stand in no fiduciary relationship to any of them. We recoil from the conclusion that all five beneficiaries would be dismissed empty handed by a court of equity and the son left to enjoy what in equity was originally their money. Yet that is the conclusion to which the reasoning of the learned judge would lead us. LORD PARKER'S reasoning, on the other hand, seems to us to lead to the conclusion that each set of beneficiaries could set up its equitable interest which would prevail against the bare legal title of the son as a volunteer and that they would be entitled to share pari passu in so much of the fund or its proceeds as remained identifiable. An even more striking example was admitted by Mr. Penny-cuick to be the result of his argument, and he vigorously maintained that it followed inevitably from the principles of equity involved. If a fiduciary agent takes cash belonging to his principal and gives it to his son, who takes it innocently, then so long as the son keeps it unmingled with other cash in one trouser pocket, the principal can follow it and claim it back. Once, however, the son, being under no fiduciary duty to the principal, transfers it to his other trouser pocket in which there are reposing a coin or two of his own of the same denomination, the son, by a sort of process of accretion, acquires an indefeasible title to what the moment before the transfer he could not have claimed as his own. This result appears to us to stultify the beneficent powers of equity to protect and enforce what it recognises as equitable rights of property which subsist until they are destroyed by the operation of a purchase for value without notice. The error into which, we respectfully suggest, the learned judge has fallen is in thinking that what, in Hallett's case (2), was only the method (there appropriate) of bringing a much wider-based principle of equity into operation—viz., the method by which a fiduciary agent, who has himself wrongfully mixed the funds, is prohibited from asserting a breach of his duty—is an element which must necessarily be present before equity can afford protection to the equitable rights which it has brought into existence. We are not prepared to see the arm of equity thus shortened.

H It is now time to examine in some detail Sinclair v. Brougham (3). Before us it was argued, on behalf of the defendants, that the principle on which it was decided was not that applied in Hallett's case (2), but a different one altogether, invented with a view to solving a particular problem. We do not agree. The principle, in our view, was clearly the same, but in its application to new facts fresh light was thrown on it, and it was shown to have a much wider scope than a narrow reading of Hallett's case (2) would suggest. We have examined with care not only the opinions themselves but the printed cases and the arguments of counsel, as well as the judgments of the majority and of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in the Court of Appeal. It is in the context of this material that the speeches must be interpreted. The contest in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) was between shareholders and depositors in respect of a miscellaneous mass of assets distributable by the liquidator in the winding-up of a building society. The deposits had been made and the assets were used in connection with a banking business carried on in the name of the society but beyond its powers. Each of the two classes claimed priority over the other. Until the case reached the House of Lords the possibility that they might rank pari passu does not appear to have been considered. The majority of the Court of Appeal, affirming NEVILLE, J., gave the shareholders priority over the depositors. FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., would have given the depositors priority over the shareholders. The House of Lords held that both views were wrong and that, on the principle on which Hallett's case (2) was founded, the two classes shared rateably. In one respect, no doubt, this application of the principle is an extension of it, since, although the right of individuals to trace their own money (if they could) was preserved in the order of the House, the order provided for tracing the aggregate contributions of the two classes as classes. Hallett's case (2) was, of course, based on the right of an individual to follow what he could in equity identify as his own money. The extension of the principle in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) was the obvious and, indeed, on the facts, the only practical method of securing a just distribution of the assets. The importance of the point must not, however, be overlooked in considering the arguments and the speeches. Apparently, it had not occurred to any of the judges in the lower courts or to any of the eminent counsel who signed the cases or argued in the House of Lords that Hallett's case (2) had anything to do with such a case as Sinclair v. Brougham (3). There is not a mention of it in any of the judgments below or in either of the printed cases or in argument in the House of Lords until VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C. ([1914] A.C. 398, 404) suggested that the principle of Hallett's case (2) might apply. The point thus offered was accepted by counsel, who proceeded to base arguments on it. Counsel on behalf of the depositors submitted that Hallett's case (2) was really based, "not upon trusteeship in the narrow sense, but upon ownership" and argued that :

... if property of B. is found in the hands of A., then prima facie A. is in a wide sense in a fiduciary relationship towards B., because equity affects his conscience with regard to that particular property . . .

This proposition, as stated, was not accepted by the House. From it counsel deduced the consequence that the depositors were entitled to priority in respect of the moneys which they had deposited. This argument was, of course, quite different from the other two arguments adduced on behalf of the depositors, viz., that based on money had and received and that based on the principles enunciated by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in his dissenting judgment. Counsel for the B. shareholders agreed (ibid., 406) that (subject to a qualification not material on the facts):

... money paid under an ultra vires contract does not become the property of the society but remains the property of the payer, and so long as he can identify it he may trace it through any number of changes and claim it on the footing that it is and always has been his property.

But (ibid., 407, 408) a claim based on property was, they said (and this relates to the point mentioned above) impossible in that case because no tracing order could be made without identification and the doctrine of tracing could not be applied to the collective claims of the depositors as a class. They also said (ibid., 409) that Hallett's case (2) was confined to fiduciary relationship in a strict sense.

It is to be remembered that the arguments of counsel on either side were directed to claiming priority for their respective clients and much of the reasoning in the speeches is directed to negating these claims to priority. The House held that, although the equity underlying Hallett's case (2) was applicable, the result of its proper application was that the conclusion sought by both arguments was wrong and that the fund was divisible rateably between the two classes of claimants. We may call attention in passing to the manner in which the House dealt with the argument of counsel for the B. shareholders that there could be no tracing save in favour of an individual who could follow and (in equity) identify his own property and that in consequence there could not be what would be in substance a tracing order in favour of a class. This argument does appear to raise a technical difficulty. But the House brushed it aside. LORD SUMNER'S speech contains the clearest exposition of the reasons for dealing with it in the manner approved by the House. He said (ibid., 459, 460):

My Lords, I agree, without recapitulating reasons, that the principle on which Hallett's case (2) is founded justifies an order allowing the appellants to follow the assets, not merely to the verge of actual identification, but even somewhat further in a case like the present, where after a process of exclusion only two classes or groups of persons, having equal claims, are left in and all superior claims have been eliminated. Tracing in a sense it is not, for we know that the money coming from A. went into one security and that coming from B. into another, and that the two securities did not probably depreciate exactly in the same percentage, and we know further that no one will ever know any more. Still I think this well within the "tracing" equity, and that among persons making up these two groups the principle of rateable division of the assets is sound.

This does, at least, show that in applying the equitable principle equity is entitled to adopt that method of application which in the circumstances of the case will lead to an equitable result.

We now proceed to consider some of the salient facts in Sinclair v. Brougham (3). The case is complicated by the fact that the claims of the depositors came to be considered at a time when the society was in liquidation, with the result that the B. shareholders came into the picture as competing claimants against the assets. But a problem precisely similar in all essentials would, as it appears to us, have arisen if the depositors had claimed to trace their money while the society was still a going concern. In that case the shareholders would not have appeared as claimants at all; the competition would have been between the depositors and the society. In the actual case the shareholders were the claimants, but all that they could claim was such money as the society itself could have claimed as between itself and the depositors. We shall not be thought disrespectful if we call attention, perhaps rather more emphatically than was sometimes thought necessary in the opinions as delivered, to certain distinctions which must be borne clearly in mind. The first is the distinction between the directors and the society, which could not be bound in any way or for any purpose, directly or indirectly, by the ultra vires acts of the directors. The second is the distinction between the society and the shareholders who were only entitled to such equitable rights in the assets as the society itself could have claimed, for that was all that the liquidators had the right to give them. The third distinction is of no less importance, that between the ultra vires business (which was not in law the society's business) and the assets requiring distribution which were in the society's name and of which the society was the legal owner. So far as we have been able to discover, all the assets in question stood, as we would have expected them to stand, in the name of the society—they were, as LORD DUNEDIN said ([1914] A.C. 398, 438) "in the society's strong-box"—and it was thus that they came into the hands of the liquidator. None of them was in the name of the directors who were, therefore, not necessary parties to the proceedings. In view of the arguments addressed to us and of the judgment of WYNN-PARRY, J., on the point, this is important and for the following reason. The starting point of the claim of the depositors was the existence of a fiduciary relationship as between themselves and the directors, and that relationship arose from the fact that the depositors had entrusted their money to the directors for the purpose of a business which could not lawfully be carried on so that the directors must be treated as holding the money on behalf of the depositors. If the directors had paid the money of a depositor into their own banking account, he would have had an action against them exactly similar to the action in Hallett's case (2) and it would have been correctly said that the directors could not be heard to set up a title of their own to the money standing in the account adverse to the claim of the depositor. But nothing of the sort could be said if the directors paid the money into the account of the society at its bankers. Neither the conscience of the society nor of its liquidator (if it went into liquidation) could ever come into the picture on the basis of a fiduciary relationship, since the only parties to that relationship were the directors and the depositors. The society could not have been a party to it, since it had no power to accept the depositor's money. If, therefore, in such a case the depositor could claim a charge on the society's account with its bankers, the claim must have been based on some wider principle.

What can that principle be? In our judgment it must be the principle clearly indicated by LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON, that equity may operate on the conscience not merely of those who acquire a legal title in breach of some trust, express or constructive, or of some other fiduciary obligation, but of volunteers, provided that, as a result of what has gone before, some equitable proprietary interest has been created and attaches to the property in the hands of the volunteer.

LORD PARKER said ([1914] A.C. 398, 449) that :

... the assets for distribution being assets not of a legitimate but an ultra vires business are not the assets of the society, except in so far as they can substantiate some equity to them and ... such equity as they have can arise only from an application of the same principles to which the ultra vires lenders are themselves entitled to have recourse.

The result of this, in LORD PARKER's opinion (ibid., 448), was that :

The equities of the ultra vires lenders and of the society are equal, and it follows that the remainder of the assets ought to be divided between the ultra vires lenders and the society rateably ...

This result is arrived at in the manner indicated (ibid., 447), where LORD PARKER says :

But the fact that the society's own money had been employed by its directors or agents in an ultra vires business would entitle the society to an additional equity. It would be entitled, on the principles of Re Hallett's Estate (2) to follow the money as long as it or any property acquired by its means could be identified. In other words it would have exactly the same equities in this respect as the ultra vires lender, including the equity which in my opinion underlies the Crace-Calvert case (33).

In saying that the assets "are not the assets of the society" LORD PARKER must not, we think, be taken to have disregarded the fact that they stood in the name of the society. What he must have meant was that the society could not assert any save a bare legal title except to the extent that it could establish an interest in the mass which equity could recognise.

We must, however, return to the facts. The money subscribed by the shareholders was rightly obtained by the society and when received became the property of the society. The directors, inasmuch as they were responsible for the manner in which this money subscribed was dealt with, were no doubt in a fiduciary position towards the society. But it was not by working on their conscience in that capacity that the House of Lords was able to assert the equitable interest of the society (and, by reason of the liquidation, of the shareholders) in the mass of assets standing in the name of the society. The House of Lords could not work on the conscience of the directors for the simple reason that the directors were not there to have their consciences worked on. The society (and the liquidator and the shareholders) could assert a claim to an interest in the assets, but in view of the fact that the assets consisted of a mixed fund, the only machinery by means of which such a claim could be asserted and made effective was the equitable machinery of a declaration of charge. As, in their claim on the mixed fund, the shareholders were, in view of the liquidation, in effect asserting the rights of the society itself in a matter in which, but for the liquidation, they would have had no locus standi, no question of trust or fiduciary relationship as between themselves and the society entered into the matter. The society, as it appears to us, was in the position of a person whose own moneys (viz., the amounts subscribed by the shareholders) had become mixed with moneys belonging to others (viz., the depositors) to which the society never had any right at all. The society (and, in the liquidation, the shareholders) could claim an interest in the mixed fund not as following an equitable interest of its own in moneys in the hands of the directors but as asserting its own equitable interest in a mass of assets standing in its own name, but to the extent only to which its own assets (viz., money subscribed by its shareholders) could in equity be traced into the mass.

Looked at in this way Sinclair v. Brougham (3) resolves itself into one where the fund to be distributed consisted of a mixed fund in the hands of X. (the society), the origin of which could be traced in part to moneys of X. itself and in part to moneys of Y. (the depositors) to which X. never had any equitable title, but which, remaining in the eyes of equity the property of Y., was, in violation of the equitable right of Y., (the depositors) mixed by Z. (the directors) with the moneys of X. (the society). On this basis the right of the depositors must, we think, be rested on their equitable interest which they were asserting, not against the directors as trustees or fiduciary agents for them, but against the society (or what was in effect the same thing, the liquidator) as a volunteer into whose hand (or "strong-box") the money of the depositors had become mixed with money belonging to the society itself. As the society was no party to the borrowing, it was vis-a-vis the depositors a volunteer, holding the legal title to the assets representing the borrowed money. It was compelled, as being a volunteer, to recognise the equal title of the depositors, and the shareholders claiming in its right were compelled to do the same. Contrary to the view of NEVILLE, J., and the Court of Appeal, the society could not claim priority over the depositors. Per contra, the depositors could not claim priority over the shareholders. To have allowed them to do so would have been to treat the society as having itself been in a fiduciary relation to the depositors (which it was not) and to place it in as bad a position as the unfaithful agent in Hallett's case (2). This would have been manifestly unjust. This explanation appears to us to accord with the fundamental conception which lies at the root of this equitable jurisdiction, i.e., that equity intervenes, not to do what might be thought to be absolute justice to a claimant, but to prevent a defendant from acting in an unconscionable manner. Equity will not restrain a defendant from asserting a claim save to the extent that it would be unconscionable for him to do so. If this limitation on the power of equity results in giving to a plaintiff less than what on some general idea of fairness he might be considered entitled to, that cannot be helped.

Having done our best to formulate in our own words what appear to us to be the principles on which Sinclair v. Brougham (3) was decided, we now turn to an examination of the speeches themselves. We find it convenient to begin with the speech of LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON, which appears to us to contain the clearest exposition. LORD PARKER treats five different classes of cases as falling under one and the same comprehensive principle. They are as follows: (a) Re Hallett's Estate (2); (b) and (c) two illustrations given by himself ([1914] A.C. 398, 442); (d) the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Crace-Calvert case (33); (e) Sinclair v. Brougham (3) itself. He prefaces his references to (a), (b) and (c) with a brief statement of the differences between the remedies at common law and in equity. The passage ([1914] A.C. 398, 441, 442) deserves citation at length as it provides the key to the whole opinion:

At law, therefore, the lender can recover the money, so long as he can identify it, and even if it has been employed in purchasing property, there may be cases in which, by ratifying the action of those who have so employed it, he may recover the property purchased. Equity, however, treated the matter from a different standpoint. It considered that the relationship between the directors or agents and the lender was a fiduciary relationship, and that the money in their hands was for all practical purposes trust money. Starting from a personal equity, based on the consideration that it would be unconscionable for any one who could not plead purchase for value without notice to retain an advantage derived from the misapplication of trust money, it ended, as was so often the case, in creating what were in effect rights of property, though not recognised as such by the common law.

The first of LORD PARKER's own two illustrations is the case where a person standing in a fiduciary relation to two different persons acquires property by means of a mixed fund of money, part of which had belonged to one and part to the other. In such a case each has an equal equity. Each is entitled to a charge and neither is entitled to priority over the other. The explanation of this result lies in the fact that each has an equitable right of property and that right of property can be traced by each into the asset purchased. Equity gives effect to this right by means of the equitable remedy of a declaration of charge. Now, in this example the property purchased is in the hands of the fiduciary agent. The case of property not in the hands of the fiduciary agent falls under LORD PARKER's second illustration ((c) above). This example is so important for present purposes that we will quote it in full (ibid., 442, 443) :

Suppose, again, that the fiduciary agent parts with the money to a third party who cannot plead purchase for value without notice, and that the third party invests it with money of his own in the purchase of property. If the third party had notice that the money was held in a fiduciary capacity, he would be in exactly the same position as the fiduciary agent, and could not, therefore, assert any interest in the property until the money misapplied had been refunded. But if he had no such notice this would not be the case. There would on his part be no misconduct at all. On the other hand, I cannot at present see why he should have any priority as against the property over the owner of the money which had, in fact, been misapplied.

Mr. Pennyquick acknowledged that this passage was a serious obstacle in his way. He argued, however, that the illustration was not strictly necessary or directly pertinent to LORD PARKER's decision of the case before him, since in that case the mixing had been done, not by the volunteer, but by the fiduciary agents before the volunteer had received anything. He argued, accordingly, that it was mere dictum and could not be supported either on principle or on authority. We do not think it can be regarded as mere dictum since it appears to us to be an essential step in the reasoning by which LORD PARKER came to his conclusion as to the proper way to deal with Hallett's case (2), and, in our view, there can be no difference in principle between a case where the mixing has been done by the volunteer and a case where the mixing has been done previously by the fiduciary agent. In any event, we should not be prepared to dissent from the considered view on such a topic of the greatest master of equity of our time.

We may pause here to refer to the interpretation of this passage which commended itself to WYNN-PARRY, J., ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 543, 544). He came to the conclusion that in this illustration LORD PARKER was not :

... postulating the mixing by the third party in his banking account of the money paid to him by the fiduciary agent with his own money before the investment is effected ...

On this basis the illustration did not appear to infringe the rule which WYNN-PARRY, J., himself was laying down that, once a mixing takes place in the banking account of anyone not standing in a fiduciary relationship (particularly a volunteer), equity is powerless to interfere. But with all respect to the learned judge we find it impossible to agree with his interpretation. LORD PARKER was clearly postulating a mixing of the two classes of money. Is it conceivable that he was not intending to include what in nine hundred and ninety-nine out of one thousand instances would be the normal case of the purchaser paying for the property bought by a cheque on his own banking account? In any event, however, we do not think that there is any substance in the distinction drawn by the learned judge. We are unable to share the view, which appears to underlie his reasoning, that there is some difference in the case where "money" is "mixed" in a banking account and the case where a "mixing" takes place in some other way. If a volunteer pays for the property which he purchases by two separate sums of money, one being his own and the other being that given to him by the fiduciary agent, the two sums, whether in the form of two cheques or two sums of cash, become "mixed" in the very act of purchase in the only sense that matters. Their identity is lost to the eye of the common law, which is unable to detect their continued existence in the property bought, as much as if both sums had been paid into the same account at a bank. If, as WYNN-PARRY, J., appears to concede, the eye of equity is less shortsighted and is able to detect the existence of two sums as present in the property bought if it is paid for by two separate cheques, why is it incapable of doing precisely the same thing where the two sums are paid into one banking account? The real fact is, as it appears to us, that in the opinion of LORD PARKER (with which we respectfully agree) it made not a particle of difference to the significance of his illustration whether or not the two sums had passed through one banking account before the purchase was effected.

Returning to the passage quoted, we desire to call attention to some of its features. First, the right of the owner of the money is treated as equivalent to a right of property which, in the view of equity, can only be taken away by means of a purchase for value without notice. Secondly, the limited explanation which was sufficient to decide Hallett's case (2) is not sufficient for this example, and the claim of the true owner against the volunteer does not depend for its success on the incapacity of a fiduciary agent to base a claim on his own breach of duty. Thirdly, the money is misapplied by giving it to a volunteer who is treated as subject to the ordinary rule of equity that a volunteer takes subject to equitable estates or interests subsisting in the property taken. In other words, LORD PARKER was taking a case where, in his own words ([1914] A.C. 398, 442), equity had "ended . . . in creating what were in effect rights of property." Fourthly, the money given to the volunteer by the fiduciary agent is mixed with other money not, as in Hallett's case (2), by the fiduciary agent but by the volunteer himself who mixes it with other money of his own. Fifthly, if the volunteer had no notice that the money was held in a fiduciary capacity, there was no reason why he should be unable to "assert any interest in the property until the money misapplied had been refunded"—in other words, the particular matter that affected the conscience of the fiduciary agent in Hallett's case (2) and gave the principal his right to priority is not present in this example. Lastly, comes the concluding sentence (ibid., 443) in which LORD PARKER says that he cannot see why the volunteer should have priority over the true owner of the money misapplied. This is a very important sentence and is, in our view, deliberately directed to the argument which we have noted above that the shareholders were entitled to priority. It is, moreover, obviously spoken in relation to the decision of the Court of Appeal then under review, where the majority had held that the B shareholders took priority over the depositors. On a proper understanding of the position in Sinclair v. Brougham (3), that case itself is, in our opinion, as a matter of principle on all fours with the supposed case (c) with which LORD PARKER is dealing, notwithstanding that the fund in the hands of the society was not mixed by the society but was received by it already mixed by the directors, and the conclusion that the innocent volunteer (i) is not disentitled to claim an interest in the mixed fund in competition with the true owner of the money misapplied, but (ii) is not entitled to any priority, is exactly the conclusion on which the decision in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) is founded. That this is so follows, we think, from the analysis we have made of the principle itself, viz., that, when once the proprietary interest has been created by equity as a result of the wrongful or unauthorised dealing by the original recipient of the money, that interest will persist and be operative against an innocent third party who is a volunteer, provided only that means of identification or disentanglement remain. For such purpose, it cannot make any difference whether the mixing was done by the original recipient (sometimes called "the fiduciary agent") or by the innocent third party.

LORD PARKER subjects to an exhaustive examination Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (Crace-Calvert's case) (33). That was a case in which so much of the decision of the Court of Appeal as had decided that the unlimited power to borrow conferred by the rules of the society was void and that the society in consequence had no power to borrow at all was later reversed by the House of Lords. But LORD PARKER's examination of the case relates to what the Court of Appeal decided ought to be done on the basis of its own decision as to the voidness of the borrowing power. It is important to appreciate this because LORD PARKER, in expressing his agreement with the principle recognised by the Court of Appeal, evidently considered that the actual order was not really in accordance with that principle. The important thing about LORD PARKER's treatment of this case is that he considered the equity there applied by the Court of Appeal—"on the plainest principles of equity" as SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., had said—was "the same equity as that on which a tracing order is based." The equity is described by LORD PARKER in the following words ([1914] A.C. 398, 444):

The equity lay in this, that it would be unconscionable for the society to retain the amount by which its assets had been increased by, and in fact still represented, the borrowed money. It would be inequitable for the society to take advantage of the misapplication by its agents of money belonging to others and held by them in a fiduciary capacity.

Now the "agents" in that case were the directors who, acting ultra vires the society (and to that extent not as agents of the society), as the Court of Appeal (wrongly as it turned out) held, had borrowed money from various lenders who are the "others" referred to in the passage cited. That money, as between themselves and the lenders, the directors held in a capacity fiduciary towards the lenders because they had no power on the society's behalf to borrow it. That money they applied by dealing with it in such a way that, to use LORD PARKER's words (ibid., 443), it "found its way into the society's assets." We have already explained the process in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) by which the depositors' money found its way into the Birkbeck Society's "strong box." It would have been inequitable for the Guardian Society (or its liquidator or shareholders claiming in the winding-up) to take advantage of this misapplication of the lenders' money. LORD PARKER disagreed with the Court of Appeal in regard to the method by which it had purported to give effect to the equity, but as to the equity itself he expressed a clear opinion.

The actual method of distribution adopted by the Court of Appeal in the Crace-Calvert case (33) was that, after paying the costs of the liquidation and all debts and everything to which the members were entitled by way of return of capital, interest and bonus, the surplus was to be returned to the lenders. This priority given to the creditors and the members LORD PARKER criticises, and after suggesting various matters which might have been ascertained on an inquiry, he says (ibid., 445, 446):

One question of principle only would, I think, have been involved. Could the society be considered as having itself been a party to any breach of fiduciary duty so as to preclude it from asserting any interest in the assets, until the ultra vires lenders had been fully repaid thereof? Or was the society in the position of a person who had innocently received from a fiduciary agent money belonging to another and invested it with money of his own? My present opinion is that the first of these questions should be answered in the negative and the latter in the affirmative, in which case the society and ultra vires lenders would, as against the assets, rank pari passu and without any priority the one over the other.

The importance of this passage is that LORD PARKER is here treating the society as a volunteer and thus linking the Crace-Calvert case (33) with his illustration (c).

We may conclude our examination of LORD PARKER's speech with a reference to a passage (ibid., 449) where he states his approval of a view expressed by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in his dissenting judgment in the Court of Appeal. LORD PARKER says:

I agree that so far as the distributable assets represent the money of the ultra vires lenders they are not in equity the assets of the society.

He thus returns to what he had said earlier in his speech (ibid., 442) that the equity which he was examining was based on what in effect were:

. . . rights of property, though not recognised as such by the common law.

From the foregoing study of LORD PARKER's speech, it would appear that in his opinion there is an equitable principle common to all these cases of mixed funds. It operates in different ways according to the circumstances. In some cases it results in a priority to one or other of the claimants, in other cases the claimants rank pari passu. Where one claimant is a person in a fiduciary relationship to another and has mixed moneys of that other with moneys of his own, that other takes priority. The same result follows where a person, taking that other claimant's money from the person in a fiduciary relationship with notice that it is money held in a fiduciary capacity, proceeds to mix it with money of his own. Where the contest is between two claimants to a mixed fund made up entirely of moneys held on behalf of the two of them respectively and mixed together by the fiduciary agent, they share pari passu, each being innocent. Where the moneys are handed by way of transfer to a person who takes for value without notice, the claim of the owner of the moneys is extinguished just as all other equitable estates or interests are extinguished by a purchase for value without notice. In the case, however, of a volunteer who takes without notice, e.g., by way of gift from the fiduciary agent, if there is no question of mixing, he holds the money on behalf of the true owner whose equitable right to the money still persists as against him. On the other hand, if the volunteer mixes the money with money of his own, or receives it mixed from the fiduciary agent, he must admit the claim of the true owner, but is not precluded from setting up his own claim in respect of the moneys of his own which have been contributed to the mixed fund. The result is that they share pari passu. It would be inequitable for the volunteer to claim priority for the reason that he is a volunteer : it would be equally inequitable for the true owner of the money to claim priority over the volunteer, for the volunteer is innocent and cannot be said to act unconscionably if he claims equal treatment for himself. The mutual recognition of one another's rights is what equity insists on as a condition of giving relief.

We now turn to the speeches of the other noble and learned Lords. VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., examines and rejects the theory that the case was one of money had and received, and on this basis he states the claim of the depositors to be as follows (ibid., 418) :

Their claim cannot be in personam and must be in rem, a claim to follow and recover property with which, in equity at all events, they had never really parted.

He describes the limits within which the common law recognised a right to follow money (ibid., 419) :

... whether the case be that of a thief or of a fraudulent broker, or of money paid under mistake of fact, you can, even at law, follow, but only so long as the relation of debtor and creditor has not superseded the right in rem.

We have already referred to what appears to have been the view of VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., as to this debtor-creditor qualification. What does appear to be clear is that, if the money was mixed with other money, either in a bag or in a banking account, the common law was unable to give to the owner any specific relief. Thus, like LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON, VISCOUNT HALDANE bases the remedy available in equity on a right of property recognised by equity as vested in the plaintiff throughout, not lost by payment into a banking account, nor by the mixture of moneys, nor by merger in a mass of assets. In all these cases the equitable remedy by way of declaration of charge is available.

It is to be observed that neither LORD PARKER nor VISCOUNT HALDANE suggests that the equitable remedy extends to cover all cases where A. becomes possessed of money belonging to B., a view which LORD DUNEDIN seemed inclined to accept if he did not actually do so. LORD PARKER and VISCOUNT HALDANE both predicate the existence of a right of property recognised by equity which depends on there having existed at some stage a fiduciary relationship of some kind (though not necessarily a positive duty of trusteeship) sufficient to give rise to the equitable right of property. Exactly what relationships are sufficient to bring such an equitable right into existence for the purposes of the rule which we are considering is a matter which has not been precisely laid down. Certain relationships are clearly included, e.g., trustee (actual or constructive) and cestui que trust, and "fiduciary" relationships such as that of principal and agent. Sinclair v. Brougham (3) itself affords another example. There, a sufficient fiduciary relationship was found to exist between the depositors and the directors by reason of the fact that the purposes for which the depositors had handed their money to the directors were by law incapable of fulfilment.

An important part of VISCOUNT HALDANE's speech (ibid., 421-423) is taken up with an examination of Hallett's case (2). He says (ibid., 422) that in Hallett's case (2) "the difficulty of following money into a debtor and creditor account like a banker's is got over in equity" by treating the loan to the banker "as an investment pro tanto of the principal's money" and allowing the principal to waive the breach of duty and to "claim the investment to the extent of the amount due to him as made on his behalf." He then points out that in the case before the House the investment was not made in breach of a fiduciary duty on the part of the society. This is important, since no question arose of operating on the conscience of the persons, i.e., the directors, who had misapplied the money by using it in an ultra vires business. They were not parties. The decision in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) shows that the right of the owner of the money, although it may in some cases be treated as equivalent to a right to "adopt" an improper investment, does not rest on so narrow a foundation. Where there are two claimants to property which has been acquired by means of a mixed fund composed of moneys belonging to both of them, there can be no question of an "adoption" of the investment save by the consent of both of them. In the absence of such consent neither can claim any right save to have a charge, enforceable in the ordinary way by sale, and payment out of the proceeds. LORD PARKER, speaking of such a case (which is his illustration mentioned in (b) above) says (ibid., 442) :

Each is entitled to a charge on the property for his own money, and neither can claim priority over the other. It follows that their charges must rank pari passu according to their respective amounts. Further, I think that as against the fiduciary agent they could by agreement claim to take the property itself, in which case they would become tenants in common in shares proportioned to amounts for which either could claim a charge.

LORD DUNEDIN solved the problem on different lines. After criticising the conclusion of the Court of Appeal in the Guardian case (Grace-Calvert's case (33)), he began by enunciating the proposition (ibid., 431) that :

... all ideas of natural justice are against allowing A. to keep the property of B. which has somehow got into A.'s possession without any intention on the part of B. to make a gift to A.

What he describes as the "equity" involved in the action for money had and received is in his view "based on inherent ideas of justice" (ibid., 432), but he thought that this action would not lie in the case of payment under an ultra vires contract. This, however, does not matter if there is an equitable remedy. He compares (ibid., 434) the expression by Roman jurists of what he describes as the "super-eminent equity" in the brocard nemo debet locupletari jactura aliena and he asks (ibid., 435) whether English equity is to retire defeated from the task which other systems of equity have conquered. He describes (ibid., 436) as unconscionable in the technical sense a view which leads to the result that :

... having got hold of property which does not belong to you, if only you are wise or lucky enough to change its form you may enjoy the proceeds unmolested.

He says (ibid.) that there cannot be a jus in re in currency. If by this he means that when money is delivered as currency the title at law passes by delivery, we should, of course, agree. But if he means that there can be no equitable property left in the transferor of the money, we respectfully disagree and in this view we are supported by what was said by LORD PARKER. If a principal confides money to a fiduciary agent for a particular purpose and that agent wrongfully pays it away to another, e.g., on the purchase of a chattel, the principal cannot, of course, recover the money. He has no jus in re. Suppose, however, that the fiduciary agent wrongfully gives it to a volunteer, has the principal no right in equity to recover it from the volunteer or to obtain against the volunteer a declaration of charge on any mixed fund or any property into which it has gone ? What LORD DUNEDIN's answer would have been to the question framed in this way is not, we think, clear. The reason is that he regards both an action to get back, e.g., a specific chattel, and an action for money had and received as :

... just different forms of working out the higher equity that no one has a right to keep either property or the proceeds of property which does not belong to him.

He says (ibid., 437) that equity helps :

... the common law by tracing, and can say that if the proceeds of property can be shown to be what I have called a superfluity in the person of the recipient, then it will hold that that property is traced just as surely as if it was still in the original form.

We have, we think, said enough to show that LORD DUNEDIN arrives at the same result in the actual case as VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C., LORD ATKINSON and LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON, but by a different route. In the case itself he found the "superfluity" to originate in the excess over the money subscribed by the shareholders due to the admixture of moneys lent by the depositors. The result of this was, however, not that the shareholders took 20s. in the £ before the depositors took anything. What we understand LORD DUNEDIN to mean is that, where the assets into which the moneys of both have gone have depreciated in value, the depreciation is to be treated as rateably distributed. In other words, the "superfluity" is what remained after paying to the shareholders, not the par amount of their original subscriptions, but the depreciated value of what they had subscribed. Attractive though LORD

DUNEDIN's view may be, we cannot regard it as agreeing with those of VISCOUNT HALDANE, LORD ATKINSON and LORD PARKER. Those noble and learned lords limited the right to recover to cases where there is what equity regards, in effect, as a right of property. LORD DUNEDIN, on the other hand, treats the principle which he favours as applicable wherever the property of A. has, without justification, got into the hands of B. Where this has happened, while recognising the limited nature of the relief afforded at law, he appears to think that equity will always intervene to help the rightful owner.

LORD SUMNER's approach is also different from that of the other members of the House. Like them, he rejects the claim for money had and received, and he appears to reject ([1914] A.C. 398, 456) the broad "equity" favoured by LORD DUNEDIN. He thinks (ibid., 458) that the case required to be decided upon equitable principles upon which there was no direct authority. He regards the problem as one of administration. The assets requiring to be administered must be regarded as belonging to someone. They cannot be treated as res nullius. He agreed (ibid., 459) that the principle on which Hallett's case (2) is founded justified the order proposed.

There are two cases subsequent to Sinclair v. Brougham (3) which were quoted to us. Banque Belge Pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck (32), a decision of this court, was a case in which unmixed "money" in the hands of a volunteer was held to be recoverable by a bank from whom the "money" had been drawn by means of cheques on its customer's account which had been fraudulently obtained or drawn by the customer's clerk. So far as it is relevant to the question which we have to consider, the case appears to do no more than afford an example of the proposition (which is not disputed) that "unmixed money" can be traced into the hands of a volunteer. But the references in the judgments to the equitable principle are in no way inconsistent with what we have said. If anything, they seem to us to support our view. Re Blake (28), a decision of MAUGHAM, J., we have already referred to in other connections. The only relevance for present purposes lies in the judge's references to the equitable principles relating to the tracing of trust funds ([1932] 1 Ch. 54, 62, 63). He said (ibid., 63, 64):

The old doctrine as to the impossibility of following money into the hands of a volunteer has been largely encroached upon by more modern decisions, especially in cases where the trustee is the defendant.

It is to be observed that neither the Banque Belge case (32) nor Sinclair v. Brougham (3) was cited to or mentioned by the learned judge and, with respect, we do not follow him in his reference to claims against a volunteer "where the trustee is the defendant." In such a case the defendant can scarcely be described as a "volunteer." The learned judge went on to say (ibid., 64) that he had been unable to find any case:

... in which a claim to follow money in the hands of a volunteer (not being the original trustee or his bankers) has been successfully made ...

We ourselves regard the claim of the depositors in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) and the claim of the plaintiff bank in the simpler Banque Belge case (32) as successful claims to follow money into the hands of a volunteer. With respect, we cannot think that MAUGHAM, J., would have used the language that he did if the question had been fully argued before him and the relevant cases not only cited but accurately explained.

In the analysis we have made of the speeches in Sinclair v. Brougham (3) and of the principle which underlies them, it has been made clear that, though the equity may operate on the conscience of a volunteer, it will not operate on the conscience of a purchaser for value without notice. Some attempt was made on the part of the defendants to establish that they or some of them might properly be described as falling within the latter category, e.g., by reason of the fact that moneys which certain of them had received were paid on the terms that such moneys were applied in a particular way. The argument was not strenuously stressed before us and was rejected by WYNN-PARRY, J. We entirely agree with the learned judge on this point and do not find it necessary to add anything to the reasons which he gave for his conclusion.

We have now to consider how the principles which we have outlined are to be applied to the facts of the individual cases which are before us. We deal first with what appear to be the most important claims from the point of view of amount. They are cases in which the money received from the Diplock executors was used in the execution of works on land or buildings already belonging to the charities. The plaintiffs claim in each case declarations of charge on land of the charity in respect of these amounts. The cases are: (i) Leaf Homeopathic Hospital (action II.C) which spent £1,137 (part of its total grant of £7,500) on its hospital buildings; (ii) Westminster Hospital (action IV.A) which applied the whole of its grant of £4,000 towards the building on its own land (at a total cost of £500,000) of the new Westminster Hospital; (iii) Heritage Craft Schools (action IV.B) who spent their grant of £2,000 as to £1,499 17s. 4d. on the erection of buildings known as the "Toddlers' Home" on land of their own, and as to £500 2s. (apparently) on the improvement of certain other land of their own used in connection with the "Toddlers' Home." According to the agreed statement of facts, this latter sum was, in fact, so spent. According to the defence, however, this sum was used to repay to a Colonel Warren a like sum advanced by him to the Schools for the purpose of executing this improvement. (In the notice of appeal an alternative claim is framed on this basis: we will deal with the alternative case later); (iv) Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes (action IV.D) which spent £3,750 (part of its total grant of £4,760) in the erection of a block of "homes" on land of its own; (v) Guy's Hospital (action IV.E), which spent out of its total grant of £21,000 the sum of £19,391 12s. 11d., less £5,052, on the reconstruction of an existing ward in the hospital so as to form two children's wards known as the "Caleb Ward" and the "Diplock Ward" and the sum of £555 1s. 7d. on meeting deficits on other building operations. These expenditures all raise the same question, viz.: Is there any equitable remedy available to the plaintiffs by which they can trace the Diplock money into the property on which it was expended? WYNN-PARRY, J., dismissed all these claims save, in the case of Guy's Hospital, for a sum of £5,052 (part of the sum above mentioned of £19,391 12s. 11d.) which had not, in fact, been expended but still stood to the credit of a special account at the date of the hospital's receipt of the "warning letter." In our opinion, he was right in rejecting these claims, but—as will have been seen—we respectfully disagree with the reasoning by which he arrived at his result.

Where the contribution of a volunteer to a mixed fund or the acquisition of what we may call a "mixed asset" is in the form of money, it is, as we hope to have shown, inequitable for him to claim the whole fund or the whole asset. The equitable charge given to the other claimant in respect of the money contributed by him results merely in the division of the mixed fund between the two of them or the reduction of the asset by sale to its original components, i.e., money which is then divisible in the same manner. The volunteer gets back what he put in, i.e., money. On this basis, if a charity had used a mixed fund, consisting in part of its own money and in part of Diplock money, in the acquisition of property, whether, e.g., land or stock, the application of the equitable remedy would have presented no particular difficulty. The Diplock money and the charity money could each have been traced. A charge enforced by sale and distribution would have been effective as well as fair to both parties. The charity would not, as the result of the mixture, have been deprived of anything that it had before. In the present cases, however, the charities have used the Diplock money, not in combination with money of their own to acquire new assets, but in the alteration and improvement of assets which they already owned. The altered and improved asset owes its existence, therefore, to a combination of land belonging to the charity and money belonging to the Diplock estate. The question whether tracing is possible, and, if so, to what extent, and also the question whether an effective remedy by way of declaration of charge can be granted consistently with an equitable treatment of the charity as an innocent volunteer, present quite different problems from those arising in the simple case above stated. In the case of the purchase of an asset out of a mixed fund, both categories of money are, as we have said, necessarily present throughout the existence of the asset in an identifiable form. In the case of adaptation of property of the volunteer by means of trust money, it by no means necessarily follows that the money can be said to be present in the adapted property. The beneficial owner of the trust money seeks to follow and recover that money and claims to use the machinery of a charge on the adapted property in order to enable him to do so. But in the first place the money may not be capable of being followed. In every true sense, the money may have disappeared. A simple example suggests itself. The owner of a house who, as an innocent volunteer, has trust money in his hands given to him by a trustee uses that money in making an alteration to his house so as to fit it better to his own personal needs. The result may add not one penny to the value of the house. Indeed, the alteration may well lower its value, for the alteration, though convenient to the owner, may be highly inconvenient in the eyes of a purchaser. Can it be said in such cases that the trust money can be traced and extracted from the altered asset? Clearly not, for the money will have disappeared leaving no monetary trace behind. The asset will not have increased (or may even have depreciated) in value through its use.

The matter, however, does not end here. What, for the purposes of the inquiry, is to be treated as "the charity property"? Is it to be the whole of the land belonging to the charity, or is it to be only that part of it which was altered or reconstructed or on which a building has been erected by means of Diplock money? If the latter, the result may well be that the property, both in its original state and as altered or improved, will, when taken in isolation, have little or no value. What would be the value of a building in the middle of Guy's Hospital without any means of access through other parts of the hospital property? If, on the other hand, the charge is to be on the whole of the charity land, it might well be thought an extravagant result if the Diplock estate, because Diplock money had been used to reconstruct a corner of it, were to be entitled to a charge on the entirety. It is, however, not merely a question of locating and identifying the Diplock money. The result of a declaration of charge is to disentangle trust money and enable it to be withdrawn in the shape of money from the complex in which it has become involved. This can only be done by sale under the charge. But the equitable owner of the trust money must in this process submit to equality of treatment with the innocent volunteer. The latter too, is entitled to disentangle his money and to withdraw it from the complex. Where the complex originates in money on both sides there is no difficulty and no inequity. Each is entitled to a charge. But if what the volunteer has contributed is not money but other property of his own such as land, what then? You cannot have a charge for land. You can, it is true, have a charge for the value of land, an entirely different thing. Is it equitable to compel the innocent volunteer to take a charge merely for the value of the land when what he has contributed is the land itself? In other words, can equity, by the machinery of a charge, give to the innocent volunteer that which he has contributed so as to place him in a position comparable with that of the owner of the trust fund? In our opinion, it cannot. In the absence of authority to the contrary, our conclusion is that as regards the Diplock money used in these cases it cannot be traced in any true sense, and, further, that, even if this were not so, the only remedy available to equity, viz., that of a declaration of charge, would not produce an equitable result and is inapplicable accordingly.

We now consider two claims of a different class. They arise in connection with (i) the alternative case above mentioned of the Heritage Craft Schools (action IV.B) and (ii) the Leaf Homoeopathic Hospital (action II.C), as regards £6,000, further part of the hospital's total grant of £7,500. In the former case, the alternative claim was that the judicial trustee is entitled by way of subrogation to stand in the shoes of Colonel Warren in respect of his loan of £500 2s. which was said to have been paid off out of the Diplock grant. In the latter case, the claim is to have the benefit of a charge for £6,000 on property of the hospital formerly held by Barclays Bank, Ltd., as security for a fixed loan for that amount which was paid off out of the Diplock grant under the terms on which that grant was made. Both claims were rejected by WYNN-PARRY, J. The facts in relation to this £500 2s. do not appear to have been clearly ascertained. Assuming, however, that it was used to repay Colonel Warren, the result, apparently, was to enable the charity to apply the sum borrowed from Colonel Warren for the purpose of executing the works in question. There is no suggestion that Colonel Warren's loan was a secured loan. The payment to Colonel Warren can only have operated to extinguish the debt owing to him and the money which he had advanced was consequently available for use by the charity for the purposes indicated without there being any obligation to repay it. The case cannot, we think, be regarded as a case of subrogation. We agree with the view of WYNN-PARRY, J., that in such a case the debt was extinguished so that, in order to give effect to the equitable doctrine said to be applicable, it would be necessary to revive the debt in some way. We do not see how it can be said to be unconscientious on the part of the charity to object to this being done. In substance, the Diplock money was used for the purpose of carrying out works on the land of the charity and, in our opinion, the plaintiffs are in no better position than they are in the cases of works carried out on lands of a charity which we have already discussed.

The case of the Leaf Homeopathic Hospital is different in that (a) the loan was a secured loan, (b) the grant was made in terms for the purpose of enabling the charity to pay off the loan, and (c) the £6,000 in question cannot be said to have been used indirectly in the execution of works as in the case of the Heritage Craft Schools. It was used simply and solely for the purpose of clearing off an existing incumbrance. Here, too, we think that the effect of the payment to the bank was to extinguish the debt and the charge held by the bank ceased to exist. The case cannot, we think, be regarded as one of subrogation, and, if the plaintiffs were entitled to a charge, it would have to be a new charge created by the court. The position in this respect does not appear to us to be affected by the fact that the payment off of this debt was one of the objects for which the grant was made. The effect of the payment off was that the charity, which had previously held only an equity of redemption, became the owners of unincumbered property. That unincumbered property derived from a combination of two things, the equity of redemption contributed by the charity and the effect of the Diplock money in getting rid of the incumbrance. If equity is now to create a charge (and we say "create" because there is no survival of the original charge) in favour of the judicial trustee, it will be placing him in a position to insist on a sale of what was contributed by the charity. The case, as it appears to us, is in effect analogous to the cases where Diplock money is expended on improvements on charity land. The money was in this case used to remove a blot on the title. To give the judicial trustee a charge in respect of the money so used would, we think, be equally unjust to the charity who, as the result of such a charge, would have to submit to a sale of the interest in the property which it brought in. We may point out that, if the relief claimed were to be accepted as a correct application of the equitable principle, insoluble problems might arise in a case where in the meanwhile fresh charges on the property had been created or money had been expended on it.

As regards the main action, the only appeal made to this court relates to the claim against St. George's Hospital. That charity received a grant of £8,000 on Mar. 20, 1937. By a letter dated Oct. 19, 1939, addressed to the solicitors for the executors, the assistant secretary stated that this sum "has been invested in the name of the rebuilding fund of St. George's Hospital." This letter is admitted in para. 4 of the defence, but it is denied :

... that any part of the investments in the name of the rebuilding fund of this defendant in fact represents the said sum of £8,000 or forms part of the testator's estate.

According to correspondence which is before us, it would appear that the £8,000 was paid into the charity's "rebuilding appeal account" with the Westminster Bank, Knightsbridge, on Mar. 21, 1937. The correspondence shows that certain sums (apparently small) were drawn from this account and spent and that investments were from time to time made by means of money drawn from the account. In the case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes we think (as later appears) that the rule to be applied in order to give effect to the plaintiffs' equity would be the same as that applied in Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's case (34). In the case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes we have before us the relevant banking account, showing all the dealings, in and out, since the receipt of the Diplock money. In the case of St. George's Hospital we have not before us the corresponding banking account, but it appears to us that on principle the same rule would prima facie be applicable. In any case it seems to us reasonably clear that the £8,000 or some part of it can be traced into the investments. We are unable, on the information before us, to ascertain what precisely the plaintiffs' rights are, but (subject to discussion) we think that they would (if necessary) be entitled to an appropriate inquiry.

The Prince of Wales Hospital, Plymouth (action II.A) received a grant of £1,000 on Mar. 23, 1937. The cheque for this sum was paid into the hospital's current account, which at that date was overdrawn to the amount of £21,822 6s. 5d. This account was continuously overdrawn and at the date of the "warning letter" of Oct. 19, 1939, the overdraft amounted to £30,187 16s. 5d. The hospital's bankers held security for the overdraft in the shape of investments which were of the market value of £25,835 4s. 3d. on Mar. 23, 1937, and £22,322 2s. 11d. on Oct. 19, 1939. Certain of these investments were sold and the proceeds applied in reduction of the debt. One holding was redeemed. No order under this branch of the case is asked for in the notice of appeal. It is, therefore, unnecessary for us to say anything further in regard to the Prince of Wales Hospital.

The National Institute for the Deaf (action I.F) received a grant of £1,500. The cheque was paid into the charity's current account, which was in credit. It is agreed that if the rule in Clayton's case (34) were applied, the whole of the sum of £1,500 would have to be treated as having been drawn out and expended during the year ended Mar. 31, 1938, for the ordinary purposes of the charity and no money or other asset could be treated as representing any part of it, but before the applicability of Clayton's case (34) is considered, there is another question. For the purposes of its own accounts the charity treated the £1,500 as having been carried, like other legacies, to its capital account and not to its income and expenditure account. Whenever general expenditure exceeded income in any year, the deficiency was debited to capital account. On Aug. 30, 1938, and in December, 1938, two sums of £500 and £1,000 respectively were withdrawn from the banking account and placed on deposit at the Post Office Savings Bank where they have remained, and for the purposes of the charity's accounts they have been treated as representing the £1,500 of Diplock money. On these facts it is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the charity is bound by its own appropriation and that the money so placed on deposit must be treated as representing the Diplock grant.

This claim, with others of the same nature, is dealt with by WYNN-PARRY, J., ([1947] 1 All E.R. 522, 547). His reason for rejecting the claim was that the claim could only be rested on the common law right to follow. In accordance with his general conclusion he held that the equitable right of tracing was not applicable for the reason that the charity was not a fiduciary agent. The claim, he thought, could not be maintained at common law since in the eyes of the common law the £1,500 had lost its identity for ever by being mixed with other money in the charity's banking account. His reasoning ceases to be applicable if the views which we have expressed as to the equitable remedy are correct. On that basis the £1,500 could be traced into the charity's banking account. The question whether or not it ought at any given date to be regarded as wholly or partially present in that account would have depended, in the first instance, on the answer to the question whether the rule applied in Clayton's case (34) was applicable to withdrawals made from the account, or whether, the account being, ex hypothesi, a mixed fund composed of Diplock money and the charity's own money, withdrawals ought to be regarded as having been made rateably from both claimants. As already indicated, the applicability of the rule in Clayton's case (34) is later discussed in connection with the case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Here, however, the charity has earmarked the sums withdrawn from its account and deposited at the Post Office Savings Bank. It seems to us that equity cannot disregard this. A volunteer, who mixes what turns out to be trust money with his own, can surely himself "unmix" it subsequently if he thinks fit to do so. And as the operation of equity is directed to preventing the volunteer doing what is unconscionable, surely it would be unconscionable for the volunteer, who, for his own purposes, has earmarked the trust money, to assert that what he has earmarked is not trust money but money which he is entitled to keep as his own. In our opinion, the plaintiffs' claim in this part of the case to be entitled to this £1,500 is correct, and it is not necessary here to discuss Clayton's case (34) at all.

In the case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes (action I.E), the case presented to us, as we understood it, was limited to a claim to trace the sum of £3,000 granted by the executors and paid into the charity's general current account on Dec. 14, 1936, into a sum of £40,000 $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. Funding Loan purchased for £39,341 13s. 9d on Dec. 23, 1936, and paid for by a cheque drawn on the same account and cleared on Dec. 24. The precise manner in which the entries in the bank pass book ought to be interpreted is not, we think, entirely clear, but for the purpose of explaining the principle which we consider would be applicable we start with the position at the close of business on Dec. 14, 1936. The position then was that the credit balance of £49,771 4s. 11d. represented, as to £3,000, Diplock money, and as to the remainder, viz., £46,771 4s. 11d., charity money. If the whole of this charity money is treated (as for the purpose of our explanation we are treating it) as having been paid in before the Diplock £3,000 was paid in, it would follow, if the principle of Clayton's case (34) were applicable as between the claimants and the charity, that the first £46,771 4s. 11d. drawn out would be charity money. Now, as we have said, the cheque for £39,341 13s. 9d. was cleared and debited to the account on Dec. 24. Meanwhile, a number of withdrawals had taken place, totalling £22,194 7s. 1d.

In the pass book the next withdrawal is the £39,341 13s. 9d. with which we have to deal. Taking, therefore, the starting figure of £49,771 4s. 11d. and deducting from it the £22,194 7s. 1d. withdrawn which, on Clayton's case (34), must be regarded as charity money, there remained £27,576 17s. 10d. The result would be that the sum of £39,341 13s. 9d. must be regarded as having consisted, as to the first £24,576 17s. 10d. of charity money, as to the next £3,000, of Diplock money, and as to the remainder, of charity money. On this basis the plaintiffs would be entitled to a charge on the funding loan in respect of their claim to £3,000.

The above result would only follow if Clayton's case (34) applies. It might be suggested that the corollary of treating two claimants on a mixed fund as interested rateably should be that withdrawals out of the fund ought to be attributed rateably to the interests of both claimants. But in the case of an active banking account this would lead to the greatest difficulty and complication in practice and might in many cases raise questions incapable of solution. What, then, is to be done? In our opinion, the same rule as that applied in Clayton's case (34) should be applied. This is really a rule of convenience based on so-called presumed intention. It has been applied in the case of two beneficiaries whose trust money has been paid into a mixed banking account from which drawings were subsequently made, and, so far as we know, its application has not been adversely criticised: see per FRY, J. (13 Ch.D. 696, 704) in Hallett's case (2) and per NORTH, J. ([1895] 2 Ch. 433, 436) in Re Stenning, Wood v. Stenning (35). In such a case both claimants are innocent, neither is in a fiduciary relation to the other, and, if the mixed fund had not been drawn on, they would be entitled to rateable charges on it. Exactly the same occurs where the claimants are, not two beneficiaries, but one beneficiary and one volunteer, and we think, accordingly, that the same principle should be adopted.

The Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home (action III.C) received a grant of £2,000 sent to them on Mar. 20, 1937, and paid it into their current account. By a contract dated Mar. 24, 1937, they contracted to purchase a sum of £1,943 18s. 5d. $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. War Stock. This stock, costing (with expenses) the sum of £2,000, was paid for by cheque on the account on Apr. 6, 1937. It is admitted in para. 5 of the defence that this £2,000 was the £2,000 received from the Diplock executors. So far, the case resembles the case of the National Institute for the Deaf, in that the money was paid into a mixed account, and the charity agrees that the £2,000 subsequently drawn out and invested in War Loan was the Diplock money. For the reasons which we have given, we think that, for the purposes of the equitable doctrine, this £2,000 and any investment shown to represent it must be regarded as belonging to the Diplock estate, but there is a further complication, since it is argued that there is no investment which can in any true sense be said to represent the £2,000 of Diplock money. At the date of the purchase of the War Stock the charity already owned £9,747 10s. 2d. like stock. Both sums of stock were uncertified inscribed stock, and, according to the method of accounting adopted by the Bank of England, the £1,943 18s. 5d. was added to the existing holding. This, by itself, would not, in our opinion, affect the power of equity to trace the Diplock money and secure its return to the estate in the shape of a proportionate part of the total holding. Unlike the case already discussed where the Diplock money was expended in works on charity land, no injustice would be done to the charity as volunteers by carrying out the necessary process of dissection. There are, however, further complications. Subsequently to the addition of the £1,943 18s. 5d. to the existing holding, two further sums of stock, amounting respectively to £50 6s. 6d. and £47 10s. 9d., were purchased by the charity, and these sums it would be entitled to have taken into account on a division of the holding. So far, still, there is no difficulty. But in addition to purchases, certain sales took place amounting to £3,509 11s. 4d., the purchase price being expended for the general purposes of the charity. Of these sales, the last, for £434 11s. 2d., was effected on Dec. 23, 1939, i.e., after the receipt of the "warning letter" and must, we think, be treated as referable solely to the charity's own interest. The other sales covered a period between Nov. 10, 1938, and Aug. 10, 1939. To what interest ought these sales to be attributed? Entirely to the charity's own interest, say the plaintiffs, leaving the Diplock interest intact in the stock remaining unsold. They suggest that a principle analogous to that of Clayton's case (34) ought to be applied, with the result that the stock first brought into the mass which was the charity's own stock ought to be treated as having been first drawn out. We do not accept the view that the case ought to be treated as though it were subject to the rule in Clayton's case (34). We see no justification for extending that rule beyond the case of a banking account. Here, before the sales took place, the mass of stock, if the question had then been raised, would have been regarded in equity as belonging rateably to the charity and to the Diplock estate. The only equitable way of treating the situation appears to us to be to regard each sum of stock withdrawn from the mass as having been made up in the same proportions. In so far as, on this principle, withdrawals represented in part Diplock money and the sums received on the sale of the stock withdrawn were expended on general purposes and cannot now be traced into any existing asset, that amount of Diplock money must be regarded as having disappeared. But in respect of so much of the Diplock interest as is not thus accounted for, we are of opinion that the claim to a rateable proportion of the stock still held is established.

In considering the individual cases for the purpose of applying the principle of the equitable right of tracing, we have, for simplicity, assumed that the plaintiffs' claims extend to the full amount of the Diplock moneys, properly belonging to the next of kin, paid to each defendant—in particular, we have not taken into account the sums recovered from the executors or their estates under the compromise order. No argument was addressed to us on this aspect of the matter. Prima facie and subject to discussion, it appears to us that the sums so recovered ought to be credited rateably to all the charities for all purposes, i.e., for the purposes of the claims in rem as well as the claims in personam. In the case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, for example, where we have expressed the view that the plaintiffs are entitled to "trace" the whole amount of £3,000 of Diplock money paid away to the defendant charity into the £40,000 2½ per cent. Funding Loan, the defendant would be entitled to be treated as having accounted to the plaintiffs for the appropriate proportion of the sums recovered, so that the plaintiffs would be limited to claiming so much only of the Funding Loan as represents the balance of their total claim of £3,000.

The result of the whole matter is that the plaintiffs are, in our judgment, entitled to succeed on all the appeals. Having regard to the view we have expressed in regard to their claims in personam and in regard to the failure of the defences of the statutes of limitation to those claims, and in the light of the submissions made to us, the plaintiffs would under this head of their claim be entitled, as it appears to us, to orders against each of the defendants for payment to the judicial trustee of an amount equivalent to the total sum paid to that defendant less a rateable proportion of the sums recovered from the executors or their estates, but without any interest. Orders have, however, been made by WYNN-PARRY, J., on the claims in rem against three of the defendants, viz., against the Leaf Homeopathic Hospital (action II.C) in respect of an agreed sum of £250; Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes (action IV.D) in respect of the proceeds of sale of a sum of £1,000 local loans; and Guy's Hospital (action IV.E) in respect of a sum of £5,052; in each of the two latter cases together with a further sum for interest. As has been already stated, there is no cross-appeal against any of these orders for payment.

In addition, we have expressed the view that on their claims in rem the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed against certain of the defendants either wholly or in part; i.e., (i) against the National Institute for the Deaf (action I.F), to the full extent of their claim, by tracing the Diplock money into the Post Office Savings deposits of £1,500; (ii) against the Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home (action III.C), partially, by tracing Diplock money into a rateable part of the 3½ per cent. War Stock; (iii) against Dr. Barnardo's Homes (action I.E), to the full extent of their claim, by tracing Diplock money on the application of the rule in Clayton's case (34) into the 2½ per cent. Funding Loan; and (iv) against St. George's Hospital (main action) to an extent at present unspecified by tracing Diplock money on the application of the rule in Clayton's case (34) into one or other of the investments made by the hospital during the relevant period out of its "rebuilding appeal account." Subject to argument, as already stated the amount of the plaintiffs' claims must for the purposes of their "tracing" remedy, no less than for the purposes of their personal remedy, be treated as rateably reduced by virtue of the sums recovered from the executors. On the other hand, in each of these cases the plaintiffs would appear to be entitled, further, to a sum representing the interest in fact earned by the investments into which the Diplock money (reduced as above mentioned) is so traced.

At the hearing we understood the plaintiffs to say that, if they were held entitled to succeed on their personal claims, they would not seek or need to rely on their claims in rem. On this view, the proper order in each case would be to set aside the order made by WYNN-PARRY, J.—including in the appropriate cases that part of his order directing payment to the plaintiffs—and to substitute an order for payment to the judicial trustee of an amount equivalent to the full principal sum (reduced as above mentioned) received by the defendants. There remains, however, the question of the plaintiffs' right in certain cases to interest.

As we have already indicated, we shall be prepared to hear argument on the proper form of order to be made in the several cases, after there has been an opportunity on the part of all parties concerned to consider this judgment. In so far, however, as the plaintiffs seek, or are entitled, to rely on their claims in rem so as to recover sums for interest, or should be taken to be bound by the orders, so far as in their favour, made by WYNN-PARRY, J., then the proper order would in each case appear to be: (a) to direct in the four cases of the National Institute for the Deaf, the Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, Dr. Barnardo's Homes and St. George's Hospital a transfer to the judicial trustee of the appropriate securities in respect of which the plaintiffs have established their right of "tracing" (or payment of a sum equivalent to the proceeds of sale thereof) together with payment of the appropriate sums for interest; (b) in those four cases and also in the three cases of the Leaf Homeopathic Hospital, Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes and Guy's Hospital (in which WYNN-PARRY, J., ordered payments to the judicial trustee) to direct, pursuant to the plaintiffs' rights in personam, payment to the judicial trustee of the balance of the principal sums (reduced as above mentioned) paid to the defendants after bringing into account the principal amount covered by the orders under (a) above and the orders made by WYNN-PARRY, J. (as the case may be); and (c) in the case of the remaining defendants to direct, pursuant to the plaintiffs' rights in personam, payment to the judicial trustee of the full principal amount (reduced as above mentioned) received from the executors. The necessary accounts and inquiries would have to be framed to give effect to the orders under (a) and (b).

As regards costs, it is to be noted that the judicial trustee, who has been separately represented before us, is a defendant in the main action and the plaintiff in the other nine actions. The Attorney-General has also been represented before us as a defendant in the main action. Again subject to discussion, the proper order would appear to us to be that the defendants should pay the party and party costs of the plaintiffs and of the judicial trustee and the Attorney-General both here and below, such order to be without prejudice to the right of the judicial trustee to recover the balance of his costs, together with his proper charges and expenses, from the estate.

Solicitors: White & Leonard (for next of kin and the judicial trustee); Trollope & Winckworth (for the National Institute for the Deaf, Dr. Barnardo's Home, Prince of Wales' Hospital, Plymouth, and Leaf Homeopathic Hospital); Eland, Nettleship & Butt (for St. George's Hospital); Freshfields (for Westminster Hospital, Queen Alexandra Cottage Homes, Guy's Hospital and Heritage Craft Schools); Peake & Co. (for the Royal Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home); Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

July 26, 27. THE COURT admitted a new agreed statement of facts in the claim against the National Institute for the Deaf (action I.F.: see p. 363 ante), heard argument thereon, and delivered a supplementary judgment, holding that the rule in Clayton's case applied, that all the plaintiffs could claim against the charity was a personal claim, and that their right to trace was non-existent. A report of these further proceedings will appear on p. 429 post.

SMITH'S POTATO ESTATES, LTD. v. BOLLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

SMITH'S POTATO CRISPS (1929), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

quished. MORGAN v. TATE & LTD. [1953] 2 All E.R. 162. (Viscount Simon, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord Normand and Lord Oaksey), April 19, 20, 22, 23, July 14, 1948.]

Income Tax—Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a).

Excess Profits Tax—Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal vital to retain services of valuable employee—Finance Act, 1940, (c. 29), s. 32 (1)—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1).

To secure a supply of potatoes for the purpose of their business a company formed and held all the shares in a subsidiary company which, with the parent company's money, acquired a large estate, previously managed for many years by an experienced farmer, Y. To retain Y.'s services, the subsidiary company entered into an agreement with him under which he was paid, in the accounting year ending Mar. 31, 1941, £6,486, which was included in the accounts of the subsidiary company. In computing the profits of the subsidiary company (which were included in the parent company's profits for assessment to excess profits tax for that chargeable accounting period), the Commissioners of Inland Revenue decided that for excess profits tax purposes no deduction should be allowed in respect of Y.'s remuneration in excess of £3,500, being the amount the commissioners considered reasonable and necessary having regard to the requirements of the trade or business and to the actual services rendered by Y. Both companies, regarding Y.'s employment as essential to the well-being of the enterprise and fearing they would suffer through Y.'s discontent, appealed to the Board of Referees against this decision and the Board held that £5,800 out of the sum of £6,486 was deductible. As a result, the commissioners did not seek to disallow any part of Y.'s remuneration in subsequent years. The subsidiary company incurred legal and accountancy costs of £622 in the preparation and prosecution of the appeal:—

Held: (VISCOUNT SIMON and LORD OAKSEY dissenting) the legal and accountancy costs incurred were not a disbursement "wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade" within the meaning of r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, and so were not deductible by the subsidiary company for the purposes of its assessment to income tax and were not deductible by the parent company for the purpose of the assessment subject to excess profits tax.

Dicta of LORD LOREBURN, L.C., and LORD DAVEY in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield ([1906] A.C. 448, 452, 453), applied.

Dictum of VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., in British Insulated & Helsby Cables v. Atherton ([1926] A.C. 205, 211, 212), considered.

Allen v. Farquharson Bros. & Co. (1932) (17 Tax Cas. 59) and Worsley Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1932) (17 Tax Cas. 349), considered.

Decision of Court of Appeal, ([1947] 1 All E.R. 704), affirmed.

[AS TO EXPENSES WHOLLY OR EXCLUSIVELY EXPENDED FOR PURPOSES OF TRADE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, p. 152, para. 312; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 42-44, 56, 57, Nos. 215-266, 286-292.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield, [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 5 Tax Cas. 215; 28 Digest 57, 290.
- (2) Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., Ltd., [1911] A.C. 150; 80 L.J.K.B. 566; 104 L.T. 321; 5 Tax Cas. 568; 75 J.P.Jo. 87; 28 Digest 57, 291.
- (3) Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 6 Tax Cas. 399; 28 Digest 56, 286.
- (4) British Insulated & Helsby Cables v. Atherton, [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 28 Digest 52, 264.
- (5) Allen v. Farquharson Bros. & Co., (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 59; Digest Supp.
- (6) Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Lucas, (1883), 8 App. Cas. 891; 53 L.J.Q.B. 4; 49 L.T. 781; 48 J.P. 212; 2 Tax Cas. 25; 28 Digest 21, 104.
- (7) Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Keene (Inspector of Taxes), Rushden Heel Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1947] 1 All E.R. 699.
- (8) Worsley Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 349.

CONSOLIDATED APPEALS by the taxpayers from a decision of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., MORTON and SOMERVELL, L.JJ.), dated Apr. 2, 1947, and reported [1947] 1 All E.R. 704.

The Special Commissioners had disallowed a deduction, for the purposes of income and excess profits tax, of legal and accountancy costs incurred by the first appellants in successful appeals by both appellants against the proportion of the remuneration of an employee which was allowable in computing the profits of the first appellants, a company subsidiary to the other taxpayer, assessable to excess profits tax. ATKINSON, J., allowed the appeals by the taxpayers, but his decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal. The House of Lords now affirm, by a majority, the decision of the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER.

Frederick Grant, K.C., and Tribe for the appellants.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.) and R. P. Hills for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

July 14. VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, I have had the advantage of studying the opinions prepared by my colleagues who sat with me in hearing the arguments in these consolidated appeals, and as these opinions are not unanimous I feel that I should briefly express my own conclusion, even though this will not affect the ultimate result. It is not necessary for me to set out the detailed facts in these two cases. They are fully stated in the opinion about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD PORTER.

The main question to be decided is whether the legal and accountancy expenses of prosecuting an appeal (in this instance, a successful appeal) to the Board of Referees against a decision of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under s. 32 of the Finance Act, 1940, incurred by a taxpayer with a view to reducing the assessment made on him as a trader for excess profits tax, can be deducted as being a disbursement "wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade": r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D. The commissioners had fixed the proper figure for an item of disbursement at £3,500. The result of prosecuting the appeal, at a cost of £622 10s. 11d., was to establish that the proper figure was £5,800. ATKINSON, J., held that the expense of £622 10s. 11d. was an admissible deduction on the ground that the cost of the litigation was incurred for the purpose of ascertaining the true figure of profits on which the trader must bear excess profits tax. The Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., MORTON and SOMERVELL, L.JJ.) reversed this decision, holding that the disbursement was not "wholly and exclusively" incurred for the purposes of the trade, but was, at any rate in part, incurred in an endeavour to reduce the amount of tax which the taxpayer had to pay. It is to be observed that the size of the figure to be deducted—£5,800 instead of £3,500—not only affects the correct calculation of excess profits tax for the year, but also the adjustment later on of the total burden of such tax to be borne by the trader. Moreover, since excess profits tax is deductible as an expense when calculating the proper assessment of the trader to income tax, the fixing of a correct figure for the former is essential to the correct calculation of the latter, and it is only when the latter is ascertained that the trader knows how much of his commercial profit he can carry forward, or, if a company, how much of the year's profit is available for dividend or for reserve.

It seems to me that it is essential for the proper carrying on of a trade that the trader should know what portion of his profits in a given year is left to him after the Revenue has taken its share by taxation. If, therefore, he considers that the Revenue seeks to take too large a share and to leave him with too little, the expenditure which the trader incurs in endeavouring to correct this mistake is a disbursement laid out for the purposes of his trade. If he succeeds, he will have more money with which to earn profits next year. It is true that the result of his success is to reduce the tax he has to pay—alternatively, one may say that the result is to show that the profit of the year's trading left to him after paying tax is greater than the Revenue was willing to admit—but, to my mind, the purpose was a trading purpose and nothing else. The trade is not to be regarded as extending over twelve months and no more. Indeed, as I have already pointed out, excess profits tax is liable to be adjusted in the light of subsequent trading results, and assessment for income tax is arrived at on figures of the previous year. With all respect to those who think otherwise, I regard it as fallacious to argue that the trader's expenditure in fighting the Revenue's assessment is not "wholly and exclusively" incurred for the purposes of the trade because the expenditure would not be incurred if there was no tax to pay. If there was no tax to pay, the benefit realised by the trader from carrying on the trade would not be reduced by taxation, and it is the purpose of trade (at any rate, under private enterprise) to make its legitimate profit.

Viewed in this light, I do not see why the expenditure here in question is not wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade—if it had not been incurred, the trade would be less profitable. LORD DAVEY's gloss on the words of the statute in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) ([1906] A.C. 448, 453) is well known, but I think it is better to concentrate on the statutory words themselves. Rightly understood, however, I do not find that LORD DAVEY's words contradict the view I am disposed to take. Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) was a case in which the taxpayer sought to deduct a loss not connected with or arising out of his trade. LORD LOREBURN said (ibid., 452): "I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with, in the sense that they are really incidental to, the trade itself." LORD DAVEY's test was that the purpose of the expenditure must be "the purpose of enabling a person to carry on and earn profits in the trade . . ." (ibid., 453). Here, the expenditure was, in my view, incurred for the purpose of carrying on and earning profits in the trade, for a reduction in the amount of tax does increase the fund in the trader's hands after tax is paid and so promotes the carrying on of the trade and the earning of trading profits. The incidental consequence that the trader is not taxed so heavily in respect of his profits from trade does not, as it seems to me, alter the fact that the litigation was wholly and exclusively undertaken for the purposes of the trade. My own opinion, therefore, would be that the appeal should be allowed, but, in view of the opinion of the majority of your Lordships, I move that it be dismissed with costs.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, these consolidated appeals raise the question whether in computing their profits for income tax purposes in respect of the year ending Mar. 31, 1934, the appellants in the first appeal are entitled to deduct a sum of £622 10s. 11d., being the legal and accountancy expenses incurred in prosecuting an appeal to the Board of Referees against a decision of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, given under s. 32 of the Finance Act, 1940. These appellants are a wholly owned subsidiary of the appellants in this second appeal and the matter for decision in that case is whether the same sum is deductible in computing the profits of the first appellants for the purpose of assessment to excess profits tax for the chargeable accounting period ending on the same date. Under the provisions of para. 2 of pt. I of sched. V to the Finance Act, 1940, assessments to excess profits tax in respect of the profits of the first appellants fall to be made on the second appellants, but with a provision under para. 8 of pt. IV of that schedule for the reimbursement by the first appellants of the second appellants if they pay the tax.

The first appellants were formed to purchase and manage an estate at Nocton in Lincolnshire on which it was hoped to grow a supply of potatoes sufficient for the requirements of the second appellants. That estate, before its purchase, had been managed by a Mr. Young and in order to ensure its successful working it was thought essential to continue to employ him for that purpose. After four years' service Mr. Young was dissatisfied with the terms of his remuneration, and on Mar. 4, 1941, a new agreement was entered into between him and the first appellants for a term of six years certain from Apr. 6, 1940, and thereafter until determined by six months' notice on either side. Under this agreement he received an increased remuneration amounting in 1940 to £3,550, in 1941 to £6,486, in 1942 to £6,198, in 1943 to £5,334, in 1944 to £5,747 and in 1945 to £2,416. On Aug. 15, 1942, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue issued to the secretary of the first appellants a notice stating that under s. 32 of the Finance Act, 1940, they had decided that, in computing, for the purposes of excess profits tax, the profits of that company's trade or business for the accounting period ending Mar. 31, 1941, no deduction should be allowed in respect of Mr. Young's remuneration in excess of £3,500. From this decision both companies appealed to the Board of Referees and that body held that £5,800 was allowable. From and after that period the Inland Revenue authorities have not challenged the allowance of the full amount actually paid and the sum now in dispute represents the costs incurred in prosecuting this appeal.

Under sched. D tax is charged in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom and the relevant statutory provisions as to the deductions to be allowed are to be found in r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D and read as follows :

(3) In computing the amount of profits or gains to be charged, no sum shall be deducted in respect of—(a) any disbursements or expenses, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, profession, employment, or vocation . . .

Excess profits tax is dealt with in s. 14 (1) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, which enacts that for the purposes of that tax the profits arising from a trade or business should be computed on income tax principles, as adapted in accordance with the provisions of pt. I of sched. VII to the Act, and defines income tax principles in relation to a trade or business as the principles on which the profits arising from the trade or business are computed for the purpose of income tax under Case I of sched. D or would be so computed if income tax were chargeable under that Case in respect of the profits so arising. The only other provision of this Act which need be quoted is that contained in s. 18 (1), viz. :

The amount of excess profits tax payable in respect of a trade or business for any chargeable accounting period shall, in computing for the purposes of income tax the profits and gains arising from that trade or business, be allowed to be deducted as an expense incurred in that period . . .

The appellants relied on this last section, coupled with the fact that excess profits tax is imposed on traders only, and urged that the expenses of ascertaining the sum properly deductible as excess profits tax from income tax was an expense wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade. A subsidiary question arises whether the expenditure incurred in order to ascertain the sum properly allowable was undertaken to save tax or for the purposes of retaining the services of Mr. Young, but from the facts already stated it is plain that the main question in the case is concerned with the true meaning of the expression "wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade," and, more particularly with the phrase "purposes of the trade."

The phraseology and its meaning have been dealt with in a considerable number of cases, but before considering their effect I think it desirable to state the conclusion at which I should have arrived from a study of the wording of the section itself. The widest meaning attributed to it, and that for which the appellants contend, is, perhaps, best expressed by saying that it includes every expense to which the trader is put because he carries on the trade. Were he not a trader, it is contended, he would not have to pay excess profits tax, and, therefore, any expense to which he is put in arriving at its correct figure is wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade. Similarly, it is maintained that, as the law obliges him to pay income tax, his expenses of calculating the balance of profits and gains for income tax purposes are incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of his trade, more particularly where the taxpayer is a company which by law is compelled to publish its accounts. In support of this argument it is urged that even the amount available to be put aside as reserve or for distribution in dividends cannot be ascertained until it is known what sum must be provided for excess profits and income tax purposes. The argument, so far, extends only to expenditure incurred for the purpose of finding out what the balance of profits or gains is, but, it is said, if the cost of ascertaining that balance by making up the company's accounts is wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of its trade, so the expense of ensuring by an appeal to the Board of Referees the correctness of the figure reached is equally wholly and exclusively laid out for those purposes. The opposite view maintained by the Crown is, perhaps, best expressed in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) ([1906] A.C. 448, 453), where LORD DAVEY says: "These words . . . appear to me to mean for the purpose of enabling a person to carry on and earn profits in the trade . . ." My Lords, that expression has often been referred to and approved, but it was used in reference to the circumstances of the case then under consideration, and I doubt if it carries the matter to a final conclusion. It still leaves open the question what expense is incurred for the purpose of enabling a trader to earn profits, and the adoption of a phrase helpful in analysing the meaning of words in an Act of Parliament with reference to a particular set of circumstances is not necessarily either useful or conclusive in all cases. It is probably safer to retain the wording of the Act itself, and, by applying it to the facts established, to discover whether the deduction falls within its terms or not.

Regarding the circumstances which your Lordships have to consider from this point of view, I should myself draw a marked distinction between accounts made up on the purely trading basis and those which are prepared for and accepted by the Inland Revenue. If there were no obligation to ascertain and pay either of these taxes, there would be no necessity for making up accounts on income tax principles—it would suffice to make up the ordinary commercial accounts. The computation of accounts for tax purposes is, therefore, not directly associated with the carrying on of the business. It is an obligation imposed on the company for another and extraneous purpose, i.e., for the purpose of ascertaining the tax to be paid out of profits. It is not, at any rate directly, undertaken for trade purposes, but to satisfy the revenue authorities.

It is true that as a matter of convenience, the cost of making up accounts for the Inland Revenue is allowed by the authorities as a deduction from profits as is the cost of making up the strictly business accounts of the trade, but this is a matter, not of principle, but of expediency. The two duties overlap and in practice are almost indivisible. Moreover, it is of advantage to the Revenue to have the figures required for their purposes carefully and accurately made up. Strictly, however, I think the expenses should be divided and any additional cost of making up Revenue accounts should be disallowed in determining the allowable deduction for income tax purposes, but the advantages of allowing both to be deducted as a practical measure outweigh the disadvantages though the result may not be strictly logical. But no such illogicality has to be faced when the sum which is alleged to be deductible is not the cost of accountants' work in ascertaining trading profits, but the expense of an appeal to the Board of Referees for the purpose of discovering the true measure of profits for tax purposes only. Such expenditure is incurred directly for tax purposes and for nothing else, though it may indirectly affect both the amount available for distribution to the proprietors of the business and that proper to be put to reserve.

This is the conclusion which I should have reached if left to determine the question unassisted and unembarrassed by authority. It remains to be determined whether your Lordships' decision in previous cases throw doubt upon this view. My Lords, Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) may be said to form the starting point for deducing the principles at stake in the present appeal, and, though the words of LORD DAVEY quoted above are the expression most frequently referred to, I think that those of LORD LOREBURN, L.C., have equal, if not greater, importance. He says ([1906] A.C. 448, 452):

... it does not follow that if a loss is in any sense connected with the trade, it must always be allowed as a deduction; for it may be only remotely connected with the trade or it may be connected with something else quite as much as or even more than with the trade. I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with in the sense that they are really incidental to the trade itself. They cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader.

Further, LORD DAVEY, after pointing out that Case I relates to trades, manufactures, adventures or concerns in the nature of trade, goes on to say (ibid., 453):

It is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course of, or arises out of, or is connected with, the trade, or is made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made for the purpose of earning the profits.

These expressions of opinion, given some forty years ago, and accepted ever since are, in my view, inconsistent with the appellants' contention, but it is said they are at best dicta and are inconsistent with the principles on which such authorities as Smith v. Lion Brewery (2) and Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce (3) are based and, in particular, with the observations of VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., in British Insulated & Helsby Cables, Ltd. v. Atherton (4) ([1926] A.C. 205, 211, 212), who says that it has often been pointed out that the Act does not contain any express allowance or enumeration of deductions, and, therefore, it is necessary first to inquire whether the deduction is expressly prohibited, and, if not, whether it is of such a nature as to be proper to be charged against incomings in a computation of the balance of profits and gains. He goes on to state that:

... a sum of money expended, not of necessity and with a view to a direct and immediate benefit to the trade, but voluntarily and on grounds of commercial expediency, and in order indirectly to facilitate the carrying on of the business, may yet be expended wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade ...

My Lords, this statement was obiter only as the actual decision was merely that the expenditure was capital expenditure, and, therefore, not deductible, but the language does require careful consideration. In that case the question actually in issue was whether subscriptions by a company towards a pension fund were to be deducted in ascertaining the balance of profits and gains of its trade. It was true that the expenditure did not at once affect its revenue, but it was a method of ensuring the better and more contented service of its employees and in that sense it did directly affect the success of its enterprise. It was exclusively laid out to enable the company to be more successful: no part of it was incurred in order to ascertain the Revenue's proportion of the profits when made. So far as income tax is concerned there is direct authority in the High Court in Allen v. Farquharson (5) that the cost of opposing the Inland Revenue in a contest as to what the profits of a business are is not deductible, but, it is said, that case merely followed Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1), and, in any case, excess profits tax differs in as much as it is imposed on a trader only, and, therefore, the cost of ascertaining it is part of the trade. I do not accept this contention. It is true that a trader only is liable to pay it, but it is not payable by him as a trader. He pays as an individual, like any other individual, the tax on the sum which he has earned as a trader. "To my mind," said LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Lucas (6) ([1883] 8 App. Cas. 891, 905), "it is reasonably plain that the gains of a trade are that which is gained by the trading, for whatever purposes it is used ...", and, therefore, what your Lordships have to determine is whether the expense is incurred in order to earn gain or is the application or distribution of that gain when earned. With all respect to the opposing view, expenditure to ascertain the true amount of tax to be paid, whether it be income tax or excess profits tax and whether successful or unsuccessful, is, in my opinion, incurred, at any rate in part, in order to determine the correct amount of income tax or excess profits tax as the case may be and not in order to earn gain even though that phrase be given a broad significance. The same conclusion might be reached by saying in the words of this statute that such expense is not wholly or exclusively laid out for the purposes of trade. It is, in truth, partially, if not wholly, laid out in order to discover what sum is to be paid to the Crown out of the profits or gains which have already been earned and computed.

In these two consolidated appeals the further point was argued that those appeals were launched and consequent expense incurred in order that Mr. Young's services might be retained. The Special Commissioners, however, have found that one main object, though possibly not the most prominent, was to save tax. They had evidence on which they could so find and in these circumstances, this is not a matter in which your Lordships would interfere. I should dismiss both appeals.

LORD SIMONDS (read by LORD NORMAND) : My Lords, these consolidated appeals, the one by Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd., which I will call "the estates company," and the other by Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd., which I will call "the parent company," since the estates company is its subsidiary, raise questions of income tax and excess profits tax on which ATKINSON, J., and the Court of Appeal have come to different conclusions. In the income tax appeal the question is whether certain expenses amounting to £622 10s. 11d. incurred by the estates company in promoting an appeal to the Board of Referees under a statutory provision in respect of liability to excess profits tax ought to be deducted in computing the profits of the business of the company for purposes of income tax under Case I of sched. D. to the Income Tax Act, 1918. In the excess profits tax appeal the question is whether the same expenses ought to be deducted in computing the profits of that business for the purposes of excess profits tax under pt. III of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, and enactments amending that part. The parent company are appellants in the excess profits tax appeal because they are chargeable to that tax in respect of the profits of the business of the subsidiary company. The appeal to the Board of Referees, the expenses of which have given rise to these questions, was an appeal by the estates company against the disallowance by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under s. 32 of the Finance Act, 1940, of the deduction of certain fees and payments for services to a manager of the business of the estates company in computing the profits of its trade or business for the purposes of excess profits tax. The appeal was allowed by the Board of Referees. It is not disputed that the expenses were reasonably and properly incurred.

It is necessary to refer to only a few statutory provisions. It is provided by s. 14 (1) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, that for the purposes of excess profits tax the profits arising from a trade or business shall be computed on income tax principles subject to certain adaptations which are not relevant to the present case, and it is further provided that for the purposes of the subsection the expression "income tax principles" in relation to a trade or business means the principles on which the profits arising from the trade or business are computed for the purposes of income tax under Case I of sched. D or would be so computed if income tax were chargeable under that Case in respect of the profits so arising. Section 18 (1) of the same Act provides that the amount of the excess profits tax payable in respect of a trade or business for any chargeable accounting period shall, in computing for the purposes of income tax the profits and gains arising from that trade or business, be allowed to be deducted as an expense incurred in that period. As will appear the estates company relied on this section in the income tax appeal. The first section that I cited refers me back to Case I of sched. D, under which income tax is imposed on the profits of any trade, manufacture, adventure or concern in the nature of a trade and the profits are directed to be computed in accordance with the rules applicable to the sources comprised in that case. By r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II it is provided as follows :

3. In computing the amount of the profits or gains to be charged, no sum shall be deducted in respect of—(a) any disbursements or expenses, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, profession, employment, or vocation . . .

These are the words round which the main argument has ranged. It has been contended, as a general proposition, that the expenses of disputing an assessment to income tax and litigating it to the utmost permissible extent are deductible for the purpose of computing the amount of profits of the trade to be charged, but a subsidiary argument also was developed on the facts of the particular case on which I must say a few explanatory words. The manager of the estates company, whose remuneration had been the subject of the disallowance by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and of the appeal to the Board of Referees, was a Mr. Young. His services were regarded as of great importance by the estates company, who feared that they might be lost if in the year under review and in future years any part of his remuneration should be disallowed. It was, therefore, contended that there was, in the exceptional circumstances of the case, a special business motive for incurring the expenses of an appeal, a matter which went to the earning of future, as distinct from the taxation of past, profits.

Both on the general and the subsidiary contentions the Special Commissioners were against the appellants. As I read their decision they accepted that there was the "special business motive" that I have stated, but added these words :

Nevertheless the immediate purpose of the appeal was that of all taxation appeals, namely, to get a reduction of tax, or, in other words, to retain a larger share of the profits. We regard this as a substantive purpose in itself and not as something merely incidental to the earning of future profits.

They, therefore, held that the expenses in question were not money "wholly and exclusively" laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade within r. 3 (a) of Cases I and II. They added that they were not a "loss" within r. 3 (e), but that is not a matter which has now to be considered. ATKINSON, J., took a different view. He thought that an expense properly and reasonably incurred in the final ascertainment of profits could be considered an outlay in order to earn profits, and, apart from this general ground, he thought that in the particular circumstances of the case the expenses might be deducted on the footing that expenditure for the purpose of retaining somebody really vital to the business was expenditure which was "even on a narrow interpretation of the phrase incurred for the purpose of gaining profits." The Court of Appeal unanimously reversed the judgment of ATKINSON, J., on both points, and in spite of the able and cogent arguments of counsel for the appellants I cannot entertain any doubt that the decision of the Court of Appeal is right.

My Lords, I suppose that few expressions have been discussed more often in the courts than that which you have once again to consider, "money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade," but it is their application rather than their meaning that is in doubt. I agree with the submission of learned counsel that it does not help to substitute other words for these which are found in the statute and then to put a gloss on those other words, but it is, I think, important to emphasise that the words "for the purposes of the trade" in their context, i.e., where a computation of "profits" for the ascertainment of taxable income is being made, must mean "for the purpose of enabling a person to carry on and earn profits in the trade." These familiar words I cite from LORD DAVEY's speech in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) ([1906] A.C. 448, 453). They have been cited and applied over and over again, and, if they are kept firmly in mind, they dispose in limine of the argument which prevailed with ATKINSON, J., and has been urged before your Lordships.

A consideration of the numerous cases that were cited shows that it is not always easy to decide whether it can be said of a particular expenditure that it satisfies LORD DAVEY's test, but it is significant that counsel were not able to call to the attention of the House any case in which the appellants' present contention had been put forward. For a long period of years large sums of money have been devoted to the litigation of income tax claims. The most acute minds of the legal and accountancy professions have been at the service of the taxpayers, yet the claim that such money was expended wholly or exclusively for the purposes of the trade appears never to have reached a court of law. The reason is not far to seek. It is that neither the cost of ascertaining taxable profit nor the cost of disputing it with the revenue authorities is money spent to enable the trader to earn profit in his trade. What profit he has earned, he has earned before ever the voice of the taxgatherer is heard. He would have earned no more and no less if there was no such thing as income tax. His profit is no more affected by the exigibility of tax than is a man's temperature altered by the purchase of a thermometer, even though he starts by haggling about the price of it. It is in this sense that the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS used a phrase which was challenged by counsel for the appellants. He said in the Rushden Heel case (7) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699, 702): "... but his obligation to pay it [the tax] is his obligation as a subject and a taxpayer, and, in ascertaining the amount of his liability, he is putting himself in a position to discharge his duty to the Crown." As a trader it is his job to make profits: as a taxpayer it is his duty, like that of any other subjects, to pay taxes. It is as little a part of his trade to find out how much tax he must pay as it is a part to pay it when he has found out. In this respect he is in the same position as any other taxpayer under any other Case of any other schedule. This aspect of the case may be examined more closely. Let me suppose that a trader, having been assessed to income tax in the sum of £X in a certain year, disputes the assessment, claiming that his taxable profit is not £X but a lesser sum, say £Y. Suppose further that he succeeds in his claim. I fail to see how he has by the expenditure that he incurred earned profit in his trade. His taxable profit has been reduced, which was the object of his expenditure. But what has this to do with his trading profit? If his trading profit is to be regarded as the same thing as his taxable profit (which it is not or is not necessarily), then his money has been laid out for the purpose of reducing his trading profit, a purpose difficult to ascribe to a trader and impossible to bring within the scope of the rule. To use an expression of ROWLATT, J., unless the expenditure is at least intended to "bring grist to the mill" of the trader, it cannot, within the meaning of the rule, be money laid out for the purposes of his trade.

Two cases only need specific mention. On both I respectfully concur in everything that has been said by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, in the Rushden Heel case (7) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699, 702). In Allen v. Farquharson Bros. (5) certain observations of FINLAY, J., were relied on by the appellants. I would question whether that learned judge intended to say anything that would support their contention. I do not doubt that as a practical matter the Revenue authorities allow accountancy charges as a deduction in computing profits, both because such charges are necessary for trading as well as tax purposes and it would be vexatious to distinguish between them, and because they must find their own task an easier one if they are dealing with professional men who speak their language and understand their art. I do not think it necessary to decide how far in this direction the Revenue authorities are bound to go, but, if FINLAY, J., meant that an expense incurred solely for the purpose of dispute with the Crown could be deducted, then I must join with the MASTER OF THE ROLLS in expressing my respectful dissent. In Worsley Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8), certain observations of ROMER, L.J., have, as I think, been misunderstood and relied on. I need say no more than that I wholly agree with the explanation of this case given by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and MORTON, L.J., in the Rushden Heel case (7) ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699, 702, 703).

It remains to consider the special reason advanced in this case for allowing the deduction of expenditure incurred in contesting a tax claim. Here, again, I am so fully in agreement with the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS that I need say little. If the expense of contesting a tax claim is not per se a deductible expense, I cannot accept the proposition that some special ulterior motive makes it deductible. I see that money has been laid out for the purpose of contesting a tax claim. I know, for I assume that to have now been decided, that money so laid out is not laid out wholly and exclusively for the purposes of trade. I do not understand by what process of reasoning the contrary result is reached and it is found to be wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of trade because there was an ulterior motive. This is to confuse motive with purpose. Finally, on the income tax appeal it was urged that, since under s. 18 (1) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, the excess profits tax that has been paid may for income tax purposes be deducted as an expense, so also should the cost of ascertaining the amount of the excess profits tax be deductible. I have felt a good deal of sympathy for this argument, but have come to the conclusion that its attractiveness lies rather in its suggestion of what the legislature might, subject to proper limits, have reasonably done than in its correct interpretation of the section. It is clear that, but for the section, the excess profits tax itself could not be deducted. Making express provision for that deduction, it is silent about the cost of ascertainment. I do not feel at liberty as a matter of construction to say that by implication the one is included in the other. I would dismiss both these appeals.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, the questions in these appeals are whether the costs and expenses of a successful excess profits tax appeal are a proper deduction in computing profits and gains either for the purposes of income tax or for the purposes of excess profits tax, but these questions can in effect be reduced to the single question whether the costs and expenses are deductible in computing the profits for the purposes of income tax, and it can also be said that it would have made no difference if the costs had been incurred in prosecuting an income tax appeal. Profits for excess profits tax purposes are computed on income tax principles, and, though excess profits tax is, under s. 18 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, allowed to be deducted in computing profits for the purposes of income tax, this express allowance, which does not extend to the costs and expenses of appeals, is, in my opinion, directed to limiting the total taxation of trade profits and distributing it between the two taxes in accordance with the intention of Parliament. Apart from the provisions of s. 18 of the Finance (No. 2) Act of 1939, excess profits tax would not be deductible any more than income tax itself is deductible in computing profits for income tax purposes. The reason why income tax is not deductible in computing profits for income tax purposes is not merely the logical difficulty pointed out by counsel for the appellants that, if it were, the computation would inevitably drift through the repetition of the deduction into the eddy of an indefinite process. There is the more substantial reason that income tax is an impost made on profits after they have been earned, and that, unless the observations of LORD DAVEY in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodifield (1) ([1906] A.C. 448, 453), which have often been referred to and applied in later cases, are to be disregarded, a payment out of profits after they have been earned is not within the purposes of the trade carried on by the taxpayer. But excess profits tax also is levied on profits after they are earned, and, apart from the statutory provision, is in pari casu with income tax.

The issue is, accordingly, whether the costs and expenses of an income tax or an excess profits tax appeal would properly be entered on the debit side of an account of disbursements and receipts framed for the purpose of arriving at the full amount of the profits and gains of a company's trade under Case I of sched. D, or whether r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D prohibits their deduction as not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the company's trade. Every trading company must keep books of account, and these books are used by the accountants for the purpose of making up the commercial profit and loss account. The accountants may use that account by applying to it the modifications which income tax law requires in order to bring out the profit for income tax purposes, and they may have to negotiate with Inland Revenue officials in order to justify their account of profits, and, perhaps, to obtain a correction of an assessment. It will also be necessary to prepare an account showing the amount of the distributable profits after making provision for the income tax liability. As the first and the last of these accounts are among the purposes of the trade, the taxpayer may say that the whole accounting process, including even the prosecution of an appeal in order to determine the correct income tax assessment, is carried out for the purposes of the trade, and it may be added that the proper conduct of the trade requires that the assessment shall be correct. On the other hand, it may be said that there is in strictness no part of the accounting process which is not directly or indirectly concerned with income tax liability and that, as the payment of income tax is not a purpose of the trade, none of the costs incident to the accounting process is laid out exclusively for the purposes of the trade. That would be an extreme and, I think, an untenable proposition. The Inland Revenue's contention in these appeals did not go nearly so far. It was that the costs and expenses of appeal proceedings before the Commissioners of Inland Revenue or the Board of Referees and from them to the courts are not laid out exclusively for the purposes of the trade, and are, therefore, not permissible deductions. The line drawn by the Inland Revenue would allow deduction of the costs incurred in negotiations with their officers before an appeal is taken, or where no appeal is taken, either as a concession to the taxpayer or as a practical and convenient settlement of a disputable point. The costs of an appeal against an assessment are incurred at least in part, if not exclusively, for the purposes of reducing the payment which the taxpayer will have to make if he acquiesces in the assessment. The purpose of the appeal is not limited to correcting the assessment itself, for if the assessment involved no liability to pay no one would go to the trouble and expense of appealing against it. So, even if the correction of the assessment is within the purposes of the trade, the expenses and costs of the appeal are nevertheless laid out at least partly for a purpose which is not one of the purposes of the trade. They are accessory to the payment of a tax out of profits and are non-deductible because the tax itself is non-deductible.

A As I understand the judgment of the learned MASTER OF THE ROLLS in the Rushden Heel case (7) that is the ground on which he has decided the general question against the appellants. I refer specifically to the following passage, which I would respectfully adopt ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699, 702):

I am prepared to assume (although I do not so decide) that the ascertainment of the proper amount of tax payable ought, as the taxpayers argue, to be regarded as necessary for the proper carrying on of the trade and, therefore, for earning profits in the future, but I cannot agree that the money can be said to have been laid out "wholly and exclusively" for that purpose. It was laid out, as it appears to me, just as much, if not more, for the purpose of ensuring that the company, like any other taxpayer, should pay the proper amount of tax, no more and no less.

C I agree also with the further observation that an accountancy expense incurred solely for the purpose of conducting a tax controversy with the Crown cannot be deducted. In these appeals a subsidiary or alternative argument was presented that the real purpose of the excess profits tax appeal was to retain the services of a valuable employee, but the findings of fact do not go so far as this. They mean only that the directors had that in view as one of the objects of the appeal. Even if it was a principal object it would, nevertheless, not exclude the payment of the correct amount of tax as another important purpose of the appeal. I would refuse the appeals.

E LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, the question in this appeal is whether the costs of litigation undertaken for the purpose of arriving at the true profits of a trade for the purposes of taxation are proper deductions in order to arrive at the balance of profits and gains or as expenses wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade within the meaning of r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918. The contention on behalf of the Crown is that no expenses connected with taxation are deductible because it is said they are not expended for the purposes of the trade and it is sought to limit the words "the purposes of the trade" to the purpose of earning the profits of the trade by the operations of the trade. Reliance is placed on the dictum of LORD DAVEY in Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield (1) ([1906] A.C. 448, 453), which has frequently been cited with approval in other cases, but it is to be observed that LORD DAVEY did not say earning the profits by the operations of the trade and, in my opinion, the words "the purposes of the trade" ought not to be construed in this way. A trader does not expend money in an action brought for or against him for negligence or breach of contract in the course of his trade for the purpose of earning the profits of the trade in this sense, for it is not an operation of his trade to engage in litigation. It is, of course, an incident which he may think reasonably necessary for the purposes of his trade to bring or defend actions, but so it is an incident which he may think reasonably necessary for the purposes of his trade to engage in litigation as to the amount of his taxes. If he succeeds in either case he increases the profits arising from his trade, and it appears to me to be no straining of language to say that a trader who increases his profits by incurring a certain expense incurs that expense for the purpose of earning the profits.

H In my opinion, the real question which has to be decided in every case is whether the expense is one which is incurred in order to earn gain or profit from the trade, or is the application of the gain or profit when earned: see per

LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Lucas (6) ([1883] 8 App. Cas. 891, 906), and, in my opinion, it cannot be truly said that the expense of paying accountants or of litigating the question of what is the balance of profits and gains for the purposes of taxation is the application of these profits. Profits cannot properly be applied or divided until they are ascertained, and every expense which is properly incurred for the ascertainment of profits is, in my opinion, an expense of earning the profits and not an application of them. That is not to say that all expenses which are incurred in point of time before the profits are ascertained can be deducted. The point of time is unimportant. Some expenses which are clearly the application or distribution of profits may be incurred before the ascertainment of profits, e.g., capital investments or payments of interim dividends, but it is the character of the expense which must be considered. The expense in this case was not a capital investment. It was incurred, not to distribute, but to increase, and, in that sense, to earn, the profits. On the other hand, if it is to be held that such expenses are not deductible, what is to be said of the costs of audit which the Companies Acts make necessary or of that part of the cost of bookkeeping which is used in the preparation of such an audit or of accounts for taxation? They are not incurred for the purposes of earning the profits of the trade in the limited sense contended for by the Crown. It is said that the expense of litigating questions of taxation has never been sought to be deducted, and it may be so, but it is also true that the expense of paying accountants and auditors has been deducted, and, in any event, the fact, if it be the fact, throws no legal light on the construction of the words in question. For these reasons I am in favour of allowing the appeals.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Warren, Murton & Co. (for the appellants); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the respondents)

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. KEENE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). RUSHDEN HEEL CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS, (Viscount Simon, Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord Normand and Lord Oaksey), April 23, July 14, 1948.]

Income Tax—Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of excess profits tax—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Rules Applicable to Cases I and II, r. 3 (a).

Excess Profits Tax—Deductions—Cost of litigation—Appeal in respect of incidence of tax—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 14 (1).

In computing their profits for both income tax and excess profits tax the taxpayers sought to charge as a deduction from such profits the costs and expenses of an appeal to the Special Commissioners in respect of the incidence of excess profits tax. Those costs and expenses included solicitors' costs, fees of consulting accountants, fees of accountants acting generally for the taxpayers for professional services specially connected with the appeal, and travelling expenses of witnesses:—

HELD: the costs and expenses were not a disbursement "wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade" within the meaning of r. 3 (a) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, and were, therefore, not allowable as a deduction in the computation of profits for the purposes of either income tax or excess profits tax.

Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. v. Bolland (Inspector of Taxes). Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 367), followed.

Decision of Court of Appeal ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699), affirmed.

[AS TO EXPENSES WHOLLY OR EXCLUSIVELY EXPENDED FOR PURPOSES OF TRADE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, p. 152, para. 312; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 42-44, 56, 57, Nos. 215-226, 286-292.]

Case referred to :

(1) Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. v. Bolland (Inspector of Taxes). Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., p. 367, ante.

CONSOLIDATED APPEALS by the taxpayers from an order of the Court of Appeal (LORD GREENE, M.R., MORTON and SOMERVELL, L.J.J.), dated Apr. 2, 1947, and reported ([1947] 1 All E.R. 699).

A General Commissioners held that costs and expenses incurred by the taxpayers on an appeal to the Special Commissioners in respect of the incidence of excess profits tax should not be allowed in the computation of the taxpayers' profits for the purpose of assessment either to income tax or to excess profits tax. ATKINSON, J., allowed appeals by the taxpayers, but his decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal. The taxpayers appealed to the House of Lords who now affirm the decision of the Court of Appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of ATKINSON, J., ([1946] 2 All E.R. 141).

B Millard Tucker, K.C., and John Clements for the taxpayers.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.) and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

C July 14. VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, the dissenting view which I expressed in my opinion in the Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. case (1) would have led me to think that these appeals should be allowed, but the House has laid down in that case that the contrary view is the law of the land. I, of course, accept this as governing the present appeals, and, accordingly, I move that these appeals be dismissed with costs.

D LORD PORTER: My Lords, these appeals were argued at the same time as, and in conjunction with, the appeals in Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. and Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. (1). They are concerned with similar cases, nor are there any matters of fact or law which require any qualification in the opinions expressed in those cases. In these circumstances these appeals must be subject to the same treatment and must be dismissed with costs.

E LORD SIMONDS (read by LORD NORMAND): My Lords, these consolidated appeals raise the same general questions in regard to the deduction of certain expenses for the purpose of computing excess profits tax and income tax as have just been discussed in the appeals of Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. and Smith's Potato Crisps (1929), Ltd. (1). There are no facts that require special consideration. The same result must follow and the appeals must be dismissed.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, I concur in the opinions which have been delivered.

F LORD OAKSEY: My Lords, in view of the order which your Lordships' House has made in the appeal of Smith's Potato Estates, Ltd. v. Bolland (1), I agree with the motion which has been proposed.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Scott & Son (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

G GOLD COAST SELECTION TRUST, LTD. v. HUMPHREY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES). SAME v. SAME.

H [HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simon, Lord Thankerton, Lord Uthwatt, Lord du Parcq, Lord Oaksey), February 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, July 14, 1948.]

Income Tax—Profits or gains—Shares received as consideration for transfer of property—Company dealing in gold mining concessions—Transfer of concessions to associate company for fully paid-up shares—Shares not disposable during year of transaction—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case I.

A trust company acquired concessions for land considered likely to bear gold, and on July 28, 1934, after a concession had proved auriferous, agreed to sell it to the M. company in consideration of "the sum of £800,000, which shall be paid and satisfied by the allotment and issue to the vendor . . . of 3,200,000 shares of 5s. each credited as fully paid up." On Nov. 30, 1934, the shares were duly allotted. The books of the trust company showed the cost to themselves of the concessions to have been £107,875. The question arose what figure, if any, ought to be included in the profits and gains of the trust for the year ending Apr. 5, 1935, in respect of the shares acquired under the said agreement, so as to justify a corresponding assessment to income tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1936. General Commissioners of Income Tax held that at the date of the allotment the value of the shares received by the trust was par, although it was accepted that the shares as a whole were not immediately realisable.

HELD: (LORD OAKSEY dissentiente) although inability to realise in a commercial sense an asset such as a block of shares in the year of receipt might be a reason for reducing its valuation, it was not correct to say that for that reason it could not be valued in money for income tax purposes in that year.

Harrison v. Cronk & Sons, Ltd. ([1936] 3 All E.R. 747) and Absalom v. Talbot ([1944] 1 All E.R. 642), applied.

As it appeared likely, however, that the commissioners might have been under the impression that the shares must be valued at par because the price agreed to be paid for the concession was a sum to be satisfied by the allotment of shares at par to that amount, all the members of the House agreed that the case should be sent back to the commissioners for their reconsideration of the question of valuation.

Per VISCOUNT SIMON, LORD THANKERTON, LORD UTHWATT and LORD DU PARCQ: when a trader in the course of his trade receives a new and valuable asset, not being money, as the result of sale or exchange, that asset, for the purpose of computing the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to him from his trade, should be valued as at the end of the accounting period in which it was received, even though it is neither realised nor realisable till later. The fact that it cannot be realised at once may reduce its present value, but that is no reason for treating it, for the purposes of income tax, as though it has no value until it could be realised. If the asset takes the form of fully paid shares, the valuation will take into account not only the terms of the agreement but a number of other factors, such as prospective yield, marketability, the general outlook for the type of business of the company which has allotted the shares, the result of a contemporary prospectus offering similar shares for subscription, the capital position of the company, and so forth. There may also be an element of value in the fact that the holding of the shares gives control of the company. If the asset is difficult to value, but is none the less of a money value, the best valuation possible must be made.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1946] 2 All E.R. 742), affirmed in part.

[AS TO PERIOD OF ACCOUNT TO WHICH TRADE RECEIPTS ARE REFERABLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 118-120, paras. 223-225.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harrison v. Cronk & Sons, Ltd., [1936] 3 All E.R. 747; [1937] A.C. 185; 106 L.J.K.B. 70; 156 L.T. 20; sub nom., Cronk & Sons, Ltd. v. Harrison, 20 Tax Cas. 612; Digest Supp.
- (2) Californian Copper Syndicate, Ltd. v. Harris (Surveyor of Taxes), (1905), 5 Tax Cas. 159; 28 Digest 23 b.
- (3) Scottish & Canadian General Investment Co. v. Easson, 1922 S.C. 242; 8 Tax Cas. 265; 28 Digest 20 h.
- (4) Royal Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Stephen, (1928) 14 Tax Cas. 22; Digest Supp.
- (5) Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Osler, [1933] A.C. 139; 102 L.J.K.B. 110; 148 L.T. 41; 17 Tax Cas. 381; Digest Supp.
- (6) Emery (John) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1937] A.C. 91; 156 L.T. 87; 20 Tax Cas. 213; 156 L.T. 87; Digest Supp.
- (7) Absalom v. Talbot, [1944] 1 All E.R. 642; [1944] A.C. 204; 113 L.J.Ch. 369; 171 L.T. 53; 26 Tax Cas. 166, 188; Digest Supp.
- (8) Ryall v. Hoare, Ryall v. Honeywill, [1923] 2 K.B. 447; 92 L.J.K.B. 1010; 129 L.T. 505; 8 Tax Cas. 521; 28 Digest 81, 453.
- (9) Martin v. Lowry, Martin v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1927] A.C. 312; 96 L.J.K.B. 379; 136 L.T. 580; 11 Tax Cas. 297.

APPEALS by the Gold Coast Selection Trust, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the trust") from a decision of the Court of Appeal ([1946] 2 All E.R. 742) dismissing appeals from a judgment of WROTTESELEY, J.

A The business of the trust was that of financiers and exploiters of and dealers in gold mining concessions. By three separate transactions the trust sold mining concessions and property to three companies—Marlu, Main Reef and Bremang—for blocks of fully paid up shares. General Commissioners of Income Tax found that on the allotment of the shares there was a realisation of assets sold to the three companies, and that, for the purpose of the assessment of the trust to income tax, the value, at the date of allotment, of the shares received by the trust must be taken to be par, the price agreed to be paid by the purchasing companies. WROTTESELEY, J., upheld the commissioners' decision, and his decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. The House of Lords, while accepting the principle that the shares ought to be valued at some figure B in the year of allotment, was of the opinion that that figure was not necessarily par. The facts appear in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON.

Sir Cyril Radcliffe, K.C., and Heyworth Talbot for the trust.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.), J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

C July 14. VISCOUNT SIMON: My Lords, these are two appeals from orders of the Court of Appeal dismissing appeals by the appellant from orders of the King's Bench Division of the High Court whereby (1) an appeal by the appellant on a Case Stated by the Commissioners for the General Purposes of the Income Tax for the City of London was dismissed and the determination of the said commissioners affirmed, and (2) an appeal by the respondent on the said Case Stated was allowed. The main question involved is one of substantial importance and of considerable difficulty.

D The appellant, the Gold Coast Selection Trust, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the trust"), has at all material times carried on the trade of a dealer in stocks and shares and an exploiter of and dealer in gold-mining concessions in the Gold Coast Colony. Its practice has been to acquire concessions for land considered to have gold bearing possibilities. Concessions so acquired were exploited by E the trust to the extent necessary for the ascertaining of their potentialities. If a concession was proved to be gold bearing, and if it appeared to the trust that further development might result in the profitable production of gold, the trust transferred such concession to a company, the business of which was to work the concessions and market the gold produced. The transferee company was in every case a public company, its directors were drawn from the directorate of the appellant company, and the consideration for the transfer of the concession was in each case satisfied by an issue of fully paid-up shares in the transferee F company. The shares so issued (hereinafter called "vendor shares") were of a par value equal to the price named in the agreement for the sale of the concessions as the sale price. Permission to deal in the shares of the transferee companies was, in due course, accorded by the London Stock Exchange in each case, and dealings in these shares in limited quantities in fact took place. The G vendor shares issued to the trust, together with other holdings acquired by it, were large enough to give the trust control over the company which was acquiring the concession from it. So large a block of shares could not be readily disposed of in the stock market without killing the market, and there was evidence before the commissioners that the proper way to deal with them, if it was desired to turn the block of shares into cash, would be to approach trust companies or financial houses and endeavour to place them. The evidence is of somewhat H ambiguous effect, for, while it indicates that a successful operation of this sort might be accomplished in reference to a substantial fraction of the total holding, it was not clearly stated that the whole block could be realised in this way, at any rate within a short time.

Three sales of a concession by the trust are involved. One, by an agreement made on July 28, 1934, with the Marlu Gold Mining Areas, Ltd. (hereinafter called "Marlu"); the second by an agreement made on July 9, 1935, with the Gold Coast Main Reef, Ltd.; and the third by agreement made on Dec. 2, 1936, with the Bremang Gold Dredging Co., Ltd. The main question of law is the same in all three cases, and it will be convenient to take the Marlu case as an example. Marlu had been incorporated on July 26, 1934, with an authorised capital of £2,000,000 divided into eight million shares at 5s. each. The consideration moving from Marlu to the trust for the sale and transfer of the concession was stated in the agreement of July 28, 1934, to be :

... the sum of £800,000, which shall be paid and satisfied by the allotment and issue to the vendor or its nominees of 3,200,000 shares of 5s. each credited as fully paid up.

The purchase was completed and the fully paid shares allotted on Nov. 30, 1934. On July 30, 1934, two days after the agreement, Marlu issued a prospectus offering for subscription at par 2,000,000 shares of 5s. each. The trust underwrote 1,600,000 of these shares at par in consideration of an option to subscribe for 1,200,000 shares of 5s. each at the price of 6s. up to July 31, 1936. The whole of the shares offered were subscribed ; the trust itself took up and paid for 10,579. The trust purchased some additional shares in the market, and later bought 545,939 shares at 6s. under its option. The question is whether fully paid shares acquired under the agreement of July 28 by the trust, should, for income tax purposes, be valued at any and what figure in money and thus enter into the computation of the profits and gains of the trust for the year ending Apr. 5, 1935, so as to justify a corresponding assessment to income tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1936. A similar question arises, with a difference in figures and amounts, in the other two cases.

The books of the trust entered the cost to the trust of the concessions sold to Marlu, viz., £107,875, as the purchase price for the 3,200,000 fully paid shares allotted under the sale agreement. It seems obvious that when the concession has been proved to be auriferous, its value cannot be limited to this. Then, year by year, as shares were sold, the profit on such sales was brought to account. The commissioners found :

1. That when the Marlu, Main Reef and Bremang shares were allotted to the trust there was a realisation of the assets sold to those companies. 2. That at the date of the allotment the value of the shares received by the trust was par, the price agreed to be paid by the purchasing companies.

The appellant does not dispute the first finding, but it challenges the second which, in the case of the Marlu shares, has the result that the 3,200,000 shares credited as fully paid up which were received by the trust as the consideration for parting with the relevant concession to Marlu, must be valued for income tax purposes in the year 1934-5 at the figure of £800,000. The appellant's argument comes to this, that no asset such as a block of shares fully paid-up can, for income tax purposes, be represented by a figure of cash in the year of account in which the transaction takes place, unless the asset is readily convertible into money in that year. If it was not, no money value could be attributed to it, because realisation was not presently possible. The appellant further contended that, on examining the material set out in the Case Stated, the commissioners' conclusion as to value was vitiated since they had proceeded on the assumption that the block of shares must be valued at £800,000 because they were allotted as the agreed method of satisfying a consideration of £800,000. The respondent concedes that, if the commissioners had arrived at their figure on the view that the block of shares must necessarily be valued at the figure named, this was an error, and that the fact that the contract stipulated for an allotment of fully paid shares to an amount which at par was equivalent to the money figure might raise a presumption that this was the correct value, but was not conclusive. If, for example, at the time of the purchase of the concession the shares of the company stood at a high premium, an allotment of 5s. shares as fully paid as the method of discharging the consideration might confer on the company an asset worth more than the par equivalent of the shares. Equally, if contemporary dealings indicated a fall, the money value of the new asset might be less than par, but the respondent argues that it is all a question of valuation, which is a matter for the commissioners to determine, provided they do not proceed on a wrong view of the law, and that the commissioners in this case arrived at the figure, not because they were bound to do so in view of the terms of the agreement, but because, after having considered all the circumstances in the case, they reached the conclusion that this was the right figure.

We are left, therefore, with two issues, and I must express my opinion on both. One is what is the proper way of treating an asset not immediately realisable. The other is whether the commissioners have proceeded on the correct principle.

It seems to me that it is not correct to say that an asset, such as this block of shares, cannot be valued in money for income tax purposes in the year of its receipt because it cannot, in a commercial sense, be immediately realised. That is no reason for saying that it is incapable of being valued, though, if its realisation cannot take place promptly, that may be a reason why the money figure set against it at the earlier date should be reduced in order to allow for an appropriate interval. Supposing, for example, the contract conferring the asset on the taxpayer included a stipulation that the asset should not be realised by the transferee for five years, and that, if an attempt was made to realise it before that time, the property in it should revert to the transferor. This might seriously reduce the value of the asset when received, but it is no reason for saying that, when received, it must be regarded as having no value at all. The commissioners, as it seems to me, in fixing what money equivalent should be taken as representing the asset must fix an appropriate money value as at the end of the period to which the appellant's accounts are made up by taking all the circumstances into consideration. It is a relevant circumstance that £800,000 was the figure fixed on as the appropriate consideration to be satisfied by fully paid shares, but it is also a relevant consideration that the asset could not be realised at once. I adopt the conclusion expressed in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J., where he says ([1946] 2 All E.R. 747) :

... when there has been, as is now admitted here, a realisation of a trading asset and the receipt of another asset, and when that latter asset is marketable in its nature and not some merely personal advantage which by its nature cannot be turned into money, the profits and gains must be arrived at for the year in which the transaction took place by putting a fair value on the asset received. The fact that it could not, as we will assume here, owing to its size, be disposed of in the market in that year does not mean that no profit or gain for income tax purposes has been made out of the transaction.

COHEN, L.J., who delivered a separate judgment, reached the same conclusion, saying, with reference to John Cronk & Sons, Ltd. v. Harrison (1) (ibid., 749) :

... that case is, I think, clear authority for the view that, if an asset is capable of valuation, it should be valued and brought into the account, even though that value may not be presently realisable in the accounting year . . . It is admitted that the profit and loss account must include assets which have to be valued, and I can see no reason why, if valuation is possible, an artificial value, whether high or low, should be placed on an asset merely because that value cannot be wholly realised in the accounting year. The fact that it cannot be realised in the accounting year is no doubt an element which the commissioners should take into account in estimating the value, but it is not a reason for attributing to the asset a value far below that which other facts, e.g., the terms of the sale agreement, the market quotation and the prices at which the appellant company itself acquired shares in the market, and its own statements to its shareholders about their value, showed that the asset should rightly bear.

By "artificial value" in this passage the Lord Justice meant the figure of £107,875 which was the amount the trust had spent in acquiring the site and proving the concession before they could ascertain that it was auriferous.

Counsel for the appellant called the attention of the House to a number of reported cases in which the valuing of an asset was simplified because the asset was readily realisable, but this circumstance, though dwelt on when deciding that the unrealised asset must none the less be given a money value, is nowhere declared to be the ground of the decision. Thus, in Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris (2), where the syndicate was engaged in acquiring and re-selling mining property, and it was held that the difference between the purchase price of such property and the value of the shares for which the property was exchanged was a profit assessible to income tax, LORD TRAYNER dealt with the contention that there was no realised profit, since the shares had not been sold. He said (5 Tax Cas. 167) :

A profit is realised when the seller gets the price he has bargained for. No doubt here the price took the form of fully paid-up shares in another company, but, if there can be no realised profit, except when that is paid in cash, the shares were realisable and could have been turned into cash, if the appellants had been pleased to do so.

I read this last sentence as rejecting the syndicate's contention that it could not be liable because the shares had not been realised. It should not be understood to mean that the crucial test is prompt realisability.

In Scottish & Canadian General Investment Co. v. Easson (3) LORD PRESIDENT CLYDE upheld the conclusion of the commissioners that the profits of the company in the year in which it had received certain debentures should be assessed at a sum equal to 75 per cent. of the face value of those debentures, as representing their actual value. The LORD PRESIDENT said (1922 S.C. 246) :

The question becomes one of ascertaining the amount of the profits and gains of the company. If, instead of receiving cash . . . the company got a saleable security, that saleable security is just part and parcel of the company's profits and gains.

The LORD PRESIDENT pointed out that the debentures themselves were saleable and had a value on the market, but he nowhere suggests that the true test is whether they could be sold immediately. Neither in Royal Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Stephen (4) nor in Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Osler (5) do I find the proposition laid down which is essential to the appellant's main argument, that an asset in kind cannot be valued for the purpose of entering into the computation of profits and gains unless it is immediately realisable. In John Emery & Sons v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (6), where a firm of builders erected dwelling-houses and thereafter sold them for a cash payment, subject to the ground annuals which they had created and retained in their possession, it was held in the Court of Session, and the decision was approved in the House of Lords, that the realisable value of the ground annuals should be accounted for in ascertaining the firm's trading profits. The judgments point out that ground annuals could be readily realised, but the test of immediate realisability is nowhere declared to be the essential point of the case. There is, indeed, authority to the contrary effect contained in, or, at any rate, implied by, the decisions of this House in Cronk's case (1) and in Absalom v. Tulbot (7).

In my view, the principle to be applied is the following. In cases such as this, when a trader in the course of his trade receives a new and valuable asset, not being money, as the result of sale or exchange, that asset, for the purpose of computing the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to him from his trade, should be valued as at the end of the accounting period in which it was received, even though it is neither realised or realisable till later. The fact that it cannot be realised at once may reduce its present value, but that is no reason for treating it, for the purposes of income tax, as though it had no value until it could be realised. If the asset takes the form of fully paid shares, the valuation will take into account not only the terms of the agreement, but a number of other factors, such as prospective yield, marketability, the general outlook for the type of business of the company which has allotted the shares, the result of a contemporary prospectus offering similar shares for subscription, the capital position of the company, and so forth. There may also be an element of value in the fact that the holding of the shares gives control of the company. If the asset is difficult to value, but is none the less of a money value, the best valuation possible must be made. Valuation is an art, not an exact science. Mathematical certainty is not demanded, nor, indeed, is it possible. It is for the commissioners to express in the money value attributed by them to the asset their estimate, and this is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the evidence before them.

I, therefore, reject the main contention of the appellant, and agree with the Court of Appeal. This would lead to a dismissal of the first appeal without further inquiry were it not that I entertain considerable doubt whether the commissioners' second finding is not, as its language might imply, a conclusion reached on the view that the shares must be valued at par because the price agreed to be paid for the concession was a sum of £800,000 to be satisfied by an allotment and issue to the appellant of shares which at par would be equivalent to that amount. One of the contentions of the Inland Revenue set out in the Case is : "that the price of the concessions as agreed between the parties was the par value of the shares," and, if the commissioners arrived at the figure of £800,000 on the view put forward that this must be the one and only proper figure of valuation, they were mistaken. The best course seems to be to refer the case back to the commissioners and request them to fix a proper figure of valuation in the light of the material before them as set out in the Case, and of any facts disclosed by further evidence before them. It may be that they will still arrive at the same figure, but, if so, this will be because the relevant factors, such as I have indicated above, lead them to this conclusion of fact. The correct conclusion, however, is not a figure inevitably forced on the commissioners by the terms of the agreement taken alone, but is a question of fact to be answered after taking into account the relevant surrounding circumstances at the time of the transaction. This view of the matter also determines the question of the second appeal. I, therefore, move that the appeals be allowed, but only to the extent that the matter be referred back to the commissioners to reconsider and fix the proper figure in the light of these directions. There will be no costs awarded in respect of the appeals to this House. The late LORD THANKERTON, who took part in the hearing of these appeals, expressed to me before his death his agreement with this conclusion.

LORD UTHWATT : My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in print and considering the opinion which has just been delivered by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack. I feel myself in complete agreement with his conclusions and with his reasoning, and I am content to express my adherence to his opinion.

My Lords, my noble and learned friend LORD DU PARCQ, who is unable to be present, desires me to say that he also agrees with the opinion which has just been expressed by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack.

LORD OAKSEY : My Lords, in my opinion, the appeal should be allowed and the case remitted to the commissioners on the ground that they appear to have thought that they were bound as matter of law to assume that the shares in question were worth their par value.

It remains to consider what is the true test for the commissioners' decision. It has been argued on behalf of the Crown that the fact, if it be the fact, that all the shares retained by the appellant could not be sold in the years in question is irrelevant, and that the commissioners may put a valuation on the shares regardless of whether they could be realised at that value in the years of computation. In my opinion, this argument is unsound. In the first place, it is, I think, important to consider what is meant by an income tax on annual profits and gains. In my view, it is a tax in money on profits in money which arise to the taxpayer in the year of computation. Income must not be confused with the source of the income. A taxpayer's obligation cannot be satisfied except by money. He has no option to offer other forms of property. The reason why he is not permitted to contend that he has made no profit in a transaction, if he has made a profit but taken it, not in money, but in other forms of property, is that the property is the equivalent of money because it can be sold for money in the year. The word annual must at least connote "in the year" if it is to have any meaning at all, and that it has this meaning was laid down in Ryall v. Hoare (8) and approved in Martin v. Lowry (9). It follows, in my opinion, that what the commissioners had to decide in the present case, is what profit in money, if any, was, or could be, derived by the appellant company in the years in question from the transactions by which they transferred the concessions to the Marlu, Gold Coast Main Reef, and Bremang Companies for shares in the companies.

Now, it is, of course, true that the concessions had an actual or intrinsic value at the time of the transactions, but value lay in the future and was unknown. It is also true that the appellant company was prepared to part with the concessions on the terms of the prospectuses, that is to say, in the hope of getting capital from the public sufficient to develop the concessions while retaining the shares in question, but the par value of the shares retained was not an estimate of the actual value of the concessions, either at that time or in the future, for both the appellant company and the public who subscribed for shares must have estimated the value of their shares both at the time and in the future at a higher figure. But the fact that the appellant company parted with the concessions does not mean that they realised or could realise at the time the money value of the concessions, for they did not receive cash but still retained in the shares their interest in the concessions. The appellant company will, of course, ultimately realise the value of the concessions to the company by selling their shares or holding them and receiving dividends on them, but all that the commissioners have to do in this case is to assess the profit on the transactions in the years in question, and for that purpose to bring into the appellant company's accounts the money value of the shares in the years of computation. The only true test of the money value of an article at a certain time is what can be got for it in money at that time. If it cannot be sold at that time or exchanged for something which can be sold at that time, no one can make a profit out of it which can be stated in terms of money at that time. If a picture dealer exchanges a picture for another picture, and it is proved that the picture taken in exchange cannot be sold in the year, not for want of time, but because, it having been put up at auction there is no bid, can the revenue claim that a profit has been made on that transaction? I am assuming, of course, in this illustration that it is proved that the picture cannot be sold in the year. In the present case there was evidence that some of the shares could have been sold, and the figure which they might have realised should, of course, be brought into the appellants' accounts. Moreover, it is not a question whether they could be sold in any particular market such as the London Stock Exchange, but, if the commissioners are satisfied that the shares could not have been sold for money in Paris, New York or London or anywhere in the world in the years in question, then to bring in a cash figure for those shares is, in my opinion, attributing to the years in question profits which might or might not be realised in future years. It is, in my opinion, unsound accounting and unsound law to lay down that the commissioners should value the shares by estimating what they may bring in by way of dividends and sales in future years, and then discounting that figure so as to arrive at their present value. There are no facts on which the commissioners can base such an estimate. It is simply guess work, and as a matter of fact has probably been entirely falsified by the course of events which has included the recent war. If one assumes that the commissioners are satisfied as a matter of fact that the shares could not have been sold in the years in question, such a valuation must either be a contradiction of the fact or an estimate of future value. The commissioners should, in my opinion, come to a conclusion on the evidence how many of the shares in question could have been sold in the years of computation, and at what price, and should bring into the appellant company's account that figure as against the cost of the concessions to the appellant company. To adopt this principle appears to me to be in accord with every case which has been cited to your Lordships' House on this appeal and with the fundamental principles of the Income Tax Acts.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Birkbeck, Julius, Edwards & Coburn (for the appellant trust);
Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by C. ST. J. NICHOLSON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CARROLL v. ANDREW BARCLAY &

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Jowitt, L.C., Lord Porter, Normand and Lord Morton of Henryton), May

Factory—Fencing—Transmission machinery—Workman of broken machinery—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s.

Distinguished. GATEHOUSE v. JON SUMMERS & SONS, LTD. [1953] All E.R. 117.

Dicta of LORD PORTER, LORD DU PARCQ and LORD NORMAND, at pp. 390, 391, 393, considered. DICKSON v. FLACK. [1953] 1 All E.R. 236.

On a true construction of s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, the words: "Every part of the transmission machinery shall be securely fenced" mean that every part of the transmission machinery shall be so fenced as to prevent any person employed or working on the premises from moving into contact with it, and not that every part of the transmission machinery shall be so fenced as to protect any person employed or working on the premises from injury due to flying parts of broken machinery.

In the course of his duties a machinist, employed by a firm of engineers, operated a lathe in his employers' boiler shop. Immediately in front of the lathe at which he was standing and about 6½ ft. away, the motor for driving the main shaft of the shop was placed and over this motor at a height of 25 ft. the main driving shaft was situated. This shaft was operated from the motor by means of a balata belt, 9 ins. wide and ¼ in. thick, which ascended on the side remote from the position in which the workman was working, passed over a pulley attached to the driving shaft, and was pulled down on the side nearest to him by the motor. The belt did not ascend vertically, but sloped away at an angle from the spot in which the lathe was fixed. The motor, belt, shaft and pulley formed part of the transmission machinery within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937. There was round the motor a fence 5ft. high, but between the top of that fence and the overhead driving shaft the belt was unprotected. While the workman was working at his lathe the belt broke, lashed out over the fence, and struck him, causing serious injury :—

HELD : the employers had not been guilty of a breach of s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, and were not liable to the workman under that subsection.

Per LORD DU PARCQ and LORD NORMAND : While the words "securely fenced" must be given the same meaning in ss. 12, 13 and 14, they may well mean "so fenced as to give security from such dangers as may be reasonably expected." If machines exist, or are hereafter invented and used, which are dangerous because fragments or loose parts of the machinery are sometimes ejected from them, s. 14 may require such machines to be fenced to protect workmen against that danger.

Dictum of LORD SIMONDS in Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92, 98), doubted by LORD DU PARCQ.

[AS TO FENCING OF MACHINERY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 594, 595, paras. 1130, 1131; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 24, pp. 908-910, Nos. 65-76.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Hindle v. Birtwistle, [1897] 1 Q.B. 192; 76 L.T. 159; 61 J.P. 70; sub nom. Birtwistle v. Hindle, 66 L.J.Q.B. 173; 24 Digest 909, 71.
- (3) Atkinson v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1926] 1 K.B. 313; 95 L.J.K.B. 266; 134 L.T. 217; 90 J.P. 17; Digest Supp.
- (4) Kindler v. Camberwell Borough Council, [1944] 2 All E.R. 315; 109 J.P. 81; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Harrison v. Metropolitan Plywood Co., [1946] 1 All E.R. 243; [1946] K.B. 255; 115 L.J.K.B. 187; 174 L.T. 190; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the workman from an order of the Second Division of the Court of Session, dated Mar. 14, 1947, and reported 1947 S.C. 411.

In an action by the appellant workman for damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by him owing to the failure of the respondent employers to fence a balata belt in a factory occupied by them adequately and securely in breach of their common law duty to take reasonable care and of s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, the Sheriff Substitute found for the workman on both grounds and awarded him £500 damages. The Second Division of the Court of Session recalled the interlocutor of the Sheriff Substitute, substantially altered his findings of fact and assoilzied the employers. On appeal to the House of Lords, the claim at common law was abandoned, and the appeal, which, therefore, based only on the statute, was dismissed. The facts appear in the opinion of LORD PORTER.

Paull, K.C., and Marven Everett for the workman.

Walker, K.C., and Sloan (both of the Scottish Bar) for the employers.

The House took time for consideration.

July 14. LORD JOWITT, L.C. : My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinions which my noble friends are about to deliver. They all agree in the result that the appeal must be dismissed. I confess that I have found this a difficult case, but I am not prepared to dissent from their conclusions. At the same time I should desire to leave open for further consideration the question which LORD DU PARCQ raises in his opinion.

LORD PORTER : My Lords, the workman asserts that he is entitled to recover damages from the employers for injuries sustained by him in working on their premises. The employers carry on business as engineers at the Caledonia Works, in Langland Street, Kilmarnock, and are occupiers of those works within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937. The workman was a machinist and in the course of his duties operated a lathe in the employers' boiler shop. Immediately in front of the lathe at which the workman was standing, and about 6½ft. away, the motor for driving the main shaft of the shop was placed, and over this motor, at a height of about 25ft., the main driving shaft was situated. This shaft was operated from the motor by means of a balata belt, about 9ins. wide and ¼in. thick, which ascended on the side remote from the position in which the workman was working, passed over a pulley attached to the driving shaft, and was pulled down on the side nearest to him—the tension side—by the motor. The belt did not ascend vertically, but sloped away at an angle from the spot in which the lathe was fixed. The motor, belt, shaft and pulley form part of the transmission machinery of the works within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937. The workman was protected from the motor by a fence some 5ft. high, but over the 20ft. between that fence and the overhead driving shaft the belt was unprotected and his position at the lathe placed him in a direct line with the revolving belt. On Mar. 16, 1945, while the workman was working at his lathe the belt broke, lashed out over the fence and struck him, causing him serious injury. The finding of the Court of Session as to the circumstances of the accident are binding on your Lordships and should be set out in full (1947 S.C. 411, 413):

The breaking of a balata belt is a very infrequent occurrence, and such an occurrence as a belt coming out from its guard and causing injury to a person working or standing outside the guard enclosing the motor and belt has never been known to have happened within the experience of the witnesses examined on both sides. It was proved that for nearly forty years past, and now, the practice of all comparable factories was and is the same. It is not the practice in comparable factories to fence a motor and vertical belt above a distance of approximately 5 or 6 ft., with a maximum of 8 ft. The practice is to fence to such a height as aforesaid, and that is found sufficient to prevent any operator or other person legitimately on the premises coming into contact with any part of the belt. The solitary example afforded in the whole proof of fencing the upper portion of such vertical belting was the single case of a precaution taken after the accident by the present defenders. The defenders some time after the accident moved the motor itself to a different position in the boiler shop, and, by way of rendering recurrences of such accident less likely they erected a fence on the tension side of the belt to a height of some 15ft. above the floor. In the case of a firm which had a large number of belts operating of the same kind as the belt in this case it might be impracticable from both the structural and commercial points of view to have them guarded from floor to roof and on all sides, both on account of the high cost and of the difficulty of changing and repairing belts, but to fence the tension side of the main driving belts only might be commercially possible, but, with the single exception above referred to, this has not been known anywhere to be done.

The workman claimed damages for his injuries on two grounds, first, for negligence at common law, and, secondly, for breach of the statutory requirement contained in s. 13 of the Factories Act, 1937. Having regard to the findings of the Court of Session, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the workman to maintain that the employers were guilty of negligence at common law and before your Lordships' House that claim was, as I think, properly and necessarily abandoned, but, even though they were doomed to failure at common law, the workman's representatives maintained that he was entitled to recover owing to the breach by the employers of the obligations imposed by s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. That sub-section runs as follows:

Every part of the transmission machinery shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced.

With this language is contrasted that of s. 14 (1) which makes a similar provision as to dangerous parts of any machinery, and it is contended that, whereas machinery has to be proved dangerous before the duty imposed by s. 14 becomes operative, s. 13 imposes an absolute obligation on the occupier of the premises securely to fence transmission machinery, not only against any risk resulting from its working, but against any dangers, foreseen or unforeseen, foreseeable or unforeseeable, and whether in the course of working or in the accidental breaking of the machinery involved. Its object is to protect the workman, it is maintained, not only from approaching and being injured by the transmission machinery in action, but also against the breaking of any part of that machinery and its flying out and injuring those who are employed in the works. The duty is not confined to shutting off the workman from danger, but includes shutting in the transmission so that it cannot fly out and strike the workman if it breaks.

My Lords, so to construe the section is to impose a heavy obligation on the employer, but, if the section so enacts, its terms must be followed. The employers, on the other hand, maintain that the sub-section aims at and in words provides only for the protection of the workman against coming into contact with the transmission machinery, not against its escape from the position in which it is placed and its impact on him. Nowhere, it is said, is there any indication that the Act aims at the dangers threatened from broken machinery; it is danger in working which has to be avoided. Moving machinery transmitting power is always dangerous unless the operators are shut off from approaching its working parts, but there is nothing in the Act to show that the occupier is an insurer of the sound construction of the working parts of his machines. At common law, no doubt, he is liable for any negligence in the provision of sound machinery and must give adequate supervision to its upkeep, but no such duty is laid on him by the Factories Act, 1937. That Act is enacted to ensure the workman against the dangers resulting from its working and from nothing else.

My Lords, the correct solution of this problem must depend on the true construction of the terms of the Act. The provisions which deal with fencing are to be found in ss. 12 to 16 inclusive and it is, I think, noteworthy that in the case of the first of these sections, which is concerned with prime movers, there is an absolute obligation to fence without any qualification whatever except for electric generators, and so forth, which by sub-s. (3) are subject to a less stringent rule. Apart from such generators, prime movers, which are defined in s. 152 and do not include the belt in question, must be securely fenced whether they are safe or not and whatever their position or construction. If they are unfenced the occupiers of the factory are guilty of an offence. In the case of electric generators, however, and also in the case of transmission machinery (s. 13) and dangerous machinery (s. 14) fencing is not required if the position or construction of the machinery renders it as safe to everyone employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced. The only difference between transmission and dangerous machinery is that, subject to the qualification mentioned above, the former must be fenced whether it is dangerous or not, whereas the latter must be proved to be dangerous before the duty to fence comes into existence. In either case fencing is obligatory unless the exceptions apply, but it still remains to be determined against what dangers the fencing is to be a safeguard and what circumstances the exceptions embrace. For my own part, I find it difficult to envisage any set of circumstances in which unfenced machinery would be safe owing to its position, or, indeed, construction, if the risk of breakage is to be taken into consideration. In such a case no position, at any rate, could warrant that employees might not be injured or that the machinery would be as safe as if it was securely fenced. And, equally, if breakage is to be guarded against, the distinction between machinery which is dangerous and that which is not seems to disappear. All machinery is potentially dangerous because it may break, but the Act is not concerned with danger in that sense. It is danger in working against which it is framed to give security.

Throughout the relevant sections I can find no hint that the danger of machinery breaking has been taken into account. The words "of such construction" in ss. 12 (3), 13 and 14 deal with types of construction, not with the strength of the machine; ss. 22 to 26 provide for lifts, floors and methods of ingress and egress and have no bearing on the provision of sound machinery. Unless the matter be provided for by regulations made under s. 60, the common law obligation to use due care seems alone to be the sanction against weak or ill-constructed machinery. So far, indeed, from suggesting that the breakage of machinery is under consideration in ss. 12 to 16, indications to the contrary are, I think, to be found. Certainly the provisions of s. 13 (3) and (4) show no tendency to keep in mind the breaking of driving belts and s. 14 not only speaks of a device "which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with that part" (i.e., a dangerous part) in the proviso to sub-s. (1), but in sub-s. (2) refers to preventing "the exposure of a dangerous part of machinery while in motion," and I cannot read those phrases as intending anything more than a device to keep the workman from the dangerous part of the machine. Finally, sub-s. (3) talks of "articles which are dangerous while in motion in the machine." From all these expressions I conclude that it is risk arising from the motion of the machine which is being guarded against, whether the part concerned is the transmission or dangerous in working. Even s. 15 (b) contains the same suggestion when it permits certain work to be done while the machine is in motion if to stop it would seriously interfere with the carrying on of the process.

None of the cases which deal with the matter or were quoted to us seems to me to controvert this view. The latest in your Lordships' House, Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (1), was concerned with injury caused by a piece of wood flying out from a circular saw which was said to be dangerous because of its tendency to throw out such pieces. I can imagine it being said that a circular saw is dangerous because of this tendency and that the obligation to fence dangerous machinery is not to obviate its dangers, yet your Lordships held that the workman could not recover and LORD THANKERTON said ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92, 95):

... the obligation to fence imposed by s. 14 (1), is an obligation to provide a guard against contact with any dangerous part of a machine, and that it does not impose any obligation to guard against dangerous materials or articles ejected from the machine in motion ...

On the other hand, where there was danger, which should have been anticipated, that part of the machine (e.g., a spindle) would fly out, as in Hindle v. Birtwistle (2), it was held that the machine itself was dangerous in that respect and should have been fenced. So, too, where a driving shaft was situated 13ft. up, but it could not be assumed that the shaft would never be approached by any person employed in the factory, as in Atkinson v. L. & N.E. Ry. (3), and in a case where the handle of a machine flew up and in the ordinary course of affairs danger might be anticipated from the use of the machine without protection, as in Kinder v. Camberwell Borough Council (4), the employers have been held under a duty to fence. In each case, however, it was injury caused by the working of the machine and the danger which might reasonably be anticipated from its working. Even in the case of the flying spindle it was not a breaking of a part of the machine, but an accident which might have been anticipated from its ordinary working which had to be guarded against. The machine was found to be a dangerous one because of the liability of spindles to fly out, and it was that danger which was liable to occur in the course of its ordinary working, not its abnormal action in breaking, for which a fence had to be provided. Harrison v. Metropolitan Plywood Co. (5) was a decision on the construction and effect of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, reg. 22, which HILBERY, J., following a decision of the Court of Appeal in Miller v. William Bootham & Sons, Ltd. (6) held to supersede s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, and not on the wording of the Act itself, and, therefore, whatever its effect, does not deal with the matter now in issue.

In my opinion, it is not necessary for your Lordships to consider in respect of any of these cases how far the facts support the decision. The principle is plain. Any risk arising from the working of a dangerous machine must be guarded against under s. 14 and any danger emanating from the working of transmission machinery must likewise be guarded against under s. 13. The working of transmission machinery is deemed to be dangerous; other machines need not be fenced unless they or some part are, in fact, dangerous. But in neither case does the Act aim at protection against breakage. In the present instance it was, no doubt, the duty of the employers to fence the transmission machinery. That part, however, which a workman could enter on was securely fenced and the belt was in such a position as to be as safe as it would be if securely fenced unless it broke. Had it been in such a position that the workman could come into contact with it, it would not have been so safe, and in that case it would have been necessary to fence it. Fencing, in my opinion, means the erection of a barricade to prevent any employee from making contact with the machine, not an enclosure to prevent broken machinery from flying out. I should dismiss the appeal.

LORD DU PARCQ : (read by LORD NORMAND) : My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in advance the opinion which has been delivered by my noble and learned friend LORD PORTER and that which my noble and learned friend LORD NORMAND is about to deliver, and am in general agreement with them. I wish to add, however, that, while I agree with LORD NORMAND that the words "securely fenced" must be given the same meaning in each of the three sections (12, 13 and 14), I think that they may well mean "so fenced as to give security from such dangers as may be reasonably expected." If machines exist, or are hereafter invented and used, which are dangerous because fragments or loose parts of the machinery are sometimes ejected from them, then I am not prepared to say that s. 14 does not require such machines to be fenced for the purpose of protecting workmen against that danger. If the dictum of my noble and learned friend LORD SIMONDS in Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (1) ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92, 98), is to be understood as meaning that such a machine need not be fenced, I respectfully doubt its accuracy, and must reserve my opinion on it. Section 13 does not state expressly what is the nature of the danger which is contemplated, but, in the light of the findings of the Court of Session and of such knowledge of these matters as most adult persons may be supposed to possess (for I claim no special knowledge), I think that it would be wrong to hold that the legislature had in mind the remote possibility of the transmission gear breaking and so coming into contact with a workman's body. The construction for which the workman contends would put a heavy burden on employers to little purpose. If Parliament intended to impose such a burden, it would, I think, have expressed its intention plainly. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

LORD NORMAND : My Lords, the workman was injured when he was working at a turret lathe in the employers' engineering works by a blow from a broken balata driving belt which came apart while it was in use. He sued the employers for damages in the Sheriff Court at Kilmarnock, averring that the accident was caused by a failure to fence the belt adequately and securely in breach of the common law duty of reasonable care and of s. 13 of the Factories Act, 1937. The Sheriff Substitute found for the workman on both grounds and awarded the sum of £500 as damages. An appeal was taken to the Court of Session and the Second Division of the Court recalled the interlocutor of the Sheriff Substitute, substantially altered his findings of fact, and assoilzied the employers. The circumstances out of which the action arose and the relevant findings of fact have been stated by my noble and learned friend, LORD PORTER, and I do not repeat them. The workman, if he did not abandon the case on common law negligence, at least maintained it with little confidence and it is unnecessary to say more than that the findings of fact are destructive of it.

Section 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, requires that every part of the transmission machinery shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced. The sub-section imposes an absolute obligation in the sense that the obligation, whatever its meaning and effect, must be actually fulfilled and not merely that the occupier of the factory must do his best to fulfil it, and also in the sense that the obligation is not subject to any relaxation by the Secretary of State on the ground that it is unnecessary or impracticable: see s. 13 (5). The workman maintains that its content also is absolute, and, accordingly, that the transmission machinery must be so "securely fenced" that all persons who are employed or working on the premises shall be protected, not only from the danger of contact with the transmission machinery or any part of it while it is working in situ, but also against all parts of it which may fly off if it breaks or comes to pieces. The employers maintain that the obligation is merely to fence the transmission machinery in such a way as to prevent contact between it and persons employed or working on the premises, and that is the meaning put on the section by the learned judges of the Court of Session.

It is common ground that the crucial words are "securely fenced" and that they must have the same meaning wherever they occur in the statute. Section 12 (1) requires that every flywheel directly connected to any prime mover and every moving part of any prime mover except those mentioned in sub-s. (3) shall be securely fenced. "Prime mover" means (s. 152 (1)) every engine, motor or other appliance which provides mechanical energy derived from steam, water, wind, electricity, the combustion of fuel or other source. Section 12 (3) requires that every part of electric generators, motors and rotary converters, and every flywheel connected thereto shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced. Section 14 (1) requires that every dangerous part of any machinery, other than prime movers and transmission machinery, shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced. But there is a proviso that, in so far as the safety of a dangerous part of any machinery cannot by reason of the nature of the operation be secured by means of a fixed guard, the requirements of the sub-section shall be deemed to have been complied with if a device is provided which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with that part. I do not find in these provisions or elsewhere in the Act any clear positive instruction that the fencing shall be so constructed as to contain the flying fragments of, e.g., a broken flywheel or a broken driving shaft. If there were such an instruction it would be irrelevant to consider the difficulties of fulfilling it. The workman's counsel, however, submitted that the construction for which he contended results from the intention apparent in s. 13 (1), s. 12 (3) and s. 14 (1), that every person employed or working on the premises should be protected. He also founded his argument on the words "securely fenced," which he treated as unqualified and unrelated to any reasonable apprehension or expectation of danger. But the intention that every person employed or working on the premises shall be protected does not show that danger from flying parts of a broken machine to persons at a distance from it is contemplated. All that it means is that anyone working in a factory who may be, or who may pass, near the machinery to be fenced, though his work is not particularly associated with it, shall enjoy the protection. The word "fence" does not suggest to my mind the massive kind of structure which might be necessary to contain the parts of a large flywheel breaking apart while rotating at high speed. The only express provision in the Act dealing with the kind of fencing required is that it shall be "of substantial construction": see s. 16, but that is scarcely more than an injunction against flimsiness and it is satisfied by the sort of fence that is sufficient to afford good protection to workmen against contact with the machinery when it is working in situ. Nor does the word "securely" appear to import absolute protection against all possible contingencies, rather than protection against the danger of contact.

In the absence, therefore, of any clear positive indication that the obligation to fence securely has the meaning attributed to it by the workman the implications of the material sections as a whole must be considered, and practicability becomes relevant to the construction of the obligation. The commercial practicability of the workman's construction would vary according to the size and other characteristics of the machinery to be fenced. It is found as a fact that the fencing of the tension side of main driving belts might be commercially possible, and I assume that a fence such as guarded the lower part of the driving belt in the present instance would contain most driving belts in common use if they were to break, but, if the obligation is to apply to every flywheel and to every moving part of a steam-driven prime mover and to all driving shafts, much heavier and more solid containers would be necessary, and the cost in many factories would become prohibitive. An even more important consideration, especially in a penal statute, is the uncertainty which would result from this construction of "securely fenced," for no clear standard of the strength of fence required to contain the force of flying parts of broken machinery is or could be provided by the Act, and the problem whether the obligation was being fulfilled would in any particular case be incapable of rational solution. There are, besides, in the Act indications which seem to me to show that the purpose of the fencing is to provide against contact with the machinery which, rather than the breaking of machinery, is the characteristic danger to be apprehended by workmen in factories. The various kinds of machinery dealt with in s. 12 (1) are treated as dangerous in themselves in all circumstances, but the machinery dealt with in s. 12 (3), though also dealt with as dangerous in itself, is not regarded as dangerous in all circumstances, for the statute recognises that it may be as safe as if securely fenced either by reason of its position or by reason of its construction, and then fencing is not required. But on the hypothesis that breakage and flying pieces are among the dangers to be guarded against, position could scarcely confer the same safety as a secure container, and on the same hypothesis, the conception of safety by reason of the construction of the machinery becomes almost meaningless. Section 13 (1) provides for fencing of the transmission machinery in terms identical with those of s. 12 (3) and is subject to the same comments. Section 14 (1) is concerned with dangerous parts of machinery not dealt with in the two preceding sections, and the obligation to fence is expressed once more in the same terms as in s. 12 (3) and s. 13 (1), but there is a distinction that in s. 14 no assumption is made that the machinery is in itself dangerous and the obligation does not apply except to parts of machinery which can be shown to be dangerous. It is possible, therefore, that, if a machine may be expected to throw off detachable or broken parts in working, these parts may fall to be treated as dangerous and subject to the requirements of secure fencing. That is, however, a question on which I express no opinion. The proviso to s. 14 (1) makes it clear that, whereas the best form of fencing for a dangerous part of a machine is a fixed guard, yet the obligation to fence will in defined cases be deemed to be complied with if a device is provided which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with that part. The difference between the fence prescribed by the substantive part of the sub-section and the device is not that one is a fence and the other is not, but that the device is a fence which protects only the operator and not every person employed or working on the premises. It is, therefore, necessary to say that it shall be deemed to be compliance with the requirements of the sub-section, but the kind of protection which is given to the operator by the device is the same kind of protection as that given to every person employed or working on the premises by the prescribed fence or guard, and it is protection against contact. These indications that the danger in contemplation is the danger of contact between the workman and the machinery working in situ are, I think, conclusive, but there are other indications also to which my noble and learned friend, LORD PORTER, has directed attention. I agree with what my noble and learned friend said about them and I need say no more.

There is nothing in the cited authorities which runs counter to the conclusion to which I have been led by an examination of the relevant statutory provisions. No authority was cited in which the provisions of s. 13 were concerned. In Harrison v. Metropolitan Plywood Co. (5) the workman, who was injured when a piece of the cutter of a spindle moulding machine broke away, flew out of its holder, and struck him, was held entitled to recover damages because the employers had been in breach of an obligation to fence under a regulation the wording of which is not identical with that of the Act. The point taken by the employers in the present case that there is no obligation to fence against parts of a machine which break and fly off was not taken. It is not necessary to consider whether that case was rightly decided, and I have already reserved my opinion on the effect of s. 14 in relation to cases resembling it. In Kinder v. Camberwell Borough Council (4) the handle of a compressor machine sprang up and injured the workman, who successfully pleaded breach of the obligation to fence under s. 14. There the handle was never detached from the machine of which it was held to be a dangerous part. On the facts the decision may have been right or wrong, but it involves no principle or construction of the Act inconsistent with the employers' contentions. Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton) Ltd. (1) was also a case on s. 14. This House held that the obligation to fence a circular saw was satisfied if it was adequately fenced so as to protect workmen against contact with it, but not so as to protect workmen against particles of wood flying from it. LORD SIMONDS said in the course of his speech ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92, 98): "The fence is intended to keep the worker out, not to keep the machine or its product in." So far as the noble and learned Lord dealt with keeping in the machine as opposed to its product, his observation was unnecessary for the decision of the case. Nevertheless, it was a deliberate expression of opinion which I respectfully adopt, though it may still be necessary to reserve the case of a machine which in working may be expected to throw off loose or broken parts. For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, the short but important question which arises in this case can be stated as follows—which of two alternative meanings should be given to the opening words of s. 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, “Every part of the transmission machinery shall be securely fenced.” Do these words mean that every part of the transmission machinery shall be so fenced as to prevent any person employed or working on the premises from moving into contact with it, or do they bear the wider meaning that every part of the transmission machinery shall be so fenced as to prevent contact occurring in any way between any part of the machinery and any person employed or working on the premises? Ultimately, the answer to this question depends on the meaning which should be attached to the word “securely.” No other question falls to be determined by your Lordships’ House. Counsel for the workman at first sought to argue that the employers were guilty of negligence at common law, but when it was pointed out that the findings of fact of the Second Division of the Court of Session were binding on this House, he felt unable to pursue that line of argument.

If the wider meaning stated above is given to the word “securely,” it is obvious that the workman must succeed, since a part of the transmission machinery came violently into contact with him and injured him. If the narrower meaning is given to that word, it is equally obvious that the appeal must be dismissed, as it is not suggested that the five-foot fence round the transmission machinery was insufficient to prevent persons from moving into contact with that machinery. In considering what meaning should be given to the word “securely” in s. 13 (1) I start from this point, that in the ordinary course of events no part of the transmission machinery moves outwards from its normal position, while, on the other hand, there is always a grave risk that persons may move into contact with the machinery and sustain injury unless they are prevented from so doing by a fence. Prima facie, a fence to keep persons out would seem more appropriate than a fence to keep the machinery in. Next, it is to be observed that the sub-section contemplates that the transmission machinery may be “in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced.” Now, if the purpose of the fencing is to keep persons from moving into contact with the machinery, this part of the sub-section gives rise to no difficulty. If, however, the fence is to be of such a kind as to prevent any part of the machinery from flying outwards and coming into contact with any person, it is difficult to imagine any position, and still more difficult to imagine any construction, which would render the machinery as safe to persons employed or working on the premises as it would be if surrounded by a fence of the kind just described.

If one turns to the other provisions of the Act, there are indications here and there that the narrower meaning should be given to the word “securely.” These indications have been fully stated by others of your Lordships, and I shall not indulge in repetition. Finally, I think that the words “securely fenced” should be given the same meaning wherever they occur in the Act, and, as has been pointed out, if these words are given the wider meaning throughout, great, and, perhaps, insuperable, practical difficulties would face manufacturers all over the country. It does not seem likely that the legislature would intend the provisions of ss. 12 to 16 to have these results. If the words are capable of bearing only one meaning, they must be given that meaning, but if, as I think, they may fairly bear one of two meanings, it is right to have some regard to the practical results.

Taking all these matters into account, and bearing in mind that this is a penal statute, I have come to the conclusion that the narrower construction of the word “securely” is correct. It follows that no breach of s. 13 (1) has been proved in this case, but the injured workman would, of course, have been entitled to succeed if he had established that the employers were guilty of negligence at common law. I agree with the view just expressed by my noble and learned friend, LORD NORMAND, that there is nothing in the cited authorities which runs counter to this conclusion, and I prefer to express no opinion on the construction of s. 14 (1) as the present appeal is concerned only with s. 13. At the moment, and without further argument and further consideration, I feel unable to express assent to the observations which have been made on the former section and its predecessor and the cases decided thereunder. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

A Solicitors: Digby Brown & Co., Glasgow, D. G. M'Gregor, W.S., and W. H. Thompson (for the workman); Martin & Co., agents for Biggart Lumsden & Co., Glasgow, and Morton, Smart, Macdonald & Prosser, W.S., Edinburgh (for the employers).

[Reported by C. St.J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH JOINT CO-OPERATIVE WHOLESALE SOCIETY, LTD. v. ASSAM AGRICULTURAL INCOME TAX COMMISSIONER.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott, Sir Madhavan Nair and Sir John Beaumont), March 16, 17, April 27, 1948.]

Income Tax—Profits of trade—Co-operative society—Loans to society by members—Produce sold exclusively to members—Assam Agricultural Income Tax Act (No. IX of 1939), s. 3.

The principle of New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles (14 App. Cas. 381), cannot apply to an association, society or company which grows produce on its own land or manufactures goods in its own factories, using either its own capital or capital borrowed from its members or from others, and sells its produce or goods to its members exclusively.

A society incorporated in the United Kingdom under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, and non-resident in British India had an unlimited capital divided into shares of £5 each, its objects, as set out in its rules, being, inter alia, to carry on the business of planters, growers, producers, merchants, and manufacturers and brokers of tea. The society, which consisted of two members, a co-operative society in England and another in Scotland, owned an estate in Assam where it grew and manufactured tea, and, except for a small portion of produce which was unfit for export and sold locally, the whole of the society's output of tea was sold to its two members at market rates and was exported to England and Scotland. Each year the members of the society advanced to the society sums of money to meet the cost of tea to be supplied by the society to the members. The market prices of the tea with which the members were supplied were debited against those payments and the supplies were recorded as sales to the members. Out of the proceeds from the sales the expenses of production and management and the interest on loans were paid or provided. By the rules of the society its net profits were applied (a) in depreciation of land (except agricultural land and tea gardens) buildings, live and rolling stock; (b) payment of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum on the share capital; (c) appropriation to a reserve fund; (d) appropriation to a special fund for making grants as determined in general meeting; (e) payment of a dividend to members rateable in proportion to the amount of purchases made by them from the society, and (f) the remainder, if any, carried forward to the next account.

Held: the society was not exempt from liability to Assam agricultural income tax under the Assam Agricultural Income Tax Act, 1939, s. 3, in respect of profits from the sale to its members of tea cultivated or manufactured at its Assam estate.

Principle of New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles (1889) (14 App. Cas. 381), not applied.

[AS TO MUTUAL TRADING, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 101-104, paras. 195-197; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 58-61, Nos. 296-309.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) English and Scottish Joint Co-operative Wholesale Society v. Madras Income Tax Comr., (1929), 3 I.T.C. 385.
- (2) New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 381; 59 L.J.Q.B. 291; 61 L.T. 201; sub nom. Styles v. New York Life Insurance Co., 2 Tax Cas. 460; 28 Digest 59, 300.
- (3) Last v. London Assurance Corp., (1885), 10 App. Cas. 438; 55 L.J.Q.B. 92; 53 L.T. 634; 50 J.P. 116; 2 Tax Cas. 100, H.L.; varying (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 239, C.A.; 28 Digest 58, 297.
